This Luxurious Texfur Seal Coat

$21.48

Delivered Free

A rich, warm coat that has all the style and comfort of a natural Sealskin coat costing hundreds of dollars. An expert cannot tell the difference; the textile reproduction of Seal is perfect.

This coat is one of the season's smartest and most fashionable models. It is 54 inches long, with wide collar, cuffs and facings. Interlined and lined throughout with fine, yarn-dyed satin. Strictly hand tailored and exceptionally well finished.

You can't realize what a wonderful value this coat is until you have seen it and compared it with inferior goods that are sold at much higher prices or with natural skins that are no finer or richer although prohibitive in cost.

This Textile Fur is made by a new process recently discovered. It gives a faithful reproduction not only of Sealskin but of Caracal, Pony, Persian Lamb, Broad Tail, Baby Lamb, Persian Paw and others.

You can have a coat similar to this made in any of these furs as well as Seal. Send for our Catalogue, which shows photographs of many modish designs in these various kinds of fur. Full descriptions and prices are given.

Wellman's Wonderful Flight

policemen were letting out the ropes, and Mr. Wellman was just able to catch the words: "Southerly, moderate winds." Mr. Wellman was seen to nod his head and Mr. Vaniman, the engineer, standing in the dangling lifeboat, gave the signal to let go all ropes.

The America rose steadily for about sixty feet and then pointed her blunt nose toward the gray blanket of cloud which had settled over the sea. It drew after it the trail of thirty metal gasoline tanks attached to a long steel cable, the tanks bobbing through the water as if they were corks on a fishing line. Despite all precautions three of the tanks were punctured during the launching, one of the policemen letting one of them drop just above the sea wall, and as the chain of tanks went out off shore, the precious gasoline was seen spouting skyward. Never will the crowd forget the imposing spectacle made by the airship as, with the American flag streaming from her bow and the red ensign snapping defiance to the wind and sea at the stern, she pushed her way into the fog.

A motor boat had gone ahead to tow her beyond the Jersey shoals, on which there was danger that the trail of tanks might go ashore. Two miles off shore the motor boat cut loose. As it turned back the men on board could hear Vaniman call to his assistants to start the airship's motors. Simon was at the wheel and Mr. Wellman was seated on a cracker box in the car.

A little later a wireless message was sent from shore at a venture and one at once came back from the airship. "We are going northeast by east," it read; "foggy; everything fine." Several other messages were sent up to one o'clock, when they suddenly ceased. Then came the long days of silence while the world waited anxiously for news of the airship. Wireless operators on shore and sea were sending out messages broadcast over the Atlantic in hopes of connecting with the instrument of the America, but no answers came. Storms raged over the Atlantic, and it was feared the America, if it had not been wrecked, had been blown far off its course.

After the ship left Atlantic City all went well for a time, and the men were in high spirits. They passed Nantucket the next afternoon. When they were off the coast of Nova Scotia the wind freshened to a gale and drove the ship now one way and then another. The fog was thick, and they were not able to see any distance, when suddenly four masts loomed up ahead. They turned just in time to avoid a collision, but the crew on the ship probably had the fright of their lives as the airship passed over their stern. The America stopped her motors and then nearly drifted into the ship once more.

The electric storm played about the balloon and some gas was let out to lower the airship toward the surface. When the air cleared it was necessary to throw over several barrels of gasoline to rise again. The next day the sun came out and the gas expanded, and the airship rose quite suddenly to a height nearly three-quarters of a mile above the sea, the long line of tanks dangling wildly below. Then the gas began to evaporate and the ship sank toward the sea once more. At times the motors were shut off and the ship would turn sidewise and be carried along by the wind as had been planned, but she sank lower and lower and more gasoline had to be thrown over. As the last of the fuel went over, over went also the hopes of Mr. Wellman that he would reach Europe.

The only thing to do now was to drift and signal in the hopes that they would be rescued by some passing ship.

It was a situation to appal all but the stoutest hearts, drifting hundreds of miles from shore in the fast steel-going airship, fuel practically gone, and driven hither and thither by the storm after another. Far below the black and gray waters seemed to reach after the steel cable as if to clutch it and draw the airship after it beneath the waves.

Airship America Leaving Atlantic City

About four o'clock Tuesday morning the boy lookout on the steamer Trent, bound from Bermuda to New York, saw a sight which made him doubt his senses. A huge black object appeared drifting in the distance ahead. It had lights like a ship, but it was plainly riding the air. Captain Down of the Trent was called and with his glass saw that it was an airship. Then the America signaled him: "Stand by; I am in need of you!"

The Trent changed her course and the captain ordered the boats to be made ready. The passengers came rushing on deck in their nightclothes and watched, as if fascinated, the movements of the America's crew as they prepared to abandon their craft. The Trent passed under and Mr. Wellman threw down ropes, but they would not hold and a gust of wind drove the airship to some distance. At last the America sank close to the water and the men jumped into the lifeboat. Relieved of their weight the America shot high into the air once more. The lifeboat was brought alongside the Trent and the men climbed up to be greeted almost mobbed with the attentions of the cheering passengers. Only Vaniman stayed behind, banging away at the hatch in the bow of the life-boat. The next instant he put in his hand and pulled out the kitten, and another cheer rent the air. The airship had gone 1,010 miles in seventy-two hours.

Mr. Wellman was enthusiastically greeted in New York and he must have felt that the trip was well worth the effort as he saw his critics turn to warm and admiring friends. It is now possible that he may try again.

New Leaders in Temperance Work

THE annual gathering of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, which takes place at Baltimore, November 12-17, marks the close of a successful year of unremitting effort by the twelve thousand local unions for the advancement of Gospel temperance throughout the land. While there have been no great victories in 1910 for the abolition of the liquor traffic, the cause has made local headway in many States, and preparations have been made for county and local option and for State-wide prohibition campaigns.

A number of new leaders have come into prominence during the year. Among these none is more active than Mrs. Nannie Webb Curtis, of Sherman, Tex., president of the Texas State Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Mrs Curtis has been for four years a national organizer of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, doing effective service in the Florida campaign, when submission of the prohibition question was won; in that of Alabama, when public sentiment forced the enactment of a statutory law for the State; in Tennessee, where prohibition was also victorious; in the movement for constitutional prohibition in Oklahoma, and the Kansas and Nebraska campaigns.

Another new Southern leader is Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, of Morgantown, W. Va., who is president of the West Virginia Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She has served in temperance work as leader of the Loyal Temperance Legion of West Virginia; president of the Morgantown Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and she is also active in the Mothers' Clubs.

The leadership of the prohibition State of Georgia has been taken up by Mrs. T. E. Patterson of Griffin, an able and experienced worker. Mrs. Kate E. Smithers of Smyrna, Del., is the present head of the Delaware State Woman's Christian Temperance Union, leading the workers there. A pioneer temperance worker of the West is Mrs. Annie Augier of Spokane, the new president of East Washington State Woman's Christian Temperance Union. She has been engaged in temperance work for a quarter of a century in Sioux City, Ia.; in Salt Lake City, Utah, in South Dakota and in Washington.

Mrs. Nettie Chipp of Boise, the new president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of southern Idaho, has led during the year in aggressive work for the banishment of the drink evil from the State. As local leader in Boise, and State superintendent of jail and prison work, Mrs. Chipp has had excellent training for the State leadership.

Six counties in Montana have been opened up this year, leaving only four counties unorganized by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. This has been done chiefly through the efforts of Mrs. Allie Updike Hutchinson of East Helena, the new State president, who is a former teacher, and has been active in temperance work in Montana for nearly twenty years.

During the year, the Woman's Christian Temperance workers have been preparing for the important campaigns which are to be conducted in four States to abolish the liquor traffic—Florida. Missouri, Arizona and New Mexico. In New Mexico, the constitutional convention which began October 3 will sit probably sixty days, and a great effort is being made to secure constitutional prohibition. In Arizona there is a similar campaign for prohibition in the new constitution. In Florida and Missouri the vote on prohibition is to be taken next week.

The Temperance Review*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

WORLD'S Temperance Sunday comes but once a year. The way it is named gives it pre-eminence above the other three quarterly temperance lessons. The question at one time arose about how it originated. A letter was addressed to the London Sunday School Union regarding it, and the following reply was received: "The World's Temperance Sunday originated with one of our Methodist Conferences and was adopted by the London Sunday School Union in 1887. In 1893, at the World's Sunday School Convention, it was agreed to fix the lesson for that day in the International Course." The secretary who made the reply adds: "I think it would be a mistake to try to change the day. Perhaps it might be made an American Temperance Sunday, but it would then be local instead of universal." He expressed this opinion because he had learned of a movement in the United States to have an October date instead. He wrote "this would be impossible in Great Britain and the Colonies, as already they had a special Sunday in that month for another cause."

The World's Temperance Sunday

The reason given for the proposed change of date in the United States was that it might have an effect on the November elections. But only a very small proportion of the scholars in our Sunday Schools are voters. One great obstacle to the change is, there is no temperance lesson selected by the International Lesson Committee for any Sabbath in October. It is true the lesson for World's Temperance Sunday in November might be shifted for use in October, but it would disarrange the system; teachers and scholars would not be likely to have their November lesson helps to use in October, so that those who advocate this change will find themselves without a temperance lesson to teach on the Sabbath they have appointed. It is hopeless as well as preposterous to expect the world system to be changed to suit American elections!

The delegation who attended the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention last June in Glasgow were in large part Sunday School teachers. A resolution was passed by them to abide loyally by the date fixed for the World's Temperance Sunday by the International Lesson Committee. That was a wise action and the Convention is to be commended for it.

Teaching the Lesson

The passage selected, Matt. 24: 32-51, teaches specially about being prepared to meet the Lord Jesus at his second coming. Like twin stars are these two sentences:

"Watch, therefore, for ye know not on what day your Lord cometh."

"Therefore, be ye also ready."

Anything that we might do that would prevent us from watching or being ready would be just the thing that we would want to cut out of our lives. Is there anything to compare with liquor, strong drink, for getting people into a state of unfitness for meeting their Lord face to face? Any day we are likely to meet him here on earth, or in the beyond. Who would not shrink from being ushered into his presence in a drunken state? Better, never to be in any degree under the influence of liquor. That we may soon meet him is the strongest possible incentive for being the best that we can be.

A prominent clergyman in New England gave much attention to the thought of Christ's second coming. It entered largely into his public teaching as well as in his family where there were several children. He died, and the faithful mother continued teaching the same truth to her children, with the added thought that their dear father would be among those whom Jesus will bring with him (I. Thes. 4: 13), and that they themselves would be caught up to meet him (I. Thes. 4: 17). And so day by day the dear children tried to keep themselves pure and unspotted in order to be ready.

The House We Live In

We shall better understand this lesson if we connect with it, at least with the forty-third verse, the passage to be found in Luke 12: 35-49. In Matt. 24: 43, we read that because the house was not watched a thief broke through. In Luke 12: 45 we read why the house was not watched: The master was absent and his return was delayed and the servant took occasion to eat and to drink and be drunken and so the house was broken through. Mrs. Zillah Foster Stevens, secretary of the International Temperance Department, in her "Hints for World Temperance Sunday," suggests the line of thought: "Every man, woman and child owns a house, the 'house we live in'—the body. Alcohol and cigarettes are housebreakers—they break up the body in every part. The saloon is the den of the housebreaker—Alcohol. Teach this so convincingly that the sight of liquor and cigarettes will make the child think instantly, 'Thief housebreaker,' and the sight of the saloon will make him think 'A nest of housebreakers.' Urge every one to safeguard the house, and to fight the saloon just as vigorously and unceasingly as he would fight housebreakers. The pledge will bar and bolt the door of the houses and will enlist the sign in the fight against the saloon."

How the Castle Was Taken

The idea of keeping out housebreakers will no doubt be quite interesting to the boys. Very probably they can be led to see the moral in the following story: A certain nobleman—a baron in Germany—was very proud of his home, for it was a grand old castle, many hundreds of years old. The walls were very thick, and the baron was heard to say: "I defy any one to break his way into my castle." But one day after hunting in the forest he had returned to his castle, and while he was feasting and drinking his servants came to him and told him that his enemies were advancing on the castle. The baron laughed and said: "Let them come. They will not be able to force their way into my castle." The great doors were barred and bolted, and the baron kept on with his feasting. But outside the soldiers were surrounding the castle. They looked hopelessly at the hard task before them, but the leader said, "Do you see that mark on the castle wall?" pointing to a certain spot. "Aim at that one point, and nowhere else, but attack it incessantly." So all of the soldiers' weapons were turned to the spot. Hour after hour they worked, and by and by the great stones began to break away in small pieces. Then the cracks became a hole, and the hole grew larger and larger until it was large enough for a man to creep through. "Scale the wall and make your way one by one into the castle," cried the leader. In the hall below the baron and his men were shouting and laughing, some scoffing at the enemy outside, but none were watching. Quietly the invaders crept through the hole, and made their way to the great doors, which they threw open, so that their comrades might enter. Suddenly the aron became aware of his danger; the nemy was actually in the castle. But t was too late, the baron was a prisner and the castle his no longer.

Let no one imagine himself entirely ecure against the arch-enemy Satan. Ie is sure to make an attack on every nan's castle, and on the castle of the aroness (the woman), too. The one pot in which he concentrates his missaries is appetite. Men and women ike to eat and drink things that "taste ood." The forces of evil include hose who know how to mix drinks; hose who know how to make attracive the places where drinks are sold; hose who know how to make one acuainted with jolly companions. All f these things knock at a person's ppetite, while he is proudly saying to imself: "I will never be a drunkard; ot I." But ere long his castle falls, nd he comes to be just that! And trangely enough he is not always ware of being a prisoner. He says e will stop drinking, but he does not, ot until the next time! His castle is ot his own! There is only one power hat can give him possession, and that s the Lord God. That is why we beeve in Gospel Temperance work. It s the only kind that holds.

How Nations Are Assailed

But what should the poor baron ave done in his castle? First, he hould have been on the watch against is enemy. Second, he should have ummoned all of his servants to the oint of attack, and he would have peedily driven off the enemy. And so et every one determine that he will vatch against his appetite, that he vill not permit himself to taste the ile thing that will in the end make im a drunkard; in short, let him take otal abstinence as the rule of his life, nd boldly assert himself to be a total bstainer, or as one young man put it, hen he was invited to drink, let him ay: "I am riding on the water vagon."

Nations as well as individuals are ssailed at the point of appetite. The Torth European race, which includes reat Britain, the United States, Gerıany, Russia and Scandinavia, seems o be in the greatest danger from the rink evil; but the Latin races are not ar behind. It is a matter of history ıat wherever people of our kind have lanted themselves they have carried ith them the demoralizing, deathealing drink traffic. One of the roudest nations in the world derives ırge revenues from the sale of opium ı China and intoxicants in India. Of ur country it was said two years ago: There has been a steady and almost unbroken increase from year to year in the amount of liquor consumed in the United States during the last one hundred years." Since that statement was made a prohibition wave has swept over some portions of the United States, and we might suppose there would be a change for the better. But the Internal Revenue Report shows that more gallons of whisky were withdrawn from bond in 1910 than in 1909—one hundred and twenty-eight million, six hundred and seventy-five thousand, seven hundred and seventy-six gallons in 1910, as against one hundred and sixteen million, six hundred and fifty thousand, one hundred and sixty-five gallons in 1909. Compare the figures: 128,675,776—116,650,165. As to beer, according to the commissioner's figures, revenue was paid on 59,485,117 barrels of beer in 1910, as against 56,303,497 barrels in 1909, an increase of 3,181,620 barrels. The people of the prohibition States are certainly drinking less beer and whisky, or none at all; but in other States they are drinking more. The only way to check the liquor traffic in the States where it is yet sold is by a larger degree of temperance education. At the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention in Glasgow last June it was suggested by the Superintendent of the Sunday School Department (Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts) that "Each quarterly temperance lesson in the Sunday School should be followed by a Temperance Education Week, during which time special articles should be printed in the daily newspapers setting forth the newest scientific discoveries in regard to the dangers of alcoholism; also temperance teaching in the day schools should be accelerated; temperance literature should be circulated from house to house, largely through the efforts of the women and children; ministers should be requested to preach temperance sermons on Quarterly Temperance Sundays. It will readily be seen that such a course would create a popular uprising for temperance centring around the Sunday School Lessons. The four Temperance Sundays need only to be lengthened into four temperance weeks."

A VETERAN IN SERVICE

—THE VETERAN PREACHER Rev. Stephen Merritt of New York, notwithstanding his advanced age, is still active in Gospel work. At a recent meeting at the Bowery Mission, he astonished his hearers by the strong, earnest, eloquent appeal he made from the platform. He has been a warm friend and supporter of the Bowery Mission during the last twenty years or more and has on many occasions aided greatly in its spiritual success.

LAND ADVERTISING

TOO much caution cannot be exercised by our readers before investing money in propositions which are not guaranteed by the publications in which they are advertised.

A short time ago advertisements appeared in several publications recomıending the purchase of land in a certain section of the country, and many ersons were taken in thereby, for we have just received a letter from one of our riends who bought some of the land and went there to locate upon it and who tates that the conditions were truly pitiable; that not only was the land far rom being what it was represented to be, but those whose names were used to ecommend the land were really employees of the company. Many families with hildren went into the section to find the place impossible. They were comelled to live temporarily in an expensive hotel, and as some of them had staked ll of their little savings on the venture, their chance of acquiring a home is urther away than ever.

This is too bad, but it all comes back to the desirability of publications using ıe utmost care before accepting advertisements upon which their readers epend. Usually the reader has but very little opportunity to investigate the ruth or falsity of an advertiser's statement before paying his money. The ublisher, on the other hand, can usually come to an accurate conclusion in such natters and by simply refusing to publish any advertisement about which there the least doubt can prevent much loss of money and ofttimes needless suffering.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE HRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, ho must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the dvertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date f the appearance of the advertisement.

F.O.B. Detroit, including the following standard equipment: Gas lamps, piping and generator; 31 x 3½ inch rear tires; shock absorbers on front springs; three oil lamps, horn and tools. Top, windshield and speedometer extra.

Hupmobile

GUARANTEED FOR LIFE

In our initial announcement of this new Hupmobile Touring Car, we said of it: "Never before such a car at such a price; with such a guarantee."

Deliveries are being made, as this advertisement appears, to all parts of America.

When you go to your own dealer in your own town, you will find yourself in immediate and enthusiastic agreement with this claim.

The new $900 Hupmobile is the first touring car of 110-inch wheelbase to be sold for $900.

It is the first touring car with sliding gear transmission and Bosch magneto to be sold for less than $1000.

It is the first touring car ever sold at any price with a life-long guarantee.

This guarantee means that the Hupp Motor Car Company guarantees the Hupmobile free from defects in material or workmanship, during the life of the car, and will replace, free of charge, any such defective material, on return to its factory for inspection.

So you have in the Hupmobile Touring Car not only the most remarkable car in point of size, power, equipment and luxury ever offered at such a price; but a guarantee which establishes the quality of the car, beyond all possibility of argument.

Back of this you have the assurance, based on the experience of thousands of Hupmobile owners, that this new $900 touring car will cost so little to maintain that it can not actually be considered an expense, in view of the service rendered.

Accepting the experience of Hupmobile owners as a criterion, this new $900 touring car will cost the owner who keeps it at home about 20 or 25 cents a day.

Now, recapitulate all the advantages offered above, and see if you don't agree with us that there was "never before such a car at such a price; with such a guarantee."

Then confirm this conviction with a personal examination of the car by a visit to your dealer.

Music Lessons Free

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A wonderful offer to every lover of music whether a beginner or an advanced player.

Ninety-six lessons (or a less number, if you desire) for either Organ, Violin, Piano, Guitar, Banjo, Cornet, Sight Singing, Mandolin or Cello will be given free to make our home study courses for these instruments known in your locality. You will get one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Write at once. It will mean much to you to get our free booklet. It will place you under no obligation whatever to us if you never write again. You and your friends should know of this work. Hundreds of our pupils write: "Wish I had known of your school before." "Have learned more in one term in my home with your weekly lessons than in three terms with private teachers, and at a great deal less expense." "Everything is so thorough and complete." "The lessons are marvels of simplicity, and my 11 year old boy has not had the least trouble to learn." One minister writes: "As each succeeding lesson comes I am more and more fully persuaded I made no mistake in becoming your pupil."

Established 1898—have thousands of pupils from seven years of age to seventy.

Don't say you cannot learn music but send for our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent by return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7, 225 Fifth Ave., New York City. Instruments supplied when needed. Cash or credit.

A Woman Should Never

Be Satisfied Without

Perfect Health
A Good Figure
A Clear Skin

She can attain these by Scientific Means in the Privacy of her Own Room

I WISH I could put sufficient emphasis into these words to induce any woman, whose health is not perfect, or whose figure does not please her, to write to me. My pupils are among the most refined, intellectual women of America. They are my best friends and the strongest possible testimonials for the value of natural, hygienic principles of cure as opposed to the drug habit.

At least one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have finished my work.

I no longer need to claim what I can do, because I have done it. I think I do not exaggerate when I say that I have relieved more chronic ailments and reduced or built up more women in the past nine years than any ten physicians; the best physicians of America endorse my work. I could fill hundreds of magazines with testimonials; the following from letters on my desk as I write, indicate a few ailments I have relieved:

"My weight has increased 30 pounds." "My kidneys are much better." "My eyes are much stronger and I have taken off my glasses." "I have not had a sign of indigestion or gall stones since I began with you." "I weigh 83 pounds less and have gained wonderfully in strength. I never get out of breath, the rheumatic twinges have all gone, and I look and feel 15 years younger." "Just think of it! To be relieved from constipation. Entirely free after having it for 30 years." "Have grown from a nervous wreck into a state of steady, quiet nerves."

If you are suffering from any chronic ailment, if your figure does not please you, or if you will tell me the particular difficulty you wish to correct, I feel sure I can help you. If I cannot, I will tell you so. Your correspondence will be held in strict confidence. Many a woman has surprised her husband and friends by improvement she has made by just 15 minutes a day in her own room.

I want to help every woman to realize that her health lies to a degree in her own hands, and that she can reach her ideal in figure and carriage.

I have published a booklet, "Health, Character and Beauty," which tells you how to stand and walk correctly, and gives other information of vital interest. This booklet has helped hundreds of women, even though they never studied with me. I will send it to you free, and tell you all about my work on request. Write now. If you do not need my work, you may be able to help a friend.

A Reminiscence of Garibaldi

AMONG your many readers you have not one more pleased and interested than myself in the account given in your last issue of brave old Garibaldi and his family. It may seem rather strange, after so many years, that a Christian granddaughter should come from Rome; that you in New York should give her a Christian welcome, and that one of your oldest readers, now living in this far Western corner, near the source of the Father of Waters, the world-renowned Mississippi, should be one of the number who had the honor and pleasure of meeting and giving welcome to the brave, large-hearted soldier when he went to London after his glorious victory in taking Rome.

All seems to me but of yesterday. He was met at the Bricklayers' Arms Railroad Station by tens of thousands, young and old, rich and poor, and escorted through the streets of London to the Duke of Sutherland's London mansion. It was such a scene as I think never was seen in London before nor since. Pen or tongue could not describe it. From Westminster bridge to the Duke of Sutherland's house, the crowd of humanity was so packed that, once in the crowd, you were fixed there with no possibility of retreat.

When we arrived in front of the Horseguards, those nearest the carriage unhitched the horses and the carriage with the hero was dragged the rest of the way by thousands that delighted to do him honor. It was the enthusiasm of a right and just people for the work done by this one man not only for Italy, but for the whole world—a victory over tyranny, ignorance and superstition. England above all nations wanted to do him honor, and did it to its full in the short time it had the chance.

But a sudden change took place, as if a cyclone or earthquake had struck the nation. Nearly every city in England had invited the general to come and receive its thanks and the freedom of the city; and great preparations were made to receive him. But his London reception was his first and last; for, after he had entered the Duke of Sutherland's house, he was seen no more in public, but was secretly and suddenly taken, put on board a vessel, and with all speed possible taken across the sea to his humble home.

I have a photograph of the great man which I bought in London at that time. They were sold by the tens of thousands. He wore the celebrated red flannel Garibaldi jacket or sweater. His appearance was that of a lion facing its prey. He looked what he was—a good man, a perfect general, a courageous fighter for truth and righteousness, fearing no hardship, no foe, no obstacle, no burden, and all for the love of his native land.

Up to the time when Garibaldi entered Rome, no Bible could be sold on the streets of that city, no Protestant place of worship could be erected. The free religion of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ was there as if it never existed. But what a change within a few months after the light had entered the old city! The blessed Bible was sold and read with great joy. Temples were erected, small and great, where all could worship, young and old, rich and poor, without fear or favor, to learn of the love and mercy of the Son of God. And now, to think that a lovely granddaughter of the fearless hero should be one of the prominent workers in the uplift of that ancient stronghold! And again to think that France, the nation which held the gates of Rome locked for so many ages, should now overthrow the power she once protected throughou her own nation! So we have now rel gious freedom in Rome and freedom i France, and may God grant that fre dom may reign forever throughout th world. WILLIAM DENLEY.

People in the Public Eye

ENATOR J. P. DOLLIVER died in his home at Fort Dodge, Ia., on turday evening, October 15. As his ath was wholly unexpected the coun- was shocked the following morning learn of his passing away. The ysical cause of death was certified enlargement of the heart, but the rect contributing cause was his in- nse devotion to what he considered ty, in other words, hard work.

From boyhood Dolliver was remark- le for close application to whatever undertook and in later years the igencies and demands of political e intensified the strain. In thirty- e years he did not allow himself a liday, but kept constantly on the ind, burning the candle at both ends,

The Late U. S. Senator Dolliver

d as a consequence his wick of life ckered out at the comparatively rly age of fifty-two. He is mourned a wide circle of friends all over the untry, as well as by his party asso- ates in the political arena.

Jonathan Prentiss Dolliver was born Kingwood, Putnam County, W. Va., February 6, 1858. His people, how- er, were not Virginians. His father, e Rev. J. J. Dolliver, a Methodist inister, was a native of New York ate, while from his mother he in- erited the blood of the South. Though s parents were poor they struggled give him a good education, conse- uently he was sent to the University West Virginia, where he soon owed himself a precocious student id began to display the talents which ere to distinguish him in the after me. Especially he was a fluent lker and speaker and very ready in bate. Indeed, from the very begin- ng he was fluent of speech and had wonderful command of English. He ade such rapid strides in his studies at he was graduated at seventeen. is ambition was to become a lawyer id with this end in view he perse- red until he succeeded in getting mself admitted to the bar when but venty years old. It was not all plain iling with young Dolliver at this me; he had many adverse waves to ffet, many storms to encounter. For time he taught school in Illinois and anaged to get together $200, which he ntifully gave to his mother. Coming the conclusion that there was a bet- r field farther West he and his other set out for Iowa and settled own at Fort Dodge. They had a rd struggle at first. Young Jona- an had to work for a time on the ublic road at a little over a dollar a ay. When he became better known e was elected Corporation Counsel at salary of $200 a year.

In 1884 he took the "stump" for laine and became famous not only in e country, but throughout the State, s the "boy orator."

Now the laurels which most boy ora- rs entwine around their juvenile rows, as a general rule fade and wither ere the years of maturity ar- rive. It was different, however, with Dolliver; he kept them green and fresh to the end, and it is doubtful if there was a finer or more polished orator on the floor of the Senate than he. His language was simple, yet striking, his diction good and his elo- cution perfect. Nature assisted him in this direction. He had a fine physique, coal-black hair, prominent nose and a speaking mouth from which the words rolled in well-modulated, euphonic tones. He instantly com- manded attention and audiences lis- tened to him with rapt admiration.

Dolliver early embarked on the po- litical seas for himself and his craft was finally destined to sail into troubled waters. In his thirty-first year he was elected to Congress by the Republicans of the Tenth District of Iowa. To the same honor he was re- elected five times. It was in the Fifty- sixth Congress in 1900 that his term was broken in upon when he was ap- pointed Senator for the unexpired term of the Hon. J. H. Gear. After- wards he was elected to the Senate twice.

In religion Senator Dolliver followed in the footsteps of his father and was a communicant of the Methodist Epis- copal Church.

Though Dolliver cannot be ranked as a great statesman, he was something more, something higher than a politi- cian. He rose above the pettiness of party politics. He was no hypocrite, he did not conceal his sentiments, but went according to his honest convic- tions. True, he had enemies, but such were only a testimony to his worth. The man without enemies does noth- ing worth accomplishing. Dolliver met the foe openly and fought openly.

THE new Lord Mayor of London, Sir Vezey Strong, is a many-sided man, and on the whole popular with the British masses of the metropolis. All his life he has been a rigid and uncompromising total abstainer.

King Edward VII. was an initia- tor of reforms, and during the closing years of his reign he established a precedent by permitting public officials to toast the Sovereign's health in soft beverages.

Therefore Sir Vezey Strong, in this respect, will be able to uphold the civic dignity of his office without surren- dering a particle of his cherished prin- ciples on the drink question.

Sir Vezey is in his fifty-fourth year, strong and active and with a keen in- tellect to both official and business affairs. He received his knighthood from the hands of the late King in 1904 when he occupied the office of High Sheriff.

New York

One Month's Free Trial

$220 Freight Prepaid

In 1821 in Dresden, Saxony, William Lindeman began making the Lindeman Piano, from his own scales; and it was soon recognized as "a better piano."

Thousands of the Lindeman Pianos are in use today, to the satisfaction of their owners. Their handsome appearance, their enduring quality, and their sweet tone prove that they have been wisely builded.

We have searched for a high-grade, everyway-satisfactory piano to sell by Mail Orders at a low price, and we now offer

The LINDEMAN Endorsed by JOHN WANAMAKER

We knew the Lindeman to be just right as to quality, but the wholesale price had been $220, which required that the local dealer sell it at $350, or more. (Ordinarily, remember that between the factory and the home there is the Jobber, the Wholesaler, and the Local Dealer, each of whom must have a profit; to say nothing of the various storage, freight and handling charges.)

We have at last found a way to get around all these "middlemen profits": First, we take all the pianos the factory can make. Second, we are content with such a small profit that we can sell the Lindeman, with all the Lindeman excellence, at the former wholesale price, $220. We not only ship it directly to your home from the factory—it is moved but that one time—but we pay the freight ourselves. 211

Every possible saving is thus made for the purchaser. No jobber, no wholesaler, no local dealer, no freight. The saving on this "bed-rock" offer is all yours.

John Wanamaker
New York

To show our confidence in it: We shall allow you a free trial for a month, without any payment. At the end of that time you will know that the piano is satisfactory, or that it is not. If you do not want it, then simply tell us so, and we will advise you how to return it at our expense. If it is satisfactory, you either send us $220, or a small sum down and the balance monthly. You must be satisfied in this transaction, or else, "no sale."

Questions and Answers

In forwarding MSS. to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, enclose stamped envelopes for return, if unavailable.

J. M. T., Creedmoor, N. C. Is there any Scripture commending preaching at funerals?

None; nor was any required. The custom has a very ancient origin, and almost universal practice; it prevailed among the Chaldeans, Egyptians, Chinese, and ancient Greeks and Romans, as an appropriate recapitulation of the commendable acts and heroic deeds of the deceased.

Ella D., Trenton, N. J. Who wrote the music of Julia Ward Howe's "Battle Hymn of the Republic"?

A humble composer, William Steffe, wrote the score of the well known song for a firemen's parade in Richmond, Va., in 1855. It became popular, although the words to which it was originally written have been forgotten long ago. Then the air was taken up by some of the Southern churches and sung to a prayer meeting hymn. Later, after the "John Brown" episode, it was sung to "John Brown's Body." When Mrs. Howe's "Battle Hymn" appeared, Steffe's old score was again called into service and it is now sung to the "Hymn," to which it is admirably suited.

C. T. Y., New Iberia, La. 1. On what occasions did our Saviour weep? 2. How long did he remain on earth after he arose from the grave?

1. At the grave of Lazarus (John 11: 35), and beholding Jerusalem (Luke 19: 41). 2. Forty days elapsed between our Lord's Resurrection and his Ascension.

G. A., Waterbury, Conn. When did the great earthquake occur in Lisbon, and how many lives were lost?

November 1, 1755. Between 30,000 and 40,000 perished.

V. H. B., Torrington, Conn. 1. Did God send his only begotten Son into this world to teach the people by example and precept how to live, in order to secure eternal life? 2. Is it reasonable to consider Matt. 3: 13-17 as the first lesson Jesus taught by example as he began his ministry; also John 3: 3-5, as his first lesson by precept? 3. Is it reasonable to consider John 13: 1-17 as the last lesson he taught by example, when he finished his ministry; also Matt. 25: 34-40, as the last lesson he taught by precept? 4. What does Mark 10: 15, also Matt. 22: 14 mean?

1. Yes. His general command was "Follow me!" 2 and 3. Such conclusions are justifiable by the context; but we must bear in mind that none of these evangels was written until long after the Ascension of our Lord, therefore the recorded incidents cannot always be accepted as consecutive happenings. 4. The disposition of a little child is confiding, trustful, docile and amenable to teaching; these are the spiritual attitudes in which the Kingdom of God must be received. The opposite conditions, sometimes termed "natural," are carping, doubting, obstinate, disobedient, and perverse; these hinder acceptance of the truth at all times. Matt. 22: 14 is the moral of the preceding parable. The Gospel invitation is issued to all the world, but comparatively few give it acceptance. From among the multitudes which listened to the preaching of Jesus, he chose only seventy disciples, who were worthy; and of these only eleven remained faithful unto him till his death.

Teacher, Washington, D. C. 1. Is it possible for one who understands only English to be useful as a teacher in China? 2. Will she he paid for teaching or must she be able to pay her own expenses?

1. She could not hope to succeed in China or any other foreign country until she had learned the native language. 2. If she is sent out by a missionary board, her expenses will be paid by the board in proportion to the value of her services.

M. B. R., Germantown, Pa. Is there any good reason to regard the passage in Nahum 2: 4, as a prediction of the automobile?

We are aware that some writers and preachers have so regarded it, but such an interpretation is in no sense justified. The prophet referred to the Medo-Babylonian attack on wicked Nineveh. The wheels of the chariots were like flashing scythes (or had "the fire and glitter of flashing steel"). In ancient chariots, sharp scythes were fastened at right angles to the wheels, and served as very effective weapons, when the chariots were in swift motion. These war chariots would be driven in great haste and would dash along the wide streets in the centre of the city, their bronze and iron parts gleaming like lightnings in the sun as they swept past. The "broad places"—i. e., plazas and large open spaces—would seem to be lighted up as with torches. The whole description is that of the pomp and splendor of ancient warfare.

J. A., Clear Lake, Ia. 1. When there arose so sharp a contention between Paul and Barnabas that they parted, did they ever meet again and become reconciled? 2. When Jesus rose from supper and washed the apostles' feet, did he wash Iscariot's feet?

1. The cause of the dissension was that Barnabas clung to his nephew Mark, after Mark had left Paul in Perga (Acts 15: 38). Paul's later epistles intimate that Mark afterward became one of his most devoted companions; hence, there is every probability that Paul and Barnabas became reconciled. 2. There is no record on the subject and conjecture is useless.

T. J. R., Blocker, Okla. Has any church today a right to claim to be the original church established by Jesus Christ?

All Christian churches have an equal claim to consideration in this respect. Attempts by any church or denomination to establish a claim to priority over all others have signally failed. Jesus built his church in the hearts of men, and his little band of followers were not dignified by any denominational title. The word "church" is first applied by Luke to the company of disciples gathered together at Pentecost; so, if anything, it was a Pentecostal church. Creeds and denominations came along afterward. All authorities agree that there is no valid claim to exclusive descent by any church organization now in existence.

G. H., Bois D'Arc, Mo. 1. Does I. Tim. 2: 15 mean that in childbearing alone woman shall be saved; and verses 11 and 12 that women have no part in Christian work? 2. What kind of baptism is meant in Rom. 6: 3, 4; water or the Holy Ghost?

1. The salvation referred to in I. Tim. 2: 15 meant the promise of the Saviour, born of a woman; which promise had been fulfilled and was meant to include all the human race. Orthodox Jews do not believe that promise to have been yet fulfilled. 2. These verses could not be so understood, since Paul repeatedly in other places recognizes the ministrations of women in Christian work. 2. Baptism by water and of the Spirit (see John 3: 5) cannot be dissociated as essentials to salvation; by the first are we "baptized into his death," by the second "we also should walk in newness of life." The better rendering is "by baptism with him into death we are buried with him," thus severing the last link of connection "with the whole sinful condition and life which Christ brought to an end in his death."

S. T. H., Baltimore, Md. Is there any marriage ceremony given in the Bible? When and where was the first marriage ceremony celebrated?

There is no marriage ceremony outlined in the Bible, but Gen. 21: 63-67 and 29: 22-27 give an idea of what it must have been in those early days. The Jewish Talmud prescribes the form and language of the ancient Hebrew marriage covenant, with the responsive vows, etc. The first marriage was in Eden. (See Gen. 1: 27 and 2: 18-24; Matt. 19: 5, 6.)

We are still receiving many letters of protest against the removal of the Bible from the Illinois public schools. Our regret is that we cannot publish all of these. The following from an old subscriber (Mr. A. V. O., Wash.) is specially earnest: "After a conversation with a government official of high standing, I am led to request your bringing this vital matter again into notice. The widespread influence of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has always counted in favor of the righteousness of this great country as the secret of its power. I was brought up where morning prayer opened the school and a benediction dismissed it. A few verses of Scripture were recited on Monday mornings and the Ten Commandments and Lord's Prayer were committed to memory by every child, as the ground-work of education. The memory was well stored with these blessed truths, perhaps lightly regarded in childhood. As one soon to join the throng who are worshiping on the other shore—heing past seventy years—allow me to beg that the Christian people your splendid magazine reaches may be more in earnest and more alert in protesting against the removal of God's commands from our young students, lest his frown should fall upon our fair land, 'Because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel' (Isa. 5: 24)."

F. F. F., Oshkosh, Wis. 1. Please explain, as for a Sabbath School class, James 2: 10. 2. Why are not the Scriptures written grammatically as the schools teach grammar? 3. Is there a probability of the Bible being again revised?

1. First see Deut. 27: 26; then the verse following in this chapter of James explains the warning contained in verse 10. The law must he considered as to its unity, as a whole, as a seamless garment, which is rent, if you but rend a part. The infraction of any part of the law necessarily amounts to an infraction not of all the parts, but of the wholeness or unity of the law. 2. The King James version of the Scriptures, which is the version now in common use, was translated and compiled before the modern intricacies of the English language came into being, hence it would be unreasonable to expect the common version to conform to modern syntax. 3. Yes; since new discoveries of very ancient manuscripts and translations of original MSS. are still being made.

Subscriber, Phoenix, Ariz. Kindly explain what is meant politically by the adoption of the initiative, the referendum and the recall.

The initiative is the right of the people, as a whole, to demand certain legislation from their representatives. The referendum is the submission of a proposed measure or law, after legislative action, to the vote of the people for ratification. The recall is the privilege exercised by the people of demanding, upon petition signed by certain numhers, the resignation or retirement of any representative who in their opinion is not performing his duties faithfully as a public servant or for other good reason.

E. L. B., Hagerman, N. M. 1. What are we to understand by the kingdom which Christ preached; was it spiritual or temporal? 2. Are there three divisions in paradise? 3. Did Christ preach to the spirits in paradise during the three days his body lay in the grave?

1. Luke 17: 20, 21, answers the first of these questions. 2. This was a helief prevalent among the Hebrews previous to the Gospel revelation. We have no authority in New Testament times for any longer holding it. 3. 1. Pet. 3: 19 says: "He went and preached unto the spirits in prison." No reason has been found for altering this translation.

Inquiry having been made concerning the statement in "Our Children's Pulpit" regarding the Jew who gave $658,000 to the Revolutionary cause and did not ask a dollar of it back, Rev. Dr. J. M. Farrar sends this reply:

"My reference was not to Robert Morris, but to a Polish Jew by the name of Haym Solomon, who invested all his fortune, some $650,000, and never received any of it in return. My authority for this you will find in an article in Munsey's Magazine, p. 393, January, 1906. The article was written by Herbert N. Casson, entitled, "The Jew in America." Also in an article in the New York Herald of date November 26, 1905, you will find the same statement. Also find in the same paper on December 26, 1907, this statement: "Haym Solomon never even asked for a dollar back of the $658,000 he furnished to the impoverished government. He contributed liherally to the personal expenses of leaders like Jefferson, Madison, Lee and Monroe, and endured long confinement in British jails for the cause of American independence."

To Prove That You Can Artistically Color and Finish Any Kind of Wood About the Home

YOU can produce any desired shade and effect. The expense is slight—the work easy and simple. First apply Johnson's Wood Dye—made in 14 shades as listed below. Over the Dye lightly apply Johnson's Prepared Wax, and you have a beautiful, rich, subdued finish that will not mar or show scratches.

Johnson's Wood Dye must not be confused with colored varnishes or stains, which merely coat the surface of the wood, hiding the natural grain beauty. Johnson's Wood Dye is not a mere stain—not merely a surface dressing—it is a deep-seated dye which goes to the very heart of the wood and stays there, fixing a rich and permanent color.

is made in fourteen attractive shades, as follows:

No. 126. Light Oak — No. 110. Bog Oak — No. 131. Brown Weathered Oak
No. 123. Dark Oak — No. 128. Light Mahogany — No. 132. Green Weathered Oak
No. 125. Mission Oak — No. 129. Dark Mahogany — No. 121. Moss Green
No. 140. Manilla Oak — No. 130. Weathered Oak — No. 122. Forest Green
No. 172. Flemish Oak — No. 178. Brawn Flemish Oak

Pints, 50 cents each

Johnson's Prepared Wax

dries quickly over Dye or any other finish, so that it may be brought to a beautiful, dull, artistic finish. It should be used for all woodwork, floors and furniture, including pianos, and is just the preparation for Mission furniture.

Johnson's Under-Lac

is not a common varnish—but a thin elastic spirit preparation superior to shellac or ordinary varnish, and is to be used over Wood Dye where a higher gloss than a wax finish is desired, drying hard in half an hour. Best preparation for linoleum and oilcloth, bringing out the pattern as glossy as new. Gallons, $2.50—smaller sizes down to half pints.

A Great Rescue Mission

THE Melvin E. Trotter City Rescue Mission of Grand Rapids, Mich., has been a beacon light of hope and safety to hundreds of shipwrecked mariners floating about on the sea of life. The mission has now been in existence ten years and in that time it has been one of the most powerful agencies for good in Grand Rapids. Its sole purpose is to point the way to a better life to those who have been slaves to sinful habits. It is open every night in the year. Beginning in an unattractive room, 20 by 70 feet, the Mission now has a building of its own with a seating capacity of 850. It has outgrown even this increased capacity and could use much more room than it has. From the first day of its organization, the mission has been under the direction of Mr. Melvin E. Trotter, who was converted in the Pacific Garden Mission in Chicago several years before he began his good work at Grand Rapids. The various organizations of this useful Mission include an S. S. or Soul Seekers' Society, the motto of which is "Saved to Serve." The members of this society are sixty-five young women. There is also a society of forty working girls, a Mothers' Society and a Sunday School of 250 members, composed very largely of children who did not attend Sunday School anywhere before the Mission was opened. The Mission has two Gospel wagons manned by converts. Special attention is given to work among prisoners in jails and those who are released from these institutions. Mr. Trotter's most helpful worker is his wife, Melvina E. Trotter. They have consecrated their lives to Christian service, and have found a great field of opportunity in the City Rescue Mission. J. L. H.

Melvin E. Trotter

Of Revolutionary Stock

MR. JOSIAH SMALL of Paonia, Col., has been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twenty years. He is eighty-six years old and has a family of eight children, all living; twenty-eight grandchildren, and twenty-six great-grandchildren. The father and mother are both living and have been married sixty years. The mother is now in her eightieth year, but she walks three or four miles every day. The old folks are both grandchildren of soldiers of the Revolution.

A Remarkable Family

E. C. CARNETT of Hazard, Perry County, Ky., was born March 8, 1822, and was married to Miss Cynthia Grigsley, July 8, 1844. To them were born eleven children, six girls and five boys. These children are all living, and the father and mother are also living at the ripe ages of eighty-three and eighty-eight. The old pair have sixty-eight grandchildren and seventy-one great-grandchildren, which added to their eleven children make a grand total of 153 souls in the four generations. BUD. MARGAN.

How Jacob Killed the Cobra

I SOMETIMES say to friends, half in earnest, half in jest, because I have no permanent home on earth:

"Come and see me in my mansion in the skies, and there I'll surely give you a great surprise!"

Yet, if we will only open our eyes, we need not wait till we reach heaven for our great surprise; but here we see on every hand God's wondrous work.

It was our privilege a short time ago to revisit Kurnool, where we spent five years in the service of Jesus as missionaries. Twenty years ago, when we first visited the town, Kurnool seemed a forlorn hope. The people, Mohammedans as well as Hindus, are slaves to drink. A strong wall with mighty bastions surrounds the city. It was one of the best fortified cities in India. How could we ever hope to storm these fortifications of sin! God chose the children to do this work. We have always believed that Christian children are the strongest moral force in the world. While we could not reach many of the drunken men and women, we did succeed in rallying their children around the Cross. Now, as we look at Dr. and Mrs. Stanton, our worthy successors in the mission there, and their valiant staff of native Christian workers, we see how productive and effective is this work for the little ones. Almost without exception these sturdy men and women were pupils in our mission schools, and for some years were the playmates of our children, while they were with them in the mission compound.

Almost the only old workers we saw were Jacob and his wife. I appointed Jacob as a colporteur. He sells more books than any other man I know of anywhere in India. You find him everywhere, at the new railway station, in the bazars, at the schools and bungalows of the officials, and he will not leave till he has sold some books.

Jacob is a genius. When a cobra killed some of our children's pet rabbits he said:

"I'll catch the snake with a fish-hook!"

He put a frog on the hook, tied a strong string at the other end of the hook and let the frog hop around in front of the wall in which the snake lived. Sure enough the snake swallowed the frog and the hook, and, when Jacob pulled in his line, he pulled the deadly cobra out of the wall and killed it. To see Jacob and his wife and their children, and children's children, and a host of Christian workers, was indeed a surprise to us.

Do you want the greatest surprise of life? Then work for Jesus. It pays!

GEORGE N. THOMSSEN.

Bapatla, India.

Medical Work in Korea

[T was very good to receive the gift of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers oward our hospital building that is o much needed here at Kwangju. This brings the amount up to six hundred and twelve dollars. The ten housand is just a little slow in coming, but we are not discouraged.

It is interesting to note that this mount was started by a widow's mite. A very rich lady—rich in God's grace ut poor as for dollars—took one dollar of her hard-earned money and put t aside for our hospital. May God ontinue to bless her.

Most of the boys treated at the dispensary were orphans and with no mother or home to go to. We have kept them in two eight-foot-square rooms in our back yard for the past year, some for two years. One is named Sunbow, which means a righteous rock. When a very small boy he was snake-bitten on the foot and this caused gangrene, causing the leg to get in a very bad shape; and as there was no doctor to care for the poor little fellow his old father amputated it. His parents died, and for some time he led a poor little beggar's life. Now he is a bright, happy, little baptized Christian, and his smile would cure your blues or indigestion.

Koreans are very much like the people of the old Biblical days, having all some special meaning for their names. For instance, the meaning of these boys' names—Monjune, a thousand times great; Youngbow, a heavenly rock; Sungee, a complete foundation; Soonsagie, a gentle rock. There are other such names, as Little Rascal, The Last One, Little Pup, Father's Seventieth Birthday Magpie, The Village Dog.

We are having quite a number of operations these days, one or two almost every day. They have to be put on the floor of the waiting room after operation, and, of course, it is impossible to keep this clean. It made my heart very sad last week when a boy who had been operated on for cataract got his eye infected, so now he is blind, with no hopes of sight. A little clean ward would probably have meant sight for him. One dear old lady was blind for twenty-three years from cataract, but is now happy, with good vision. Her sweetest hope and vision now is the light of our blessed Saviour that she has gained.

We made a mouth for a little boy yesterday. Five years ago he took some Korean medicine, which made his mouth very sore. After this he would let no one touch his mouth, so it healed, leaving only a very small opening, which would not admit the tip of my little finger. He is very happy today with his new mouth. I could not get his father in the church Sunday, but we are praying that he may accept Jesus before leaving here.

Answered Prayers

Mrs. M. D., Fort Lupton, Col. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer."

R. E., Cleveland, Okla. "God recently answered prayer in restoring loved ones to health."

P. H., Calumet, Okla. "I promised the Lord that if he would forgive me I would acknowledge it."

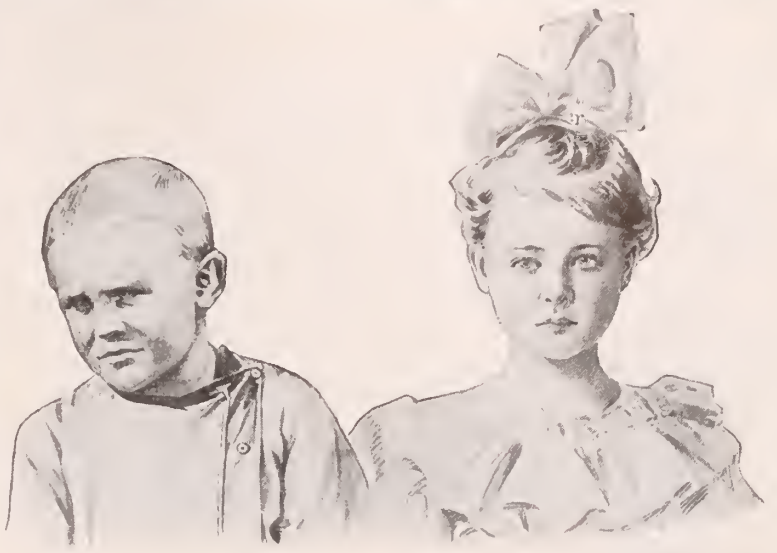
E. S., Danson, Tex. "I know the Lord answers prayers. He answered mine when a loved one was ill."

N. S., Sheridan, Ind. "I want to acknowledge the goodness of God to us in answering our petitions in sparing our little babe."

E. M. L., Philadelphia, Pa. "I promised the Lord if he would restore me to health, after a relapse from typhoid fever, I would make it known. He answered."

Mrs. A. C. D., Atlanta, Ga. "My sister had an extensive and serious operation and while in the hospital I asked all my friends and pastor for special prayer in her behalf and I am sure that is what saved her."

A. W. W., Greensboro, N. C. "Intending to plead with our heavenly Father for means that I might attend college, as this year seemed to stand before me as a turning point in my life, I acknowledge that the answer came before I asked."



How Much of This Difference is Due to Oatmeal?

We have canvassed hundreds of homes which breed children like these—the wan and anemic, the red-cheeked and strong—the capable and the deficient. Here are some of the facts we found.

Among the ignorant of our largest cities not one home in twelve serves oats. The teachers in those sections find that the children lack the power of concentration.

The physicians of those sections say that the average child is nervous—that it matures undeveloped—that it lacks mental and physical power. The ranks of the incompetent are largely recruited from these homes of the underfed.

Among the homes of the educated, seven out of eight regularly serve oatmeal.

We inquired of fifty professors in one university and found but two who don't serve it. We inquired by letter of 12,000 physicians, and we find that four in each five serve oatmeal.

The average daily serving at the finest hotels is one pound to each eighteen guests.

Boston consumes 22 times as much oatmeal per capita as do two certain states where the average education is lowest.

It is everywhere apparent that the consumption of oatmeal is directly in proportion to the average of the well-informed.

In After Years

A canvass of 61 poorhouses shows that only one in each 13 of the inmates came from oatmeal homes. Two-thirds of the boys in prison schools never tasted oatmeal at home. Not two per cent of the prisoners in four great penitentiaries had oatmeal as a childhood food.

But our canvass proved that four-fifths of the college students come from oatmeal homes. So do two-thirds of the teachers of children. So do the great majority of the leaders interviewed in every walk of life. How much of this difference was due to the food of youth?

Scientific Opinion

Scientists tell us that 90 per cent of a child's fitness is fixed before it enters a school, and that fitness depends largely on food.

Oats contain more proteids, more organic phosphorus, more lecithin than any other cereal foods. Proteids are the body builders, phosphorus is the main constituent of the brain, and lecithin of the nerves. Oats form the best balanced food to supply in abundance what brains and bodies require.

Quaker Oats

Just the Rich Cream of the Oats

Quaker Oats is the most delicious of all the oat foods used. It is made of just the rich, plump oats, selected by 62 siftings. We get only ten pounds to a bushel.

These selected oats, prepared by our process, have won millions of users, and the largest sale in the world.

When you once learn the goodness of Quaker Oats you will always insist on it, and the cost is only one-half cent per dish.

The Father's House*

FROM appearances one would judge that a large proportion of our people fail to realize that they have a spiritual nature.

They recognize that their physical constitution must be regularly fed and cared for, or else it will fail.

They see no less plainly that their minds must receive a certain amount of culture and education, or else they cannot meet the competition for place and pelf which they encounter on every side.

But they do not seem to "sense" the great fact that they have souls, which need attention quite as much as body or mind; and that character, progress, and even eternal life, depend upon this culture of the soul.

The world was a long time in waking up to the fact that national and individual standing were largely governed by the intelligence which mental education develops. They have been ages longer in finding out that soul-culture is the most important of all.

Broadly speaking, the only institutions which stand for this soul-culture are the churches. Until something better is devised, they must continue so to stand. Like all other humanly managed institutions, our churches are faulty; but we are persuaded that our God is behind our human weakness and effectually inspires his preachers and his people. Until in his good providence he gives us a higher revelation, he will uphold his church.

The shallow sophistry that we can worship God "in the groves which were his first temples," as a young man said last summer (and as thousands say weekly, in effect), is contemptible.

Put into plain language it means, "I would rather go pleasure-seeking in the woods and fields than to uphold the honor of God's house."

For the church cannot live unless its people support it by their presence regularly at its services. No amount of money will make up for the lack of your personal presence.

Go into the woods and fields, by all means, and wherever you go, let your heart rise continually in worship to your Maker; but do not take for your excursions the time that should be given to his church.

Where there are no churches, the character of the population goes down; property depreciates; vice flourishes.

Moral: Go to church regularly yourself and try to persuade all your friends to go; and help to build churches wherever there are none.

"The pure gold of the Spirit," says President William DeWitt Hyde, "is most effectually circulated when mixed with the alloy of rites, ceremonies, creeds, officers and organizations. Though no essential part of the pure Gospel, yet these forms and observances, these bishops and clergy, these covenants and confessions, are as practically useful for the maintenance and spread of the Christian spirit, as courts and constitutions, governors and judges, are for the orderly conduct of the State."

It is long since Martin Luther proclaimed that the just live by faith, and not by penances or rites.

This is forever true, and yet a certain amount of ceremonial must be maintained, in order to insure the life of the Spirit. We must have churches in every community and we must not neglect the assembling of ourselves together.

Let us honor our God by helping to build churches in the desolate places and by regularly appearing in his sanctuary ourselves.

Chats With Young Folks

The Biters Bitten

HE teacher of a country school took her "nature-study" class out banizing one fine afternoon. It consed of five boys and four girls.

After they had gathered all the sange flowers and insects that they cld find, they all sat down near a btiful cascade to rest a little.

The teacher and the girls were ting earnestly about a certain fler, and were comparing it with its sposed picture in their botany, when tl suddenly missed the boys.

hey had evidently been gone for se minutes, for they were well up th gently-slanting hillside before the tcher spied them.

hen she and the girls saw what the naughty boys were doing. They ha discovered that Farmer Jones, in wse pasture they were wandering, h a herd of cows near by. The mischvous urchins had evidently conced the idea of driving the cows dn toward the girls, in order to sce them.

n came the bewildered cows, probal unable to imagine why they were bg headed toward the brook at that ti of the day.

s they came, the girls and their tcher naturally uttered notes of distance and started to run, but what w their astonishment (and delight) tosee that the cows, for some unkn reason, had suddenly stopped ching them and had turned upon the bs who had been urging them on.

hen you should have seen those bs run! With one accord they chged madly up the low hill, and as th cows came closer and seemed to be giving wilder, the boys made for trs and began to climb them in a pect panic.

resently the farmer's boy apped, for it was nearly milking-tit. He calmed the cows down and sceeded in heading them toward hce with the help of one of the boys, wm he made such fun of that he was fa to climb down (after carefully aring himself with a stout branch fr the oak tree in which he had ta'n refuge).

he teacher and the girls are laughin yet over the way in which the tas were so suddenly turned that da but the boys look sober whenever it mentioned and try to change the sucject.

Mr. Kipp's Pupils

R. KIPP was only eighteen years old when he began to teach school at Jenny Corner, a small "neighborho" in a large and scattered townsh in the West.

e was not very tall, but he knew 't teacher" ought to be dignified, so he ried on his first day to stand very stright and look very sober. The road wa muddy and he had to carry a big dinner-pail, but he flattered himself th he was doing pretty well, until he met a big old farmer, who called ou to him good-naturedly, "Hello, Bub, go to school, be ye? Wal, be a good bo' e had hardly recovered from the shk of this salutation, when he reached the schoolhouse, to find a letter awaiting him there. It was addressed to Gotham Kipp, Knowledge Puncher, Peny Corner School."

r. Kipp wished that he could "pch" the roguish cousin who had thus insulted him; for every one of the dozn or more children who had arrivl before him, had read the inscriptic and were chuckling "in their sleves," as he well knew.

mong the stories which Mr. Kipp relles of those early days of schoolteaching are some which may amuse you.

He told a boy to write a sentence containing the word "born."

The boy responded with, "I wasn't borned jesterday."

In the American History class a girl when asked what was the character of Peter Stuyvesant, replied after some thought, that he was "stout-headed and had a silver leg."

A little five-year-old boy who had been carefully instructed about raising his hat, joyously reported one morning that he had raised his hat to everybody he had met on the way to school, and he did not forget to do it even to his uncle's old horse, by the pasture-bars.

One boy, whose initials were "H. H.," was very proud of them because the distinguished poet, Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson, used that signature in her writing. He said that she was his favorite author. When asked what she had written, he answered, "Parts of the Bible."

One morning an adoring little girl brought him a little box, saying blushingly that there was "a present" for him inside. On opening it he found that it contained six little moth balls.

A little Swedish boy, who knew little English, had a bad cold. He told Mr. Kipp that his chest hurt him every time he tried to "pull air."

If the young man's pride was hurt by the good farmer's thoughtless greeting, it was as much injured in a different way when one of his young people was asked to make a sentence containing the word "youth."

Imagine the feelings of Mr. Kipp when the following was handed in: "We are all in our youth but you."

Mr. Kipp says that he got more amusement than trouble out of his teaching, and after reading these stories you will not doubt his word.

A Worthy Work

THORNWELL Orphanage, Clinton, S. C., is doing an excellent educational work among the poor parentless boys and girls of that State. The president of the Orphanage, Dr. Jacobs, has served the institution thirty-five years without pay or remuneration of any kind. A Southern writer has this to say of Professor Jacobs and his work:

"He conceived the idea of the Orphanage, built it and has been caring for and educating boys and girls all these years without any financial return. He alone raised the money for the support fund, for the building fund, and for the endowment fund. He has been editor, treasurer, professor, president. He has been friend, counselor, father to all the hundreds of young people who have been at the Orphanage. I know, for I was one of them. I was reared there and spent eight years in the training. Now I am assistant to Dr. Jacobs in his great work. The Board of Trustees decreed that Dr. Jacobs should get a salary, but he resolutely refused. At the last meeting of the Board it was decided to put aside $25,000 of the present endowment, the interest to be used for the present and any future president's salary. Dr. Jacobs again declined to receive any money for his personal benefit. The board appointed me to raise $25,000 to replace that set aside. We have about $4,000 in hand, and a promise of $5,000 conditionally, and hope to get $16,000 more.

There are doubtless many, both North and South, who would be pleased to know more about this worthy work which is strongly commended by many good people who have written to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its behalf. Rev. Dr. Jacobs, Clinton, S. C., will gladly answer all inquiries.

Among the Workers

—THE RECENT establishment of an active department of the Young Men's Christian Association among the young Italians of New York City is the outgrowth of an agitation which has been going on for a number of years. It was brought to a climax by a petition signed by three hundred young Italians of East Harlem who agreed to become members and to raise $1,000 toward the first year's expenses. A brown stone house at No 322 East One Hundred and Sixteenth Street, in the heart of "Little Italy," has been rented for the work. At the formal opening the building was crowded.

—SCOUT MASTERS for the Boy Scouts of America Movement will be trained this fall and winter in a special course at the West Side Young Men's Christian Association. It is believed that the class will be a particularly large one, as there are already 145,000 boy scouts in America, and the number is constantly increasing. Many scout masters will come for their training to New York. Daniel Beard and Ernest Seton Thompson will direct the course of training.

—THE REV. ALLAN MOORE of England has come to New York with a wonderful Palestine Exhibition, which has had a great vogue among the churches, Sunday Schools and general audiences in Great Britain and Canada. It is mainly educational and brings Bible scenes and incidents vividly home to the mind. It includes over four hundred exhibits from Bible lands, models of the tabernacle, the temple, ancient Jerusalem, its various gates, etc. Mr. Moore was for sixteen years a missionary in the Orient.

—THREE YEARS ago, a young lady taught five little children under a sycamore tree in the Puncheon camp, in "Bloody Breathitt, Ky., where there was neither a church nor school. Two years ago Governor Willson dedicated the new Highland College under the same sycamore. On Sunday, September 11, Rev. O. Guerrant dedicated the fifth building, the beautiful campus, a twenty-five-room dormitory for the Highland girls, the gift of a noble woman in Connecticut. This is how the work of the Soul Winners grows.

—A MEMORIAL SERVICE in honor of the late John S. Huyler was held in Calvary Church, New York, lately, at which many prominent speakers, pastors and laymen paid tributes to the deceased philanthropist. One of the speakers, Bishop William Burt, said: "There are thousands who owe their power to him, and services are being held in schools and missions in Venice, Rome and France in gratitude to the memory of their founder. His is a great loss to humanity, for his life and its happiness was an exponent of the beauty and efficacy of the Decalogue."

THE FIRST TASTE

Learned to Drink Coffee When a Baby.

If parents realised the fact that coffee ontains a drug—caffeine—which is es-ecially harmful to children, they would oubtless hesitate before giving the babies offee to drink.

"When I was a child in my mother's ms and first began to nibble things at ie table, mother used to give me sips coffee. As my parents used coffee cclusively at meals I never knew there as anything to drink but coffee and ater.

"And so I contracted the coffee habit rly. I remember when quite young e continual use of coffee so affected my rents that they tried roasting wheat d barley, then ground it in the coffee-ill, as a substitute for coffee.

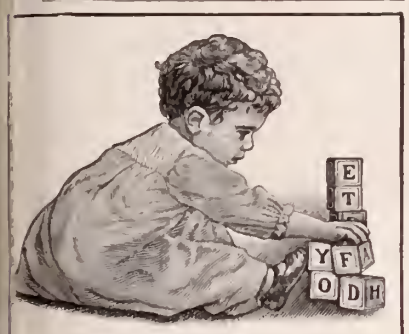
"But it did not taste right and they ent back to coffee again. That was ng before Postum was ever heard of. continued to use coffee until I was 27, d when I got into office work, I began have nervous spells. Especially after eakfast I was so nervous I could arcely attend to my correspondence.

"At night, after having coffee for sup-r, I could hardly sleep, and on rising the morning would feel weak and rvous.

"A friend persuaded me to try Postum. y wife and I did not like it at first, but ter when boiled good and strong it was e. Now we would not give up Postum r the best coffee we ever tasted.

"I can now get good sleep, am free om nervousness and headaches. I rec-mmend Postum to all coffee drinkers. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "Theres's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new e appears from time to time. They e genuine, true, and full of human terest.



MOTHERS:—

THE BABY BOOK (just published) places within your reach a greater variety of merchandise of the highest standard in style, quality and workmanship than can usually be found even in the largest stores of the country. Its pages are filled with practical suggestions which cannot fail to be of real assistance to you in properly caring for and clothing both yourself and babe.

Years of experience have given me a thorough knowledge of the requirements of mother and babe, and I would be pleased at any time to give you my personal advice and assistance in the selection of materials or garments.

A copy of THE BABY BOOK will be mailed to you immediately upon request. Write me personally.

War on the Saloon*

THE closing of the open saloon means substantially the end of the vicious "treating" eustom, whieh has ruined many a fine, generous soul; it means the banishment of most of the publie eentres for the gathering together of low men and boys, sueh as usually eongregate around the saloon doors; it means the absenee from our streets of the glittering lures whieh tempt the unwary to open the shameful sereen-doors and penetrate to the often elean and inviting interiors of the saloons—for they know well how to bait their deadly hooks; and we should bait as well our devices for supplying better entertainment.

The man or boy who has to live in a small tenement, often rendered unpleasant by siek or erying children; dirt or disorder; or a eross, complaining wife and mother; and sometimes by all of these miseries; finds a delightful haven in the saloon. Often the saloon-keeper flatters him, as his kind well know how to do. If he aims at political "boss-ship," he is espeeially suave and deferential. Often he helps the poor man to pay for doetors and medicine for his family. Oftener still, funeral expenses are paid. In New York City, it is rumored that certain undertakers receive a regular salary for sueh serviees from political "bosses," who are also saloon-keepers.

Of course, the poor man beeomes bound to his ehief with bands of steel, and he feels under obligations to drink a good deal to make up for all this kindness, and to bring into the spider's parlor as many of his neighbor-flies as he ean persuade to go.

These and a hundred other evils will be banished if we can only close the saloons by law. Liquor will doubtless still be sold somewhere by the glass surreptitiously; but sueh selling will be a crime, and the stamp of legality will be removed from this shocking and revolting business.

For seientifie purposes, undoubtedly many kinds of alcoholic liquors will always be made and sold.

The raising of the priee of lieenses has perhaps somewhat deereased drunkenness. Many good men believe that by gradually increasing the priee, the saloon may be stamped out most quickly. Others believe that in the local option policy lies the best remedy.

The application of the loeal option prineiple to wards of eities, seems likely to work as well as the West and South have shown that it works in towns, villages and counties. Most interesting statisties have been gathered by the Anti-Saloon League and other societies, of the inerease in savings-bank deposits, of homes owned, of bad debts deereased and of business aetivity and soundness generally, after five years or even one year of a "dry" poliey following a "wet" one.

High license is said by its advoeates to be far more effeetive than prohibition, because "publie opinion" does not support the latter. But the same argument will apply to stealing, though nobody opposes the absolute prohibition by law of stealing. "Public opinion" evidently does not baek up the laws against dishonesty, and one might reasonably wonder why a few extra good burglars, smugglers or bribers might not be licensed to pursue their trade, as well as a few saloon-keepers to pursue theirs, whieh produces more sorrow in the home, direetly and indireetly, than perhaps all the stealing in the world.

Our 1911 Calendar with Every Order

The Calendar has been exquisitely finished by an absolutely new photogravure process, and it is one of the first color paintings ever reproduced in this manner. The colors are rich and perfectly blended. The baby is pictured against a background of a soft, shimmering orange; the beautiful pale-blue bows give a delightful contrast that produces a perfect composition; and the radiance of a rose-like complexion, a charming pink and white combination so typical of health and happiness, have been so faithfully retained that they melt and shade one into another in absolute harmony. The miniature half-tone shown here is incapable, of course, of conveying any adequate idea of the Calendar itself, which is 14 x 18 inches in size, printed on heavy de luxe stock, a dream of artistic perfection. Think of the good old memories this little baby would awaken in your home—memories of the time when those near and dear to you were chubby little ones. The Calendar will be prized by the whole family. It is free with each new and renewal subscription.

Photogravure of Dr. Klopsch—FREE

We will also send a photogravure portrait of the late Dr. Klopsch, one of the world's greatest and most dearly beloved philanthropists. You all know of Dr. Klopsch, and you are sure to welcome this opportunity to obtain a good picture of this sterling man in order to perpetuate his memory in your own home. Address your orders to

UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

(ENGLAND)

AT THE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Cambridge, October, 1910.

A NEW Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, in 29 volumes, including Index, is shortly to be issued by the University of Cambridge, being the Eleventh Edition since the first appearance of this celebrated work in 1768–71. No completely new edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica has been issued since the Ninth, the first volume of which was published in 1875, and the 25th in 1889.

The Encyclopædia Britannica has become an international institution—a heritage of English-speaking people everywhere. In view of its unfailing usefulness in recording the knowledge gained by mankind in every department of human activity, we desire to invite public attention to certain new features of this edition which distinguish it from all previous editions and from all other works of reference whatsoever.

The new work is a fresh and original survey of universal knowledge, an adequate and authoritative exposition of all human thought and achievement. Private enterprise has hitherto been responsible for its publication, but the copyrights having passed into the keeping of the chancellor, masters, and scholars of the University of Cambridge, it will henceforth be issued as a University publication. Cambridge is moreover closely identified with University Extension—a movement having as its object the diffusion of knowledge outside the circle of mere students. The publication by the University of Cambridge of the Encyclopædia Britannica (11th Edition) is another step in the direction of extending the influence of the University beyond academic or local limits.

The Eleventh Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, whilst it has been edited and written on the same lines of comprehensiveness as the Ninth Edition, and whilst it maintains the high reputation of that work, will be marked by several noteworthy improvements. (1) The whole of the M.S.—comprising 40,000 articles—has been written simultaneously, the Editors having at the outset laid out a ground-plan for the new edition which made it possible for them to consider the literary production of the work as a complete whole, as distinguished from the piecemeal—or volume by volume—method of production. The entire contents were continuously under the Editors' view and control before a single page was sent to press. (2) All the volumes are, therefore, of even date (1910), and the information in each volume does not appear elsewhere even in a different setting. A serious defect of the 9th Edition has thus been obviated. There are no repetitions, and no inconsistencies, as the result of this unity of effort on the part of the 1,500 contributors directed by an exceptionally large Editorial staff. (3) The principle of comprehensive treatment has been combined with brevity—major subjects being subdivided into minor ones, which receive independent treatment according to their importance and in their alphabetical places. These short articles are very numerous, and lead the inquirer directly to the information he seeks, so that the Encyclopædia Britannica (11th Edition) will be found to be the most useful work for the purpose of quick reference that has ever been published. (4) Equally welcome will be the innovation which has permitted the use of "dictionary" headings for scientific or technical terms, and for old words having a complicated meaning, or an interesting history. The 9th Edition contained 10,000 strange words not included in any dictionary, but in the 11th Edition such words are explained either under their own headings or in the body of the text as they occur. (5) The new (11th) Edition is, furthermore, a work of international scholarship to a degree never before realised. The Editors recognised that scholarship to-day knows no nationality, and they enlisted the services of specialist authorities and practical experts wherever they could be found. The 1,500 contributors represent all civilised countries. (6) The employment of the greatest experts as contributors has secured for the work the services of men who are known to be at the top of their profession — who are themselves originators in their own fields so that the new (11th) Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica contains information actually in advance of the day and never before published—information upon which the next generation will shape its activities and base its conclusions. (7) Another new feature is the fact that the 11th Edition gives histories of celebrated living persons throughout the world, and thus becomes, for the first time a comprehensive handbook of international biography. (8) The literary cost alone—the sum paid to contributors, Editors, and Editorial assistants — has amounted to £163,000 ($815,000), more than twice the sum (£60,000) similarly expended on the 9th Edition. (9) The 11th Edition consists of 29 quar volumes, including Index, comprising 27,0 pages of text, 40,000 articles, and 40,000,0 words. There are 7,000 illustrations, 330 fu page plates, 250 maps, and a large Index (V 29). (10) The literary contents having all be completed at practically the same time, t volumes will all be delivered to subscribers practically the same time — in the first part 1911. (11) Finally, the new Edition of t Encyclopædia Britannica will be issued in a n format—in thin, light and flexible volumes whi will be easy to handle and convenient to re The volumes of the 9th Edition were, for m persons, too cumbrous in size and too heavy hold in the hand. But by the use of In paper (thin, but very strong and opaque), t thickness has been reduced from 2½ inches ¾ inch, and the complete set will occupy l two feet of shelf space. (The work will also published, for those who prefer it, on ordina book-paper of the some quality as that used the last edition.) In suiting the reader's co venience by reducing the size and weight of t volumes so that he may now keep them co stantly on his library table, the publishers b lieve they have multiplied the usefulness of t Encyclopædia Britannica (11th Edition) to an calculable degree. It cannot be regarded o as a book of reference; it is also a book to re simply for the pleasure it will afford.

The List is open for ADVANCE SUBSCRIPTIONS

The new 11th edition of THE ENCYCLOPÆDIA BRITANNICA is now being printed, and the first copies will soon be ready for deliv.. The work, in 28 volumes and Index, will be in two forms:—

(1) On INDIA PAPER (very thin and light), in three Styles of Binding—CLOTH, FULL FLEXIB SHEEPSKIN, and FULL FLEXIBLE MOROCCO, the volumes to be only ¾-INCH THI (about 960 pages).

(2) On ordinary book paper, in Three Styles of Binding—CLOTH, HALF MOROCCO, and FU MOROCCO, the volumes to be 2¾-inches thick (about 960 pages).

It will not be possible, however, to obtain a large supply of India paper without long notice to the manufacturers, as it ca e produced by but two mills in England, and in the United States by none. Before proceeding with the printing of a large edi , the Publishers must be in a position to ascertain approximately the relative proportion in which subscribers will prefer the thi r India paper impressions, and also to know their preference as regards the bindings. Those who subscribe at once—in advanc f publication (but without remittance until after delivery)—thereby assisting the Publishers to estimate the probable demand r the work in its two forms and six styles of binding, will be allowed a very considerable reduction in the price.

The Publishers reserve the right to discontinue the reduced price as soon as the percentages of ord s for the India paper and the ordinary impressions have been ascertained. Paper, printing, and bind g contracts will then be concluded for a large number of sets, which will be sold at a higher price.

ADVANCE SUBSCRIPTIONS (at $4.25 a volume for India paper bound in Cloth, or $4.00 a volume for the ordinary b paper bound in Cloth), are invited from all English-speaking countries, BUT NO MONEY NEED BE PAID UNTIL AF DELIVERY.

At these prices (the Ninth Edition having been sold, when first issued in England and America, at 30/- or $7.50 a volume), e new Encyclopædia Britannica is a considerably cheaper book than ever before, and in its more convenient and readable f , likely to appeal to a much wider public. Furthermore, the slight additional cost for the India paper impression is not in propor n to its actual market valuation, as it is well known that books printed on India paper are always issued at high prices.

APPLICATION FOR THE PROSPECTUS

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Saluting the President When He Comes Aboard

Marines Lined Up to Receive President Taft

Photographs by Waldon Fawcett

THE PRESIDENT GOING TO PANAMA

PRESIDENT TAFT is scheduled to set sail from Charleston, S. C., on November 10, for a tour of inspection of the Panama Canal. In paying a official visit to the scene of the nation's greatest eative enterprise, the Chief Executive is following ie precedent set by Mr. Roosevelt. It may be remembered, too, that President Taft made a trip nder almost exactly similar circumstances in the terval between his election as President and his auguration. The President is deeply interested the inter-oceanic waterway, and deems a personal rvey of conditions at the seat of operations imerative for a full understanding of some of the ew problems that have lately arisen.

The President is expected to be absent on the anama trip for about three weeks. Upward of ne-half of this time will be spent on the high seas, ut of sight of land. He will travel on one of our rmored cruisers, the deck of which is construed chnically to be "United States oil." He will spend his time t the isthmus in the Canal one, which is assuredly Uncle am's domain; so that neither a letter nor spirit will he violate the restriction that the President of the United States nall not travel beyond its borers during his term of office.

When the President travels y rail in the United States, he s never out of touch with the White House, and through it. ith the entire machinery of he government. Special telegraph wires and long-distance elephone wires reserved for he executive business are used. Through long experience, the White House operators have ecome so adept in this sort of hing that the traveling President always has his finger on he government pulse at Washngton, even though he be journeying on the Pacific coast. The warship on which he will e a passenger is provided with powerful wireless telegraph tation in charge of expert perators, and there is a simlar "intelligence office" on the ister ship which is to convoy he presidential craft, and vhich will incidentally carry o Panama and back some of the members of the presidential party. By means of the wireless, the President will be constantly in touch with the affairs of the outside world and will be enabled to communicate with Washington almost as quickly as if he were traveling by rail on his native soil. This may prove very convenient, for he is expected to prepare his forthcoming annual message to Congress during this cruise, and it is more than likely that he may find occasion to call for data from Washington.

Secretaries and stenographers will accompany him and he will be able to dispose of accumulated correspondence, and even to post his letters, for the cruiser, like other vessels in the United States navy, is fitted with a "marine post office." Several enlisted seamen are detailed as "mail orderlies," or naval postmen, and a nook in the ship is set aside for their use. Collections of mail are made several times a day at the letter boxes throughout the floating fortress, and the mail as it accumulates is sorted and postmarked, so that it is ready to be dispatched to its ultimate destination the minute the warship reaches port. In the case of the presidential mail on the Panama trip, it will be practicable, if desired, to have naval tugs take off or deliver special pouches while the ship is en route.

The presence of the President, as a passenger on any government vessel, calls for the observance of a carefully prescribed routine of salutes and ceremonies, while on the craft so honored flies the special flag of the President—an emblem in which the coat-of-arms of the nation is embroidered in colors on a dark blue field. Not only will there be a ceremony, duly garnished with ruffles and flourishes and accompanied by a salute when the President steps aboard ship for his trip to Panama, but a similar display of official etiquette must, according to the naval regulation, be gone through with every time the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy leaves the ship or returns to it—unless, indeed, he requests that the formality be dispensed with. When the President comes aboard with full honors, he finds the commander of the vessel and his officers waiting at the gangway to receive him, while eight sailor lads form a double line, through which the visitor advances. As he steps aboard, the saluting battery booms out the presidential salute, and the chief magistrate and all other persons present stand with bared heads during the firing of the twenty-one guns and the playing by the band of "The Star-Spangled Banner." The President must be conveyed in state from the wharf, or other point of embarkation, to the waiting warship, anchored in deep water, perhaps a mile or more off shore. He may travel, if he choose, in a steam cutter luxuriously appointed with cushioned seats and sheltered by a close-fitting canvas canopy which defies showers and dashing spray, or he may use a speedy, open motor boat.

A Sermon for Old Folks' Day

By Rev. Daniel L. Marsh, D.D.*

THE EVENING OF LIFE

TEXT—Zech. 14:7

AUTUMNAL days are here. The forests are robed in glory and majesty. Every bush flames with the Awful Immanence. The bending boughs yield up to man their fruit ripened to the core. Across the fields stand shocks of corn like tattered wigwams. The wind wails at the funeral of the flowers, and piles blood-red leaves upon their graves. Along every fence-row the goldenrod still sways and swings as though a bit of the summer's sun had been caught as a crown for common weeds. A purple peace hangs upon the horizon, while shafts of golden sunlight lie athwart the pearly sheen of sky. It is the autumn. And it seems as though the year were kneeling in prayer in a vast cathedral filled with filtered light.

What various and varying thoughts come to us at this time of year! Many shudder as they look upon the grandeur of nature in the autumn time. It makes them think of age and decay and death. And I suppose the reason why "Old Folks' Day" is usually observed in the fall is because people have been in the habit of comparing life with a year—life with its springtime in youth, its summer in manhood, its autumn in age. But after the autumn comes the winter, when all things are dead—held in the bondage of ice and snow.

Life Like a Brief Day

For that reason we prefer to think of life as a day. Then we have childhood as the morning—the morning which turns earth's common pale streams into gold with heavenly alchemy; the morning that sows the earth with sparkling gems richer than any in kingly diadems; the morning that trembles and smiles from out the opened sky; the morning that laughs the clouds away as though earth held no tomb; the morning that overflows the world with its glad promise of the future.

And then, advancing fast and still more fast, like the day, so the life, ever striving to reach the zenith, until midday with its responsibilities and strenuous activities. Then the decline, until, like evening, old age comes on with its pensiveness and memories, "the tender grace of a day that is dead." Old age is evening time—evening, and cares have silently stolen away; evening, and the glimmering landscape fades from sight; evening, and a solemn stillness or a winsome music fills the air; evening, and the journey is ended and the day's work done; evening, and peace and rest and home and Father's face at the door!

But you say that evening is followed by the dark night of death. For the person who is not a Christian, it is a deep, dark night, and he enters it alone, and he knows not whither he goes; he knows not the road home; he may grope his way on and on, his hands hard with the accretion of feeling along the walls of the universe; but still he will not find his way home, for he is alone in the dark night of death. But to the person who is a Christian, death is simply a short cut to get home: there is no dark valley, for the Shepherd's presence shines across the vale. "At evening time there shall be light." "And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light."

Happy Memories

The man who has lived the Christian life stands in the evening time in the light of happy memories. I have noticed that old folks have extraordinarily vivid memories with regard to their early and active years. The old man walks through the gigantic picture gallery called memory, and the light falls upon this scene of his childhood and upon that scene of his manhood, and all things stand out clearly round about him. The old man walks through that library called memory, and the light falls upon the tremendous volume of records, and he reads there the tale of his years. How important, then, that we banish from the halls of memory all that is evil, and give place to that which is good!

The person who comes into old age refusing to "walk in the light as He is in the light" is like the man who stands at the close of day upon the shore of a river, and looks no way but downward. The silent hills and lone trees that darkle against the mellow west he sees reflected in the river, but for him they point down, down, and forever down. That man's heaven is in the earth, and though a star may twinkle here and there, for him it shines far down in some sub-liquid heaven. So in the gathering gloom of life's evening the godless man will recall those words and deeds that will make him cringe and cower before the inaudible, accusing voice of memory, whose recalling makes his last days hell. God forbid that any of you should give free rein to your baser self, as the poet Byron did, who, when he might have been singing about the light at evening, instead wrote this dreary dirge:

> My days are in the yellow leaf,
> The flowers and fruit of love are gone:
> The worm, the canker, and the grief
> Are mine alone!
> The fire that on my bosom preys
> Is lone as some volcanic isle;
> No torch is kindled at its blaze—
> A funeral pile.

But on the other hand, if we "endure as seeing him who is invisible" the light that shines so brightly on the path of consecrated young manhood and womanhood will not grow dim, but will ever "shine more and more unto the perfect day." How different are the words of the Christian Tennyson:

> A land of promise, a land of memory,
> A land of promise flowing with the milk
> And honey of delicious memories.

Like the translucent and transfiguring light of the setting sun that kindles ten thousand candles in the sky, so blessed are the memories of a Christian old man or a Christian old woman. You will remember how you trudged to church through fair weather or foul. You will remember the old home where you knelt in prayer with father and mother. You will remember the hours alone with God. You will remember how well you took your part in every movement for the social, civic and moral betterment of your community. You will remember the deeds of sympathy performed and the words of encouragement spoken to those who stood in need. You will remember the place where, in a passion of repentance, you gave yourself to God. You will remember how the light that came into your soul then has never gone out, but how it has transformed the darkest cloud of sorrow and grief and disappointment into a blessed bow of promise, and your falling tears into heavenly jewels. And with Christina G. Rossetti you will say:

> I have a room whereinto no one enters
> Save myself alone:
> There sits a blessed memory on a throne,
> There my life centres.

The Calmer Joys of Evening Time

Then, Christian old folks have about them at life's evening time the light of usefulness. "The hoary head is a crown of glory," says the Scripture; but it does not stop there: "The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness." We do not expect much fuss from old age. We do not find its usefulness in hustle and bustle. Nevertheless, we ought never to say that the day of achievement is past. The man or woman whose head is hoary, but who is not found in the way of righteousness, is an iceberg floating down the stream of life, radiating chilliness that has a most depressing effect upon all around. Such a person has a personal influence like noxious vapor that kills our best impulses. But the Christian man at life's evening time not only has light about him; he is a light. Not a reflected light merely, like the moon that ceases to shine as soon as the darkness of earth rises between it and the sun; but Christ enjoined his disciples that their whole body should be full of light. We are to dwell in the light that we may become children of the light, in whom there is no darkness at all.

Scientists tell us that nearly half the earth's light and heat come from the stars, and the greater part of this life-giving energy comes from invisible stars, millions of miles from the earth. Thus, the aged Christian may not be able to do much, but he can shine for Jesus. From his own knowledge of the excellence of the Christian religion he can recommend it to others as the most precious gift in the universe. He will recommend it not only by word of mouth, earnestly and tactfully, but even more by the power of a holy life. The coal miner wears upon his cap a little flickering lamp. That lig cannot throw its beams far in the labyrinthian dar ness; but it can shine where it is. That small lan is of more value to the toiler than a blinding a light would be. O friend, be content to be a sm lamp in this world, but be sure you shine.

No one can estimate the power of personal infl ence. Scientists are weighing the air that e compasses us on every side; psychologists a weighing our laughter; astronomers are weig ing the stars. But no one is able to calcula the far-reaching power of personal influen It is a power like the magnet that draws t steel filings to itself. It is a power like the whi clover meadow that attracts the bees. It is a pow like the sunbeam that unlocks the ice-bound doors winter and lets the spring out. It is a power li the south wind that unfolds the rose bud that hand would crush and tear. It is a silent, unoste tatious power, like electricity and gravitation—v never see them; we only know that they exist seeing the effects that they produce. So with t influence of a holy life. Books and sermons may forgotten; tears and prayers may be despised; b the light radiating from a Christian life, the arg ment of a new life in Christ Jesus cannot be gai said.

The Light of His Presence

A Boston paper once contained this item: "Phillip Brooks walked down Newspaper Row yesterday lunch time, nodding to acquaintances here and the and, though the heavens and the pavements we moist, the street seemed filled with sunshine." Th is a great thing to be said of any man, that, havi sunshine in his own soul, wherever he goes he di sipates the fog by the sunbeams of Christian livin Such radiancy gives energy to the lifeless, joy to t joyless, trust to the doubter, hope to the hopeles His very presence brings warmth and life and t glow of sunshine, the joyous, stimulating breath spring.

O fathers and mothers in Israel, the light of us fulness is about you in life's evening time. St with us as long as you can. We need you; we ne your influence; we need your counsel and praye Never fear that darkness will envelope you, for " thou draw out thy soul to the hungry, and satis the afflicted soul; then shall thy light arise in o scurity, and thy darkness be as the noonday."

At evening time the Christian shall also have t light of God's presence. The psalmist says: "Th shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance That means that from the time a man chooses G until the end he may go through life with an u broken realization of the divine presence and a unbroken experience of the favor, complacency a good will of God. That is continual sunshine. was out on a farm for a while this past summe There was an old man there in his eighty-fifth yea He had a remarkably keen intellect, and was alwa propounding questions to me. One morning thought I would turn inquisitor, and so I said to hi as we walked by the sweet pea bed: "Tell me wh makes some of those sweet peas pink and othe white." His answer was brief and direct: "God Even so, his whole life seemed to be bathed in t sunshine of God's presence. When some adversi falls upon such a one, the world looks to see h confidence, peace and security shattered; but on t contrary discovers that only crevices have be made, through which the pure, unstained sunligh falls, and the Christian, instead of whining, thanking God for more sunshine. No legitima work, no duty of life, ever shuts out the light God's presence. Even when the dark clouds of ou troubles, sorrows, losses, solitudes come across ou life sky, the sunshine of God's presence smites ther and the light of heavenly colors flashed back fro their piled-up bosoms is more glorious than ever.

The Dark Shadow of Sin

There is only one thing that can shut out the ligh of God's favor, and that is our own sin. As soo as we endorse the smallest sin and apologize for i we drive God out of our heart, and as soon as he gone darkness comes. "Men love darkness rathe than light, because their deeds are evil." It is si which casts the dark, dank shadow over the joys o

The Children's Pulpit

CHRYSANTHEMUM SUNDAY

By Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D.*

THE Children's Pulpit's pastor has a Junior Congregation. There are two hundred boys and girls who come to church every Sunday morning. The second Sunday of November is their Chrysanthemum Day. Each member brings a number of these beautiful flowers, and after the service they are taken to the children in the hospital.

The beautiful Chrysanthemum was once a Japanese wild flower, known as Golden Chain. A flower lover took this wild flower to his own garden and began to take care of it, and to love it, and to help it to grow. What did this beautiful flower cost those who helped it to grow and bloom? It cost them time, patience, love and watchfulness. If we knew how much it all meant in money we would be surprised at the amount.

WHY are men willing to pay such a great price for the development of a wild flower? Because they see in this little flower something that is trying to make itself great; trying but failing. Looking down at this something the man's heart is touched and he says, "I will just try and help this something to fulfil its mission." I wonder if this is not the secret of nearly all of the good that is done in this world.

A little child has lost father and mother and has no friends. The little child is almost nothing and would be left to die if some one did not see this almost nothing trying to be something. The child is loved and watched and educated and becomes a great man.

POSSIBLY the Chrysanthemum has a lesson for boys and girls. If my Juniors ever become great it will be because they developed from almost nothing. Father and mother see this almost nothing trying to be something and begin to help it. Did you ever count the cost of developing an almost nothing boy into a great something man? Some one has said, "When you count what a boy eats and what he wears and the school books he has to have, and the doctor's bills that have to be paid when he gets the measles or the scarlet fever, he will cost his folks at home at least one hundred dollars a year. If a boy loves to smash things or to kick his shoes right out, he costs more than that. So that when he is twenty-one and old enough to do for himself, he will have cost his father more than two thousand dollars."

HIS mother cooks his victuals, makes his clothes and patches them, washes them when he is a little fellow and cares for him when he is sick. She never charges anything for that. If she were dead and father had to hire all that done, it would cost another hundred dollars a year more; and that is two thousand dollars' worth of work mother will have done for him by the time he is a man. Four thousand dollars for a boy! What do you think of that?

These are hard times. When parents put four thousand dollars into a boy, what have they a right to expect from him? If the boy makes a good citizen and a useful man, they will feel as if they had good pay for bringing him up.

BOYS, what are you worth to your parents? The Chrysanthemum pays for all it costs, and a boy by doing his best pays for all the help he gets. I hope each of you will take a Chrysanthemum and think of what it was once and then count the cost and try to enjoy what it is now. As it is one of the last flowers to bloom before winter freezes our gardens, you can take it as the flower to think about during the winter. Would it not be a good idea to call it the "Key Flower"? A shepherd boy in the Alps, while minding his sheep, saw a strange flower at his feet. He picked it, and a door opened in the hillside. He entered and found a cave piled up with gems, in the centre of which sat a gnome, who said, "Take what you wish, but don't forget the best!" He dropped his flower, and loaded himself with jewels, then went out, hearing again, "Don't forget the best!" Once more in the open air he remembered his "key-flower," and turned back to pick it up; but the door was gone, and in a moment more all his gems had turned to dust! He had forgotten his flower! Do not forget your "key-flower" and its lesson. You must have a story?

ABOUT two centuries ago a Russian nobleman, traveling in Mexico, saw and admired the maguey plant, which is a native of Mexico. The Russian procured some roots to take home as a present to the Czar. The Czar gave the roots to the court gardener, who promised to give the plants his best attention, but he was taken suddenly ill and died. The new gardener, not knowing their value, threw the sack away. Some time afterward his little daughter picked up one of the roots and planted it. In time it put out a few spikes for leaves, but did not thrive in the cold air of Russia.

Years passed, but it did not bloom. A new gardener looked at the plant and saw that it wanted to bloom, wanted to be something. He began to love it a little, coax it a little and push it a little. Soon many clusters of small buds appeared, which slowly unfolded and became white blossoms. The wonderful plant bloomed at last. The gardener said it was one hundred years old and had bloomed in honor of the Czar. Word was sent to him, and he and his whole court visited and admired the flowers and the plant.

The poor exile from the sunny skies of Mexico had earned its reward and a new name, for ever since that day it has been known as "the century plant."

Won by a Mother's Words

FRANCIS K. SHEPHERD is known as the "boy evangelist." In a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD he tells how, after a stormy experience as a prodigal, he was awakened and finally converted. As his story is one that has many duplicates among wild and thoughtless youths we give some extracts from his letter below. He writes:

"On the Sunday preceding Labor Day some six years ago (I was then a boy of eighteen) I came to New York City truly a prodigal. I had traveled over a great deal of Great Britain and Canada in my determination to have my own way and go whither I would, and with a firm determination to have nothing to do with religion. My godly mother had earnestly sought my conversion, and to escape this was primarily the cause of my leaving home. I was reproved by her one Sunday with the words of Gal. 6: 7, for staying away from Sunday School. So I began to plan to have no more of home and parental restrictions and quietly left shortly after. I became a careless, wild boy, addicted to betting and gambling. On one occasion I had to work three weeks to clear off a betting debt.

"I worked my way across from Bristol, England, after vainly trying to stow away on various ships out of Liverpool, and came to Canada and traveled to the Rocky Mountains and back twice, working in Montreal, etc. On that Sunday when I came to New York, I walked down the Bowery. Passing the Old Bowery Mission (may God bless it), I stopped outside the door for a few minutes. Those moments have played an important part in my life ever since, for the very words my mother had said: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap," were hurled through the open door at me, personally it seemed, by some one on the inside. Even in the night, those words would drive themselves into my brain. One day, creeping into a place where the Gospel was preached, impelled by the Spirit of God, I found and confessed Christ as my Saviour and I have been preaching him ever since.

"As a working lad and preaching this Gospel in my spare time, I have dealt with hundreds of souls and endeavored to point them to Jesus. So you see the effect upon a prodigal boy of the Gospel of Jesus Christ as it came through the door of the Bowery Mission."

THE LOST CHILD

I 'member when they cut my curls not very long ago,
Because they looked just like a girl's, and I'm a boy, you know;
I used to wear 'em awful long, and once my pa, he said,
It's time I had my curls cut off and wore short hair instead;
Because I'm big enough for that; and then they took the shears
And snipped my curls off one by one right close up to my ears,
But every time a curl came off, my mother, she just hid
Her face a little bit and cried. I wonder why she did!

And after 'while she picked one up and held it in her hand
With something shining in her eyes I didn't understand;
She petted it as if it was a little boy or girl,
And acted fond of it when it was nothing but a curl.
And after 'while they're all cut off and down
there on the floor,
And I looked much more like a boy than I had been before,
But there was something in her eyes she tried and tried and tried To brush away, but still it came. I wonder why she cried.

And after 'while I'm all trimmed off, and then my pa, he said,
I'm not a baby any more, but I'm a boy instead,
And he is awful proud of me, and then my ma,
she smiled
And said we found a boy that day and lost a little child;
So I said I would hunt for him and bring him back, but then
She said she was afraid that he would not come back again;
And picked the curls I had all up from off the floor and hid
Them in her bureau drawer and cried. I wonder why she did.

A GREAT CRANBERRY HARVEST

Cranberry Pickers at Work

Picking by Hand in the Old-fashioned Way

In a New England Cranberry Bog

IF there is any dish which, next to the toothsome turkey, we are wont to think of as indispensable at Thanksgiving and Christmas time it is cranberry sauce. Yet probably a very small proportion of the people who eat it with such relish on festal days have any knowledge of the sources from which comes this appetizing edible. This is due to the fact that cranberries grow extensively in only a few sections of our country.

Massachusetts, New Jersey and Wisconsin grow practically all the cranberries eaten in this country, or indeed, for that matter, in the whole world, for the cranberry is distinctively an American discovery. Cranberries grow wild in some parts of Europe, but their qualities as food have never been appreciated and it is only on this side of the Atlantic that the berries have been cultivated for table use.

To see to the best advantage the preliminaries of cranberry sauce we must visit Cape Cod, that elongated bit of land whereby the State of Massachusetts extends a crooked and beckoning finger into the Atlantic. Here within a radius of an hour's ride of historic old Plymouth, where the Pilgrims landed, is the greatest of all cranberry districts. This whole countryside would not be considered to make more than a single good-sized county in some of our Western States, and yet in a season when it is blessed with a good crop this cranberry zone will ship more than a third of a million barrels of the fruit.

If we want to see this cranberry country aglow with life and action we must come at "harvest time" in September and early October, when the tart berries are being picked. The cultivation of the berries has been going on since early spring, but there has been nothing very unusual about the methods employed. For the most part it has been a case of keeping down the weeds and battling with the bugs. The one unusual feature that characterizes the cranberry industry all the way through is the extensive use that is made of fresh water from the ponds.

Your up-to-date grower does not call his cranberry tract a "patch." Rather does he refer to it as a meadow or more likely as a "bog." This latter will probably suggest to you a low, marshy, swampy place; and you are not far amiss, for the progressive cranberry grower will not develop land except in close proximity to water. It must be fresh water, however, and that seems rather a pity, for they are so close to salt water in all directions down in this quaint Cape Cod country. The water is led to the cranberry bogs by means of ditches and tiny canals and if the water supply be not a stream the current of which can be utilized to make it flow over the bog the grower must needs build a small power house with a pump for forcing the water over the tract just as one might force water into an artificial pond. The water performs its greatest service during the winter when the bog is kept continually submerged for the entire interval of cold weather, but it is also employed at intervals during the summer and autumn in an effort to wash away the insect pests, and if frost threatens before the cranberry grower has been able to get in his crop he will hurriedly flood the bog in order to save his fruit.

The picking season in the early autumn is the time to enjoy the human interest side of the cranberry industry and yet conditions in this phase of the work have changed so completely during the past few years that natives who come back to the cranberry country, after some years in the city, declare that the spectacle has lost much of its old-time fascination. Students of progress declare that the entry of machinery has revolutionized almost every activity in this age, but it would be difficult to find a realm where there has been a greater upheaval than in the cranberry "belt." Your cranberry sauce, as served this holiday season, may taste exactly as it did a decade ago, but the route the cranberries traveled in reaching your table was decidedly different from that followed in the old days. It is the same story—machinery, which is revolutionizing every industry, even cranberry growing.

Portuguese Negroes from Cape Verde Picking Cranberries on Cape Cod by Machine

In the old days cranberries were all picked by hand—that is, plucked one by one, just as raspberries are picked to this day. And nowhere did a "picking season" have the social significance that it did on Cape Cod. A large portion of the picking was done by women and girls and it seemed as though the whole countryside turned out for the event. Whole families from the nearby cities and towns traveled by train or wagon to the cranberry country and combined money-making with an annual vacation by "camping out" on the bogs. Even the older women of the neighborhoods, who were not spry enough to engage in the picking, were wont to assemble to do the lighter work of sorting the berries.

Hand picking is yet in vogue on some of the cranberry bogs, but this is on the smaller tracts. On the large bogs we see the newly-invented picking machines. There are two types of these mechanical pickers. One is a small wooden box of a size to be held in one hand. By pressure of the fingers it opens at one end, disclosing jaws armed with rows of teeth. When this picker is thrust open-mouthed into the tangle of cranberry bushes, then closed over the berries and withdrawn, it brings the crimson berries with it. The other style is a wooden scoop with close-set iron prongs forming the lower side. It is shoved with considerable force into the close growing mass of cranberry plants, and when it is drawn back and upward it is found that the vines have slipped between the close-set teeth or prongs but have left the berries reposing in the scoop whence they may be transferred to the trays waiting conveniently at hand.

The New England women and children have been driven from the cranberry bogs principally because the machines require no slight strength for their continuous operation hour after hour. And yet the growers cannot be blamed for utilizing them, for just witness the experience of the "Cranberry King," who formerly employed 1,100 pickers on his great bogs, but now gets along with a couple of hundred, thanks to the aid of the machines. The women one sees operating cranberry picking machines on Cape Cod are almost invariably foreigners—notably Swedes or Finns. However, the major part of this work is now done by Portuguese-speaking negroes from the Cape Verde Islands, who have of late years made cranberry culture their especial forte just as the Chinese gravitated to laundry work when they came into this country unrestricted.

It never fails to surprise tourists who visit Cape Cod for the first time to find this large foreign population which has no parallel anywhere else in the country and most of whom speak little or no English. Many of the Cape Verde Islanders are true nomads in their visits to the cranberry country, arriving in the spring when cultivation on the bogs opens and remaining until the end of the picking season late in the autumn, making the trip both ways in sailing vessels that are engaged during the winter months in the coasting trade on the coast of Africa. A skilful cranberry picker can earn from $3 to $5 per day, so that the "bravas," as these invaders are called, can within a few years save enough to live in affluence in their island home. Under the new conditions not only is the picking of the cranberries done by the aid of machines, but other machines separate and sort the berries.

ITALY SWEPT BY A CYCLONE

Ischia, Italy, Devastated by a Cyclone and Tidal Wave

Sorrento, Which Suffered Heavily During the Recent Cyclone

SUNNY Italy has again been visited by misfortune. A great tidal wave and cyclone swept the island of Ischia and the coast in the neighborhood of Naples and Salerno on the night of Sunday, October 23. It would seem that the natural elements have been conspiring against the poor people of this afflicted section of the country. The wave was accompanied by a cloudburst on land, bringing a torrential rainstorm. Doubtless these disturbances of air and water were the direct results of an internal eruption of Vesuvius. The dreadful volcano has been quiescent for some time, but the internal fires are never dead. They are ever roaring, deep down in the bowels of the mountain, like imprisoned monsters awaiting an opportunity to vomit forth their wrath. All the seismic and undulatory commotions which have devastated this region can be directly attributed to volcanic action.

In the recent disaster the island of Ischia, some sixteen miles southwest of Naples, appears to have been the worst sufferer. The island is of volcanic origin and about twenty miles in circumference. It has a population of about 30,000. The two principal towns are Ischia and Casamicciola, each having some 4,000 inhabitants. An earthquake shook the place in 1883, when almost two thousand lives were lost. After that disaster the houses were rebuilt of the lightest timber and of the flimsiest construction, so they became an easy prey for the recent visitation of wind and water. The greater part of the town of Ischia, which lay on the coast of the island and consisted of one long street, has been destroyed. The number of lives lost in this town has been estimated at twenty, but there have been many more casualties in the surrounding district. Torrents of mud, eighteen feet deep, hurled boulders against the wooden houses, smashing them like kindling wood. A landslide caused a portion of Mount Epomeo to crash down on the town of Casamicciolo. The mighty fragments of rock weighed several tons. This mountain, which had been inactive six hundred years, belched forth a lava stream which covered the adjacent ground to a depth of twenty feet. The underpinning of those houses not wrecked by the boulders was loosened by the great floods and many collapsed. It is claimed that the number of victims in this place was over two hundred.

All the coast towns along the Bay of Naples and the Gulf of Salerno suffered severely. Loss of life and wreckage of property are reported from almost all. Pozzuoli, Annunziata and Sorrento on the bay and Amalfi, Vietri, Salerno and Cetara on the gulf felt the full fury of the storm. Other towns which suffered considerably were Maiori, Ravello, Angri, Pontecagnano and Montecorvino, all on the mainland. The station master at Vietri was killed by shock while telegraphing news of the disaster to other points. A dozen were killed and nine injured at Cetara.

The famous road between the Bay of Naples and the Gulf of Salerno, passing over the peninsula of Sorrento, was very much damaged, portions being completely swept away.

It seems as if the hurricane took the form of a cyclone, which had three centres; one at Ischia, another around the base of Vesuvius and a third along the coast of the Gulf of Salerno. Naples was lashed by a downpour and storm unprecedented in the history of the city. Damage amounting to millions of dollars was done; all sections testify to the fierce devastation of property. The destruction in the suburbs cannot as yet be estimated. The surrounding country has been laid almost waste, walls and portions of the houses strewing the ground in all directions, while the crops have been completely ruined. The vines were torn out by the root, and the luscious clusters of grapes scattered like chaff in the hurricane. The beautiful growths of orange, lemon and mandarin trees were overrun with rivers of mud and ashes from Vesuvius. In fact, an avalanche of mud and stones and lava débris rushed down the sides of the mountain from above the lava line of the eruption of 1906, sweeping all before it as far as the town of Portici. Great destruction was done at Resina, which was built on the ruins of Herculaneum as well as at Torre del Greco, which immediately lies at the foot of the mountain. Here several families were buried alive before they had time to realize the nature of the awful danger sweeping down upon them, and several streets were literally blotted out of existence.

MOISANT'S SPECTACULAR TRIUMPH

UNDOUBTEDLY the most important meet of aviators the world has seen has just taken place at Hempstead, Long Island. It came immediately after the balloon meet at St. Louis, and hundreds who have become aerial enthusiasts came on to Hempstead to see the "bird-men" fly. One day the spectators were treated to the unusual spectacle of five machines flying in front of the grandstand at once. The camera caught them before they got away in a great circle and the photograph is reproduced on our cover page.

The greatest interest was manifested in the race from Hempstead to the Statue of Liberty in New York Harbor and back, which was won by the American Moisant in a French machine. All New York and Brooklyn found itself craning its neck and making repeated journeys to the roof for several days in the hopes of catching a glimpse of the sky racers. The weather was fair, but the wind came in gusts, and no exact day or hour could be set long in advance for the contest. Those who happened to see the unique race are now congratulating themselves, for the majority had become tired of looking at a cloudless sky unflecked by the rushing machines of the bird-men. Only three men entered the contest. They were Grahame-White, the English aviator who the day previous had won the international speed race; the Count de Lesseps, of France, and J. B. Moisant, of Chicago.

De Lesseps shot away at 3.05 P.M., in a 50-horse-power Bleriot monoplane. It was thirty-four miles to the Statue of Liberty and back, and he covered it in 41 minutes 56.25 seconds. Three minutes after he started south, Grahame-White was up and after him. The two racers went up at a slant, and Grahame-White's machine was soon as far on the way as that of De Lesseps. As soon as they caught sight of the captive balloon over the Statue of Liberty they put on top speed and a few minutes later people on the Brooklyn bridge were startled to see one machine, that of De Lesseps, shoot out over the navy yard, while almost at the same instant Grahame-White's came over Brooklyn Heights. The Frenchman took such a wide sweep that for an instant he was almost over the New Jersey shore. The Englishman made a short circle above the balloon. Grahame-White finished the trip in 35 minutes and 21.30 seconds.

Moisant had not intended to enter the contest, as his own machine had been in collision with Harmon's machine and was undergoing repairs, but his brother rushed up, telling him that no American had entered and that he must make the attempt. As Moisant started to say something about his machine being unequal to such a race, there suddenly appeared a big Le Blanc machine, trundled up toward his hangar. His brother said he had bought it for $10,000 from an aviator on his way across the field. It was the same type of machine in which Moisant had flown from Paris to London, and he felt that he would be perfectly at home in it.

The forty thousand spectators had accepted Grahame-White as the winner and were watching a number of low flights when, with a noise like a huge hornet, the machine of the American shot away from the grounds and traveled up and westward into the golden haze along the Western horizon. They thought he was obliging to make the attempt, and few thought he would overcome Grahame-White's record of a mile a minute in a machine of twice the horse-power; but a big surprise was in store for them. Moisant went up to 2,000 feet or more to avoid air pockets above streets and buildings, and then shot straight toward the Statue. It was a daring thing to do, but he said he felt safer at that height, as he could right his machine in case of accident before it would strike.

"It was bitter cold," said Moisant afterward. "After I had been in the air about eight minutes I caught sight of the Goddess of Liberty. I kept on climbing until I reached the Statue. That was on the theory that we can make better time against the wind by going up. My highest point was the minute I turned. All the way coming back I took it on a slant. Just as I was going around the Statue it occurred to me that it was a gift from France and that it was appropriate that I was driving the French machine around it."

The forty thousand people he had left at Hempstead apparently went crazy when he showed a spot in the west. They screamed encouragement. He had only two minutes to spare. "Come on, Moisant! Come on!" came in a roar from below, and the shouters jumped and swung their arms as if to help him on his way. His two sisters ran from one time-keeper to another to see the stop watches, and they jumped up and down in excitement and called as if they could bring him home victorious. Like a bullet from a gun he came over the fence, half circled the field, and landed near the grandstand. He was tossed onto admiring shoulders. Then the officials got him into an automobile and a moment later he stood on the grandstand with an American flag over his shoulders and the judges bawling out the time. Back of it all the band was playing "The Star-Spangled Banner," and forty thousand people again found some breath to cheer.

World-Conquest

IT was a wise old general who said that "the proper point from which to judge of the battle is the rising ground." Those who are in the heat and smoke of the conflict see but little of the general field. This observation may well be applied to those who have been busy lately proclaiming the decline of Christianity. Training with the enemies of religion, and their senses filled with the clamor of their immediate surroundings, they are blind to the fact, which is evident to observers of wider range and experience, that there is to-day, all over the world, a larger number who hold firmly and sincerely to the old faith in Jesus Christ and his finished work than ever before.

If we are to judge the future by the past, what is the record? At the close of the first century A.D., there were 500,000 Christians; second century, 2,000,000 Christians; fifth century, 15,000,000 Christians; tenth century, 50,000,000 Christians; fifteenth century, 100,000,000 Christians; eighteenth century, 200,000,000 Christians; in the twentieth century, according to Fournier de Flaix, the celebrated European statistician, and also according to the best estimates available from other accredited sources, between 480,000,000 and 500,000,000 Christians. In our own land, 32,900,000 Christian communicants (an increase of 12,000,000 in a decade); of these 20,000,000 communicants are Protestant, an increase of 6,000,000 in ten years. Yet there are those who would make us believe that the whole Christian army is in retreat and the Bible little better than last year's almanac. It is the glorious prospect of world conquest for Christ that has aroused the enemies of the old Gospel to renewed activity, and which inspires their latest attacks.

The Sunshine of Life

THERE is no joy comparable to that which radiates from a heart that is filled with the love of God, devotion to the dear Saviour and a deep, active, self-sacrificing sympathy for humanity. If we add to this the "passion for souls," which is the inspiration of the true follower of Christ, then the cup of blessing is indeed full. We heard the other day of an aged believer who, now nearing the seventies, could look back upon a life the greater part of which had been spent in Christian service. She had enjoyed many blessings, and in a humble way had been the means of bringing much happiness to others. Her moderate means had enabled her to be a helper to many who were poor, or sick, or neglected. In the morning of her life she had "walked with Christ," and now that her days began to slope toward the sunset, she found to her great joy that she was not alone. A sense of the divine Presence was with her constantly, imparting strength and unshakable faith and a beautiful serenity of spirit. She was enjoying life's sweetest sunshine toward the close of the day. What a lesson such an experience teaches us! To be happy, we need neither riches, great influence, nor great talents. There are gifts more precious than those the world bestows. If we use rightly for God's glory and the love of our fellow-men the humble endowments we may possess, we will have fulfilled our mission here. There is no one, man or woman, who cannot, if so willed, make the world a better place for having lived in it. Such lives never lack for sunshine.

One of the "Immortals"

THE axiom that there is no sex in brain was never more emphasized than in Julia Ward Howe's remarkable life and work. To intellectual gifts unsurpassed by any of her contemporaries, she added the tender heart of a loving woman and the swift intuition which is the birthright of genius. Probably the one thing on which she bestowed little labor, the lyric which wrote itself as by inspiration from above, one gray morning in the Civil War, will be her most enduring monument. "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" takes rank not merely with the finest patriotic poetry of the age, but with the noblest national hymns of all the ages. When the books that she wrote are no longer read, when her words of wit and wisdom are no longer repeated, children at school will sing and recite with kindling enthusiasm the lines of this superb poem. This is an immortality beyond price. But Mrs. Howe was equal to every emergency and every demand, filling her life wherever it touched other lives with sweetness and grace and deserving the title, as wife, mother, student, author, and patriot, of the ideal woman. North and South together were proud of her while she lived, and unite in bringing the tribute of praise now that full of years and honors she has fallen asleep.

Our New Serial Story

THE story of the year—Mrs. Florence Morse Kingsley's greatest novel, To the Highest Bidder—will appear serially in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and the first instalment will be printed in our next week's issue. Mrs. Kingsley is no stranger to the readers of this paper. Her two stories previously published by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Through the Needle's Eye and The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia, made for her a host of permanent readers and steadfast friends. The new serial is even better, and grips the heart and dominates the mind as few stories of the present day have the power to do. There is no tiresome introduction; the story moves quickly from the first page to the last, leading the reader with almost breathless interest from one telling incident to another, until the climax is reached. In Barbara Preston, Mrs. Kingsley has portrayed a remarkable type of woman in fiction, one of the most interesting characters from the brain of any author for a decade. Trying desperately to save the farm from the clutches of a money lender, the girl raises the mortgage by resorting to a most astonishing expedient; faces situations which would cause less self-sacrificing hearts to quail, but meets them and conquers them—a heroine in the small country town of to-day, where great tragedies and comedies are lived out in the white houses on the green lanes. As to the other characters in the best story of the year, one who read the manuscript said with enthusiasm: "They are worthy the pen of Dickens." Strong praise, but you will agree with the critic before you finish the first chapter. From the time she wrote Titus in 1894, Mrs. Kingsley's power as a writer has been steadily growing, and her place in American literature has been rising. The Highest Bidder is a modern American story, dealing with American characters—people of real flesh and blood, who cease from the first page to be imaginary, and whose fortunes you follow with the same tense interest you would follow the fortunes of your best friends, should they chance to be placed in similar circumstances. No one can afford to let this great serial pass unread. It is your opportunity.

Chicago's Revival

THREE times in recent years, the Western city has been the scene of remarkable revival campaigns. That led by Chapman and Alexander and now at full tide, is probably the most spectacular spiritual movement since the days of Moody and Sankey. It touches all classes and the enormous audiences that gather daily to hear the living Word prove that the old Gospel still has power to "draw all men" even in the heat of a political campaign. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has arranged for weekly reports of these wonderful meetings. The evangelists and their corps of earnest workers will be greatly strengthened and encouraged by the knowledge that the prayers of God's people in other States are being offered that they may be made instrumental in bringing many into the Kingdom.

GENERAL NOTES

—MAN'S CONQUEST of the air makes wonderful progress. Post and Hawley, in their remarkable flight from St. Louis far up into Canada, covered a distance which, if their aerial journey had led them across the sea, would have been well nigh half way to Europe!

—THAT IT PAYS to be humorous and to look at the world from the optimist's standpoint is attested by the will of the late Mark Twain, which has just been filed in the Probate Court of Redding, Conn. The total of the estate is $611,136, exclusive of the copyrights. The real estate is $70,000 of the whole, and consists of "Stormfield," the author's home, and the cottage known as the "Lobster Pot," with twenty acres. The remainder is made up of gilt-edge securities. All goes to his daughter, the wife of the Russian pianist, Ossip Gabrilowitsch.

A Personal Invitation

DEAR Friends of The Family Circle: This is t season of the year when every one of you c render valuable service to your favorite journal doing a little missionary work in its behalf.

As you well remember, it was Dr. Klopsch's w to take his readers into his confidence, and his lon time associates, who are now conducting THE CHR TIAN HERALD, wish to do the same. We invite yo cordial co-operation for our mutual benefit—

First: By using your personal influence amo your friends and acquaintances to induce new su scriptions, and thus help us to reach a still wid audience, and to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD greater power for good than ever. Besides, would also assist us materially in pushing forwa the improvements we are planning for the paper f the benefit of all of our readers.

Second: By sending in your own renewal of su scription early. During the next six weeks, t business of the paper will be one hundred tim larger than in the other months of the year. It h always been so in the past, and our extraordina growth in circulation in the last six months war us to be prepared for the great volume of busine that is coming in the holiday season. Decemb especially is a "rush month," and you can readi understand how it will facilitate matters if a good number of our readers were to take time by t forelock and send in their renewal subscriptio with their Premium and Magazine Combinati orders, as far ahead of the usual date as possib This will enable us to get the best results from o force of clerks and shippers, by relieving the pre sure somewhat when the flood-tide of renewals highest. Please remember that it isn't a matter thousands, but of hundreds of thousands of tran actions coming all together in a short time, which spread out over a somewhat longer period—throug your kind co-operation in the way we have su gested—would greatly simplify matters, avoid erro and delays, and give better satisfaction to everybo concerned.

Please think it over. We know we can alwa depend upon you to do what lies in your power. course, no matter when you forward your subscri tion, it will always receive our best attention; b we have made the foregoing suggestion frankly one that would be helpful to all and particular welcome to Your sincere friend,

Bible House, New York, Nov. 9, 1910.

Siamese King Dead

THE King of Siam, whose full title was Somdet-Phra-Paramind-Maha-Chula-Longkorn-Chula-Chom-Klao, died at Bangkok on the morning October 23. He was one of the eighty-four sons Maha-Morgkut. He had completed the fifty-hth year of his life and the forty-third of his gn, the longest in the history of the nation. He s considered one of the broadest minded and most tivated rulers in the Far East. Under the tui-n of an English governess in the royal household, learned to speak English and French perfectly. instituted numerous reforms in his government, olished slavery, lowered the taxes, opened up ials for irrigation and transportation, instituted a perb system of highways for the development of mmerce, built telegraphs and hospitals, guaran-td religious liberty, reorganized the army, and lt a navy of twenty vessels. The Siamese throne estate is decorated with priceless rubies, diamonds d emeralds, and is second only in ue to the peacock throne of Persia. e King's mantle of state is said to be t most costly garment in the world. ough Siam is an autocracy, the king s democratic in his spirit and gath-d about him a cabinet council of six al princes and thirteen ministers of te. The king issued a decree making t crown prince heir to the throne, and t that decree the crown prince Chowfa ha Vajiravudh was immediately pro-imed king on the death of his father. e new king, like his father, is able, ll educated and cultivated. He speaks eral foreign languages, including glish. In closing a six weeks' visit the United States, eight years ago, he d at a dinner he gave at the Waldorf toria in New York to the then Mayor w and others: "I shall carry back to r own country one of the pleasantest mories of you and your country. I all never forget my visit, nor your endid hospitality." The rulers and t people of Siam caught the spirit of Christian civilization, encouraging t inhabitants to be temperate, truthful l industrious, and it is to be hoped t t the teachings of the heroic mission-es of the past and of the faithful s of to-day may bring the Siamese ion to a saving knowledge of the rd Jesus Christ. It should be the yer of the civilized world that God y give the new king that wisdom for ich Solomon prayed on taking the one of his father.

ve therefore thy servant an understanding heart udge thy people, that I may discern between l and bad; for who is able to judge this thy so t a people? (I. Kings 3:9.)

vertised for Wives

Settlers have gone from the United tes to the Canadian Northwest re-tly in such numbers that the men gely outnumber the women. At least o hundred thousand men have gone o the rich districts of Canada from s country. Mayor Magee of Pitts-rg received a letter the other day m Tantallon, Saskatchewan, Canada, ned by Willis P. Sherman, in behalf the colony, asking him to assist in ding a large number of suitable women to be-ne wives for the settlers of that neighborhood. llowing is the letter:

'DEAR SIR: A club of young Americans here de-es to ask your assistance in a matrimonial way. ere are no young women in this part of the coun-t and we have decided upon this means of getting communication with young women who are matri-nially inclined. Among our members are bank-e, merchants, grain dealers, stockmen, one physi-n, civil and railroad engineers, railroad conduc-ts, cowboys, clerks, bookkeepers, etc., etc., any of om are well prepared to abundantly provide for ice home. This is a beautiful and wealthy coun-t, with most American settlers. We trust you ll publish this letter, for which you obligate us eply."

The men were right in desiring wives for the foun-ion of their new homes. The colony without the ves and mothers would be very imperfect and appointing, no matter what temporal prosperity ould attend it. It is very likely that the supply suitable wives will be equal to the demand of this club. The Lord gives the reason for the divine establishment of matrimony.

And the Lord God said, It is not good that the man should be alone; I will make him an helpmeet for him. (Gen. 2:18.)

Glorious Year's Harvest

The delay of the frost will bring four hundred million bushels more of corn to the fields than was estimated four weeks ago, and there will be twenty-two million bushels more of wheat than was expected a few weeks ago. It is now certain that the corn crop for the year will be a little over three billion bushels. That of oats will be a million bushels. The cotton crop is somewhat short, but will very likely bring as much money as the more bountiful harvests of other years. It is estimated that at the present prices the value of the agricultural production of the country for the year will not be under $9,500,000,000. Of this amount $2,000,000,000 represents the profit to farmers, which is within $350,000,000 of the net value of the production of all the mines during the present year. Within the last ten years the farmers have cleared off $6,000,000,000 of mortgages from their property. The holdings of the farmers are $3,500,000,000 greater than the capitalization of all the steam and electric railroads and all the manufactories of the country. What a cause of national thanksgiving there is in our bountiful harvests, and how these and other blessings of a material and spiritual nature ought to prompt renewed affection and obedience! At the command of the Almighty the children of Israel had a feast of thanksgiving at the close of the harvest.

And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the first fruits of wheat harvest, and the feast of ingathering at the year's end. (Ex. 34:22.)

The Late King of Siam and His Royal Consort

Saved by Canary Bird

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Etero, of Stamford, Conn., were asleep in their home when gas thrown off by a coal fire in the kitchen range poisoned the atmosphere and would have killed both of them had it not been that a pet canary bird, badly smothered, just before its death from the poison broke out into a beautiful song which aroused Mr. Etero, who staggered to a window and called for help. He then fell, and neighbors rushing into the apartment found him unconscious on the floor, and his wife seemingly lifeless in bed in a room off the kitchen. Dr. Mead was called and both were restored to consciousness and strength. The first question the man asked when he came to was whether his pet bird was still living, but he was sadly disappointed to know that it had died. It is not likely that the canary bird sang to awaken his master or mistress, although he may have been calling to them to come and help him, but it is certain that the dear little thing whose nature God had filled so full of joy had nothing else to do even with its last breath than to sing a sweet song. Often Christians are allowed seasons of spiritual exaltation and ecstasy in the last hour of life, and even employ their last breath in praises to God. This ecstatic vision the martyr Stephen had, and this last sweet song of melody his beautiful spirit breathed as he,

Being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, Behold, I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God. (Acts 7:55, 56.)

Kicked Bundle as Football

There was a package lying on the pavement near Two Hundred and Forty-second Street and Broadway, New York, which the boys going into Van Cortlandt Park kicked ahead of them and back and forth as a football. One boy gave the parcel a final kick which sent it under the stairs of the subway station there. Patrolman Woodbridge noticing the bundle pulled it out and saw on the manila wrapping the address, Don A. Dodge, Yonkers, N. Y. On opening the parcel he found that it contained about $75,000 in bonds. The securities were taken to police headquarters, where they are awaiting a claimant. The police thus far have been unable to discover the owner, but he or she will doubtless shortly appear and claim the treasure. What valuable things are kicked on life's pavements as footballs! Health, intellectual ability, social privileges, spiritual opportunities, reputation, character, destiny, are so often trampled on and kicked about with an utter unconsciousness of their value, while the toys and trifles of time and sense command the attention and affection, in disregard of the injunction of the apostle:

Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. (Col. 3:2.)

Dogs as Bridesmaids

According to Mr. Arthur Delroy, three full-blood Japanese water spaniels were the bridesmaids at the marriage of Mrs. Mary Schleigh-Brown of San Francisco and Percy W. Evans, a prominent business man of Seattle. The room where the marriage occurred on West Eighty-seventh Street, New York City, was decorated in truly Oriental splendor. It is reported that a 200-year-old rug made of seven hundred baby wolves and minks by Siberian convicts covered the floor. There were candelabras and a clock, each, it is claimed, two hundred years old. The significant feature of the wedding, however, was the canine bridesmaids. Their names are Otoyo-Kondo-San, Pinka-San and Goisha. Mrs. Brown says the Mikado gave them to her. They wore white broadcloth coats, velvet collars and cuffs and little pockets in their coats, containing the daintiest lace handkerchiefs. A large pink ribbon graced the neck of each. There have been marriages on the stage before the footlights, there have been weddings in the balloon in the air and in the cage of wild beasts, but this marriage with the dog attendants reaches the limit of the ridiculous. If this wedding ceremony has been properly reported it was a monstrous joke, a mockery of so sacred an event. The fickle modern estimate of the marital relationship is in marked contrast to that held by the Saviour, who after describing the solemnity and divinity of matrimony, said:

What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. (Mark 10:9.)

Eight Thousand at the Lord's Supper

A Remarkable Communion Service Where Eight Thousand Sat Down to the Lord's Table at Topeka, Kan., October 16, 1910

SABBATH afternoon, October 16, the amber-colored, exhilarating air of Kansas, united to the charm of the communion as served by the Christian Church on the State House grounds of Topeka, brought out thousands of people. The communion table has charms for only such as love Christ, and the crowd which was massed under the great portico adown the steps and along the hundreds of temporary seats was distinctly a religious one. The occasion was one of the happiest features marking the New Century International Convention of the Disciples of Christ, which had been holding a history-making gathering of delegates in the great Auditorium of Topeka for seven preceding days.

From a stand erected for the chorus, W. E. M. Hackleman led the voices through familiar hymns, sung by nearly all present. The great volume of voices rose and fell throughout the serving of the Lord's Supper that continued for an hour and was partaken of by over eight thousand delegates of their own church and as many more from the Topeka churches. Over all was a reverent attitude that gave it in many respects the aspect of one of the most remarkable gatherings ever assembled upon the State House grounds, famous for mass-meetings of many kinds. It was a most demonstrative congregation. An ice driver broke bread with a great divine and a banker leaned out of his chair to hand the cup to a butcher. A Texan sat beside a negro, and gentle society women held the babies of charwomen. Twenty elders and forty-eight deacons served the communion.

Sunday morning there was a great Bible study session held in the Auditorium—with 3,788 persons present. Men and women of international importance addressed great crowds continually throughout the long session. Saturday Governor W. R. Stubbs spoke upon prohibition in Kansas, closing his speech with the words: "I say to you to-day that I don't know of an open saloon or joint in the State, and if any man shows me one and tells me of it and I don't close it I'll resign my position.

"It rests at the door of the Christian people to fight the battle against the liquor traffic. You will be boycotted and possibly stung, but if your religion is of the right sort you will forge straight ahead. It should be a war of extermination and not of compromise. If the Christians do their duty we can have national prohibition and national legislation inside of ten years."

Dr. J. H. Hall, national secretary of the American Temperance Board of the Christian Church, has ordered 50,000 copies of the speech printed. These will be sent out to the local branches of the society and distributed free.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon said: "I am glad to bring you greetings. I believe in the Brotherhood Movement; I believe it is one of the greatest movements ever started in the history of America. The Brotherhood should rise up and wipe the saloon off the map, and see that clean officers are elected to the legislature. I hope to live to see the Brotherhood bring about the fraternalization of capital and labor, and see that our battleships are turned into missionary vessels and filled with missionaries to go out to all parts of the world to teach the Gospel of Christ."

Claude E. Hill, national superintendent of Christian Endeavorers for the Christian Church, gave his annual report. He said: "It has been a prosperous year for the Christian Endeavor, with a steady and substantial growth. Three hundred new societies have been organized, making a total of 7,414 organizations of Christian Endeavor in the Christian Church. This society, together with the Young Men's Christian Association and the Young Women's Christian Association, tided us over one of the most critical periods our religion ever experienced. Now we have more young people in our schools and colleges reading the Bible than ever before."

Monday was devoted entirely to the proceedings of the Brotherhood of the Disciples of Christ organized last year in Pittsburg by R. A. Long, a millionaire of Kansas City. The doctrine of a redeemed humanity is the by-word and hope of this society. Over 2,000 men were in the parade that formed the men's Bible class.

CHICAGO'S GREATEST REVIVAL

CHICAGO is in the grip of its third city-wide evangelistic campaign, with every indication that it will far exceed those which have preceded. Dr. R. A. Torrey was the evangelist in the first campaign. A mammoth tent with board walls was erected on the north side of the city, and co-operation sought by all the evangelical denominations. Gipsy Smith was here last year. He led a great campaign from a single centre. This was the armory on the south side. A skirmish was made into the suburbs and a noon meeting was daily held down town in the Great Northern Theatre. A parade attended by thousands in the red light district awakened the interest of the entire city. Gipsy Smith won the hearts of all classes.

These were preparatory, and the complete campaign is now under way. Three great auditoriums have been provided for the meetings under the direct ministry of Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander and staff. The White City on the south side, one of Chicago's largest amusement sections, has been transformed into a place of prayer. The Casino, seated with 3,800 chairs, has been crowded nightly. The ball-room, holding 2,000 more, has been used for the overflow and for the after inquiry service. On the second Sunday, a woman's meeting in charge of Mrs. Alexander, Mrs. Asher and Mrs. Norton, crowded the ball-room, while the men filled the Casino, hundreds being turned away unable to gain entrance.

Two wooden tabernacles, especially designed for the present purpose, have been erected on the north and west sides of the city. The Chapman-Alexander party are now waging the battle from the north side centre. It is at a point midway from the heart of the city and the city limits. The tabernacle holds 5,000, as does the one on the west side, and all the space and more is needed. The west side tabernacle meeting begins November 13, continuing until the 26th.

These tabernacle meetings are but the suns around which planets, each a world in itself, revolve. Fifty-five group meetings are being held and each has a personality of its own. Men's dinners, men's parades, women's and children's meetings, office and parlor meetings are all features of a movement which is after "the last man." The downtown centre is the Chicago Opera House, opposite the county and city buildings on Washington Street. This meeting acts like a ribbon which ties the flowers together. Every evangelist and evangelistic singer is present and the service has been perhaps the mightiest single factor in arresting thought and in getting men to definitely accept the Gospel invitation.

Chicago's business men have magnificently backed up the campaign. Mr. H. P. Crowell, chairman of the Laymen's Evangelistic Council, the head of one of the Chicago firms that does an international business, has not only given his money, his organizing ability and his personal influence, but he has given hearty personal testimony to the saving power of Christ; has led in public prayer and urged upon ministers and fellow-laymen the need of a baptism of the Holy Spirit. The venture of faith in building the tabernacles and in undertaking any plan, however daring, that gave promise of adding to the genuine efficiency of the work, has been characteristic of the Council's action from the beginning.

The Chicago newspapers have been most generous of space, and what is perhaps more significant, they have been sympathetic in spirit. Dr. Chapman said in regard to the attitude of the press, that it had "never been equaled since cities began to be." The wonder is increased when the fact of the political campaign, with its counter attraction of speeches and public interest, is considered. The Chicago Tribune published last week (October 30) as a supplement a song on sheet music, entitled, "Chicago for Christ." It was written by Mr. Robert Harkness and sung for the first time on the same evening by Alexander and the audience in the tabernacle.

On Friday, October 28, the manager of the Olympic Theatre invited Chapman-Alexander to conduct a service before the beginning of the afternoon performance. The play staged for the afternoon was a complimentary benefit to the actors of Chicago, of which class of professionals, it is said, there are about 2,000, and by reason of this, the evangelist had an opportunity of reaching a larger number of theatrical people than would have been possible in any other way.

Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander are notable for a steadfast purpose of keeping to the supreme object of their mission—to present Christ to the people. No cause, however worthy it may be or however related even to Gospel evangelization it may seem, if it introduces a side issue or raises discussion, its claims are laid aside. It was so at the theatre. It is so everywhere. The eyes of men are fixed with undiverted gaze on the fact of sin, the need of a Saviour, the compulsion of decision for or against Christ, and the almightiness of the One who has undertaken the task of bringing the world to his feet. The message is the one universal appeal to the heart. This gives the singer a chance. In no Chicago campaign has singing played such a part. On the platform at the Chicago Opera House each day there is enough musical volume and musical soloists to remind one of the heavenly choir. The Naftzgers—Ernest, as regular soloist, and Merrill, as an able assistant; Harkness at the piano; such

The Economies of Amanda

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

AMANDA'S housekeeping is beyond criticism. There is not a speck of dust to be discovered anywhere in parlor, kitchen, hall or chambers. Her friends have the impression that she not only goes over the stairs every day with a duster, but takes a hair-pin or some other feminine implement to rout infinitesimal atoms from the corners of each step. As for cobwebs, no one has ever seen the faintest shadow of one in her immaculate rooms. Her husband has a fine library, and although Amanda seldom reads a book, she dusts every book with her own hands, every week. This statement in itself is enough to convince any possessor of books that Amanda does her full duty to the externals of the library. Of her windows the remark could never be made that they are dull, blurred or weather-stained. They are so often washed and so wonderfully polished that they resemble the purest crystal. Amanda, with the rest of us, is frequently compelled to work harder than she ought, because she cannot secure efficient help.

This is partly her fault, for very few women exist who can approach her standard of perfection in the region of weekly cleaning, scrubbing and scouring. Long before the introduction of the vacuum cleaner, Amanda had achieved, by sheer persistence of arm, the energetic wielding of broom and brush, the precise results accomplished by this excellent invention. Her husband whimsically complains that the house is always in process of renovation, and seldom in a condition which can be considered comfortable and livable; but he is a mere man, and little can be expected of him. Of course, Amanda is ill from time to time, usually as the result of doing more than she ought. She has headaches, backaches and nerves that are on edge. Her sons slip out of the house in the evening because they prefer to be where they are not reproved if they draw a chair from its place, or leave a newspaper on the floor, or forget some other of their mother's regulations. Her daughters enjoy visiting much more than staying at home, and her maid seldom remains longer than a week or two. She had nineteen successive maids in a single season, each of them unsatisfactory. Somehow Amanda's economies in the line of good housekeeping have a screw loose, although just what it is would be difficult to tell. She observed one day that she sympathized with the woman who liked to have her house perfectly ordered from garret to cellar, and who then wished that she could take her family and live in the barn, so that the house need not be disturbed.

Amanda, when she goes shopping, is exceedingly partial to bargain day. Anything marked ninety-nine cents appeals to her as very much cheaper than it would be were it marked one dollar a yard. She likes to pick up remnants and lay them aside for future use. In a drawer of her bureau, there are lengths of silk and muslin which she purchased on the occasion of a special sale, and laid away much as a thrifty squirrel gathers nuts in the summer, hoarding them up for the winter supply. The goods often become old-fashioned, and sometimes faded, but they are treasured by Amanda, who frequently quotes with approval the familiar saying that if you keep an article for seven years you will then find a use for it. This particular economy does not commend itself to any one in the home, except the mistress. The recollection of garments which were unbecoming and out of style, because they were purchased out of season or were sure to be misfits, has somewhat colored the opinions of the household as to the mother's success in her economical efforts. Seriously, Amanda and women of her type are wasting their energy in two ways. One is in a mistaken idea of what is really essential to good management in the home, and the other an erroneous notion of what is cheap and what is dear. Extravagance is not to be praised, but there is an opposite form of saving which is quite as little deserving of commendation. Amanda never stints her table. Here she is generous, understanding that she needs to send her children forth into the world with a good physical basis for every emergency. She is not in sympathy with her neighbor who buys fine rugs, lace curtains, and rich clothing, and boasts that she does so by giving her family meager meals and purchasing in the market those grades of food that are cheap in proportion to their lack of nutrition.

Good housekeeping is a science in itself. Economy in its true meaning signifies good management. What sort of economist are you, gentle reader?

A DOLL FOR MY GIRLIE

I AM dressing a doll for my Mary,
That sweet little maid of my own.
It's to be a surprise to her merry bright eyes,
For I bought it when I was alone.

Ah! mother, there's somebody peeping;
Little Mary is nearer you creeping;
If you want to surprise those merry bright eyes
You must work when your girlie is sleeping.

THE FOUR WINDS

THE wind o' the West, I love it best;
The wind o' the East, I like it least;
The wind o' the South has gold in its mouth;
The wind o' the North sends great storms forth.
Taken together, all sorts of weather
The four old fellows are sure to bring.
As the year goes round we have always found
Summer and Autumn and Winter and Spring.

Women in Council

THE first letter which appears this week reminds us of the familiar couplet:

Man works from sun to sun,
But woman's work is never done.

When the situation is the one described by our correspondent, it is easy to see that there must be daily left-overs in some department of the house. Do not fret or worry, is the best advice to give. Do your best, and leave the rest. After a while the reefs and shoals will be less in evidence. Let the boys help. Train them to do this as they grow older. If any one else has better advice to give she is invited to send it, after reading the letter, which follows.

A Busy Woman "I am a young woman living in the country. We have a business and three hired men. We have four boys, the eldest ten years, the youngest eleven months old. I work from morning till late at night every day. I do not mind working, but I do not get done. I have a good husband, obedient children and enough to eat and drink. We make money enough to live on nicely and we are all in good health. I cannot easily get a maid, as we live a mile from the city. Sometimes I think I want to do too much. I ought to be satisfied. But I do grow much discouraged. H. H."

To the preliminary counsel, the addition may be made that where there are three hired men for whom cooking is to be done, the mistress of the house should certainly have help. She is overdoing and may pay a costly price.

The Active Laddie "I have found a little book entitled Pleasant Sunday Afternoons For Children, a great help in making the time pass profitably with my little ones. The book is published in Philadelphia, and may be procured by sending to any religious bookstore or Sunday School publication house. The price is fifty cents. This is sent as a suggestion to the mother of a boy of eleven whose appeal for aid touched me. M. P."

Children and Money "My father was a minister with six children. My mother was ready to enter college with her brothers before the day of the woman's college. Now that I have children of my own I am thankful for the thoughtful training which we six children had. 'Rachel L.' asks, 'Do you give your children an allowance?' And I am reminded of the wise administration in our family. We each had a small allowance, and at the close of the year, if in our home-made diaries we could show a balance in our favor, the amount of money we had saved was doubled and placed to our account in the savings bank. We then became the proud possessors of a bank book. The habit of saving, with wise supervision to prevent miserliness, makes all the difference between plenty and want in later years. A. B. S. P.C."

Simply ignore the possibility of anything disagreeable. Your sister will be polite in her own home, and your friend cannot be uncivil.

E. A., Alton, Kan. Why does not Easter come on the same date every year, and what causes the change?

After much contention between the Eastern d Western Churches it was ordained by the uncil of Nice in 325 A.D. that Easter should celebrated on the same day throughout the ristian world. The day chosen is the Sunfollowing the 14th day of the calendar on, which happens upon or next after March so that if the said fourteenth day be a Sun-. Easter day does not fall on that Sunday, is the next one. It may be any Sunday of weeks, which commence with March 22 and with April 25.

s. S. S., Greenville, S. C. Please give me the number of Popes who have ruled the Roman Catholic Church.

From Peter to Pius X., there have been two ndred and sixty-four Popes.

M., Minneapolis, Kan. How can I get the training which will fit me to write for the magazines? I am a graduate of a high school, and have taught for several years; but I do not know how to get the "training that tells" for practical literary work.

Many schools and colleges offer special urses in composition. There are "literary reaus" in almost every large city, which will ticize for small sums articles submitted. But best course is, perhaps, to write out your ught, re-writing until it is as perfect as can make it, and show it to any good edi-. The competition is great, and much persevance will be needed to secure success.

o. B., Kennebunk, Me. A friend has an idea which he has obtained from some book he has seen that the pyramids of Egypt were made of cement; each stone made in a mould on the spot or place where the stone would rest. Will you give me your idea of the building methods with the crude appliances of that early time?

The pyramids are not made of cement. They e made of huge blocks of stone. Much nite was used and some alabaster was ced in the interior. At Dahshur there is a up of pyramids of which one at least is of ck. This is exceptional. Professor Flinders trie says in regard to their construction: he site being chosen, it was carefully leveled, and the lengths of the sides set with greatest exactitude. From several indications it seems that the masons planned the casing and some at least of the core masonry, also, course by course, on the ground. For on all the casing, and on the core on which the casing filled, there are lines drawn on the horizontal surfaces, showing where each stone was to be placed on those below it." The quarries from which much, if not all of the stone was taken are known to the archæologists. It is believed that the stone was brought to position by a series of inclined planes, the motive power being made up of the united strength of thousands of slaves.

W. L., Idaho Falls, Idaho. I. What is the history of Canova's statue of Paulina, Napoleon's sister? 2. What is the "Swan Poem," and who was the author?

1. Canova made many sculptures of the Bonaparte family. The one which represents the Princess Pauline as the reclining Venus in the Villa Borghese, is supposed to have been sent to England. 2. The "swan song" is a phrase denoting the last work of an author or composer. There are many so-called swan poems. Many of the poets, notably Coleridge and Byron, allude to this subject. Shakespeare in the Merchant of Venice says:

"Then if he lose, he makes a swanlike end, Fading in music."

Mrs. A. D., Carmen, Okla. Kindly tell me the true meaning of Mark 3: 25.

It is an axiom which applies to all things, both spiritual and temporal. The true Church of God is spiritual, and knows no divisions or sects. Truth itself is pure, central and undivided; sects and divisions have only arisen from various aspects or ways of looking at it. Jesus was replying to the wicked charge of the scribes that his miracles were the work of Satanic agency. They could not deny the reality of the miracles themselves. He met their blasphemous charge by an irresistible argument: that no organized society—kingdom, city, or household—can stand when turned against itself, as such intestinal war is suicidal. Jesus' works were destructive of Satan's kingdom; therefore it was incredible that he should be in league with the powers of evil to overthrow them.

H. L. H., Pocomoke, Md. Will you please tell me how much the earth's curvature is in one mile?

Eight inches to the mile, and it curves with the square of the distance.

C. R., Gilleland, Tex. Please describe the disease called "pellagra." How long does it take it to develop? What are the symptoms, and is it contagious?

Pellagra is a complex disease, having three definite symptoms: (1) red blotches on the skin exposed to heat and light; (2) a chronic inflammatory condition of the digestive system; (3) lesion of the nervous system, leading to mental alienation and paralysis. It is believed to be caused by deficient nourishment and lack of hygiene. It is common in Italy, but rare in America.

J. F., Indianapolis, Ind. Why did the World's Missionary Conference exclude Catholic countries (South America among them) in its endeavor to "conquer the world for Christ"? Was it not an evidence of weakness to exclude these countries?

We are not fully informed regarding the view the Conference took on this subject, but presume it did not wish to antagonize any religion that recognized Christ. In several of the Catholic countries in Southern Europe, there is a great movement now at work within the ranks of the Catholic Church, which points to material changes that promise to result in greater religious freedom. That movement will doubtless spread to other countries similarly situated. If the Conference took the view that it was better not to create new antagonisms nor to revive old ones, it must have considered this the wiser course, recognizing the Divine hand in recent events and in those now taking place in Latin Europe. Catholic countries were not entirely unrepresented at the Conference. Some of the speakers made a strong plea for Catholic co-operation.

Mrs. W. R. D., Moose Jaw, Can. 1. Who is the patron saint of the innkeepers? 2. Who was St. Hippolyte and of whom is he the patron?

1. Saint Theodotus. 2. Saint Hippolytus, sometimes written Hippolyte, was an antipope who lived in the early part of the third century. In the reign of Zephyrinus, he came into conflict with that pontiff on account of opinions which for some time had been causing controversy in Rome. Hippolytus proclaimed the Pope a tool in the hands of the designing deacon Callistus, and when the latter became Pope (217 A.D.) Hippolytus left the communion of Rome and had himself elected antipope. He was banished to Sardinia, but finally was reconciled to Rome and died about 236. He is generally regarded as the patron of hospitals.

P. H. W., Abilene, Tex. Explain Heb. 4: 12.

It was a warning against the temptation to false doctrine and unbelief. The apostle apparently had grounds for believing that some had already declined from the faith. His language implied this fear. He, therefore, admonished all to be on their guard, and to give special attention to each one so that none should suffer through their negligence.

J. M. O., Wickford, R. I. Are these words in the Bible: "The Lord helps those who help themselves"? If so, where may they be found?

Not in the Bible. The phrase was used by Algernon Sidney in a discourse concerning government, and later by Franklin in Poor Richard's Almanac.

Mrs. E. M. R., South Norwalk, Conn. Can you give the address of any institutions making a specialty of arthritis?

The physician at Bellevue Hospital can report no such place. At that institution, gouty affections are treated free of expense for the poor of New York. At smaller hospitals patients who can pay are charged on an average about a dollar per day.

FREE TO YOU FOR A FAVOR

THE Cover Page of our October 26 issue, "An Autumn Reverie," was so favorably received that we have decided to print a number of artist's proofs of the picture for distribution to those of our readers desiring them. We reproduce here a miniature of the picture, which does not by any means even suggest the beauty of the original. Look up your October 26 issue now so that you will have a good idea of the picture we propose to send to you in return for a favor. The picture is 13½ inches high by 11 inches wide. It will be printed on plate paper, in the Autumn colors of dark brown with the dress of the pretty girl subject in light brown, just enough contrast to make a most pleasing effect. There will be no advertisements on the front or back of this picture; it is to be printed especially to accommodate those readers who would like additional copies for their friends, or for wall decorations.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: The Editors of this magazine have asked me to write you a letter, telling you that we are to have a cozy corner here in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD all to ourselves—a place where we may meet each week and talk over parties and picnics, school frolics and every kind of a good time together—isn't that the finest surprise ever?

We shall have pictures and stories, verses, articles and puzzles, charades and rewards—plenty of such nice rewards well worth your working for, as you shall see. There will be an Honor Roll, too, where your name shall be written when you have earned a reward. And there are prizes and surprises enough planned for every boy and girl in the homes where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes.

NOW you have all heard of the Pied Piper of Hamelin, and of how he Stepped into the street

And to his lips
Laid his long pipe, a smooth straight cane;
And ere he blew three notes . . . .
There was a rustling that seemed like a bustling
Of merry crowds justling at pitching and hustling;
Small feet were pattering, wooden shoes clattering,
Little hands clapping and little tongues chattering,
And, like fowls in the farmyard when barley is scattering,
Out came the children running
All the little boys and girls . . . .
Tripping and skipping, ran merrily after
The wonderful music with shouting and laughter.

Well, it is going to be something like that right here, I believe. I should love to come among you like a good piper, while you all come tripping and skipping and shouting and laughing, into the cozy corner, where we shall have plenty of good times together.

HERE is a puzzle for you first of all, with a prize attached to it and a rebus for the very little folk:

When I was but a little girl
Between my aunt and me
The difference in our ages was
As 3 x 3 to three.
But when we ten and half ten years
Had counted out of time,
As close as 8 is to 16
Her age came near to mine.

Boys and girls over twelve sending the first ten correct answers to the puzzle will each receive a Christmas Book.

Every boy and girl over twelve, sending in the correct answer before November 17, will receive a very funny and delightful Puppet Show Story for Thanksgiving afternoon, with plans and directions for giving it.

A Rebus for the Little Folk

My first is the dearest of all to me,
My second any dull boy might be;
My third and my whole you shall guess very soon,
For she mounted a bird and flew up to the moon.

Little people under twelve, can you guess the rebus? Yes, of course, you can. Well, first guess it, then draw a picture of the answer and send it to me. The ten little boys and girls sending the best drawings will each receive a beautiful Christmas Book for a prize.

Be sure to enter the contests; the rewards are very lovely, as you shall see, and you will all win something.

Let me hear from you right away, and tell your friends they may come along, too. You may all write to me and I will send answers to your letters into all parts of the world; it matters not where you write from.

REMEMBER, that in order to enter the contests and earn the rewards, it is not necessary that your father, or your uncle, or remotest cousin subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We are not going to be one bit like the crochety old woman who lived in a shoe—the more children the better we like it, and the more surely we know what to do.

I want for a very special reason and surprise to know personally each and every boy and girl in the big CHRISTIAN HERALD Family before Christmas. So write me pretty soon. Tell me about anything and everything that interests you—your parties, your plays and games, your school, and your home—the horse, the kitten, your doll; nothing is unimportant to me. Send all letters addressed to Miss Porter, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Office, Bible House, New York.

And let us all say over to ourselves every night this week, just before we go to sleep, a verse from the 67th Psalm:

God, even our God, shall bless us, and all the ends of the earth shall fear (love) Him.

Very lovingly, always,

Your Aunt in the Cozy Corner,

Janet Porter

A BELATED FEE

By O. A. FISCHER

T was the night of the wedding of Dolly Escro and Ross Van Orme, at the home of the bride's mother. he ceremony being over, the feast as on, with thirty or more guests aking merry. The children of the eighborhood were gathered on the treet in front of the house, making h ear-splitting noise; drumming on n pans and cans and otherwise doing heir utmost to make as much noise as hey could. In the house it was all aken in good humor, and the bride- room, bubbling over with elation, or- ered refreshments served to the erenaders outside, and when they ere served, gave the oldest boy of hem a piece of money, with instruc- ons to divide with the others. As ey were thus bribed to remain quiet, ot another sound was heard, and the edding festivities went on uninter- aptedly.

Dr. Wentworth, pastor of the church here the young couple had long been embers, officiated, and remained a hort while after that function, then ade good-by to the assemblage. In he hallway Van Orme graciously anded him the fee envelope, which the astor with a murmur of many thanks eftly dropped between the leaves of he book from which he had read the arriage rites; he then departed.

Some months after the Van Ormes eturned from their honeymoon, and ere settled in their new home, Dr. Ventworth was an invited guest at inner one evening, and seemed so mused over something that he was ither laughing or grinning through- ut his entire stay. The young hus- and noticed, too, that he was eyeing im with more than ordinary care, and e felt rather discomforted by it.

"Doll," asked Van Orme of the oung wife after the minister had left, do you see anything wrong with me?"

"Nothing that I can see," she said ssuringly.

"Then why did he look at me con- inuously and laugh?"

"He possibly just felt jolly. Don't e silly."

The following evening was to be pent at Mrs. Van Orme's mother's, nd as they neared the house, passing ome boys that were congregated near he corner, they heard one of them re- nark:

"See! Dere's de guy what give us le blowout last year."

"My!" bawled out another boy; "I wisht't he'd give us another; Doll got a good scout all right."

The extolling words of the boys on he street were proudly referred to by he young wife during the evening's conversation with her mother.

"Yes, indeed, Ross," said the mother, 'you have made yourself popular with hose boys, sure enough."

Directly then Mrs. Van Orme had ccasion to leave the room, when the nother, leaning over in her chair, said:

"Ross, as I was saying, you made yourself popular; but you should handle your money with more care; you should not have given those boys so much; they did not know what to do with it."

Van Orme sat in mute silence, be- wildered and at a loss as to what his mother-in-law was driving at. His thoughts wandered, when suddenly he sprang to his feet, with a look of pain- ful fright coming to his ashen face. His lips began to quiver and his eyes grew large and staring.

"Mother!" he suddenly blurted out, "when Doll comes in, t-tell her I'll be back in a few minutes—please!" Then out of the room he rushed, and in a few seconds the front door slammed.

On reaching the street, he hurried with all speed to the residence of Dr. Wentworth. Running up the stone steps, he pushed vigorously at the bell; no one coming, in a few seconds he impatiently rang again—louder and longer than before. A maid opened the door, and with a frown on her face asked what he wanted.

"Is—is the doctor in?" he inquired in a quick, excited tone, and all out of breath.

"Yes, sir; step in," and she opened the door wider for him to enter and eyed him curiously.

"Mr. Ross Van Orme is my name," said he to the maid, who nodded and left him, returning in a minute more, saying Dr. Wentworth would see him in his study.

Van Orme hastened there. The pas- tor greeted him with a broad smile, and bade him to be seated. He sat down, but was in too animated a state of mind to stay, so he immediately got up again.

"I called," said he, "for a very odd —for something that is—that was—I mean I—I called to ask you—doctor, do you remember the night you per- formed the marriage ceremony for me?"

"How absurd! Why, Ross, of course I do—certainly; what seems to be wrong?"

"Well—well, it is this; I want you to tell me how much money was in the envelope I handed you."

"Why? What difference does that make? I am sure I didn't expect——"

"No, no; I want you to tell me, doc- tor, what money I gave you. I im- plore you to give me this crumb of information."

The minister laughed heartily, then snickered. "It doesn't matter in the least, Ross; but if I remember right you gave me a silver dollar."

"Oh, my! my! What a senseless monkey I was not to have been more careful! I had a twenty-dollar gold piece that I put in a certain pocket, and in another I had a silver dollar. The gold piece was for you; but I made the horrible mistake of putting the silver dollar in your envelope and the boys who were serenading on the street got the twenty-dollar gold piece. How could I have made such a blunder?"

"Easy, Ross, very easy. It being your wedding night, naturally you were excited. Getting married, you know, is an event in a person's life; it is a thing that does not happen very often." He then broke into a loud, hilarious laugh, at the young benedict's discomfiture. "It's a little joke, Ross, but never mind, you stand high in their favor. I know; my boy was one of them who shared in your liberality."

"Your boy! Then you knew, of course, the gold was intended for you?"

"I so surmised," smiled the divine.

"The first inkling I had of my mis- take was to-night." With beads of perspiration on his white brow, he got out his check book and, unmindful of the minister's protest, wrote out a check for twenty dollars. Dr. Went- worth at first refused to accept it, but Van Orme pleaded so hard that he finally yielded. With the promise of secrecy on the part of the minister, and the repeated asking pardon by Van Orme, after a vigorous handshake the latter hurried away.

When he reached the house his wife, who had been conversing with her mother, looked up when he entered the room, saying:

"Why, Ross, where have you been? You must have been running—you are in a lather of perspiration."

"I—I've just been out for a little walk, and w-when I realized that I had been gone quite long, I just hurried back."

"That is not a nice way for you to act, Ross; to come here for the even- ing and then go out for a walk by yourself!" She stole a glance to her mother, who shot back an answering

Feed Your Nerves While Feeding Your Body

FOR days of normal activities, normal diet supplies sufficient nerve and tissue nutrient. But with modern high-pressure business and strenuous social duties it is well-nigh impossible to keep demand down to normal and supply up to normal.

Our present mode of living induces nervous indigestion and similar disorders, which deprive Nature of her full quota of nourishment from the food we eat—she needs assistance in recreating nervous energy and bodily tissue.

That's why thousands of men and women—whose nervous health has at one time or other suffered, include at every meal

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TONIC

Sanatogen supplies in highly concentrated, easily assimilated form, the tissue-building Albumen and wonderful nerve recreator and revitalizer, Sodium Glycero-phosphate. Sanatogen is a fine white powder, soluble in water, cocoa, milk, or any non-acid beverage. It is openly endorsed and prescribed by thousands of physicians the world over and has the endorsement of scores of prominent people who have derived wonderful benefits from its use.

SIR GILBERT PARKER
The popular Canadian novelist:
"I have used Sanatogen at intervals since last autumn with extraordinary benefit. It is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy and giving fresh vigor to the overworked body and mind."

MRS. BELVA A. LOCKWOOD, LL.D.
Secretary International Peace Bureau, Washington, D.C., says:
"I have used according to directions your Sanatogen, and find it not only a very pleasant and palatable food, but a good digester and assimilator. I find my stomach in a better condition after a two weeks' trial of it than it has been before for two years. I cheerfully recommend it to dyspeptics, overworked clerks, feeble children and aged people."

HON. WM. L. CHAMBERS
Former Chief Justice International Court, Samoa, says.
"Sanatogen has been used in my family with the most excellent results, and I do not hesitate to recommend this valuable remedy to those whose systems need building up. It is a most invigorating tonic."

The Shadow of the Cross*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE deepest affliction the world has ever seen was that experienced by the Lord Jesus in the Garden of Gethsemane. We have sometimes heard persons say: "I have all I can do to bear my own troubles without thinking about others." But all of the sorrow which Jesus bore in the Garden of Gethsemane was for others: "He hath borne our griefs and carried our sorrows." "He was bruised for our iniquities" (Isa. 53: 4, 5). It was because of our sins that he suffered there, suffered so that he sweat great drops of blood. The bloody sweat is the index of how much he suffered in mind; it was not agony of body. It is a condition not unknown to medical men, and it is rather striking that of all the four Gospel writers, Luke, the physician, is the only one who mentions it.

The Power of the Mind

The power of the mind over the body is no new discovery. We are all familiar with the fact that intense emotion causes perspiration. The bloody sweat is the same thing intensified.

A gentleman once told us how a sweat of blood came out upon his forehead when he stood by the bedside of a member of his family who was passing through most excruciating suffering. Such an experience would help one to understand a little what Jesus suffered in Gethsemane. That was the mental crucifixion of Christ. It was the culmination of what he had suffered all through the three years of his ministry on earth in the constant anticipation of the final suffering and shame on Calvary. John the Baptist knew something of the anticipative suffering of Christ, for on the day after he had baptized Jesus, he said to those about him as he saw Jesus approaching, "Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world." It is one of the greatest of so-called "common blessings," for which we seldom praise God, that we are not allowed to see our future. How it would crush some of us to know in advance all we must suffer for thirty years hence, or even for three years!

The Temple of the Body

Near the opening of Christ's public career, at his first cleansing of the temple, when asked for a sign or proof of his divine authority, he answered, speaking of "the temple of his body": "Destroy this temple and in three days I will raise it up" (John 2: 19). Only a little later in his ministry, as he converses with Nicodemus, we see the shadow of the cross as he says: "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up" (John 3: 14). Not long after, when the Jews again called for a sign of his authority, he again pointed forward to his death and resurrection, and at the same time put his stamp on an assailed passage of the Old Testament: "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the whale, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth" (Matt. 12: 40). Already Christ felt the chill of the far-off tomb, the heavy shadow of the cross. Months before his crucifixion, while multitudes thronged about him with their shallow applause, "began Jesus to show unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things of the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and the third day be raised up" (Matt. 16: 21). Thus he sought to bring his friends into the fellowship of his mental sufferings, into the shadow of the cross. It is passing strange to see the cross casting its shadow before upon the very Mount of Transfiguration where Moses and Elijah and Jesus "spake of his decease, which he was about to accomplish at Jerusalem" (Luke 9: 31). As the months roll between the transfiguration and the crucifixion, we hear such words as these coming from the lips of Christ as he slowly moves forward in the shadow of the cross: "I am the good Shepherd; the good Shepherd layeth down his life for the sheep" (John 10: 11). "And they took him (the well-loved Son of the husbandman) and killed him, and cast him out of the vineyard" (Mark 12: 8). "Except a grain of wheat fall into the earth and die, it abideth by itself alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit" (John 12: 24). "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto myself" (John 12: 32). "In that she hath poured this ointment on my body, she did it for my burial" (Matt. 26: 12). How the shadow deepens as he says at the Passover Supper on the night before his death, when as yet he had not been arrested, "Behold, the hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table" (Luke 22: 21). "I say unto you that this which is written must be fulfilled in me" (Luke 22: 37).

The Cup of Agony

The deepest shadow of the cross was seen in Gethsemane, where Christ exclaimed: "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Nothing helps one to get a glimpse at least of the meaning of that cup of agony which he drank for us in Gethsemane as the death of Charles IX. of France who ordered the awful massacre of St. Bartholomew by which thousands of the Protestant Huguenots, the ablest and purest of the people of France were assassinated in the interest of the Romanism of that day. When the king, who had committed that wholesale murder, came to his dying hour and realized that he was soon to meet the eternal Judge, he cried out in the agony of his guilt, "Oh, how much blood! Oh, how much blood!" His remorse could not express itself in words, but caused him to sweat blood. Oh, how marvelous that sympathy of Christ, that he sweat great drops of blood, falling down to the ground, as if the sins of men over which he sorrowed had been his own!

Indeed, Christ began his divine suffering even before his birth into the world. He is "the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world" (Rev. 13: 8). The greatest struggle of self-sacrifice is commonly not in the act but in the first decision to do it. Christ decided to give his life as our ransom at the very hour when man began to sin. It was with the cross that he decided to "bruise the serpent's head" (Gen. 3: 15). As we have shown, all through the Old Testament ages he saw the shadow of the cross. We must think of these things in order to understand Gethsemane.

The Shadow of the Cross in the New Testament

If Christ had been only a man, he could not have lived in the shadow of the cross; it would have crushed him. That is why God in his mercy hangs a mist before our eyes, and we know not what a day will bring forth. It has been said, "Suppose to each young man was revealed his after life, how long he should live, how he should die, and all the joys and sorrows he should pass through, how much would it add to his comfort and pleasure? How much of zeal and purpose would it inspire in him? Would there be more hope, more courage, more of determination than we now find? Rather would not all this knowledge settle down on him like a great pall, withering his energies ighting his prospects, benumbing his al?" By comparison we realize the vine strength there was in Christ.

It is most pathetic that Jesus sought r human sympathy, and it failed him. is recorded that after the Supper sus went forth with his disciples er the brook Kidron, where was a rden; not a garden of flowers, but olive garden. He took them into e garden with him. To eight of them said, "Sit ye here while I pray," but ree of them, Peter, James and John, took further into the garden with m, and to them he said: "My soul is ceeding sorrowful, even unto death; ide ye here and watch with me. And went forward a little, a stone's row, and fell on the ground, and ayed that if it were possible the ur might pass from him." And en he came back to Peter and James d John for a touch of tender human mpathy, but it was denied him; for found them sleeping! Peter had omised so much to Jesus of loving yalty that Jesus reproved him sadly, ying, "Simon, sleepest thou? Could- t not thou watch one hour?" But nderly Jesus excused them all for eping, when they should have been aying, by saying: "The spirit indeed willing, but the flesh is weak." And ain Jesus went away and prayed: Father, if thou be willing, remove is cup from me; nevertheless, not my ll, but thine be done." Again long- g for human sympathy, he came to s three disciples, and again found em sleeping. And when he wakened em, they were shame-faced and they ew not what to answer him. Then went away and prayed more ear- stly, and his sweat became as it were eat drops of blood, falling down on e ground. Then an angel was sent om heaven to strengthen him (Luke : 43). But still longing for human mpathy, he went back to Peter, mes and John. Again he was disap- inted, for he found them asleep. But ke tells us they were "sleeping for row." Then it was not indifference some have thought. And Jesus uld have let them sleep on, but he ard a tumult, and knew that Judas d the band he had brought to seize n were come; so he awoke Peter, mes and John, saying: "Arise, let us going; behold, he is at hand that rayeth me."

The Burden Christ Carried

And so not only the bloody sweat, t the anguish with which he prayed, t if it were possible some other way ght be provided for the redemption man, showed how heavily did the rden rest down upon him. It was nost greater than he could bear. e sins of the whole world were rest- g upon him. One man's sin is enough break a human heart. The heart of sus did at last break as he hung on the cross (as was shown by blood d water issuing from his side when l was pierced by one of the soldiers ohn 19: 34).

When Jesus prayed, "Let this cup pass from me," he was not in the spirit of drawing back from his part of being made a ransom for many. If that was God's way, his only way, he was ready to meet it; but his humanity appeared when he shrank from it. He was both God and man. It has been suggested that "the tempter came to Jesus in that hour, in a bleaker wilderness, a drearier desert, not when he was an hungered from forty days of fasting, but when his soul was afire with an infinite agony." (Dr. Joseph Parker.) Another has said: "The great horror of Jesus in the garden arose not from fear of Calvary, but from fear of failure (through physical suffering) to reach Calvary, and so lose all for which he left heaven." (Dr. Schauffler.) Even so, it might have been the tempter who put the fear into his heart.

As we study deeper into Gethsemane, we will get a truer realization of the sacrifice our Saviour made for us. It was no easy thing for him to do. It cost him much in body, mind and soul.

Thy birthright in the world was pain and grief;
Thy love's return ingratitude and hate;
The limbs thou healedst brought thee no relief;
The eyes thou openedst calmly viewed thy fate;
Thou that wert wont to dwell
In peace tongue can not tell,
No heart conceive the bliss of thy celestial state.
—H. H. Milman.

When we do realize all that he has done for us, the little we can do for him will not only be done gladly, but we shall sorrow that we can not do more. We never can repay in smallest measure the debt of love we owe to him

Gethsemane as It Appears To-day

As seen by the Jerusalem Sunday School pilgrims, it lies at the base of Mount Olivet, over against Jerusalem. It is almost a square, 160 by 150 feet. It is enclosed by a high white stone wall. Inside are eight venerable olive trees, thought by some persons to be the same trees that were there in the time of Christ. The roots may be the same, as the Emperor Titus had all trees cut down when he conquered Jerusalem in A.D. 70, but yet these may have escaped. The olive trees in Gethsemane are hoary with age, and their cracked trunks are reinforced with stones. They are surrounded by a light paling fence and between them are sweet flowers growing. They are tended by monks, who present each visitor with a small bunch, for which they expect to receive a franc (about twenty cents). All around the inside of the white wall are shrines in niches with painted figures representing the stations of the cross. Fastened to the wall and extending high above it is a large cross, which is covered with carved representations of the instruments connected with the crucifixion: the crown of thorns, the ladder, the nails, hammer, spear, sponge on a reed, etc. Many groups of the Sunday School pilgrims visited the spot.

Your Duty Towards Your Neighbor

PERHAPS you never thought of that in connection with advertising, but it is a very real and very important thing, just the same.

When you think anything is not exactly as it should be in our advertising columns, write us about it.

Nothing is so disastrous from a business standpoint as a dishonest advertisement, and it is the duty of every individual to do his part in putting a stop to it. It hurts every honest advertiser, hurts the paper itself, and may soon perhaps hurt your neighbor.

You must be fair, however, and make all reasonable allowances. Do not jump at conclusions, but be sure that you have just cause for your decision.

We need this co-operation from you and every one of our readers, and will thank you for it, because we want our advertising columns so clean and helpful that you will be just as much interested in seeing them grow as you are in the editorial work itself. You and our advertisers must be on good terms; you must deal together, and there must be this co-operative feeling all around, if THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is to do its best work.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement.

Remember the Homeless

A Bowery Mission Thanksgiving Appeal

THE great CHRISTIAN HERALD Family will sorely miss the tender and touching message it was accustomed to receive from the pen of the late Dr. Klopsch at Thanksgiving time. We well remember how eloquently he pleaded at this festival period the cause of the homeless man, the wandering prodigal, and the broken-hearted bread-winner. Now that his pen and tongue are silenced it is for us to call to mind the wonderful lessons he taught us on the privilege and joy of giving.

This year, as in other years, the same problem confronts us, the same great task of caring for the homeless and utterly destitute is laid upon us as that which Dr. Klopsch so bravely and constantly helped us to carry on. Tens of thousands of distressed and despairing men are at our doors appealing for help. Many of them are famishing with hunger, half maddened through lack of sleep, utterly disheartened because of the impossibility of securing employment, facing the appalling prospect of a bitter winter with scanty clothing and without a roof to cover them.

These baffling and dispiriting material conditions, bad as they are, are not to be compared with the awful break-down in spirit that these men suffer. There is the loss of hope and self-respect; the agony of remorse; the sense of separation from home and friends and all good and holy influences; and the continuous strain of temptation, in their desperate condition, to become criminals. Is it any wonder that they are driven to drink, drugs, anything, suicide even, in their search for forgetfulness and oblivion? The bodily suffering that comes from poverty is great, but the soul-wreck is unspeakably awful!

The nightly meetings of the mission have never been so largely attended. Hundreds are turned away from the doors almost every night. At the forthcoming Thanksgiving time heavy demands will be made upon us, and we want you to come to our aid.

Our programme will be the same as in former years. At 1 A.M. the "Bread Line" will open, with breakfasts of hot coffee and rolls to one thousand men gathered from the streets, men absolutely without hor or food. This will be continued eve morning until Easter.

At 9 A.M. 200 baskets, containi 1,000 meals, consisting of fowls, veg tables, bread, tea, coffee, etc., will given to the 200 poorest, unprovide for families in the city.

At 7 P.M. 1,200 dinners will be giv to homeless men. As soon as our lar auditorium is filled for our Annu Thanksgiving Meeting the crowd ou side will be taken to the breakfa room underneath and have their di ners given there.

Into this large family circle of yo needy brethren we wish to have y enter. You cannot be present in pe son, but you can send us your praye and kindly thoughts. It may be th you would like to send a written me sage. If so, it will be gratefully r ceived. It may be that you have "wandering boy" of your own, and will hear it read.

At our Thanksgiving Meeting, ov which "Mother" Bird always presid the spirit of home and brotherhood pe vades. We sing the old home song "Home, Sweet Home," "Do They Mi Me at Home?" and others of like cha acter. The converted men tell stori of the old homestead and the folks a their boyhood days. Hearts gr very tender as these long-forgott chords "vibrate once more." Hu dreds of men have been reclaimed these Thanksgiving meetings.

We shall miss our great benefact this year, for Dr. Klopsch was ge erally present in former years. Let have YOU with us in spirit, sympath thought, and prayers.

The one infallible token of this w be your cash contribution. If you wi really to enjoy your Thanksgivi dinner and family reunion in your ov home remember your homeless bret ren. Send your check or postal ord to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bil House, New York City, and, as I Klopsch used to say, "Give as GOD h prospered you, and it shall be giv you again, in generous Gospel mea ure, pressed down, shaken togeth and running over."

Live Stock in the Southeast

There is money in raising live stock and in dairying in the Southeast, where good lands are only $10 to $40 an acre. The climate is the best in America. The largest varieties of grasses and forage plants give stock raisers advantage over other sections. Alfalfa yields four to six crops a year. Corn yields by good farmers highest in the country. Beef and pork are made at 3 to 4 cents a pound. Dairy products command highest prices. Government experts recommend Southeast for horses, cattle, sheep and hogs. We will give information about best locations. Write for Homeseekers' Rates.

men as Gabriel, author of the "Glory Song"; Excell, convention leader; Bilhorn, famous for his "Peace, Sweet, Peace," and a score of others of like talent, are there; while directing all and leading all is Alexander. The singing is not simply a help to the preaching; it is itself preaching.

As an illustration of the thoroughness with which Chicago is being covered by the evangelistic workers, consider one group. The Garfield Park group has nine churches with their pastors. Dr. Henry Ostrom is the evangelist preacher; John P. Hillis, the evangelistic singer; Mr. Charles H. Marsh, composer and pianist; Mr. Burt Reitz, private secretary. This group idea is a ministry to a city within a city, and it is everywhere.

While the masses of the city are meeting in the various centres, men and women of special gifts and call are carrying on a work; sometimes without observation, but mightily effective in accomplishing results. Mr. George T. B. Davis is promoting the Pocket Testament League. Mr. and Mrs. William Asher have been maki the rounds of the police stations. Ch of Police Stewart has given them eve courtesy and ample protection. S and salvation are getting in very cl contact. One man who said that was converted by reading accounts the sermons in the daily newspap came to a recent meeting and ga testimony of the fact. When he h a family reunion, his daughters tes fied that they had been "praying f papa."

The chairman of the fellowsh luncheons, J. Grafton Parker, relat at one of the luncheons this incide "Just before coming here," he sa "one of the best known real esta dealers in Chicago came into my off and said, 'Parker, I have accept Christ.' I said, 'What are you goi to do about it?' 'I have already co menced to take other men to the me ing,' he replied. 'What more are y going to do?' I asked. He said, 'I going to join the church and go work.'"

Many thousands have asked pray and among them an encouraging nu ber have definitely found the way life. The present campaign continu until November 26.

Fellow-Workers' Covenant*

SOMETIMES it seems as though the work of the missionaries among the heathen is not much harder than that which falls to us here, so far as the conversion of the community is concerned.

Our unconverted friends are likely to be taken up with amusements. Card-playing, dancing, the theatre—all forms of so-called "sport"—perhaps absorb most of their leisure. They may be perfectly satisfied with this kind of life.

To awaken them to the value of their own souls, to the awful realities of eternity, and to the claims of the Saviour's service, seems well-nigh impossible.

The task is not improbably made all the harder by the kind hearts and the upright conduct of the indifferent ones. Only through earnest prayer and thought, and the utmost consistency of conduct on our own part, can victory be achieved.

As our Manual so aptly says, seasons of affliction are often most favorable for the sowing of the good seed. The heart is soft under the stress of sorrow, and most susceptible then to deep impressions.

Paul J. Gilbert, the evangelistic worker, lays great emphasis upon "definiteness" in the art of soul-winning.

"There must be," he says, "a definite effort to persuade a definite person to receive a definite Saviour at a definite time—now."

He claims that we all work too vaguely. We shoot into the air, and then wonder why we bring nothing in for the Master.

In a great political campaign one of the most successful managers was constantly impressing upon his audiences the value of personal man-to-man work.

"You cannot reach the whole country, gentlemen. No one of you can probably control even a single State; but you can find out the condition of your own block and can somewhat influence every man who lives on it. You can see that false registration is prevented on that block. I am providing an honest man to look after each block of this city. Watch your block."

He won the contest, it was said, by the "block system."

The great evangelists have all won by personal labor—by reaching individuals. The great general meetings were supplemented by small gatherings, in which the heart-to-heart fire was communicated.

Dr. Torrey tells of a blind woman who asked if he thought her blindness would hinder her from working for the Master.

"Not at all," he replied. "It may be a help to you, for others, seeing your blindness, may come and speak to you, and thus you will have an opportunity of giving your testimony for Christ, and leading them to him."

"Oh, that is not what I want!" she explained. "That seems to me a waste of time, when one might be speaking to five or six hundred at once, just to be speaking to an individual."

Yet that is the way the Lord means to have us gather in—one by one. There are only a comparative few who are ordained for the larger work.

John B. Gough said: "It may be a small matter for you to speak the one word for Christ that wins a needy soul, but it is everything to him."

The poet says:

Each word we speak has infinite effects.
Each soul we pass must go to heaven or hell—
And this our one chance through eternity
To sow the saving seed as we fleet by!
Be earnest, earnest, earnest; mad, if thou wilt;
Do what thou doest as if the stake were heaven,
And that, thy last deed ere the judgment day.

Four Essential Points of a Good Bond

The only kind of a bond in which you should invest your money must be a bond that is perfectly safe, is marketable, returns a commensurate interest yield and is likely to appreciate in intrinsic value.

We now have and are offering for sale a bond which combines all of these essential points and to an unusual degree. This bond, the par value of which is $1,000, pays 5%, but at the present low market price yields an income of about 5⅝%. This is an unusually high rate in connection with a bond so well secured. The name of this issue is

Due 1937. Denomination $1,000. Interest semi-annual. Coupon or registered.

Security: Direct lien on the property of a large Public Service Corporation serving a territory of 32,000 square miles, including more than 100 cities and towns. Earnings are large and increasing at an average annual rate of $1,500,000. $5,000,000 from surplus earnings expended for improvements and expenditures in the last six years.

Equity: Nearly double total debt whether judged by appraised cash replacement value or market prices of junior securities.

Marketability: Issue has had wide distribution to investors. Listed on New York Stock Exchange. Commands ready loan and sale market.

Yield: A safe 5% bond of good market at a price to yield around 5⅝% is unusual and affords a superior investment opportunity.

BEST MORTGAGES

DURING these plain talks on mortgages as a good form of investment for the thrifty wage or salary-earner, we have been reminded more than once that the desire to save and to increase savings through a reasonable return in the way of interest, is not a virtue peculiar to men; indeed, in most cases it is the woman who makes the start.

If the woman's business knowledge were commensurate with her desire for a wholesome economy, her investments would always be wisely made; but, as a rule, her life work and experience do not lead to business methods, and in many cases she has lost through a want of this knowledge.

Here is a case in point; and that it is not an exceptional case, every business man throughout the country knows:

A Typical Case

Mrs. F——, a widow in a small New Jersey town, in addition to caring for her three children, had saved from her earnings as a dressmaker one thousand dollars. Being intelligent as well as thrifty, the lady wished to place her savings where they would be earning something; but there being no savings bank in her neighborhood, and she being ignorant of any way in which her money might be invested, her pastor, whom she had consulted, advised her to seek the counsel of a lawyer, a resident of the town and widely known for his dash and shrewdness.

"Mrs. F——," said the lawyer, when he had been consulted, "I make it a rule never to manage the money of my clients, but it is always a privilege and a pleasure to advise. Now, I have another client, a well-to-do farmer, who wants to make improvements on his place to the extent of one thousand dollars, and he is willing to pay six per cent. for the use of the money. His mortgage will be as good as gold. Will you let him have the money?"

Six per cent! Sixty dollars a year! Five dollars a month for the use of money that had been lying barren at the bottom of a carefully locked trunk! Would Mrs. F—— give the money on these conditions? Of course, she would, and she did. Right then and there, the lady gave the lawyer her money, took his receipt for the same—she felt this receipt was all the voucher she needed—and then went back to her sewing with the satisfied feeling that this had been her most profitable morning.

Every six months thereafter, for two years, Mrs. F—— called at the lawyer's office and came away with thirty dollars in interest to add to her second accumulation of savings.

Suddenly, the lawyer died. He was a bankrupt; but Mrs. F—— had her receipt, and, of course, the mortgage, which she had never seen, would be found among his papers. But all the searching did not reveal the mortgage, for the good reason that there never had been a mortgage. The lawyer had taken the money, used it for his own purpose, and paid the interest, till death revealed him a robber of the widow.

The Best Mortgages

You will remember that all Aesop's fables have a "moral" attached to them. Now this story, unfortunately, is not a fable, but it has its moral, and it applies to inexperienced men as well as to confiding women. It is this: No matter where you live, if you buy a mortgage, insist not only on seeing the papers properly drawn, but on keeping them in your own possession.

Where a first mortgage has been made, which is not up to the full mortgageable value of a property, a second, and even a third mortgage may be made on the same porperty, and the last mortgage may be quite as safe as the first. Now, that "may be" implies a doubt, and so a risk, and the sm mortgage investor must avoid t shadow of a risk.

If the property should be foreclos and the market conditions for real are the same as when the third mo gage, or even the second, was give there should be, after the sale, a b ance in favor of the original own There is no form of property mo staple than real estate and no form security better than a mortgage; b while the actual value may rema about the same, the selling value w vary with the money market and t demand for that kind of property.

Of one thing you may be certai no matter what the foreclosed prope sells for, the first mortgage must paid in full before any considerati can be given to the payment of t second, or third. In view of this, repeat with all emphasis, that t small investor should never touch second mortgage, much less a thi His should be the first claim on t property.

Do not get the impression that are arguing against second mortgag per se. They constitute a well-rec nized form of security, and that th may be just as safe as first mortgag is evidenced by the fact that ma great financial institutions take th and deal in them; indeed, as has be intimated in a former article, so houses make them a specialty. But are not considering the men whose s business is dealing in mortgages, b the man who has saved a thousand more dollars and wishes to inv them securely.

A False Lure

In the present state of the mon market, five per cent. may be reckon a fair interest on a first mortga The difference between one thousa dollars at five per cent. and six cent. is just ten dollars a year. T dollars represents a week's work to t average wage-earner. He can inv in a first mortgage at five per cen and in a second at six. The maker the mortgage has added on the c per cent. as a lure, and we regret say it is too often successful.

In our cities there is another b added to the lure of one per cent. the schemer anxious to realize on second mortgage. It is this: He d not want all the money down. He willing to take it in ten monthly inst ments, pledging himself to pay at t end of the first six months interest the full amount. But if the mortga would prefer to pay cash down, he w deduct ten per cent.

On this showing the man with c thousand dollars to invest will be a ually making sixteen per cent. the fi year; that is, if he puts his money i a second mortgage of the class we considering. The difference betwe this return and that on a five per ce first mortgage is just one hundred a ten dollars, or more than three tin as much.

Let a fluent second mortgage p moter present this argument to inexperienced man with the thousa dollars, and the result, in nine ca out of ten, is that he will get the otl man's money, and the odds are equa great that the other will never see again; or if he should get a glimpse it it will be in such a reduced form to bear no resemblance to the origir

A second mortgage may be as s as a first; but, depend upon it, it always doubtful where extra indu ments to take it are offered.

If a man has sufficient means reserve to buy in the property, in event of a foreclosure by the fi mortgagee, it may be that the taki of a second mortgage may turn out be a shrewd business transaction; l we repeat, and with all emphasis: you invest in a mortgage, let it be first one, and when it is made keep in your own possession.

Missing Balloonists Found

HARDLY had Wellman and his party been discovered on the high as and taken from the dirigible bal- on America, when the world was iting anxiously to discover the iereabouts of two more aeronauts io had disappeared seemingly forever the blue sky. They were Mr. ugustus Post and Mr. Alan R. Haw- , and by an odd coincidence their lloon, a non-dirigible, was known the America II., but the numbers in is case referred to it as the successor another non-dirigible of the old pe, which had been used for some nous flights.

The America II. was a contestant in e international balloon race which rted from St. Louis. The balloons re to sail "as the wind listeth," and one which drifted the farthest was be declared the winner of the cup. balloons were entered, and the onauts represented the United tes, France, Germany and Switzer- d. All of the aeronauts hoped to ss the Great Lakes into Canada, as re was a northeast wind as they nt up one after another between f and six o'clock.

The America II. had a yellow basket h its name printed with large let- s. The two aeronauts went pre- ed for any emergency. They had preservers, fishing tackle, and es to supply them with game if they uld descend in some trackless wild- ess. They had food in condensed form and water sufficient for several days.

During the next few days the different balloons began to drop to earth, most of them just north of the Great Lakes, but not a word came from the America II. Various rumors were traced to their source and it was found that no one had seen the air-craft of Post and Hawley after it had left the grounds at St. Louis on October 17. It began to be feared that they had dropped into Lake Superior, and that their fate would remain one of the unsolved mysteries of aeronautics.

Then came a telegram from the little hamlet of St. Ambroise on the Saguenay, Province of Quebec, Canada. It was directed to the Aero Club of America, and signed by Hawley. It stated that the America II. had landed at Perebouka River, Lake Chilagomo, on the 19th. They had been missing nine days. For seven they had been struggling through the Canadian forests to reach a telegraph station. They had covered 1,355 miles in their balloon.

Mr. Hawley said they had crossed both Lake Superior and Lake Huron, then they drifted northeast over the forests of the northern part of the Province of Quebec. On the afternoon of the 19th a storm came up and they were forced landward, and they struck the side of a mountain. For a time they were in a series of snowstorms. Then they reached a hunter's camp, and then four Canadians brought them to St. Ambroise by canoe.

The Howard Watch

The U. S. Army officer is strong for the HOWARD Watch. The HOWARD has seen service in three wars—with infantry, artillery, cavalry.

It has proved itself dependable through the shock and exposure of campaigning—which is about the most exacting service that could be demanded of a watch.

The HOWARD is the finest practical watch in the world—always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each HOWARD is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—$40 to $150.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town—he is a good man to know.

Drop us a postal card, Dept. W, and we will send you "The Story of Edward Howard and the First American Watch"—an inspiring chapter of history that every man and boy should read.

look. They went home, and for the balance of the evening Mrs. Van Orme had little to say. She was doing a powerful lot of thinking.

By the following morning, though, she had quite forgotten his impoliteness, and sent him to his day's tussle at the office with smiles, hugs and kisses. About an hour after he had gone, she called him on the telephone.

"Hello!" she pertly called.

"Hello, pet, is that you?"

"Yes, Ross dear; I just want to let you know that you dropped your check book in the lower hall; but I found it; aren't you glad?"

She heard a noise like something heavy falling, then heard her husband excitedly exclaim:

"My! d-dearie, you didn't look through it, did you?"

"No, Ross, not yet; tell me what shall I look for?"

"No, no, Doll; I don't want you to look at all."

"Why not, pray?" Her voice came slow.

"I can't tell you now, wifey, dear, only please don't look."

She did not exactly promise, but gave an indefinite answer.

Her curiosity gave her no peace; she looked, and first thing caught sight of the last entry and read: "Dr. Wentworth—twenty dollars—for marriage fee." What does it mean? I don't understand! She reeled and stared wildly about her. "Why should he pay a marriage fee at this time? We are married near six months."

She immediately decided to go to her mother and get her view of the matter. Unfolding the newly acquired, mystifying knowledge, she laid the open check book before her maternal parent, and pointed to the offending entry. The mother forthwith saw into the affair, and burst into so hearty a laughter that she fell into a chair helpless, while the astonished daughter looked on in amazement.

"Doll," asked the mother when she caught her voice, "did you know that Ross at the wedding gave the boys who were serenading some money?"

"Yes, he told me he gave them a dollar—a silver dollar!"

"Well, daughter, that explains. He gave them a twenty-dollar gold piece, and I suppose Dr. Wentworth got the silver dollar. I recall now of having spoken to Ross last night of his exceeding liberality with the boys; evidently that set him thinking, and the walk he took was a hurry call on Dr. Wentworth, from whom he learned of his mistake. The poor boy! he must have felt mean."

At first the wife cried, but the genial spirit of the mother soon soothed her. That night the mother called on the young couple, and, oddly enough, Dr. Wentworth called too. The affair was viewed by now as too amusing for Mrs. Van Orme to keep secret, so she told what she knew mid screams of laughter. What could the poor young husband do but join in the merriment—if it was at his expense?

"It was a belated fee, doctor," said he; "but I will see that it does not happen again."

Our 1911 Calendar with Every Order

The Calendar has been exquisitely finished by an absolutely new photogravure process, and it is one of first color paintings ever reproduced in this manner. The colors are rich and perfectly blended. The baby is pictu against a background of a soft, shimmering orange; the beautiful pale-blue bows give a delightful contrast that produces a perfect composition; and the radiance of a rose-like complexion, a charming pink and white combination so typical of health and happiness, have been so faithfully retained that they melt and shade one into another in absolute harmony. The miniature half-tone shown here is incapable, of course, of conveying any adequate idea of the Calendar itself, which is 14 x 18 inches in size, printed on heavy de luxe stock, a dream of artistic perfection. Think of the good old memories this little baby would awaken in your home—memories of the time when those near and dear to you were chubby little ones. The Calendar will be prized by the whole family. It is free with each new and renewal subscription.

Photogravure of Dr. Klopsch—FREE

We will also send a photogravure portrait of the late Dr. Klopsch, one of the world's greatest and most dearly beloved philanthropists. You all know of Dr. Klopsch, and you are sure to welcome this opportunity to obtain a good picture of this sterling man in order to perpetuate his memory in your own home. Address your orders to

STOPPED SHORT

Taking Tonics, and Built up on Right Food.

The mistake is frequently made of trying to build up a worn-out nervous system on so-called tonics—drugs.

New material from which to rebuild wasted nerve cells is what should be supplied, and this can be obtained only from proper food.

"Two years ago I found myself on the verge of a complete nervous collapse, due to overwork and study, and to illness in the family," writes a Wisconsin young mother.

"My friends became alarmed because I grew pale and thin and could not sleep nights. I took various tonics prescribed by physicians, but their effects wore off shortly after I stopped taking them. My food did not seem to nourish me and I gained no flesh nor blood.

"Reading of Grape-Nuts, I determined to stop the tonics and see what a change of diet would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four times a day, with cream and drank milk also, went to bed early after eating a dish of Grape-Nuts.

"In about two weeks I was sleeping soundly. In a short time gained 20 pounds in weight and felt like a different woman. My little daughter whom I was obliged to keep out of school last spring on account of chronic catarrh has changed from a thin, pale, nervous child to a rosy, healthy girl and has gone back to school this fall.

"Grape-Nuts and fresh air were the only agents used to accomplish the happy results."

Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Thanking God*

A LITTLE motto-card which is seen in many houses says "Thinking good is thanking God."

"Speak evil of no man," wrote Paul to Titus. The evil thought precedes the evil word, and the command is therefore practically equivalent to "think evil of no man."

Think good thoughts. Cast out all others. Thus we may show in a vital way our fealty to our Lord and our gratitude for his goodness.

There is nothing more offensive to a right mind than a complaining person. Of course, every one can find plenty to complain about. Who has not known people with apparently everything around them to produce happiness, yet determined to mourn for trifles which they have not?

Thus a beautiful young wife was greeted by a friend one morning, and answered in a melancholy way, which led the friend to say: "You speak sadly. I hope your husband is well?" "Yes, very well." "And those two lovely children?" Yes, they were well, too. The unhappy lady's household was reported to be moving smoothly. At last she burst out: "I know I have a delightful home, a devoted husband, bright, healthy children, many friends—but, oh, my dressmaker is such a trial! She makes me perfectly wretched!"

One day a wealthy woman, whose clouded brow showed that she was deeply worried, confided to a friend that she was so miserable that she had lain awake all night because some rugs which she had recently bought did not match the carpet on which they were to lie!

Both of these ungrateful women were nominally Christians, and yet they seemed to have entirely overlooked the primary duty of unceasing gratitude to God. Its proper fruit is contentment, that beautiful virtue of which the old poet so eloquently wrote:

Art thou poor, yet hast thou golden slumbers?
Oh, sweet content!
Art thou rich, yet is thy mind perplexed?
Oh, punishment!

Then he who patiently life's burden bears,
No burden bears, but is a king, a king.
Oh, sweet, oh, sweet content.

Beautiful examples are often given of the way in which the divine spark of gratitude is sometimes kept alive in human hearts. The Rev. T. W. Booth tells this story:

A stranger was seen one day approaching a neglected grave in Nashville, Tenn. He had a flower in his hand, which he laid upon the grave. The warden stepped to his side and asked if his brother or father were buried there.

"No," said the stranger, "he was not a relative. I will tell you about him. When the war broke out I could not enlist, though I wanted to. I had a wife and seven children and we were poor. At last I was drafted. I had no money to hire a substitute, so I made ready to go, leaving my family to get along as best they could. Just then a young man came to me and said: 'You have a large family. Your wife cannot possibly feed and clothe them. I will go in your place.'

"He went, was wounded at Chickamauga, taken to the hospital at Nashville, and here he died. Ever since that day I have wanted to come and see his grave, but was not able to pay the car fare. At last I have saved up enough for that, and I have come from Illinois to see my dear friend's grave."

Tears streamed down the man's cheeks as he stooped and set a little slab beside the mound, on which were cut the words: "He died for me."

If man to man could be so touchingly and unselfishly grateful, what should we not do for Him who crowneth us daily with benefits, and gave his life for us?

The Christian Herald Home Library--8 Books

WE take great pleasure in announcing to The Christian Herald Family our new Library to be known as "The Christian Herald Home Library." There are eight books in the set. Each one is complete in itself, thus enabling each and every member of the Family Circle to read some of them at the same time. The books are well printed and nicely bound in cloth. Each volume is 4 x 6 inches in size, making a neat, compact and really delightful book.

The contents of the books consist of 2,000 pages of practical information for the home and for every member of the family. The idea has been to gather together in the eight books most of the things the women, the men, the boys and the girls need to know and want to know. The housewife is interested in the management of her home, and she naturally wants to know how to make it bright, cheerful and happy. In the woman's book we have endeavored to tell her of ways of practising household economy, new recipes, new ways of doing things, how to entertain company and amuse the children, and how to arrange entertainments for schools, church socials, etc. The girls' book is filled with suggestions and ideas that can help any girl in business and in a social way. For the boys we have a book that tells all about clean, healthful sports, the idea being to interest the boy in the sports that help to develop the body while stimulating the mind and the imagination. For the men there are three good books, covering business, science, grammar, and the duties of the home. Just read the titles of these books. Just think how helpful they can be in your home, and to every one of the family—the woman, the man, the girl and the boy. Remember that they are new, that they never have been published before, and that the only way you can get them is by this great offer that The Christian Herald makes you.

A Book for Every Member of the Family

1. Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife
2. Helpful Talks With Girls
3. Entertainments for Home, Church and School
4. How to Speak and Write Correctly

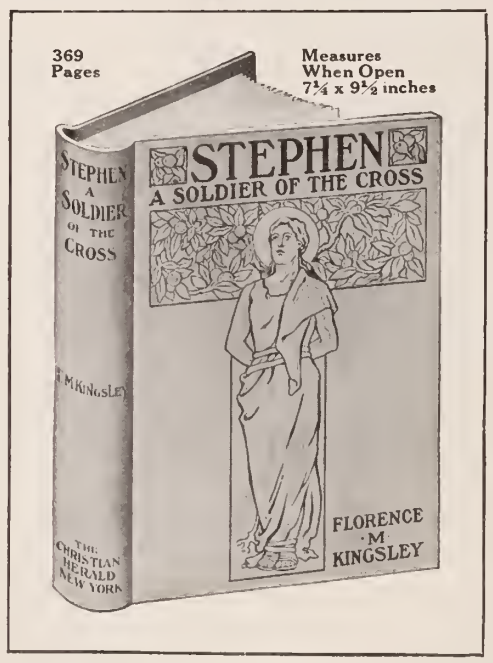
"Stephen---A Soldier of the Cross"



"STEPHEN, a Soldier of the Cross" is unquestionably one of Mrs. Florence M. Kingsley's greatest stories. She has taken the little-known life of Stephen as her principal character, and woven a vivid and picturesque narrative. The ancient alchemists are said to have possessed the power of resurrecting from the ashes of a perished flower a dim ghost of the flower itself. Mrs. Kingsley has accomplished this in her resurrection of Stephen, and all who read this sweet and charming story are sure to become more interested in Stephen, the lovable Bible character.

The story of "Stephen, a Soldier of the Cross" is beautifully told. It throbs and thrills with emotion and tender pathos.

"Stephen, a Soldier of the Cross," will be sent prepaid with The Christian Herald for one year and a copy of our beautiful 1911 Calendar, together with a photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all for only $1.85.

"Hero Tales from American Life"

WOULD you like to know the Man who traveled Four Thousand Miles through Six Bleak Winter Months to Add Three Stars to the American Flag? Would you like to Shake Hands with a Woman who Saved Sixteen Children? Would you like to look upon the Lad who Rescued a Thousand Lives in a Storm at Sea? Would you like to see the Girl who Sacrificed Her Life for Honor, and a Boy who Gave His Life to His Country? You can meet these and others in Francis Trevelyan Miller's Book, "Hero Tales From American Life." Just think of it! Sitting down at your very fireside with Heroes of War, Heroes of Peace, Heroes of Conscience, Heroes of Science, meeting them practically face to face in your own home!

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

A Scene in a New York Station Yard During the Express Strike, Showing the Congested Conditions

THE GREAT STRIKE IN NEW YORK

AMERICANS who arrived from Paris during the last week of October and the first week of November, and who had difficulty in getting their baggage out of the French capital on account of the great strike, almost disbelieved their ears when they were told that they could not move their trunks in New York. The metropolis was having a strike of its own. Though the returned voyager saw no attempt to build barricades and saw no charging cuirassiers such as greeted his eyes in Paris and gave his heart an intense longing for home and country, he could have seen, had he not been moving rapidly in another direction, as fierce struggles in the streets of Jersey City and New York as he witnessed in Paris. While the French strike was one of railroad men, the strike in New York and vicinity included all of the helpers and drivers of the great express companies—the United States, the Adams, the American, the Wells Fargo, the large local express and transfer companies which do a business of hundreds of thousands of dollars every week—and it extended at last to the drivers of the delivery wagons of the large dry goods and other firms. It crippled business in a way unknown in years, causing a great financial loss and an amount of inconvenience which can hardly be realized by those who read of it instead of pushing trunks on a wheelbarrow and "going home to Jersey" with a four-foot package and a few other things which the suburbanite finds necessary to his existence.

Neither employees nor employers realized that the first clash in Jersey City would develop into a labor struggle of such magnitude. In Jersey City the United States Express Company has a large terminal, and on the 24th of October the helpers—young men from eighteen to twenty-two who ride on the teams and assist the drivers in distributing bundles—struck for five dollars more a month and shorter hours. They demanded that the money be paid forthwith and then struck. The strikers at first only numbered about three hundred. Then the drivers, who said that they had no grievance against the company, refused to go out without their regular helpers, giving the excuse that they were in charge of the teams and were under bonds for the safe delivery of packages, and could not afford to pass them over to unknown men. Inside of twenty-four hours the strike extended across the North River to New York, and soon afterward drivers and helpers of the other great express companies, on which a good part of the city's business depends, went out on a "sympathetic strike" in the hope that business would be so hampered that their own companies would bring pressure on the United States Company and force it to accede at once to the demands of its employees.

Acts of violence occurred within a few hours after the helpers walked out. The company hired as many men as it could find in a short space of time to drive some of the wagons and get out the perishable stuff from the railroad stations. Two express teams drove onto the ferryboat Wilkesbarre and all went well until the boat started toward midstream. Suddenly a swarm of strikers sprang from the side cabins, where they had been scattered among the passengers. Some broke into the emergency boxes and getting the axes chopped the wagons, while others jumped on the wagons and attacked the drivers and new helpers. The latter, though outnumbered twenty to one, put up a good fight and for several minutes the panic-stricken passengers witnessed a fierce hand-to-hand struggle. The boat turned back to her slip and the police came on board. Only two arrests were made, however. After that the ferry officials took care that the strikers were kept off the boats, as another such conflict might grow to such proportions as to cause a wreck.

There were a number of sharp conflicts in the streets of Communipaw, and soon each wagon was encased with a heavy wire netting to protect the new drivers from the hail of sticks, stones and pieces of scrap iron which had already badly injured a number, and which were used even in the

THE GOOD SAMARITAN

An Unpublished Discourse by DWIGHT L. MOODY, America's Greatest Evangelist

This is the eighth of twenty remarkable sermons by Moody, never before published, and the existence of which was disclosed only a few months ago. The absolute authenticity of the sermons is vouched for by the evangelist's son, Wm. R. Moody, who cordially approves their publication in this paper. The sermons are the exclusive property of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. One will appear each month.

AFTER we receive the gift of God for service—the gift of the Holy Spirit for service—what is to follow? It is WORK! God's law is, use or lose. If Elisha hadn't gone right forward and taken up the work, I believe God would have taken it away from him. He would never have had the "double portion." God is not going to give us the Spirit merely that we may come to meetings and sing ourselves into ecstasy—into a sweet frame of mind. It is delightful to spend mornings and afternoons contemplating the Spirit, and to be lifted up to the "celestial mountains."

Dwight L. Moody

After the war, we had a convention in the West to see what we could do to keep the Christian Commission and carry the spiritual fire right into our churches. I heard Dr. Kirk in one of the Western cities speak for about five minutes. He opened his address by carrying us into heaven and giving us a picture of it. I said, "That's the finest thing I ever heard." But he paused and said, "My friends, that's not what we are here for. We have come to decide what we will do to have the world converted." I have never forgotten that part of his speech. It is a real delight to be on the Mount of Transfiguration with Moses and Elias and John and James and the Master. It's a great thing to get in company with the holy ones who have passed on before. But you remember when the Master came down from the Mount of Transfiguration he found a man possessed of devils, and something had to be done there.

"Who Is My Neighbor?"

Now, we want to go out into our cities and go to work, and I have selected one of Christ's parables, and I think it ought to be read in all our churches, too, once in thirty days at least, until we get woke up. It is the tenth chapter of Luke, the twenty-fifth verse: "Behold, a certain lawyer stood up, and tempted him, saying: Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? He said unto him, What is written in the law? How readest thou? And he, answering, said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. And he said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live. But he, willing to justify himself, said unto Jesus, And who is my neighbor?"

Who is my neighbor? The Church has been a long while finding that out. "And Jesus said, . . . Go, and do thou likewise." Very plain instruction, isn't it? If you have received an unction from the Holy One, and have been anointed, go out and find some poor, wounded man, and you will find that the power of God will be right there on the spot. After you, yourself, have become filled, God will meet you in the work. I don't know when Elisha got the anointing—I think on the way. Then do some work for God, by the power of the Master.

Now, you will notice that Christ brings four men before us: that lawyer, that croaker (that's what he was!), that skeptic, that man who didn't believe. You know that Christ was heaven-sent to do God's work. He brought out these four men: the first man was the wounded man, who had been stripped by thieves; the next was a priest; the next a Levite; the next a Samaritan. Now, it is a good thing to note and to look at these four men. That Jew—he had gone from Jerusalem down to Jericho. Probably he had some business down there and misfortune overtook him. You will find lots of them in any city; lots who have had misfortune and who have need of our help. The priest came down that way. Probably he stood high; probably he officiated at his work in Jerusalem as well as any of the rabbis; and if we had him now we would call him The Rev. Levi, D.D., LL.D. Very high sounding! I don't know, but perhaps he said, as he saw that poor Jew, "Poor fellow! I pity him. If he was back in my parish, I'd look after him; but I've not been appointed to look after men between Jerusalem and Jericho!"

I once asked a man to pronounce the benediction, and he said he wasn't in his own parish and couldn't do it. And I felt sorry for him. What made John Wesley the mighty man he was? Because he said, "The world is my parish."

Never stop to ask whether it is a Jew or Gentile; he is your own brother, and he needs help. I have no doubt that that man's religion was all up in his head. That made him so "high," so "empty"—not being in his heart, but in his head. The idea that he could see that Jew there suffering and dying, and say no word! There might have been a spring near by, but he never got him a drop of water. He "passed by on the other side." "Let him die; he's nothing to me!"

The Unavailing Cry for Help

A few years ago there was a man who fell into the water through the ice, and a gentleman living on the shore (it was a cold and bitter night in winter) heard that man's cry for help. He said, "I don't want to be disturbed this cold night, but I feel pity for the fellow." But the man dropped into the water and died; and next day it was found out that that man had done a mean, contemptible thing, and they hounded him out of town. They ought to have done it, ought they not? But we hear the cry of the poor—lots of wounded fellows, lost for time and for eternity—and we "pass by on the other side." "He doesn't belong to my parish." "He isn't a Methodist, and I'm a Methodist. I look after Methodists—and the Baptists, let them look after theirs." Or the Baptist says, "He's a Congregationalist; let the Congregationalists look after him." I am so tired of these names! Let the Lord sweep them out of the way. A man says, "You don't want to help a Jew or Catholic, do you?" I say, if a man is in trouble, help him! Would to God we could be broadened out a little!

He passes on. Perhaps he was going to dedicate a synagogue and he must hasten down there; he must attend to his ecclesiastical duties. We've got so many of these things that we haven't time to do the Lord's work. I woke up when they put me on so many committees that I must dodge around this corner and that. I believe there are many men who would be a power in the community if they would "get off." Really, for saving souls they haven't time. That's where they are. The priest was all right, and perhaps he was on important committees in Jerusalem and Jericho; but there was a man who needed help, and he ought to have gotten his arm under him and lifted him up. That was his first business. Nothing more important than saving men. Help him up!

The Sin of Selfish Indifference

A Levite came to him. He would be a deacon in New England—a deacon or a church warden. He had a different turn of mind. He took a look at him. He looked at him; but he, too, passed by on the other side. The Levite stopped and looked at him. I don't know but he put his hand in his pocket, and said, "I pity him. I know him. He lives in a back street. He has a wife and ten children." We call it a dark day when the "breadwinner" is taken away. Perhaps he added, "I'll go down to Jericho and see if I can't get a committee—we'll call it the 'Jerusalem and Jericho Committee'—to look after wounded Jews between Jerusalem and Jericho; and I will give five dollars as a salve to my conscience." And not only that, but the publisher of the Jerusalem Times or the Jericho Herald gets out a great, flaming notice, saying that "The Honorable Levite got up a society to look after wounded Jews." Or perhaps he says, "I'll see if I can't get some leading men of the Sanhedrim to aid. It's a burning shame that a man can't go down from Jerusalem to Jericho without falling among thieves."

I remember when the Woman's Christian Temperance Union used to have meetings all over the city to get men out of the awful drink habit. They got them on their feet, and they're standing to-day. They did a great deal of this thing. And we speak of getting the legislatures to legislate this thing out, but it'll be a long time before the politicians save this country. I am anxious about the Church. Get the Church right. We have all we can attend to when we get the men into the church. Let the politicians go, but get the men to the churches. Our weapons are not carnal. This man passed by and never gave a drop of water—not a kind word.

It is easy to sit and listen to these things and to talk about this priest and that Levite; but I'll fi ten thousand priests and Levites, refined Levite to one Samaritan. They're mighty scarce. Ho many times it is asked, "Can you get us a drawi minister?" A drawing minister! What we wa is drawing church members. You aren't going draw. Put a man at the end of the pew, and th put a workingman in that pew, and the pew-own says, "What did you put that man in my pew fo I pay fifty dollars for that pew." And that pe has been half empty for five years; and the sext gets a blowing up for putting that man in it. "Y want to be respectable in the church; that's wh we want!" they say. Talk about finances and o stacles. No obstacles in God's way! "Go thou a do likewise," and you'll reach the workingme

The Cheerful Samaritan

Then comes along the Samaritan. Now, if the was a man that the Jews detested it was a Sama tan; and we know that the Samaritan was the on man under heaven who could not become a prosely of the Jewish faith. The Jews would not buy sell with a Samaritan. Now the Jew has a migh poor opinion of a man if he won't sell to him—if can't make anything out of him. Not only tha but he would dig his grave so deep that when Gabr blows his trumpet, he couldn't hear a sound. Y needn't laugh. You are just as bad as the Jews just as bad! Just as prejudiced right along. was in California some time ago and a Chinam walked up the street quietly, and one of the hoo lums took him by his queue and pulled him over t sidewalk and meant to kill him. I said, "That m never did you any harm." He said, "That d hasn't got a soul."

I heard a good thing to illustrate this prejudi A colored woman got into a car and sat down near Irish woman, who drew up her skirts, and by-and- a Chinaman got in and sat down near the color woman, and she drew up her skirts. We're a b lot, the whole of us! Easy enough to talk about t Jews not liking the Samaritans, but there's a go deal of that feeling around. Do you suppose t Lord will ask, when you come up to heaven, wheth you come from the aristocratic section or wheth you are a Jew, Gentile, Catholic or Protestan Let's get above these things.

I see that Samaritan going along. He has bright face—a sunny face—he goes along whistli on his beast. The priest and Levite wouldn't lo at him out of his eye. He hears the dying groa and dismounts at once, and goes into the bush, a there's the man dying. He sees at once he is a "s of Abraham." If he had been like some folks, would say, "I'll give that fellow a good lecture; I give him a piece of my mind to-day and help him by and by. I'll give him a draft of vinegar and po oil into his wounds, after I've given him a piece my mind. You've called us Samaritans! I'll he you, but I want you to understand that you deser our treatment." Have we any of that kind of pe ple here?

Help First—Criticise Afterward

There was a gentleman in Chicago who alwa used to give me a good blowing up. Always—but gave me a check afterwards; he always gave the blowing up before he gave me the rest. So people carry a bottle of vinegar, and wonder w people aren't drawn towards them. It's a wond isn't it? That good Samaritan didn't bring out t vinegar; he didn't stop to ask this fellow's pedigre he didn't ask where he came from and where he w going. "The man is dying," he said, "and nee help. I'll attend to his needs and get him up Don't ask questions and discuss with those fello who want to criticise you. Get the man out of t pit and let the croaking go. The Samaritan didn read a manuscript forty minutes long. There's class of men who think the world is going to uplifted by manuscript. You've got to have gre manuscripts. Yes, but we want a few sermons wi hands and feet. We want something besides wr ten manuscripts. Now, that poor fellow didn want written manuscripts or essays just the He didn't care anything about the "origin of si just then. That good Samaritan might have pull out a manuscript and said, "I'll tell you how s came into the world." "No; I'm dying." "But me tell you the origin of sin."

I said to a young man at Northfield, "Go out a do work for God. Start out. You've got weal enough. Study the way of salvation in the Bibl make it plain; expound the Word throughout th whole land. That's what this nation needs." "Wel he said, "I'd like to do it, but I've not had mu couragement in our university this ar. We've been this whole year try- g to find out who wrote the Penta- ıch." Think of a university spend- g a whole college year trying to find t who wrote the Pentateuch! I'm hamed and disgusted with the whole ing! What did that poor Jew man ınt then? Did he want a volume of rmons? Not by a good deal. He ınted oil on his wounds. He didn't ınt a lecture. People aren't going save this world by lectures. He ınted oil, sympathy, and something keep him from dying. And in that untry, where the hot rays of the sun ured in upon him, he wanted his ıunds bound up. I don't know where e Good Samaritan got his bandages. en don't carry bandages with them. think he must have torn his gar- ents. He took more prejudice out of at Jew in thirty minutes than ever ıs done before in all the history of e world. There are lots of skeptics. ow shall we get the prejudice out of em? By acts of kindness. Help the llow that's down, and he'll believe at you've got something that's worth ving.

How many times a man has been sarmed by acts of kindness! I don't lieve there is a man in all the States t can be reached by that. Don't u think it would pay? I think so. ıt I'm so tired and sick of people all e time finding fault. Man! If you n do better, go and do it! These ies are to be redeemed, or else we e going to pieces. The fact that you n't take up a paper in which you n't read of a "hold-up" and some ırder or suicide. Oh! Church of od, awake and hasten to the rescue! a man falls down between Jerusalem d Jericho, let's go and help him. en are down with lust and passion d whisky, and we've got a remedy. ıank God for a remedy, and we want stand with the Remedy.

Let me get back to that Samaritan. e gets the wounded Jew on his own ast, and he foots it. "My! He es afoot, and let's me ride!" says the or fellow. He gets him to the inn. ıe churches should be inns to help the or man. I pity the minister who n't give him a welcome.

Twenty-one years ago, Dr. Gordon ok twenty-six drunkards into his urch, and only a few backslid. Most them stayed. If ministers did this, ouldn't these be saved? They want be delivered. They think there's no wer in earth and heaven to save em. Man! Haste with the Gospel. d tell them there's hope. What's to nder every church to open its doors d get them in, and stand by them, d help them? That's what we want. ıousands of these men can be saved d become ornaments to society, a mfort to their wives and children, if e church will help them.

He took him to the inn, and sat up th him all night; and the next morn- g, the man was a good deal better; 'd had a good night's sleep; getting ll fast, like magic. That's "faith aling." That's the kind of faith I lieve in. Yes. And then he said to e inn-keeper, "How much will it st?" And he put his hand in his cket and paid the bill. Two-pence. ıat meant a good deal in those days. ıd he said, "Take care of this man. l be responsible. I will pay. Don't that man want for anything." The w bent over and said, "Won't you let e kiss you?" My! That's the first w that ever kissed a Samaritan! ıe prejudice against the Samaritan d gone for time and eternity. And ere's no philosophy can make me be- ve he wasn't a Good Samaritan! asn't he a Good Samaritan? Did u ever meet one? It's a good thing meet a Samaritan—a good one.

THANKSGIVING

By Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D.*

ONLY a few more days to Thanksgiving. One whole day for saying "Thank you." How much of the day will you need to say your thanks? Here is an idea! Suppose we give thanks for the blessing most people forget? Has the little baby anything for which to be thankful? Eudora Bumpstead will tell us some of the blessings for which a baby should be thankful:

Mamma was making ready the things he would need when he should wake up. First she went along the orchard path as far as the old wooden pump and said: "Good pump, will you give me some nice clear water for the baby's bath?" And the pump was willing.

The good old pump by the orchard path
Gave nice clear water for the baby's bath.

Then she went a little farther on the path, and stopped at the woodpile and said: "Good chips, the pump has given me nice clear water for dear little Ray; will you come and warm the water and cook his food?" And the chips were willing.

The good old pump by the orchard path
Gave nice clear water for the baby's bath;
And the clean white chips from the pile of wood
Were glad to warm it and cook his food.

SO mamma went on till she came to the barn and then said: "Good cow, the pump has given me nice clear water, and the woodpile has given me clean white chips, for dear little Ray; will you give me some warm, rich milk?" And the cow was willing.

Then she said to the topknot hen that was scratching in the straw: "Good Biddy, the pump has given me nice clear water, and the woodpile has given me clean white chips, and the cow has given me warm, rich milk for dear little Ray; will you give me a new-laid egg?" And the hen was willing.

The good old pump by the orchard path
Gave nice clear water for the baby's bath;
And the clean white chips from the pile of wood
Were glad to warm it and cook his food;
The cow gave milk in the milk-pail bright,
And the topknot Biddy an egg new and white.

THEN mamma went on till she came to the apple-bin and said: "Good apple-bin, the pump has given me nice clear water, and the woodpile has given me clean white chips, and the cow has given me warm, rich milk, and the hen has given me a new-laid egg for dear little Ray; will you give me a pretty red apple?" And the apple-bin opened its door and let her in.

So mamma took the apple and the egg and the milk and the chips and the water to the house, and there was Baby Ray in his night-gown looking out of the window.

And she kissed him and bathed him and dressed him, and while she brushed and curled his soft brown hair she told him the Thanksgiving story that I am telling you.

The good old pump by the orchard path
Gave nice clear water for the baby's bath;
And the clean white chips from the pile of wood
Were glad to warm it and cook his food;
The cow gave milk in the milk-pail bright,
And the topknot Biddy an egg new and white;
And the apple-bin gave an apple so round and so red,
For dear little Ray, who was just out of bed.

BUT all the good things are not for baby. The older Juniors must have something for which to be thankful.

The Thanksgiving dinner! Yes! You are all thankful for it. And the pumpkin pie—how thankful you are for it! You begin to be thankful when the pumpkin turns up its big round face and smiles at you in the cornfield. Then the pumpkin makes you smile when you put a candle back of its face and carry it about on Hallowe'en night. If you begin to think of pumpkin Thanksgiving, you may, if it were possible, forget to eat the pie. I am quite sure you all know that rhyme—"The Four and Twenty Blackbirds." Do you know it is a Thanksgiving pie rhyme? It tells us about a number of our greatest blessings for which we should be thankful. All the Juniors should recite it at the close of their Thanksgiving dinner.

The four and twenty blackbirds represented the twenty-four hours of the day. Surely we should be thankful for the twenty-four-hour day. Eight hours for work, eight hours for play and eight hours for sleep. The bottom of the pie is the world, while the top crust is the sky that overarches it. The opening of the pie is the day dawn, when the birds begin to sing, and surely such a sight is fit for a king. In the spring when the birds come North you must wake up early and hear the birds when they begin to sing. The king, who is represented as sitting in his parlor counting out his money, is the sun, while the gold pieces that slip through his fingers, as he counts them, are the golden sunbeams. The sun and his light! Just think! The sun as a king counting out his sunbeams and throwing them to us in sunshine, something better than gold. The queen, who sits in the dark kitchen, is the moon, and the honey with which she regales herself is the moonlight. Had you ever thanked God for the moonlight? Something better than honey.

THE industrious maid, who is in the garden before her king, the sun, has risen, is day dawn. The clothes she hangs out are the clouds. Never thought of that, did you? The birds who so tragically end the song by nipping off her nose, are the sunset that ends the day. So we have the whole day, if not in a nutshell, in a pie.

Yes or No?

(A Morning Tonic)

(Phil. 4: 8)

"NO" to the wrong, and "Yes" to the right;
"No" to what's dismal, "Yes" to what's bright;
"No" to what's folly, and "Yes" to what's wise;
Seeking to see things with spirit-cleansed eyes.
"No" to all error, and "Yes" to what's true,
Trusting the truth will bring me safe through;
"No" to the tempter, and "Yes" to God's word;
"No" to mere liking, and "Yes" to my Lord.
"Yes" to what's manly, and "No" to what's mean;
"No" to what soils me, and "Yes" to what's clean;
"No" to what's cowardly, "Yes" to what's brave;
Eager to help men—eager to save.
"No" to what crushes, and "Yes" to what cheers;
"Yes" to glad hopes, and "No" to sad fears;
"No" to all worry, and "Yes" to hard work;
"Yes" to plain duty—not once may I shirk.
"Yes" to what's honest and noble and pure;
"No" to what's doubtful, however secure;
"Yes" to the faith the Crucified gave;
"No" to dishonor—rather "Yes" to the grave.
"No" to quick temper, "No" to false pride;
"Yes" to sweet patience, learned at His side;
"No" to ungentleness, "Yes" to Christ's love;
"Yes" to all good things that come from above.

The Bible in Nebraska

YOUR valuable copy of the New Testament received. I appreciate your kindness very much, as I learned to love that book from my infancy, when, a half century ago, I started to read it, on the other side of the globe. I am also glad to think I have placed four copies of your valuable paper in four homes for four months. If you New York people and we "Wild West" people could co-operate and make each of your many dollars do that much good, I wonder if we might not change the Lord's Prayer, about his will being done in earth, into thanksgiving?

The Bible has increased in value to me continually these fifty years, and so is your paper increasing in value, in my estimation. I am rather ashamed to say that fifty years ago I sometimes did not like to read that book. I did not understand it as well as I do now, and for a kid to pronounce those long words was a difficult job. But my father locked it up in the cupboard and I cried and cried till I got it back, and then I read and read. Now, I have been thinking that is the way the Supreme Judges have been treating the Illinois people; but perhaps I am mistaken. But that is the way they did some years ago in Nebraska, and the people made a roar and the judges said, "All right, you can have the Bible in your schools."

In Sweden we have to learn the Lutheran catechism with explanations, and Bible history, in the public schools. What kind of a country is this going to be without the Bible?

"THE GENTLEMAN IN WHITE" DEAD

He Was Jean Henri Dunant, Founder of the Red Cross, an International Benefacto

A LITTLE old man, blanched by the snows of 82 winters, and who had for four years or more been patiently waiting for death, passed away at the village of Heiden, near Geneva, Switzerland, on the last day of October. For many years before he died the world had almost forgotten him, yet he was one of its greatest benefactors and noblest sons.

Jean Henri Dunant was born in Geneva, Switzerland, May 8, 1828, of Swiss-French parents. His mother, M. Anne Antoinette Colladon, came of a family which was distinguished even before the Reformation and which had been ennobled many generations ago. On his father's side he came of a patrician family which had among its members some of the leading judges of the Swiss nation, the father himself being a member of the Geneva Council up to the political upheaval of 1842.

From his earliest manhood, Jean Henri Dunant gave evidence of a love of works of charity and benevolence. He made the cause of the poor his own cause; he was an ardent advocate of peace, and he was always happiest when relieving some case of urgent necessity. Three women, by their splendid examples, influenced his whole life in a remarkable degree, viz.: Florence Nightingale, Elizabeth Fry, and Harriet Beecher Stowe. Their experiences he longed to make his own and their ideals were his ideals.

During the Italian war of 1859, young Dunant was traveling in that country. After the battle of Solferino, he visited the field, and, seeing the terrible sufferings of the wounded soldiers who lay around untended, he, with the assistance of several peasant women, formed an ambulance service, with its headquarters in a little church at Castiglione. He helped with his own hands to bind up the wounds of Frenchmen, Italians and Austrians alike. "They are all brothers," he said. "A wounded enemy is an enemy no longer." And he and his corps of helpers brought water and medicine, and smoothed the pallets of straw, and cheered the unfortunates, and closed the eyes of the dead, and performed the last kind offices for the dying. Dunant was regarded by the hundreds of wounded as a miracle of goodness—little less than an angel. "The gentleman in white," was the way in which the officers spoke of him, as he moved around among the sick, his light clothing making him conspicuous on the field.

His experiences at Solferino, where he saw that the willing hands of a few untrained helpers actually saved many lives, and comforted hundreds of others, inspired him with the grand idea of an organization, planned on a broad scale, and fully trained for the relief of human suffering, especially in time of war. Bit by bit the plan grew in his mind, and it gradually elaborated itself. He had a vision of a great international work of humanity, operated with the mutual recognition of many governments, and under a distinctive flag—the Cross. To-day the Red Cross flag—red on a white ground—is the recognized symbol of humane work on all fields of suffering throughout the civilized world.

By his account of the great battle of Solferino, which appeared shortly after the event itself, M. Dunant created a decided sensation in Europe. He described war in all its horrors—not as it is popularly supposed to be by those who remain at home, but as it actually is. It was a piece of literary realism which until that time had been unsurpassed, and it stripped the military art of all its glamour and picturesqueness, and revealed it as sheer scientific butchery and legalized murder, the bloodthirsty savagism of which nothing could extenuate. He showed the dead piled in heaps on hills and in ravines; crushed and dying foes straining like wild beasts to kill each other; the smashing of skulls; the horrible gashes of sabre and bayonet in men's bodies; the orgie of madmen, drunken with the lust of blood and slaughter. He told how even the frightened horses, more humane than their riders, tried to avoid crushing the fallen, while the artillery cut a path through the heaps of dead and dying. Above all and at every point on the blood-soaked field, might be heard groans and curses, the cries of rage, and the shrieks of pain and despair. This battle, which the world had been told was a "brilliant engagement," M. Dunant's truthful pen revealed in its true aspect as a mere massacre, with accompaniments of such startling brutality that it seemed to have been fought by hordes of savages rather than civilized men. Such was the picture of real war which this apostle of peace and humanity set before the world less than half a century ago.

Dunant's splendid service in succoring the wounded in the Italian war was quickly recognized. Friends of "the gentleman in white" sprang up everywhere, and gifts of money flowed in upon him. Napoleon III. interested himself in Dunant's project for an international humane organization, and many distinguished prelates and statesmen did likewise. The first organization was a small committee composed of leading Genevans in 1859, which was called "The Committee of Succor." Soon similar committees were formed in Milan and other cities. The movement spread and was accorded a generous welcome by many nations, sovereigns and peoples included. It was not, however, until the International Congress held at Geneva in 1863, that the Red Cross, known as such, was actually founded. To M. Dunant, as a great public benefactor, was universally awarded the credit for originating the idea and giving form and character to the movement. For six years previous to the Convention, he had gone from court to court, pressing his plan for the acceptance of the different Powers, invariably with success. At the Convention of 1863, all the leading European governments were represented, and almost all of the smaller principalities also—fourteen governments in all. The resolutions adopted provided for the organization in each country of a Committee of Succor for Wounded Soldiers, to cooperate with the Army Sanitary Corps in war time, and to be employed in the consideration of humane measures in time of peace. All associated in this special work to wear a distinctive badge—"a red cross on a white ground." Moreover, the operations of the corps were to be neutralized on the field of battle. In the following year, 1864, a Diplomatic Convention was held at Geneva, which still further defined the functions, extended the scope, and increased the facilities of the Red Cross.

In the various wars since 1859, the Red Cross has done magnificent service in caring for the sick and wounded in war, earthquake, famine, plague and general disaster. In the Franco-German war of 1870 it cared for 509,837 French and German soldiers. In the Chino-Japanese war, the Servian war, the South African campaign, and the recent Russo-Japanese war, it performed signal service. It has united the continents in the bonds of human sympathy, and its founder, the young Swiss student, whose solicitude for the wounded and the sufferers at Solferino opened to him a vision of a world-wide organization of kind hearts and willing hands, lived to see his hope fully realized. With the passing away of Jean Henri Dunant, the world loses one of the noblest and most Christlike men who ever came to bless humanity and to advance the cause of universal peace.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—GIFTS AGGREGATING $1,225,000, for foreign missions, were announced lately in the national council of Congregational churches in Boston.

—SEVENTY PERSONS are reported killed or drowned by the sinking of the Haytian gunboat Liberte off Port de Paix. The disaster, it is said, was the result of an explosion. Among the lost were ten Haytian generals.

—EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has been having "a bully time" in the South. At Hot Springs, Ark., he talked to an audience of 30,000 on the "New Nationalism." At Atlanta, Ga., he was welcomed by a crowd that filled the principal streets. At Rome, Ga., he visited the Berry Industrial School.

—DAVID BENNETT HILL, ex-United States Senator and ex-Governor of New York, died at his home at Wolfert's Roost, Albany, N. Y., on October 20, aged sixty-seven. He had a remarkable career, having been newsboy, lawyer, office-holder, State legislator, mayor, and Governor. He was never married. For many years, he was a power in New York State politics.

—SECRETARY MACVEAGH of the Treasury Department has complied with the demand for bills of small denomination. The old dollar note, which was withdrawn from circulation in 1885, will be called into service again. There was a first issue of $1,200,000 on October 27 last, and this rate will be continued until there is enough in circulation.

—ANOTHER RISING of trihesmen is reported from the Philippines. Two bands of Manobos, on the west coast of Davao, the southern division of Mindanao (the second largest of the group) recently went on the warpath and killed several planters, including an American named Earl Gerr. Brigadier-General Pershing has gone to assist the local constabulary, and a company of the Twenty-ninth Infantry stationed at Davao will help to put down the insurrection.

—THE NEW republic of Portugal apparently is bent on making a clean sweep of the old regime. The corruption and graft are to be rooted out and war has been declared against privilege abuses. The king's civil list of $800,000, most of which was spent in reckless living, will be replaced by a modest salary for the new president. Taxes on the necessaries of life will be lowered and those on luxuries increased.

—THE HOUSE in which Daniel Webster was born 128 years ago is to be preserved to the nation as a commemoration of the great statesman and orator. It stands on the Salisbury road, four miles from Franklin, N. H., and was built by Webster's father more than a century and a half ago. It is in the old Colonial style and has a venerable appearance, being festooned with ivy and climbing wistaria.

—ENGLISH consols, long regarded as the bulwark of British finance and the best security in Europe, have reached ebb tide, having been quoted as low as 78¾ on October 26. Only once before did they fall to a like price—in 1847, when England was in the throes of a commercial and financial panic, and when the bank rate was eight per cent., and the Bank Act had to be suspended. Small investors are beginning to take alarm. It is claimed that the Unionist demand for a big naval loan is responsible for the state of affairs.

—HOW FOREIGNERS regard our absurd divorce laws may be gathered from a recent incident. A German woman, who had inherited an estate on the condition that she marry within a specified time, came to this country and advertised for a husband. She offered a premium of $300 to any one who would marry her for a week, and explained, apparently in all seriousness, that she meant to be divorced immediately after the ceremony. She understood "such things were easily arranged in America, but of course," she added, "we don't do that in Europe!"

—THE LATE United States Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver, while not what is usually termed a magnetic orator, was a most able and interesting speaker. He could be earnest or playful, witty or sarcastic, as the mood and the occasion ser[ved]. His sarcasm, however, was always good-humored, and he [was] like lightning at repartee. We have seen him criticising [the] President to his face before a notable audience, none of w[hom] enjoyed it more than the President himself. Dolliver's ca[reer] was picturesque. At eighteen he was called the "boy orat[or]" School teacher, school superintendent, five times represent[ative] in Congress, and twice Senator, he had still great possibil[ities] before him had not his active career been unexpectedly close[d by] death.

—AN ECHO of the ill-fated Maine has just been awakened [by] a speech of Colonel Brady recently delivered in Kansas City, [Mo.,] in which he made the announcement that a Spaniard na[med] Jose Zavaldo, an electrician in Morro Castle, was responsible [for] the destruction of our battleship. The speaker declared [that] Zavaldo, who had charge of the wires which operated the m[ines] planted for harbor defense, turned on the current which wre[cked] the Maine, caused the loss of many lives and precipitated [the] war.

—THE REV. A. A. MORRISON, of the diocese of Oregon, [was] credited in the daily newspapers with having made a state[ment] in the recent Episcopal Convention in Cincinnati to the e[ffect] that "the Scriptures are full of inaccuracies" and that "[it] impossible to maintain at this advanced day that the Bib[le] the Word of God." This version of his remarks, originat[ed] with a Cincinnati newspaper, was widely published and [was] commented on by many papers, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD an[d] them. Dr. Morrison pronounces the report of the langu[age] attributed to him erroneous. His remarks had no referenc[e to] the Bible, but to the historical data concerning the founda[tion] of the Church. He believes the Bible to be the Word of [God,] and that "it contains all things necessary for salvation." [We] take pleasure in setting him right before the Bible-loving pe[ople] of the country.

ABRAM HEWETT and his son "Al" were distributing the mail in the narrow space behind the gh tier of numbered glass boxes hich occupied the lefthand corner of e general store known as "Hewett's ocery." There were not many letters id papers in the old leathern bag hose scarred outer surface bore evi- nce to its many hurried departures id ignominious arrivals. Only the ocals" stopped at Barford; the ex- esses whizzed disdainfully past, dis- arging the mail-bag on the platform the ugly little station, like a well- med bullet.

There was one letter in the scant le awaiting official scrutiny over hich the younger Hewett pursed his ick lips in a thoughtful whistle. He rned over the thin envelope, held it to the light, squinted curiously at it it of one gray-green eye, before he ally deposited it among the letters stined for general delivery.

This done a slight sound drew his tention to the wobbly stand on the unter next to the post office proper, hereon was displayed a variety of cture postal-cards. Before this col- ction a small boy with a scarlet tam rched on the back of his curly head ood gazing with longing eyes.

"Oh! hello there, bub!" observed Mr. ewett rebukingly. "You mustn't uch them cards, y' know."

The boy stared at him from under ckered brows, his rosy mouth half en.

"What are they for?" he demanded.

"Why, to sen' to folks, Jimmy," ex- ained Mr. Hewett, with a return of s wonted good humor. "Easter greet- 's, views of our town, et cetery. ant one t' sen' t' y'r bes' girl?"

"Yes, I do," said the child earnestly. want one for—for Barb'ra. I want is one."

He laid a proprietary hand on a hristmas tree sparkling with tinsel ghts and surmounted by the legend, wish you a merry Christmas."

"Well, son, that card'll cost you a ckel, seein' it's the month of April," sponded the youth humorously.

The boy was engaged in untying a rd knot in the corner of his hand- rchief.

"I've got ten cents an' a nickel," he id. "An' I want ten cents' worth of 'lasses an' the mail an' that card. 's my birthday," he added proudly, n' Barb'ra's goin' to make me some pcorn balls with the m'lasses."

"How old are you, Jimmy?" inquired e youth, as he tied up the card in own paper with a pink string, and nguidly deposited the nickel in the ll.

"I'm six years old," replied Jimmy portantly. "An' I'm large of my e; Barb'ra says so."

"Then it mus' be so, I reckon. Say, ere's a letter for Barb'ra f'om 'way t West. I've been wonderin' who arb'ra knows out West. Ever hear r say, Jimmy?"

The boy shook his blond head vig- ously, as he bestowed the letter in e pocket of his coat.

"I'll ask her if you want me to," he id with a friendly little smile. But ung Mr. Hewett was back at his st behind the little window, where he resently became engaged in brisk re- artee with a couple of pink-cheeked rls.

Neither bestowed a glance upon the nall figure in the red cap which pres- tly made its way out of the door, refully carrying a covered tin pail, nd out of whose shallow pocket pro- truded the half of a thin blue envelope addressed to Miss Barbara Preston, in a man's bold angular hand.

The sidewalk came to an end presently, together with the village street, just opposite the big house. Jimmy stopped, as he always did, to look in through the convolutions of a highly ornamental fence at the cast-iron deer which guarded the walk on either side, and at the mysterious blue glass balls mounted on pedestals, which glistened brightly in a passing gleam of sunshine.

Then his attention was diverted by the sight of a smart sidebar buggy, drawn by a spirited bay horse, which a groom was driving around the house from the stable at the rear. Jimmy observed with sharpened interest that the horse's tail was cropped short and bobbed about excitedly. He waited breathlessly, his eyes glued to an opening in the fence, while the tall spare figure of a man wearing a gray overcoat and a gray felt hat emerged from the house.

Jimmy recognized the man at once. He was the Honorable Stephen Jarvis.

Few persons in Barford ever spoke of him in any other way. "The Honorable" seemed as much a part of his name as Jarvis. Jimmy, for one, thought it was.

The vehicle dashed out of the open gate, whirred past with a spatter of half-frozen mud and disappeared around a bend of the road where pollarded willows grew.

"My! but he's goin' fast!" said Jimmy, as he resumed his slow progress.

Beyond the distorted willows, with their bunched osiers just budding into a mist of yellowish green, was the bridge, and on either side of the brook, swollen now to a muddy torrent with the spring rains, grew crisp green clumps of the skunk cabbage, interspersed with yellow adder's tongues and the elusive pink and white of clustered spring-beauties.

"If I sh'd take Barb'ra some flowers, I guess she'd be glad," communed Jimmy with himself. It was pleasant down by the brook, with the wind roaring overhead like a friendly giant, and the blue sky and hurrying white clouds reflected in the still places of the stream.

A thunder of hoofs and wheels sounded on the bridge and the child looked up to see the round red face of Peg Morrison and the curl of his whiplash as he called to his horses.

"Hello, Peg!" shouted Jimmy, "wait an' le' me get in!"

"'Yes,' she said slowly, 'I am begging—for time. Give me another year—let me try'"

The man had drawn up his horses, his puckered eyes and puckered lips smiling down at the little boy.

"Wall, wall!" he called out in a high cracked voice, "if this 'ere ain't the Cap'n! Here, I'll take your pail."

"It's got m'lasses in it, so you'd better be careful," warned Jimmy. "I'm goin' to have six popcorn balls an' one to grow on, 'cause it's my birfday, an' I'm large of my age."

"Wall, now, I declar'!" cried Peg admiringly, "so you be, now I come to think of it, Cap'n. You're hefty, too—big an' hefty."

He pulled the little boy up beside him with a grunt as of a mighty effort. As he did so the blue letter slipped out of the small pocket, which was only half big enough to hold it, and dropped unnoticed to the ground. Then the wagon with a creak and a rattle started on once more.

"Say, Cap'n," observed Peg, "the wind's blowin' fer business to-day, ain't it? You'd better look out fer that military hat o' your'n."

"It does blow pretty hard," admitted Jimmy, "but my hat's on tight."

He glanced back vaguely to see a glimmer of something blue skidding sidewise across the road into the tangle of huckleberry and hard-hack bushes; then he turned once more to the man at his side.

"I've got a birfday present for Barb'ra," he said eagerly.

"Wall, now I vow!" exclaimed Peg, when the pink string had been carefully untied, and the sparkling Christmas tree exposed to view. "'I wish you a Merry Christmas,'" he read slowly. "Say, that's great, Cap'n!"

"It sparkles, don't it, Peg?"

"Mos' puts my eyes out," acquiesced the man. "D'ye want to drive while I do it up fer ye?"

Jimmy took the reins.

"I won't let 'em run away," he said gravely.

"Run away?" chuckled Peg. "I'd like to see 'em run away with you a-holt o' the lines. They wouldn't das to try it."

"I s'pose I'll be able to work the farm before long, Peg," observed Jimmy, after a short silence, during which he sternly eyed the bobbing heads of the old farm horses. "I'm pretty old now, an' I'm gettin' taller every day."

"H'm!" grumbled Mr. Morrison. "I guess the' ain't no 'special hurry 'bout your takin' charge o' the farm, yet."

Jimmy knit his forehead.

"I guess there is some hurry," he said slowly. "I've got to grow up 's quick 's I can."

The man looked down at the valiant little figure at his side with a queer twist of his weather-beaten face.

"Did—Barb'ry tell you that?" he wanted to know after a short silence.

"No," said Jimmy, shaking his head, "Barb'ra didn't tell me. I—just thinked it. You see it's this way," he went on, with a serious grown-up air, "I'm all Barb'ra's got, an' Barb'ra's all I've got. We've just got each other; an'—an'—the farm."

Peg pursed up his lips in an inaudible whistle as the wagon jolted noisily between the tall stone gateposts, past the big elms and the groups of untrimmed evergreens, to where the house stood on its low grassy terrace, a graveled driveway encircling it. It was a wide, low, old-fashioned house with narrow porches and small-paned windows, glittering in the sun like little fires.

Jimmy climbed down over the wheel and dashed excitedly into the house.

"I've come, Barb'ra!" he shouted imperiously. "Where are you, Barb'ra?"

The door of the sitting-room opened and a young woman came out. She was tall and slender, with masses of warm brown hair, a red mouth, and a brilliantly clear pale skin; her gray eyes under their long dark lashes were wide and angry, but they softened as they fell upon the small figure in the red tam.

"I've got a birfday present f'r you, Barb'ra," announced the little boy loudly, "an' I've got a quart of m'lasses an' I've got a letter f'om way out West. An' Al Hewett he wants to know——"

"Hush, Jimmy!" said the girl. "There's—some one here. I can't stop now. Go and get warm in the kitchen. I'll come presently."

"Don't you want to see your—birfday present, even?" he demanded with quivering lips. "I bought it with my fi' cents, an' it's——"

But the girl had already closed the door behind her; he could hear her

The Power of United Prayer

IT is a great triumph to have the minds of a large community fixed simultaneously upon spiritual things. This is what Evangelists Chapman and Alexander have succeeded in doing in Chicago, with the result that not even the election, with its conflicting interests, has been allowed for a single day to obscure or impede the work of grace that is going forward in the Western city.

What a magnificent campaign it is, with its wide-reaching organization, its battalion of trained workers and the unified support of some 400 Christian churches, each with its corps of consecrated men and women as efficient auxiliaries. In all of this movement—the propaganda, the preliminary period of prayer for a religious awakening, the arrangement of the skirmish line, the opening battle and the continuous assaults on sin's strongholds now in progress—the generalship has been of a character to excite admiration, even from a worldly point of view. But the army of men and women now striving for souls in Chicago care little or nothing for the world's applause. They are in the fight because of their loyalty to their great Captain, and their zeal and passion for soul-winning finds its best expression at a time like this.

With a whole city aflame for Christ, what a mighty power in prayer it might become! If God hears and answers the petition of two or three earnest souls united for the same purpose, would not His ear be open to the earnest cry of a million souls, ascending for a common object? Such a prayer would receive the unanimous reinforcement of a great host of God's people elsewhere. Thus the collective spiritual forces of the country might be made a mighty agent for the achievement of glorious Gospel results and untold national blessing.

The New York Strike

AT a time when strikes tie up business and cause general inconvenience, the long-suffering public often wonders if it has any rights which employer or employee is bound to respect. Paris has lately passed through one of the most expensive strikes in the history of modern industrial Europe, and New York has just been in the grip of a strike which has cost the general public great financial loss, to say nothing of the loss to the companies from suspended business and the loss to strikers of a considerable sum in wages. The strike in Paris was short-lived, but it cost the government—that is to say, the public—fifty millions of dollars, for the railroads there are owned by the State. The ordinary course of travel, business and the transportation of merchandise was at a standstill and the capital nearly starved for lack of food.

The New York strike would not have been a large affair, neither would the public have been greatly inconvenienced, if it had been confined to the employees of one company; but it extended as a "sympathetic strike" to all of the express companies and the general public got neither "sympathy" nor service.

Strikes are out of date. They are bad for the employer, the employee and the public. Time and again THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has advocated labor courts, which should be open to all and whose decisions should be compulsory. Both sides have their rights, but these would be amply protected by such tribunals. At any rate it would do much to do away with such conditions as have lately existed in New York. At least the time has come to avert needless strikes, and save the great loss which comes to all parties in the controversy.

A Hero of the Battlefield

JEAN HENRI DUNANT, "the Little Gentleman in White," who died in Switzerland a few days ago, was one whom a busy and ungrateful world did not sufficiently honor. As the originator and actual founder of the Red Cross, he performed a more valuable service for humanity than any other man of his day and generation. It was borne in upon him, after he had witnessed the sufferings of the wounded at the battle of Solferino, that war might be shorn of many of its needless horrors at least by proper systematic care of the wounded. From this gentle thought came the broader scheme, which was altogether his own, of a humane compact among the civilized nations. To-day, the Red Cross is an institution recognized and utilized by over thirty governments, our own included. Statues and pillars cannot adequately preserve the fame of such a man as Dunant, whose best and most enduring monument will be in the hearts of lovers of humanity all over the world.

Reciprocity with Canada

NEGOTIATIONS are now well under way for the arrangement of a Reciprocity Treaty with Canada. Our government has instructed two experienced representatives—Hon. Henry M. Hoyt, solicitor of the State Department, and Hon. Charles M. Pepper, commercial adviser—to go to Ottawa and undertake the negotiations in behalf of the United States, and Mr. Knox, Secretary of State, will shortly follow them. Canada has appointed as its conferees Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, and Hon. Wm. Patterson, Minister of Customs. Our Consul-General in Ottawa, Mr. John G. Foster, will be associated with Messrs. Hoyt and Pepper in the negotiations. There is much work to be done, and the conferences may last several weeks; but there are excellent reasons for hoping that the method of direct diplomatic negotiation will result in a satisfactory adjustment of the matters involved, including the troublesome and difficult paper and pulp question. Mr. Pepper, who is one of our nation's representatives in this important negotiation, is a talented writer and has published several successful books of travel. He has long been a valued contributor to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and was the personal friend of the late Dr. Louis Klopsch. He is the author of that splendid book The Life-Work of Louis Klopsch, which is now ready for publication. His skilful pen has produced a "Life" of his long-time friend that will be read everywhere with keen appreciation and delight.

Will You Help India's Orphans?

SEVERAL hundred little orphan boys and girls of India, now in care of the missionaries in that country, are without support, the kind friends who have been their patrons in recent years having either died or been compelled, for some reason, to discontinue their patronage. The missionaries are praying that the great heart of Christian America may take them up.

There is probably no Christian or humanitarian work in the whole world that has been attended by so much blessing and satisfaction to all concerned as this India orphan work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Some of our foremost missionaries have declared it to be the "greatest missionary work of a century," and surely a blessing has been on it ever since the day when Dr. Klopsch established it. We want you to have a share in this great work and in order that you may do so in a manner that cannot fail to be entirely satisfactory and agreeable, we have prepared the following pledge-card. Please observe that it places you under no legal obligation of any sort and that you can send as God has prospered you and as your heart dictates, and stop when you please. Cut this out, fill in the blank spaces, sign it and forward it to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with your offering:

INDIA ORPHAN SUPPORT

I will give toward the support of the India Orphan work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the sum of $....., monthly (or quarterly), should circumstances permit. This promise is to impose no legal obligation upon me, and is to terminate whenever I may so desire.

NAME, ...

ADDRESS, ...

STATE, ...

DATE, ..., 1910.

This affords an opportunity for all, no matter what their station in life, to have a share in this blessed work of child-training and soul-winning, a to give for such support according to their mea and as their hearts may prompt. Do not turn deaf ear to the cry of India's little orphan childre Give what you can and while you can. You w never feel the poorer, but many, many times t richer for it.

Should you wish any pledge cards to send friends, drop us a postal, and we will mail you a number you may want.

General Notes

—THIS week THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has the pleasure of troducing its readers to some of the important characters in M Kingsley's great serial, "To the Highest Bidder," the open chapters of which will be found on other pages of this issue. T chapters to come will fully sustain the interest you will feel you read the opening one of this most remarkable story.

—A CANADIAN aviator, J. A. D. McCurdy, proposes to int duce a novel feature in aerial experimentation by carrying small waterproof sack of mail from incoming steamers fi miles off shore. This will give important letters delivery alm a day ahead of the regular steamer mail. A French acroplan it is said, is now carrying mail between two points in the isl of Madagascar.

—IT IS NOT all plain sailing with the new republic of Portu The Second and Fifth Regiments have addressed a round-ro to Provisional President Braga announcing that they were p pared for an insurrection if they did not receive the promi promotions and pensions for helping to overthrow the m archy. The men of the navy, too, make similar demands. T government will capitulate rather than plunge the country i another revolution.

—OWING TO DISSENSIONS arising out of the recent strike Paris, the French Cabinet resigned on November 2. Prem Briand looked upon the strike as a rebellious movement launc at a time, too, when his government was trying to obtain c cessions for the men from the companies. He determined crush the strike and he did crush it by calling to the colors railway employees as reservists. He was criticized and nounced by the Socialists, but he defended his course, and in Chamber of Deputies received an expression of confidence b vote of 343 to 79. However, Premier Briand suggested that most practical way to arrive at a solution of the labor probl was for the whole Cabinet to resign. This was done and a m ministry formed with the Premier and several of the for ministers retaining their seats.

—CONSECRATION—HOW MUCH it means to the Christ heart! A beautiful object lesson of consecration was affor by the young men of Victoria University, Canada, lately. So thirty of them formed a Student Volunteer Band, every me ber of which had pledged himself to go to the foreign miss field. They were offering their young lives, their future, th all for the sake of winning souls to Christ. As they st facing a great audience, the latter read in huge letters sentence, "Our Lives Against Your Money." That was most direct and practical way in which the matter could p sibly have been put, so as to appeal to the average man woman, who might never hope to go to the mission field person, but who, by joining their consecrated means to th consecrated lives, could thus be loyally and effectively rep sented there. And it is the duty of every one who profes the Christian faith to lend a hand in conquering the world Christ.

The World's Greatest Ship

WHILE the marvels of the ships of the air are attracting the notice of the whole world, the wonders of the ships of the sea are also allenging universal attention and congratulation. ne new White Star liner Olympic, which was unched from the yard of Harland & Wolf of Belst, late in October, is the largest vessel that was er built. She is 882 feet long, 92 feet broad and s a gross register of 45,000 tons. Her hull is vided into thirty water-tight compartments, conins nine steel decks, and will accommodate 5,600 ople, including the crew. Each of the anchors of is ocean leviathan weighs fifteen and one-half ns. The links of the anchor chains are two feet length and weigh 175 pounds. The vessel's speed twenty-one knots, not so fast as some of the other ean greyhounds. She will have on board fifty oks, 350 stewards, 390 in the engineer department, in the sailing department. For each of her trips and from New York there will have to be proled 250 barrels of flour, twenty tons of potatoes, e tons of sugar, one and one-half ns of coffee, three-fourths of a ton cheese, forty oxen, eighty sheep, ty lambs, 130 pigs, 2,000 chickens, 0 ducks, 150 turkeys, ninety geese, 0 quail, forty-five boxes of fresh h, twelve barrels of red herring, rty boxes of haddock, twenty kegs oysters, and many other articles at could be mentioned. This mon-er of the ocean is more amazing ien we remember that steam navition of the Atlantic is less than a ndred years old. The Savannah the year 1819 was the first vessel ted with a steam engine to cross e Atlantic. The trip required enty-one days because they only ed the steam for eighty hours of e trip. In 1838 the Sirius, a little ip of 703 tons, 178 feet long, came der steam power alone from eenstown to New York with ninefour passengers in seventeen days. 1870 the Oceanic was launched m Harland & Wolf's yard as the st steamship of the White Star ne. The Olympic has a gross tonge half as much again as that of e Mauretania or the Lusitania, ich have till now held the record size in the world. The Titanic, sister ship, will be launched early xt year. The cost of the Olympic s $5,750,000. The progress of the vigation of the sea can be realized we measure the distance between e ships that Solomon built and the ympic, the mammoth palace vessel, rrying its thousands of passengers ross the deep.

nd king Solomon made a navy of ships in ongeber, which is beside Eloth on the shore the Red Sea, in the land of Edom. (I. gs 9:26.)

nch Strike Expensive

The railroad strike in France is er and some of the damages are ng calculated. It is claimed that loss to the country will amount to ween fifty and sixty million dollars. A high ancial official in Paris estimates that $25,000,000 imports from England and Germany were held and that about $21,000,000 worth of exports also re detained. The railroads lost $2,100,000 in ssenger fares, and $3,000,000 in freight charges. e strikers and other railroad hands lost $2,000,-0 in wages. There is an expressmen's strike on w in our own country in Jersey City and New rk which threatens to become general, but which is to be hoped will be bloodless and speedily and tly settled. Much of such trouble comes from misunderstandings, injustices, jealousies and treds of men.

atred stirreth up strifes; but love covereth all sins. (Prov. 10:12.)

rished Reaching for Grapes

Rebecca Goldberg, aged four, and Tessie Satriani, ed ten, whose parents are next-door neighbors at rona, Long Island, were picking grapes in the ldberg yard the other afternoon, while Mrs. Goldg watched them from her window. After stepng into the kitchen for a few minutes, the mother rned to the window, but saw no children. She nt out to find them, and to her horror she saw that the weight of the children upon the lid of an old well had broken, and that the children had fallen through it into the water. The cistern, which was twenty feet deep, had four feet of water in it. The mother in looking down saw the clothing of her child and knew that the children had fallen through. The neighbors secured long-handled rakes and drew out the lifeless bodies of the children. Every effort was made by the physician to resuscitate them, but all in vain. Some of the most beautiful and luscious grapes in the arbor grew just over the top of the well, and the little ones in undertaking to reach them fell into the water. There are dangers that beset the pathway of children, not only beneath the forbidden fruit of sin, but also underneath the luscious grapes of innocent pleasure and employment.

There is but a step between me and death. (I. Sam. 20:3.)

Stealing from Coins

Secret Service agents of the United States government have been working for some time in Maiden Lane, New York, in an effort to trace robbers who have devised a new form of coin-trimming. Gold coins are put in a burlap bag and shaken briskly for an hour or two. The result is that tiny pieces of the metal are knocked off the surfaces and edges and cling to the bag. The coins are then put into circulation apparently no more worn nor battered than most money that has been in use for a year or two. The bag is burned up, and this leaves the melted gold, which is gathered up and sold to the jewelry manufacturers. The Sub-treasury and the Treasury Department at Washington have been receiving large quantities of gold coins of recent date which are short in weight from five to fifteen per cent. and which seem to be worse battered than coins subjected to the usual wear and tear. On microscopic investigation they discovered that the gold pieces had been subjected to some violent treatment, and they sought clues and discovered the method of stealing from the coins by shaking them in a sack. This grinding of coins is another one of the numberless schemes invented for taking money without an equivalent, of getting a living without work. These devices of fraud are a crime against the public, but they are a greater injury to the individual who profits by them. Emerson has truly said, "The thief steals most from himself." It is well for the tempted ones to heed this exhortation:

Let him that stole steal no more: but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good. (Eph. 4:28.)

Kaiser to Rich Germans

The Kaiser has insisted that while there have been examples of individual benevolences the very rich men of America have been largely in advance of the millionaires of Germany in the matter of public beneficence. So he himself made the centennial celebration of the University of Berlin the occasion of calling on some of his rich friends for a fund for the foundation of an institution of scientific research in connection with the university. The responses were cheerfully made and the Emperor had the pleasure of announcing at the centennial celebration that $2,500,000 had been raised and the institution was secured. The gifts included $175,000 from Herr Koppel, the millionaire manufacturer, $50,000 from the city of Berlin, $37,000 from Hans Meyer, the explorer, and from the widow of Ernst von Wildenbruch the right of the publication of his works, valued at $25,000. The German Emperior is a man of high intellectual, moral and religious impulses, and has set a glorious example to his people in the foundation of the new institution. He did the rich men he induced to give as great a favor as he did the public. The value of the generosity of the rich to their own character and destiny is plainly stated in the Scriptures.

Charge them that are rich in this world . . . that they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate; laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life. (I. Tim. 6:17-19.)

Johnstone Breaks High Flight Record

The second international aviation tournament, which began at the Belmont Park Racetrack, Long Island, October 22, came to an end the evening of October 31 by the flight of Ralph Johnstone, who made a new world's altitude record by soaring 9,714 feet, and by that triumph he won for America the second big honor of the aviation meet. Prior to that event no man had flown higher than 9,186 feet. Had not the aviator's gasoline given out he would probably have flown 286 feet higher, capturing the special prize of $5,000 which the Aero Club of America offered to the first man who should climb to the height of ten thousand feet. As it was, his feat secured for him a prize of $3,000. When Johnstone took his seat in the Wright flyer for his journey nature was beautiful and propitious. The deep blue sky was without a cloud and the atmosphere was balmy. He started and made his circuits upward, advancing 500 feet each round until he was a dim speck, and was then lost to view. When his gasoline gave out he had nothing to do but to turn the nose of his machine downward. He was swept at the rate of 200 miles an hour toward the earth, and he felt that his destruction was certain. He was nearly two miles high when he began to fall. After he had gone downward 3,000 feet he managed some way or other to lay hold upon the steering gear and get control of the ship that had gotten away from him, and he came down the rest of the way as gracefully as a bird and lit at the place of his starting. Although it was dark and the people were running for their trains, there was the wildest enthusiasm and the largest number of compliments at the courage and skill of this new master of the skies. It was the turning point in Johnstone's destiny when he got proper control of the helm and compelled the ship that seemed bent on his destruction to bear him gracefully and safely to the earth. There are turning points in life when the fierce winds and the gravitating influences of evil would carry the ship of character to swift ruin. It is then necessary to lay hold upon the conscience under divine inspiration and make the wings laugh at the winds and bear the soul to safety and victory.

Behold also the ships, which though they be so great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet are they turned about with a very small helm, whithersoever the governor listeth. (James 3:4.)

Made "No Man's Land" Their Home

A FEW years ago, a long strip of land in Western Oklahoma was known as part of the "great American Desert." It was without any laws, as it belonged to none of the States or territories, and the people settling there became a law unto themselves. It was literally a "No Man's Land."

Since the development of the great Southwest, especially in the last eight years, the country has advanced rapidly. Where at one time the buffalo and range cattle roamed over the broad prairies, are now fine farms and an industrious people. The dugout and sod house are rapidly giving way to new and better homes and more comfortable surroundings; but even now it is not an uncommon thing to pick up buffalo horns and to hear the howling of stray wolves. Beaver County is the banner county of the State for broom corn. Over thirty-two thousand acres are being raised this year, to say nothing of the great fields of wheat. There are many beautiful wild flowers blooming from early spring till fall.

A Camp Meeting in Beaver County

There is always a reason for people's prosperity, and in this instance, the settling of the Friends, commonly known as Quakers, has had no small part in this great pioneer work. The little band of Friends settled in the vicinity of Gate, Okla. There was a great need of church and school privileges, as the new settlement was remote from either. A meeting of the Friends was held at the home of Professor H. C. Fellow in August, 1905. After the reading of the eighth chapter of Proverbs, earnest prayer was offered, asking divine guidance for the new settlement. It was decided to have a Friends' meeting house and an academy, and Lawrence T. Kersey donated five acres of land for that privilege. The site overlooks the beautiful Gate valley, with a large lagoon and the town of Gate in the distance. The academy building is both church and school. It is planned to add more colleges and dormitories soon.

Unfortunately, although the crops this year are excellent, the two previous years have been part failures, making the experience a hard one for t settlers. They are not discouraged, however, but a bravely pushing forward their plans for impro ment, which promise a bright future for the G and its surroundings. HARVEY D. LUPTON presence of the Jersey City police. A number of new men were dragged from their seats and beaten into insensibility. A number of the old drivers whose demands were granted a year ago were willing to remain, but said they dare not for fear of their lives.

In New York City for the first week of the trouble a policeman rode on the box of each wagon beside the driver, and if the wagon was a large one an officer stood in the rear. Often a mounted policeman rode by the side of the wagon, especially through districts where riots had occurred and more violence was feared. All of the police reserves were kept on duty, and the men slept at the station houses. The police commissioner found it was impossible to protect the wagons properly if they were to drive as formerly about the city, so he designated certain thoroughfares to be used by express wagons and placed several officers to every block. This worked well and reduced the danger of rioting.

The express companies usually have from 1,000 to 1,200 wagons delivering goods, but the attacks on the drivers made it useless to attempt to send out the full number, and for a while about 300 was the total number which went from place to place under guard. Deputy Commissioner Driscoll took charge of the situation and had 2,500 police on foot and mounteddurin the continuance of the strike.

In Jersey City the situation went from bad to worse, and appeals were made to Governor Fort to call out the militia, but the mayor said he felt his police could still cope with the strikers.

A number of men in the employ of the United States Express Company were going toward the stables when they were ambushed, as it were, by a mob of several hundred which had taken up a position in the Erie yards. A shower of bricks was the first notice of their presence. After a struggle the police drove them back. All night long there was a carnival of disorder along Pavonia Avenue. Men were dragged off wagons and windows were smashed.

The companies whose helpers had struck notified them that their demand for five dollars a month more was granted; that the working day would be twelve hours, and that there would be double pay for all work overtime. They refused, however, to recognize the new Union which the strikers had formed, and the struggle from that time forward was over this point alone.

In New York the streets in the vicinity of the express offices became unsafe for the general public as the strikers would congregate near the offices to attack strike breakers. A young man going along the street toward a railroad station, dressed for a hunting trip, was struck down from behind and stabbed four times. He had been mistaken for a guard. He died in the hospital a few days later.

On Saturday, October 29, strikers attacked e police reserve near Thirty-fourth Street, and a fighting over several blocks were finally disper An express wagon driven by a new driver sta from the American Express office on Madison A nue. It was manned by four guards carrying sticks. All went well until Fortieth Street reached, when suddenly the driver was knoc senseless by a stone, and the horses bolted.

Two officers were rescued by reserves after be knocked senseless. At least five hundred men w in the attacking party. In another struggle a fi fight waged through several streets. At first rioters had the best of the fray, but more po arrived and the rioters were at last dispersed.

Governor Fort of New Jersey had a confere with the strike leaders and then with the compa in the endeavor to bring about a settlement.

Mayor Gaynor showed strict impartiality in d ing with the situation, and did his utmost to that peace was preserved and the public sufferec little as possible.

Strike Breakers at Work in an Express Terminal

AMONG THE CHURCHES AND MISSIONS

—REV. H. ALLEN TUPPER'S little book, A Ray for Each Day from the Sun of Righteousness, is now in its third edition, and is finding much favor among Christian workers, Endeavorers, etc. It gives a glowing, helpful text for every day. The publisher is Miss Katharine B. Tupper, 34 Gramercy Park, N. Y.

—ONE OF THE ablest scholars among the Lutherans is Rev. Dr. Remensnyder, of New York. At the recent celebration of the 353d anniversary of the Reformation he pointed out that the freedom from ecclesiastical authority, for which Protestantism stands, is grossly abused by many to the denial of the historic faith and creeds of the Church and inspiration of the Bible, hence the accusation that the Church is losing ground. These men who make such charges, however, are not true representatives of Protestantism. So far from decreasing, Protestantism is daily adding to its communion, sending out its roots in all directions, and is so vigorously growing that in a short time it promises to be the dominant form of Christianity. He emphasized the fact that the Catholic Church is losing her grip on the thinkers and progressives everywhere and that in some States where she was once supreme she is now struggling for existence.

—SINCE THE recent publication in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of an article on the rk of the Anti-Cigarette League, Field Secr y Rev. Manfred P. Welcher, 156 Fifth Av e, New York City, has received many letters k- ing for information concerning the Le e. The banner League State is South Car a, which has a club with twenty-six charter m- bers, and hopes for one hundred men rs soon. Other branches are rapidly formi in different States.

SOWING AND REAPING IN JAPAN

The Beginning of a New Church

By MATTHIAS KLEIN, Sinuoto, Awaji

T was in the first-class cabin of a coast liner, where beside myself there was but one more passenger. In Japanese fashion, when traveling by boat, we were both lying on the carpeted floor th perhaps a blanket and a queer-shaped, straw-uffed pillow, which are always at the passenger's rvice. In the course of conversation, this keen-ed Japanese—who is local superintendent of the eamship Company—though himself still halting tween Buddhism and Christianity, informed me t his brother, who is a graduate of a State uni-rsity in America, had since the time of his boy-od been a Christian through the influence of one our Sabbath Schools.

In the various departments of our work, including e Sunday School, God's hand has been upon us for od. Sabbath School classes are not only feeders the church, but often the nucleus from which e church is formed. Were our object only to tter the Gospel seed in the most effectual man-r possible, the Sunday School would evidently be e best medium. Those who once were little tots ke up a standing army of fine, promising, youth-f Christians. Among them are found army offi-ls, and some become preachers, etc. One of our ng churches is composed almost entirely of an anced Sunday School class. There are immense lden forces bound up in these promising youths, d the missionary aptly and unconsciously treats m as the future preachers, business men, educa-s and administrators of their country, and whose litless powers, if harnessed up for Christ, will mendously energize the church.

Space does not permit me to relate all the striking es of God's regenerating power. One of our nger Christian men, who is led to devote his ire time to the saving of the lost, recently had the of seeing his aged mother won from Buddhism. course, the duty devolved upon her to dispose of t-loads of idols and little shrines. Another, who now the pillar of a local class, until six months o was an idolater. He submerged about seventy n worth of idols in the sea. Another influential ng man, having had some unfortunate hitch in siness, took poison, and while dashing past one our mission chapels, seeing the sign, he rushed in, fessed his deed to the pastor, and in the nick of e, the doctor succeeded in saving his life. He mediately surrendered to the only true God, and to-day an energetic winner of souls in his home y. Another, who studied for a Buddhist priest d was to have become the successor to a temple d surrounding estate worth over $15,000, refused this palatial offer of his foster-parent and became a Christian. A high army official and his family are now ready for baptism as a result of the change seen in their profligate son, who is a soldier.

As may be known to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the writer and family are the only resident missionaries among 200,000 people. Our work is very taxing and our workers employed, though faithful, are but few, considering the vast needs of the field. These men are incessantly at it—not only looking after their local churches, but also doing evangelistic work in their vicinity, visiting the homes and the hovels, conducting street services and country Sunday Schools, etc. Nevertheless, with the forces and means at our command we reach but a small percentage of the masses entrusted to our care. With this little band of evangelists we have monthly conferences for Bible study, deliberating on plans for work and for special prayer. When time and means permit a special evangelistic tour, we strike out into the untried regions. In the day we hold numerous services in the open, and distribute tracts, and the Gospel service at night is either at a private house or in some public hall. How eagerly the crowds flock in, even in busy seasons, when for instance, before the service, we stand on some hilltop singing a few stirring songs. As the man announcing the time for meeting shouts in every direction, the sound echoes from hill to hill and from hut to hut. In response to his call there may incidentally ring from another hillside the mellow-toned temple bell.

Buddhism here is yet in its old form, and although many dilapidated temples speak of its sure decay, yet frequently we are given a stiff fight. Its priests give lectures in opposition to Christianity and particularly seek a hearing from school teachers and educated classes, by falsely stigmatizing the native Christians as disloyal and unpatriotic. Recently, about ten priests came from Kyoto, the Rome of Buddhism, and performed the rite of ablution upon the heads of some 800 of their believers, pocketing a fee of seventy-five cents per capita.

Among our lay Christians, there are those who are capable and zealous, and who would make fine colporteurs. It would be their duty to put in all their time in selling Bibles and Gospels, and distributing tracts in the many villages between our regular stations, which we have been scarcely able to touch. These workers can be supported for $10 per month.

We wish to follow up these colporteurs with some definite evangelistic campaigns, which I wish the various pastors will conduct. Then at the towns and villages where the "Macedonian call" is the loudest, we plan to establish regular preaching places. These pastors are weeping. Special means will be needed for the renting of preaching places, for traveling expenses, and for the purchase of tens of thousands of tracts.

Awaji has good roads, though many times very steep ones, as the country is extremely hilly. There is neither railroad nor street car. Then where the missionary must of necessity run from one station to another, up and down hills for many miles per day, if he is to do effective work in preaching when he arrives at his appointment, he should not be in a state of complete exhaustion, due to an old or hard-running bicycle. The wheel ought to be the very best; indeed, we have often wished for a missionary motorcycle, with which to more speedily carry the Gospel to those remote regions and to save all the strength possible for the great work.

The "Moonshiners" in the Tower

How the Gospel Brought Light and Joy Into a Georgia Prison

By MYRTA LOCKITT AVARY

MRS. M. L. CULVER SMITH, pastor's assistant to Rev. Dr. White, of the Second Baptist Church, Atlanta, Ga., was attending the Sunday afternoon service in the Tower, as the Fulton County jail is called, some time ago, when, glancing through the arcade to the topmost story, she saw a row of heads—about forty—looking down from the railing of the balcony.

"Who are those men up there?" she asked the warden.

"United States prisoners put in here for moonshining."

"Why don't they come down to church services?"

"They hold themselves aloof from the other prisoners."

"May I go up and speak to them?"

"Certainly!"

Mrs. Smith, who is welcome as sunshine anywhere in the prison, went up and put her question to the company of about forty moonshiners:

"Why don't you come down stairs to the services?"

They replied that they did not care to associate with the other class of prisoners in the jail; they did not feel that they belonged to the criminal class; had not stolen anything, nor killed anybody, nor violated any part of the common law, as they understood it.

The view that the mountain moonshiner takes of "making moonshine" (illicit distilling of whisky) is this: A man's own corn is his to do as he pleases with; and it's none of the government's business. A moonshiner is often all right in every respect but this of "making moonshine."

Of course, the moonshiner who becomes genuinely and deeply converted, stops making moonshine. But the people scattered through the mountains do not have the spiritual advantages of more closely settled and wealthier communities; we who have religious services at our very doors weekly or daily can not judge those who have such privileges once a month or less often. Among "moonshiners" are men who have as fine a rock-bed of character as any in our country; and when they become converted, no more earnest or inspired workers for Christ can be found. So, when we speak of this bit of evangelical work begun in the Atlanta "Tower" by a woman, we speak of a force for good that may have very far-reaching effects.

Up in their part of the Tower that Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Smith had a little Bible talk with them and a prayer. "Would you like me to come again?" she asked. They said they would. She gave out about thirty six-cent Testaments. She arranged to see them regularly Saturday afternoons, taking them papers and other literature to read. Saturday nights she tries to take some minister with her; her own pastor, Dr. White, recognized as one of the ablest preachers in the city, and various other preachers have accompanied her, so that most of the denominations have been represented in this interesting work in the Tower among an interesting group of men.

One day in November, she noticed a new face at her meetings, a very bright and youthful face, that of James Burnett, aged twenty-three, just sent up for "making moonshine." This "boy," as she called him, appealed to the mother-heart in her by his youth and manliness. She spoke cordially to him and gave him a six-cent Testament. She missed him one day from the Moonshiners' meeting.

"Where is he? Gone home?" she asked.

"No; there he is," said somebody, and she saw him as she went down the steps; he had been made a "trusty"—a turnkey.

"How are you getting on?" she asked cordially, and "Read any in your Testament?"

"Yes," he replied to the last query, "and I am beginning to think there is something in the Gospel. We have a Bible in our home, but I never read it before with any interest."

Mrs. Smith asked some of her friends to pray for his conversion. At a little rescue mission at one o'clock one day she asked for special prayers for him.

When she was in the church office at 2.30 she received a letter from the Tower; James Burnett wanted her to come to see him. A little before eight that evening she went; took him to a quiet corner of the big gallery or corridor and asked: "What's the trouble?"

"I don't know what's the matter with me," he answered; "I can't sleep. I feel sick. I read my Bible; I lie down and try to sleep, but I find I am praying. I can't sleep."

"I think I know what your difficulty is," said she. "Give yourself to Jesus Christ to live and to be and to do as he wants you, and you will find rest and help."

"But I have no feeling," he replied, meaning the religious emotion that sometimes is supposed to be essential to repentance and conversion.

"We do not have to have the same experiences," said the missionary, "you do not have to feel. You have to believe the promises."

She found the promises in the Bible; read them to him; showed them to him.

"Now," she said, "this is plain truth. You have but one thing to decide. Will you take Jesus Christ for your personal Saviour?" He was thoughtful a moment, then looked her straight in the eye, took her hand through the bars and said firmly: "I will take Jesus Christ for my Saviour."

They knelt, she outside, he behind the bars, and prayed together, asking as simply as children the help of their common Father. As they arose, she said: "You know our Lord says, 'Whosoever, therefore, shall confess me before men, him will I also confess before my Father which is in heaven.' Are you going to let the other men in this cage know you have chosen Christ?"

"Certainly I am." He not only "let the others know," but when the reporters for the local press, in visiting the Tower, heard of his conversion and questioned him, he let them know, telling his story in a simple, manly, straightforward way. The writer, hearing of his case, called up the warden at the Tower, and asked about it.

"Yes," he answered, "the story is correct. We see a good deal down here of jail conversions—people trying to make the preachers and missionaries think they are converted, in order to get their terms shortened; and people in trouble really thinking they are converted—it looks like it—until they get out of trouble. But this isn't that kind. He has served out his term; he goes home to-morrow. Why, he's nearly got us all converted here!"

I called up Rev. Dr. White. "Yes," he answered, "I think it is a case of true conversion; that there is a genuine and sincere change of life and purpos

I repeated what the warden had told me.

"Yes; one of the keepers told me that 'it v almost like Paul and Silas in prison.'"

He referred me further to Mrs. Smith. She t me simply and with feeling of her interest in young convert, of his modesty and earnestness. owned his farm; was very fond of his sister, wh a Christian and his housekeeper; his uncle is mountain preacher and comes to the little chu near his home and preaches about once a mon there is a good day school with about eighty c dren attending, but no Sunday School; there need of a Sunday School, and Mrs. Smith told h her church would see that he was supplied with right kind of literature. Her hope is that a g servant of the Lord has gone out from the Towe spread glad tidings in the mountains. His educat is not sufficient for the ministry; but with his bri native intellect and a strong character, there ways untold in which he can advance the cause Christ.

"He cut out cards," Mrs. Smith told me. smiled happily. "Last Sunday, when I went b to the jail after I saw him on the train, I heard moonshiners singing, 'Nearer, God, to Thee,' and 'When the I is Called up Yonder.' Now, tha a change, is it not, and an enco agement? I used to catch th playing cards; now I find th singing hymns!"

She spoke of Dr. White's inte and of the interest of ministers other denominations in the w and read me an extract fro letter just received from Rev. Thompson, mountain preacher Waleska, where Reinhardt Coll a Methodist institution, is doing it can to educate deserving boys girls who are trying to help th selves. "I shall never forget t service among your top-story f in the Tower," wrote he, "and I lieve we shall hear from it aga

The church building is opposite State capitol and not far from the Tower, w last fact supplies natural reason for special a ities among men behind the bars. It is know a "church of public men"; three judges of Supreme Court of Georgia are deacons; among members are two governors, Governor Joe Bro now in office, and Governor Terrell, his predece but one; two distinguished ex-judges, the Rail Commissioner of Georgia, the Superintende Public Schools for Fulton County; the Secreta the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, and the pr dent of that body. The last-named gentleman, Paxon, who is a power for good in the Sun School of the church, on hearing what good James Burnett had made of his six-cent Testam sent him a large and beautiful Bible.

Since Burnett's departure, Mrs. Smith had letters from him expressing earnest determ ation to establish a Sunday School in his commun his uncle, the minister, who is already coverin a work more than equal to his strength, has gl promised to co-operate all he can. "But," w Burnett to his missionary friend, "we want yo come and help us start." At her next service a Burnett's departure, she asked the moonshin "How many of you will promise me not to mak sell moonshine again?" extending her hand thro the bars. One by one, three slowly approached shook it in affirmation. "Will you take Christ your personal Saviour?" she asked of each.

(R. M., Bellwood, Neb. 1. What is the meaning of 1. Cor. 15: 36? 2. Is the earth larger than the moon or not?

It means that death or dissolution in the natural world is the gateway to new life, and that Christ by his death has won for us a new and eternal life after this existence is over. His death becomes the avenue to resurrection and regeneration. 2. The diameter of the moon is 2,153 miles, but its volume is only 1/49th that of the earth.

J. W., Allentown, Pa. 1. What day of the week did the 17th of March come on in 1869? 2. Who was "Brunswick's fated chieftain," spoken of in the poem "Waterloo" by Byron? 3. Why is it stated in Rom. 5: 14, that "Death reigned from Adam until Moses"?

1. Wednesday. 2. Frederick William, Duke of Brunswick, fourth son of Duke Ferdinand, who was nephew of Frederick the Great, and who married the daughter of George III. He fought against Napoleon, who abolished his Duchy. He fled to England and afterwards joined the army of Wellington in the Peninsula. He was reinstated in his Duchy by the Czars in 1813 and fought throughout the campaign of 1814-1815. He was killed at Quatre Bras. 3. This imputes the existence of a law during that period, earlier than the law of Moses, and the breach of which would be sin. Death had been made the universal penalty of transgression; sin was already in the world before Moses came. Not only sin but its penalty came through Adam.

J. J. W., Neillsville, Wis. An intelligent Hebrew here, whom I asked to read the New Testament, said that it was impossible for the Feast of the Passover to fall on Friday; or, in other words, the first day of unleavened bread.

We have referred this query to Rev. Leopold Cohn, of the Williamsburg and Brownsville Missions to the Jews, who replies as follows: "We read in the Gospel of Saint Luke 23: 54, 'and that day was the preparation,' which means that the Passover then did not fall on Friday, but on the Sabbath day. The rules enumerated in Orach Chaim, section 428, one of which is that the Passover cannot fall on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, are post-Talmudic. At the time of Christ, the festivals were fixed by the testimony of witnesses who observed the new moon. They had no such principles regulating the Jewish calendar."

B. C., Judsonia, Ark. How many motions has the earth? How fast does it travel? How fast does the sun travel? Is it possible for any heavenly body to remain still?

Two, diurnal and annual. In its diurnal motion, the earth rotates on its axis once in twenty-four hours—a rate of speed more than a thousand miles per hour at the equator. In its revolution round the sun it travels at the rate of about 67,000 miles per hour. The circumference of the sun is 110 times that of the earth, and it revolves on its axis once in twenty-six days. At the solar equator the rate of motion is about a mile a minute. It is not definitely known in what course or to where the sun is traveling through space, but the rate of motion in this respect is calculated at about fifteen miles per second. No body is at rest; all planets, stars and suns are in perpetual motion.

C. C., Philadelphia, Pa. Please give me some information regarding the comparative ages of the different liturgies.

There were liturgical forms among the ancient Jews, Greeks and Romans. There is very little information regarding the earliest Christian liturgies, the only trace in apostolic days being in connection with the Lord's Prayer and the Lord's Supper. It is not improbable, however, that the Master and his disciples, in their meetings, may have followed some devotional forms based on those of the Synagogues. The earliest known Christian liturgies were those of the Oriental church, the first being that of Jerusalem and Antioch, the second, that of the church of Alexandria, the third of the church of Cæsarea, the fourth the church of Jesus, and the fifth the church of Rome. From the Ephesian church sprang a number of liturgies, including those of France and Britain and also the present liturgy of the English Episcopal Church. It is impossible to state definitely which of the churches to-day holds most closely to the early Christian liturgies, since all have drawn from the same sources. The Roman Church, the Episcopal Church, the Gregorian and Greek churches all make claim to priority. There is a striking yet quite natural uniformity in the offices for marriage, death, baptism, etc., among the churches. We do not believe the Quakers use any special liturgical forms, although there may be exceptions to the rule.

T. G. E., New York. When members of a church have memorial windows put in at their expense, and they are placed in position and remain for years, and the property is sold and the building torn down, it is heartrending to see these windows destroyed by building wreckers. Should not these windows be preserved, out of respect to the memory of the givers? Is it right to see memorial windows doing service in a brewery or a garage?

It looks like vandalism to put memorial windows to such uses. Their hallowed associations should be sufficient to prevent it. Yet it is difficult to see how this could be done except by purchasing them and transferring them to some other church or suitable building.

W. E., Bracebridge, Ont. When did Jerusalem become a city? How many were slain at the siege?

About 1,000 B.C., when King David, by a final conquest of the fortress, joined the lower part with the citadel of Mt. Zion and built a wall around both. It is doubtful if Jerusalem proper ever had a greater normal population than 100,000, but at festivals, particularly during Passover, tens of thousands of outsiders flocked into the city, which had then a great population temporarily. There have been 25 or 30 sieges, but at the great siege by Titus, in 70 A.D., according to Josephus, more than a million were slain. This seems an extraordinary figure.

A. H. F., Nyack, N. Y. Who was the "Pseudo-Smerdis" between Cyrus the Great and Darius I.? Is he the Artaxerxes mentioned by Ezra 4: 7? Is he rightly classed as one of the Persian kings?

The false Smerdis reigned for eight months in 522 B.C., therefore he must be considered one of the Persian kings. He pretended to be the brother of Cambyses, who succeeded his father, Cyrus the Great. The Ahaswerosh (Ahasuerus) of Ezra 4: 6 and of the Book of Esther is Xerxes, the son of Darius, and the Artachshashta (Artaxerxes) of Ezra 4: 7, 8, 11, 23, etc., and of Neh. 2: 1; 5: 14, etc., is the son of Xerxes, Artaxerxes Longimanus (464-425 B.C.), therefore Pseudo-Smerdis, who reigned 100 years previously cannot be identified with the Artaxerxes of Ezra 4: 7.

S. P. P., Connecticut. Please explain the practical meaning of an old style way of speaking, "What is it to be a free moral agent?"

The subject is one that has been discussed and fought over by theologians with much acrimony and little profit, seeing that all we know about it is conjectural. God governs the world according to a plan, which (if we acknowledge his sovereignty) no existence or event can contravene. The human will and human plans are impotent before the Divine will and foreknowledge. This line of argument, carried to the extreme, leads to fatalism. On the other hand, the Almighty has given to man the power of distinguishing right from wrong, good from evil, and of choosing, by his own voluntary act, between the two. The exercise of this volitional power carries with it the corresponding responsibility. The heart that is given over to sin rebels against the Divine authority and attempts to defy it, while the heart that is in harmony with the Creator's purpose seeks to know his will and to do it and finds in that service its highest and noblest exercise. Thus, man can become, by his own choice, a discordant or a harmonious element, but he is powerless to influence the Divine plan or to frustrate God's purposes. His free agency at most is very limited, if we take the larger view of the subject.

A. F. G., Mount Carmel, N. Y. Why was Korea named the "Hermit Kingdom"?

The "Hermit Nation" or "Kingdom" was a designation given to Korea because of its early disinclination to hold commercial and other intercourse with outside peoples.

Mrs. L. R., Browning, Ill. 1. What was the name of Lot's wife? 2. Please explain John 14: 2. 3. What became of the Ark of the Covenant?

1. Her name is nowhere mentioned in Scripture, but there is a Hebrew tradition which gives it as Edith and one of his daughters as Plutith. 2. He meant to imply that there was a place for each and room for all who believed and lived as God would have them live. As to the place itself, many conjectures have been made, and some have suggested that the stars above us were the mansions to which Jesus had reference. The essential point is that the redeemed will be going not to a strange land and among strangers, but to the heavenly home, prepared for them—to their Father's house. 3. One of the mysteries of the ages, concerning which there have been many speculations, but nothing definite can be asserted. Your last query touches a topic too voluminous to be treated in THE MAIL-BAG.

M. J. P., Newman, Ill. Please quote the entire stanza which begins something like this: "Upon the Grampian hills," etc.

The lines are as follows:

My name is Norval; on the Grampian hills
My father feeds his flocks; a frugal swain,
Whose constant cares were to increase his store,
And keep his only son, myself, at home.

They are from the drama, "Douglas" (Act 2, Scene 1), by John Home (1724-1808).

F. H., Phoenix, Ariz. 1. When was the fountain pen invented? 2. Where was the first electric street car used with success?

1. It is said to have been invented about the middle of the last century in the United States, but it is only within the past few years that it has approached the perfection of utility. 2. The first electrical car was run between Portrush and the Giant's Causeway in County Antrim, Ireland, a distance of four miles, in 1878. The first electrical cars in America were run in Richmond, Va., in 1888 by the Sprague Electric Manufacturing Company, though for exposition purposes there was a little experimenting before that time.

N. W., Kane, Pa. Please tell me in which poem of Wordsworth occurs the famous line about "a wise passiveness"?

In "Expostulation and Reply." See p. 85 in Macmillan's edition of Wordsworth's Poems.

S. G., Concord, N. H. What is London monument and what does it commemorate?

The monument was built by the great architect Christopher Wren in 1671-1677, in commemoration of the great fire which burned much of the city in 1666. Its pedestal is 40 feet high, and its total height is 202 feet. The staircase has 345 steps of black marble.

A Street in Havana After the Great Storm

CUBA'S capital for several days after the storm seemed more like Venice than the Havana known to American tourists. In some places the water was four feet deep and people went about in boats and in rafts. It entailed much suffering, and the loss is estimated as well over a million dollars.

Miscellaneous

A. O. T., Allentown, N. Y. We have been unable to find the rest of the quotation.

Subscriber, Me. Consult a Canadian lawyer. We cannot express opinions on questions arising in that jurisdiction.

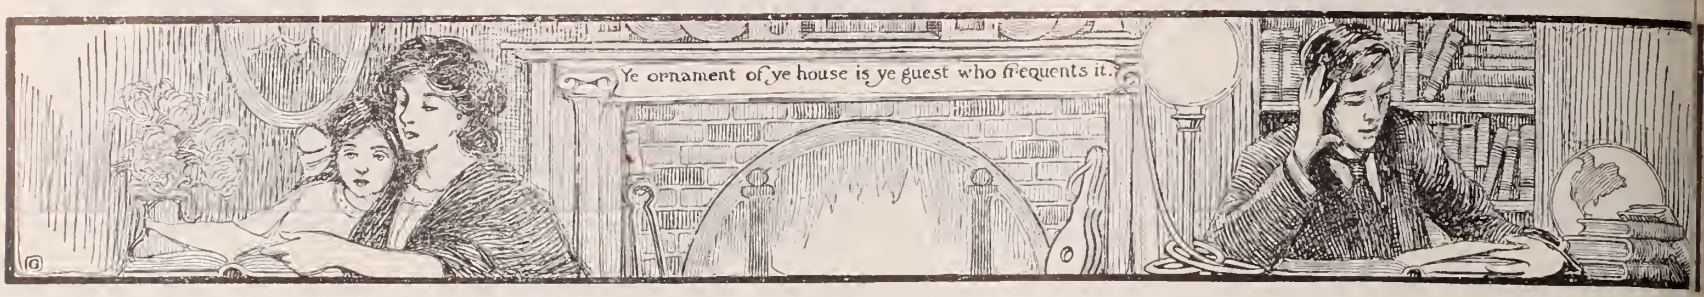
O. E. K., Leesburg, Idaho. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is not a partisan paper. It has on different occasions shown its appreciation of Mr. Bryan, just as it does of other prominent people, when they are factors in the leading events of the day.

Reader. In Grecian mythology, Circe was the daughter of Helios (the Sun) and was famed for magic. She lived in the mysterious isles of Aea to which Odysseus and his companions came, and she turned into swine those whom he first sent to her dwelling. He himself was able to resist her incantations.

M. F., Worcester, Mass. The World Missionary Conference recently held in Edinburgh, was pledged to discuss only foreign missions to "non-Christian lands." This excluded South America, all of Southern Europe, Russia, Armenia, Cuba, Mexico, Bulgaria and the Philippines, which countries hold to the Catholic, Greek and Gregorian faiths, and consequently could not be regarded as "non-Christian," no matter how much they needed missionary effort.

Subscriber, Dayton, O. Your question regarding cremation and resurrection is not a new one, and has given rise to many theories. But these considerations need not trouble the believer, for while the Christian doctrine of the resurrection holds to the identity of the body, it is made clear that it is to be a changed, incorruptible body—a spiritual body (see I. Cor. 15: 35-53), and there is no affirmation that the identity of the constituent parts or particles of the earthly body will be preserved in the spiritual body. All will be changed, yet identity preserved in the new incorruptible form. Such is the interpretation given by leading commentators to the various passages on the subject. This overcomes the difficulty about cremation.

BY THE GLOW OF THE FIRELIGHT



Women in Council

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

ONE of the reasons why we women, whose business it is to be homemakers and housekeepers, should come together and exchange personal experiences from time to time is evident on the surface. The worst thing any of us can do is to get into a rut. Talking one day with a physician, whose practice had been largely among nervous patients, he said to me: "Drudgery and monotony are the twin causes of nervous maladies among women." I ventured to say that I thought most of us could endure drudgery if it had an object which seemed to us worth while; but that monotony when unbroken was undoubtedly very hard to bear. He replied that the monotony of which he was thinking was usually associated with loneliness. Women who lived mainly in their own homes with few outside interests, seeing the same faces, hearing the same voices, preparing meals, washing dishes and darning stockings every day of their lives, were quite likely to break down suddenly. This may be true, and this is why the Woman's Club in a small town or village is a boon to its members. When the women within a neighborhood extending over five or seven miles arrange to meet one another every fortnight, going from one to another house in turn, reading, discussing topics, even exchanging patterns for fancy work and domestic recipes, they really brighten up each other's wits and cheer each other's spirits. Our Women's Council is the same club on a large scale. It belongs to you all, and every one is welcome to draw up a chair by the fire and speak her mind. Letters either short or long are always in order.

Reading for Young Girls "I wish to recommend two books which I think all young girls will enjoy. The general title is 'The Margaret Stories,' and the two which I wish to name are Into Still Waters and The Transformation of Margaret. M. A. S."

The Little Colonel Series, extending over the years of a girl's life from early childhood until her marriage, may safely be recommended to all girls. Two of the "Margaret" stories originally appeared in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Anne of Green Gables and its successor, Anne of Avonlea, are charming. Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm and The Day Before Yesterday are books which girls should like. The Witchbrook Road, by Mrs. Kate Upson Clark, is a story sure to please. Among books which are not fiction let me name as worthy the study of all young girls, The Life and Letters of Louisa M. Alcott and the Memoir of Aliee Freeman Palmer. The Days of June and a Memoir of Aliee Jaekson, published by the F. H. Revell Company, are particularly good in their influence on character. All of the books named may be purchased at any book store.

Is This Quite Fair? The letter which follows outlines a condition which is unfortunately not singular. What do our readers advise in the case?

"I am a young woman, not yet thirty, with a husband and a dear little girl of seven. My husband is a good workman, earning a comfortable income. He does all the wage-earning. He has no vices, but is not ambitious. He is of a thrifty turn, but likes to have all the money to spend on himself that he had before his marriage. He apparently considers it my fault that the money does not go so far for the needs of three as it did for the wants of one when he was a bachelor. I save everything that I can. I do all the work of our home, including the washing and ironing and the sewing for my daughter and myself. I make not only our underclothing, but our outside suits. The only money I spend on Jennie or myself is a small sum per month for magazines, books and stationery. My husband has a passion for moving along. In the nine years of our married life we have moved by train five times, and this constant change of abode eats into our savings. In my husband's last position he remained four years, the last year at my urgent request and much against his will. Ought I to try what I can do to increase the family income? Is there anything I can do? Ought the wife of a man who is strong, well and not yet forty be obliged to earn wages, or has she enough to do in keeping house and caring for her husband and child? C. R. T."

THE TEHUANA MOTHER

Strange the home and even stranger
Is the lady. But no matter
How much you are laughing at her,
Sweet the mother! Naught can change her!
Where the swift Mescala dashes
Dwells this smiling Indian mother;
Comely she as any other,
Though she dwells amid the ashes.

For Sunday Afternoon "If the mother whose problem is to keep her little son happily occupied on Sunday afternoon would provide herself with a copy of Birrell's Sunday Queries, she would find her task greatly lighted. I have used these Queries for years for my own children and their little friends, whom I have often invited in. The children enjoy looking up the answers to these interesting questions. E. R.

This Is Wasted Pity One hears less frequently than formerly an expression of pity for the mother who has many little ones. When the children of a family follow one another in quick succession, the mother's cares are multiplied, but it is almost as easy to look after two or three small children at the same time as to give constant care of one. Compassion is not out of place when the mother has not a sufficient interval for recuperation between the births of her children. Three years is a better interval than two, and is not so long a time that the children cannot enjoy one another. When the space between the coming of children is seven or eight years, they have different interests, different playmates and little in common, and the family bond is necessarily not quite so strong as when they are babies and wee ones in the nursery together.

Comfort in Sorrow One of our friends has sent a poem entitled, "Bereavement," by Cornelia M. Brown. In her own sorrow it proved a comfort to her and she wishes to pass it on. It is a little too long to be printed as a whole, but here is a part:

Had my beloved gone from me,
Beyond the wide and restless sea,
To some fair land with sunny clime—
Though I should miss him all the time,
I would be glad that he was there,
With strength renewed and free from care.

Through all the waking hours of night
And with the early morning light
This grief would not oppress my heart,
These tears of anguish would not start.
I would not be distressed and sad;
For his dear sake I should be glad.

And now that he has gone from me
To dwell beside the crystal sea—
Since he is with the dear ones there,
Where all is beautiful and fair,
My cheeks with tears shall not be wet;
My pain and loss I should forget.

Because with finer, clearer sight
He sees at last the perfect light,
And mysteries that here were sealed
Are to his longing eyes revealed—
Because he is supremely blest,
My troubled heart should be at rest.

Precautions Against Fire Before furnaces are lighted for the winter, the housekeeper who values safety should have the pipes and flues investigated and should not leave to chance any safeguarding within his power. One tiny precaution should be taken by every one. It concerns the match which is lighted and thrown aside, usually, it is true, burned out. Occasionally there is a smouldering bit of flame in the match, and if this happen to fall into a waste basket or a pile of shavings, a heap of excelsior, or on the floor near a flimsy curtain, there may be trouble. Nothing can exceed the rapidity with which an undesired flame rushes onward when it is accidentally lighted. When it is not wanted and its presence is a menace fire burns with terrific speed.

Every heart in this country must have ached at the calamity which has lately swept over Minnesota in the devouring forest fires. We can hardly comprehend what it must be to have whole villages blotted out of existence in a day; thousands of people made homeless and hundreds killed, while to bury the dead and identify them are labors that tax the powers of the bravest. God help the victims of great fires.

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: Have you heard of The Blue Bird? The splendid new fairy tale that the great Belgian poet, Maurice Maeterlinck, has written for you? It brims and bubbles with gnomes, hobgoblins, sprites and witches, a fairy princess, and no end of adventure, and ends—all happy ever after, just as a proper fairy tale should.

If there were room in our Cozy Corner, perhaps we would ask the great story-writer himself to tell us his famous wondertale right here. But the best we can do is to tell some of it and send copies of The Blue Bird to our boys and girls who win first rewards in this week's prize contest.

So start right in and do your level best, my dears, to win, because the story of The Blue Bird is almost the nicest reward of merit that we could offer.

A Little Story Out of The Blue Bird

ONCE upon a little while ago, on Christmas Eve, the wise old dream-fairy, Berylune, found Metyl and Tyltyl, the woodcutter's children, in nightcaps and gowns, huddled against the window of their little cottage room, watching a sumptuous Christmas party at the home of the rich children over the way.

"Have you by any chance. my dears, seen the Blue-Bird-for-Happiness hereabouts?" she piped, hopping across the room like a sleek robin on a lawn. Then suddenly whisking herself into the likeness of good neighbor Berlingot, who lived in the wood nearby, "My little godchild is ill," she explained, "and only a Blue-Bird-for-Happiness can make her well."

"We have no bird here at all, except old Turtle-Dick in the cage in the kitchen," Metyl answered. "We are so sorry Gretchen is ill."

"But perhaps we could go and find one for her," said Tyltyl bravely.

"Come! come! away with you, then!" and the old fairy, quick as wink, picked from out her pocket a magic cap. Promptly fitting it upon Tyltyl's head, she muttered these mysterious words:

"Turn it three times, round, while the clocks are striking eight of the evening, and nary a castle nor stronghold in Wonderland but will open its gates to you," and vanished, while the woodcutter's children, accompanied by a Light Princess, as beautiful as a sunbeam, slipped away into Wonderland in quest of the Blue Bird that would make the fairy's godchild well.

In Magic Gardens and Enchanted Forests and over Wonder Hills they often find a perfect Blue Bird, but always it flies away. There never is one that will be caught; until at last the Light Princess leads the way into the Dream Garden of

They Often Find a Perfect Blue Bird

The Palace of the Night

HERE, as the vast gates swing open in answer to Tyltyl's magic talisman, myriads of fairy Blue Birds are startled and fly hither and thither among Golden Moonbeams that have never left the palace.

"Here! They are here, Metyl, thousands of blue birds at last."

"I am covered with blue birds, little brother. They will fly away with us into the sky. I am frightened."

"Don't be a baby, Metyl; we shall be going home soon," cries Tiltyl, almost angrily. The children in great excitement capture as many birds as their arms will hold.

But the blue birds are frail as fairies and all that they catch fall lifeless from their hands.

"Oh, do not cry, little ones. The Blue Bird which you are seeking has only flown elsewhere, I fancy. Come, we shall find him; never fear." It is the voice of the Light Princess, always urging them onward. The search is very long and grows more and more wonderful every minute; but the Light Princess vanishes at last, and they come home empty-handed.

"We must send our Dicky Blue Bird to Neighbor Berlingot this morning," Mummy Tyl announces cheerily, coming into the room to awaken the children. "Her grandchild is ill and cries for our Turtle-Dick."

"Metyl! Metyl! Dicky is the blue bird we were hunting for. Get up!" shouted Tyltyl, lunging out of bed into Mummy Tyl's lap in an ecstasy of gladness. "Oh, Mummy! we are so happy to be back. Please, Mummy, never let us go away from you again."

"Bless the dears! I hope they are not going to be ill," says Mummy Tyl half aloud to herself, and really very much alarmed.

"Look at their rosy cheeks, my dear; they are not ill; they fell asleep in the moonbeams I reckon," says the wood-cutter, coming in with a fresh whisp of fagots. "Bless me! Bless me! How those children dream! And they have quite forgot it is Christmas morning."

REWARDS OF MERIT

HERE is a chance for you older boys and girls to make some spending money for Christmas. Try your hand at drawing, for our Boys' and Girls' Department, a Heading for December. Make your drawings 14 x 2 or 8 x 2 inches. For the best heading we will give a first prize of $2. For the next five in order of merit we will pay $1 each.

Little People Under Twelve

For a verse or verses, entitled either "Christmas" or "The Brave Tin Soldier," the first prize will be a beautiful "Mistress Mary" paper doll and her costumes. The next ten prizes, in order of merit, are smaller but very beautiful paper dolls.

Prizes for Articles by Boys

SEND an account (in less than three hundred words, with an illustration or diagram) of something you have made yourself.

The first prize will be a watch. Not a plaything. A guaranteed nickel high-grade watch.

The next five prizes awarded in order of merit will be beautiful and appropriate Christmas books.

Send all letters and answers to these contests to Miss Porter, Bible House, New York City, before November 24.

A Word About Our Cozy Corner

THE Young People's Department in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is planned for lively, up-and-at-it boys and girls who know a good thing when they see it.

"Nothing is too good for the children!" is our war cry.

We plan to make this the very best Young People's Department in the world. In order to accomplish this we must get acquainted with one another. Remember, the Editors of The Cozy Corner need the young people as much as the young people need the Editors. So write to us constantly, ask for what you want, and as far as it is possible we shall try to give it to you.

In the Prize Contests send us the best work you can do. In return we will award the best, carefully selected prizes.

All work that is up to the average will receive either a prize or careful criticism.

There will be each month, beside the regular rewards of merit, many supplementary prizes of books, pictures, toys. And remember this: All good work will receive recognition of some kind.

Our Good Night Verse

For this week is from the 18th chapter of St. Matthew:

At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them.

speak to some one in the sitting-room. There followed the sound of a man's voice, speaking at length, and the low-toned murmur of a brief reply.

Vaguely heavy at heart the child walked over to the window and looked out. Hitched to the post near the lilac bushes was a tall bay horse with a cropped tail. Behind the horse was a shining side-bar buggy with red wheels. The horse was stretching his sleek neck in an effort to reach the tender green shoots of the lilac bushes, his cropped tail switching irritably from side to side.

Presently the side door opened and Stephen Jarvis came out quickly, jamming his gray felt hat low upon his forehead. He untied the horse, jerking the animal's head impatiently to one side as he did so, and stepped to the high seat; then at a savage cut of the whip, the horse darted away, the gravel spurting from under his angry hoof-beats. Then Jimmy heard Barbara's step behind him.

The girl stooped, put both arms about the little boy and laid her hot cheek on his. Then she laughed, rather unsteadily.

"Kiss me quick, Jimmy Preston!" she said. "I want to be loved—hard!"

The child threw both arms fervently about his sister's neck. "I love you," he declared circumstantially, "wiv all my outsides an' all my insides! I love you harder 'n anyfing!"

II

Peg (shortened from Peleg) Morrison had worked on the Preston farm for so many years that he appeared almost as much a part of the place as the shabby old house itself or the big rambling structures at its rear known indeterminately as "the barns." He slept over the carriage-house, in quarters originally intended for the coachman. Here also he cooked handily for himself on a rusty old stove, compounding what he called "tried an' tested receipts" out of a queer yellow-leaved book bound in marbled boards, its pages written over in Peg's own scrawling chirography.

"I wouldn't part with that thar book for its weight in gold an' di'mon's," he was in the habit of saying solemnly to Jimmy. "No, Cap'n, I reelly wouldn't. I begun to write down useful info'mation in it when I wasn't much bigger'n you be now, an' I've kep' it up."

"Vallable Information, by Peleg Morrison," was the legend inscribed on its thumbed cover. Jimmy admired this book beyond words, and quite in private had started one of his own on pieces of brown paper accumulated in the attic chamber where he played on rainy days.

"Hello, Cap'n!" observed Peg with a genial smile, as the little boy thrust his yellow head in at the door of his quarters. "Say! I do b'lieve you've growed some since I seen you last. It must be them pop-corn balls, I reckon. Pop-corn's mighty tasty and nourishin'."

"I haven't eaten 'em—not yet!" said Jimmy, breathlessly. "An', Peg, I've got a birfday cake—an' it's got six candles on it, an' one to grow on; an'—an' it's all pink on top—an' we want you to come to supper, 'cause it's my birfday. Barb'ra said to tell you. An' I'm goin' t' blow the candles out when we're through wiv supper!"

"Wall, now, Cap'n, that surely is kind of Miss Barb'ry. But you see I ain't got my comp'ny clo'es on. M' swallow-tail coat's got the rear buttons off, an' m' high collar 'n biled shirt's to m' wash-lady's."

Peg winked humorously at Jimmy, in token that his remarks were to b interpreted as being in a purely joc lar vein.

"But I'll tell you, Cap'n, I'll mos in 'long 'bout time you get t' the cak I wouldn't miss seein' them candl blowed out fer anythin'. An' that r minds me, I've got a little present f you, seein' you're six, goin' on seve an' big an' hefty fer your age. Je you clap yer eyes into that an' tell n what you think of it."

"Oh, Peg!" gasped Jimmy, in rapture too deep and pervasive f words, "is it—a val'able inf'mati book?"

"That's what it is, Cap'n," chuckl Peg, holding off the book and gazi at it with honest pride. "Y' see couldn't find th' mate to mine in look but this 'ere red cover beats mine holler, an' you see I've put 'Vallab Information by James Embury Pre ton' on it in handsome red letters. Ta it, boy, an' don't put nothin' into it won't be true an' useful, is the pray o' Peg Morrison."

The old man's tone was solemn a his blue eyes gleamed suddenly moi in the midst of their network wrinkles.

"I—I'd like to shake hands, Peg said Jimmy fervently, "I'm too big a hefty to kiss people for thank yo But I like this book better'n anyfing I mean anyfing."

He put out his small brown hand which babyish dimples still lingere and the old man grasped and shook solemnly.

"You're more'n welcome, Cap'n he said heartily. "An' thinkin' might like to set down a few sen ments I got you a bottle o' red ink a a new steel pen. I like red ink m'se It makes a handsome page."

Barbara knit her fine dark brows little over the birthday book with i quaint inscription.

"I shouldn't like you to suppose th was the way to spell valuable inform tion," she said crisply. "Suppose put another card over this one, dea I'll write it for you."

Jimmy pondered this proposal silence for a few minutes, then shook his head.

"I want my book to be 'zactly li Peg's," he said firmly. "It's a vall ble inf'mation book; that's what it is

He kept it by him all the while th were eating their supper—off the pi and white china Grandfather Embu brought from foreign parts, while t seven candles cast bright lights a wavering shadows across the table the boy's rosy little face and the gir darker beauty.

They had almost finished eati when a sound of hard knuckles ca tiously applied to the back kitch door announced Mr. Morrison, attir in his best suit of rusty black, h abundant iron-gray hair, ordinari standing up around his ruddy, goo humored face like a halo, severe plastered down with soap and water.

"Good evenin', Cap'n," he said cer moniously, "I hope you fin' yourse in good health on this 'ere auspicio occasion, sir; an' you, too, Miss Bar ry, as a near relation of the Cap'n I hope I see you well an'—an' happ ma'am."

"See my cake, Peg," shouted Jimm capering wildly about the old ma "See the candles."

Peg pretended to shade his eyes fro the overpowering illumination. "Wa now, I mus' say!" he exclaimed. " that ain't wo'th coverin' ten mile o' b goin' t' see."

eg. "Give 'em a good one, that's ght! Now the nigh on's gone; but at off candle's a sticker. I dunno hether you'll fetch that one or not, ap'n."

The child drew in a mighty breath, s puffed cheeks flushing to a brilliant arlet, and blew with all his might. he flame of the one lighted candle aned, flared sidewise and disap- eared, leaving a light wreath of noke behind.

"There! I blowed 'em out, all by yself," he exulted. "I've got a strong ind in my breaf; haven't I, Peg?"

"I declar', I'd hate to have you try on the roof o' the barn, Cap'n. The ose shingles'd fly, I bet," Peg assured m jocularly.

Barbara was cutting the cake, her oubled eyes bent upon her task. Mr. lorrison glanced at her anxiously.

"I seen a rig hitched out t' the side oor this aft'noon," he said slowly. 'Twa'n't a—a sewin'-machine agent, as it, Miss Barb'ry?"

"No," said the girl shortly; her look orbade further questions.

"I'll tell you who 'twas, Peg," said immy sociably, as he began to nibble he edges of his slice of cake. "It was he Hon'rable Stephen Jarvis. An' is horse's tail is cut off short so't an't switch 'round, an' it makes him ross. I guess it would make me some ross, too, if I was a horse. Wouldn't t make you, Peg?"

"I reckon 't would, Cap'n," said the ld man, fetching a heavy sigh for no pparent reason. He turned to Bar- ara, whose red lips were set in an xpression of haughty reserve.

"If I'd 'a knowed 't was the Hon'ra- le Stephen Jarvis fer certain," he vent on with an effort after careless ase of manner, "I b'lieve I'd a took he opportunity to talk over crops with im fer a spell. We're goin' to have first-rate crop o' buckwheat this ear, an' winter wheat's lookin' fine. he'd ought to be plenty of apples, too, pruned the trees an' manured 'em eavy last fall."

"Barbara turned her back abruptly n pretense of pulling down a window hade. "I'll speak to you to-morrow— bout the work," she said in a hard oice.

III

After Jimmy had said his prayers nd been tucked up in bed, tired but appy, the book of "Vallable Info'ma- ion" under his pillow, Barbara sat for a while by the open window in the dusk of the April night. The wind had gone down since sunset, and in the stillness she could hear the "peepers" singing in the distant marshes and the soft roar of the river, filled to its brim with the melted snows from the hills.

Her thoughts went back to the day when her father, then a proud, hand- some man in his prime, had brought his new wife to the farm. Her own passionately mourned mother seemed strangely forgotten in the joy of the home-coming and the girl had resented it in the dumb, pathetic fashion of childhood. After a little, though, she had come to love the gentle creature who had won her father's heart. There followed a few happy years, regret- fully remembered through a blur of tears, when the little mother, as Bar- bara learned to call her, filled the old house to overflowing with sunshine. Then on an April night when the river lifted up its plaintive voice in the still- ness that fell after a wild, windy day, Jamie came, and the little mother went—hastily, as if summoned out of the dark by some voice unheard by the others. Barbara remembered well the night of her going, and of how, with a last effort, she had lifted the tiny baby and placed him in her strong young arms.

"Love—him, dear," whispered the failing voice. Then she had smiled once, as if with a great content, and was gone.

Jimmy's voice broke sleepily through these bitter-sweet memories.

"Barb'ra!" he called, "are you there? I forgot somethin'."

"What did you forget, dear?" asked the girl, going to his bed.

"It was—a—a—letter," murmured the drowsily-sweet little voice. "I—forgot——"

"Jimmy," said Barbara the next morning, "what did you do with my letter?"

Jimmy eyed his small coat uncer- tainly.

"It was in this pocket," he decided; "I 'member the letter stuck out, 'cause it was too long."

"Did you come straight home from the post office?" demanded Barbara. "Did you, Jimmy?"

Jimmy reflected.

"I walked along," he said, "an' 'nen I looked in through the fence to see the deer an' the shiny blue round things— you know, Barb'ra; when the sun shines you c'n see——"

"I know," said the girl with a touch of impatience.

"An' 'nen I saw the horse wiva short tail come out, an' I——"

"You must have dropped the letter somewhere along the road," inter- rupted his sister.

"Uh-huh! I guess I did," assented the culprit. "But I didn't mean to, Barb'ra. Truly, I didn't."

The girl controlled herself with an effort.

"Of course you didn't mean to, dar- ling," she said, kissing the rosy mouth, which had begun to droop dolefully at the corners. "Perhaps it was just an advertisement, anyway, and not worth bothering over. I'll walk along with you and see if we can find it."

But the letter, snugly hidden under a clump of unfolding fern, gave no token of its presence as the two walked slowly past it, their eyes searching the road and the tangled growths on either side.

Barbara walked swiftly to the post office, after she had left Jimmy at the schoolhouse. It had occurred to her that some one might have returned the missing letter to the office.

Al Hewett, when questioned, shook his head.

"Nope," he said; "the' ain't nobody brought it here. I remember the let- ter all right; I happened to notice the postmark. It was f'om Tombstone, Arizony. Know anybody out there?"

"No," said Barbara, turning away.

Two or three women looking over dress goods at the counter turned to look after the slim figure in its black dress.

"She don't 'pear to see common folks any better'n her father did," said one, with a spiteful laugh.

"Well, I don't see 's she's got much to be stuck up about," put in another. "What with her father drinkin' him- self to death, an'——"

"Was that what ailed him?" in- quired a newcomer in the neighbor- hood. "I remember he was buried a year ago last winter, just after we moved here. But I never heard he was a drinking man."

"None of us suspicioned it for quite a spell," explained the first speaker volubly. "Donald Preston was too awful stylish and uppity to go to the tavern an' get drunk like common folks; he used to sen' for his liquor f'om out of town. The best of brandy, so they say; then he'd drink an' drink till he was dead to the world, shut up in his room. He kind of lost his mind 'long toward the last, they say. He lived more'n two years that way b'fore he finally died."

"She didn't take care of him like that, did she?"

"Yes, she did. Her an' the hired

The Simplest Gown looks well on a Figure of Correct Proportion if Carried Well.

"If You Want

Real Health and a

Study with Miss Cocroft."

(This is from one of my pupils to a friend)

My pupils are among the most refined, intellectual women of America. They have regained health and good figures and learned how to keep well. Each has given me a few minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to following scientific, hygenic principles of health, prescribed to suit each individual's needs.

No Drugs—No Medicines

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense.

Be Well—nothing short of well.

Radiate Health so that every one with whom you come in contact is permeated with your strong spirit, your wholesome personality—feels better in body and mind for your very presence.

Be Attractive—well groomed.

Improve Your Figure—in other words be at your best. You wield a stronger influence for good, for education, for wholesome right living, if you are attractive and well, graceful and well poised—upright in body as well as in mind—and you are happier.

I want to help every woman to realize that her health lies, to a degree, in her own hands, and that she can reach her ideal in figure and poise.

Judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I have corrected more

Chronic Ailments and built up and reduced more women during the past nine years than any ten physicians—the best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils

Reduced about 25,000 women from 10 to 85 lbs. I have rounded out and Increased the Weight of as many more—all this by strengthening nerves, heart, circulation, lungs and vital organs so as to regulate the assimilation of food.

Won't you join us?—we will make you and the world better.

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement of health and figure through natural means.

Sit down and write to me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it.

I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

man; an' I guess they had their hands full part the time."

The subject of these manifold revelations and censures was walking rapidly down the village street. She stopped short at the end of the sidewalk, as Jimmy had done the day before.

"I don't suppose there's any use," she thought, her eyes fixed on the imposing front which the Jarvis residence presented to the public gaze. "But I'll try, anyway. If he'd give me a year—or even six months longer, I'm sure I could get the interest paid up."

A sour-faced woman opened the door.

Mr. Jarvis was at home, she informed Barbara, "but he's busy," she added importantly. "The' can't nobody see him this mornin' an' he's goin' away to-morrow."

"Then I must see him," Barbara said firmly. "Tell Mr. Jarvis that Miss Preston would like to see him."

Stephen Jarvis had spent several hours shut up in his library that morning, during which period he had opened and examined his mail, read the morning papers, published in a neighboring city, and the county papers, one of which he owned, and whose editorial utterances he controlled. His gaze still lingered frowningly upon the page when there came a dubious tap upon the panels of the door.

"What d' you want?" demanded Jarvis sharply, as he recognized the intruder. "I thought I told you not to disturb me this morning."

"Well, I told her so; but she wouldn't go away," the woman apologized. "I guess 'f I let her stan' there till she's good an' tired o' waitin', she'll——"

"Kindly acquaint me with the name of the person who wishes to see me, Mrs. Dumser," interrupted Jarvis with a quick choleric lift of the hand.

"Its that Preston girl," the woman said sullenly. "I told her you was busy and——"

"Show her in at once," her employer ordered briefly. His mouth, long, straight, expressionless, and shaded by a closely clipped mustache, tightened as Barbara Preston entered.

He glanced at her sharply and the girl sank into a chair opposite the desk without waiting to be asked.

The light from the long French windows fell full upon the slender young figure in its plain back gown, and her face, seen against the sombre background afforded by rows of leather-bound law-books, appeared vividly alive, defiantly youthful, like a spray of peach blossoms against a leaden sky.

"You wish to see me, I believe," said Jarvis, "What can I do for you?"

She met his gaze unflinchingly.

"I have come," she said, "to see if you will give me a little more time. It is going to be a good apple year, and—and I'll work—hard to save the farm."

Her eyes darkened and widened; a quick color sprang to lips and cheeks, as when a flag is suddenly unfurled to the wind.

He lifted his eyebrows.

"I thought we discussed that matter pretty thoroughly yesterday afternoon," he said. "I can think of nothing more to say on the subject."

"But," she persisted, "I don't intend to give the farm up. I—can't."

He was silent. But his look angered her unreasonably.

"You don't want it!" she burst out with sudden hot indignation. "You've got most of the farms about here now, and you'll have the others in time, I suppose!"

"You appear to know a good deal about my business," he said ironically. "But you're right. I don't want the Preston farm. I don't want any of 'em. Why should I? Most of them are like yours, worn out, worthless. But the owners want my money—your father did. And I let him have what he asked for. I might have refused. But I let him have a thousand dollars, and he took it, did as he liked with it—drank it up, for all I know. And now you come here begging——"

The girl sprang to her feet; her gray eyes blazed angrily upon him.

"I'm not begging!" she cried. "All I want is the chance to pay you—every cent, and I could do it—I will do it."

"Perhaps you will tell how you are going about it," he said coldly.

She sank back into her chair.

"Yes;" she said slowly. "I am—begging. I am begging for time. Give me another year—give me this summer, and let me—try!"

He was studying the girl's passionate face with a curious interest. A singular idea had presented itself to him, and he was considering it half mockingly. Nevertheless it lent a human sound to his voice as he answered her.

"See here, Miss Preston," he said. "I admire your pluck and energy. But let me tell you that you don't want to hold on to that farm. Its a losing fight, and you'd better give it up—peaceably."

"But I want it," she urged, "for Jimmy. I want to hold the place for him. He'll soon grow up, and—he's the last of the Prestons."

She stopped short and sprang to her feet, with a little gasp of angry protest.

"You are laughing at me!" she cried indignantly. "You have no right——"

She was mistaken: Stephen Jarvis seldom indulged in laughter; but his hard-set mouth had relaxed somewhat under his clipped mustache.

"Don't get excited," he advised her coolly. "Sit down and we'll talk this over. You want to keep the farm for that half brother of yours, you say. Well, I'm disposed to give it to you to do as you like with, if you——"

"You'll give me time to try?" she asked breathlessly. "Oh, thank you!"

He answered her impetuous question with another. "Did you notice the person who showed you in? Yes; I see you did. Well, she's my housekeeper. But I—well, I'm tired of seeing the woman about. I shall need somebody to take her place, and—Stop! I want you to hear me out."

But Barbara had already closed the door definitely behind her. The woman in black silk stood just outside. She had, in fact, been listening.

"Well!" she breathed explosively, staring at Barbara. Then she rustled toward the front door, her ample draperies filling the narrow twilight passage with a harsh, swishing sound.

"You better not show your face here again!" she said in a low, fierce voice, as she held the door wide for Barbara to pass out.

Bowery Mission Trophies

The Duelist

THE following extraordinary testimony has been sent in by a man who is at present an inmate of the Craig Colony for Epileptics, Sonyea, N. Y. He is well known at the Bowery Mission, where the eighth anniversary of his conversion was celebrated in his absence on Sunday evening, October 2. Pronounced an incurable epileptic, and almost blind, he has lived a noble life for several years. His faith in God's love and promises is wonderfully simple and pathetic. His life is a monumental testimony to God's power to save to the uttermost.

I was born on the 5th of October at Dantzig, Province of West Prussia, Germany. My parents were pious and, living in excellent circumstances, lived in good style. Every Sunday morning my father held a short religious house service in which all the members of the family, such guests as might be visiting us, and all the servants participated.

My father's firm played quite an important role in the German business world from 1846 to 1864. My father owned two important baronial estates and four sailing vessels, and exported, besides his own grain, the produce of the estates of many other large landowners.

In 1865 my parents removed from Dantzig to Berlin. It was my father's desire that his children should play an important part in society, and for this purpose he kept us liberally supplied with money. All too soon, I found myself in the midst of the whirlpool of life.

In 1867, at the time of the great International Exposition, I visited Paris for a short time. In 1869 I entered upon my first position as an apprentice to the Royal Counsellor of Commerce, a business friend of my father's, and remained with him until 1873, when I was transferred to their London office. In the course of two years I was promoted to be manager of that office.

In 1876 the Fire Insurance Company launched out for business into Russia, establishing an agency in Moscow, and I was selected to take charge of that office. In 1877 my grandfather, having died and having left me a legacy, I was called to Germany to take part in the settlement of his estate. In Russia I had made many friends, and because of this I returned to Russia, and with the money I had inherited, I established a business of my own in St. Petersburg in company with a well-informed partner. Our business prospered until 1881, when the Czar was assassinated. Our factory was destroyed, being set on fire and burned to the ground.

Returning to my native country I made a number of attempts to establish myself again, but without success. Finally I entered into my father's employ and my knowledge of Russia and the Russian tongue was of great value to him. My father undertook the negotiations of a number of important loans. One of these, for Prince Alexander of Battenberg, the reigning Prince of Bulgaria, amounting to 10,000,000 francs, because of Russian intrigues and conspiracies, collapsed; that another, for 9,000,000 marks, for Prince Peter Sain Wittgenstein, a relative of the Russian imperial house, was consummated.

As agent for the various bankers interested in these loans, I once more visited Russia, my negotiations carrying me into Bulgaria and even Turkey. In 1885 my father, with other financiers, founded in Hamburg a packet transport company and I was appointed vice-president of the company. I was on the high road to prosperity. In 1886 I made the acquaintance of a young lady, who, though of good family, was to be my ruin. Our engagement had been announced, and we were the envied of all, when she deceived me and thus became the indirect cause of my coming to America.

At this time I was an officer in the German army. Every able-bodied German subject when he arrives at the age of conscription is required to give three of the best years of his life to active military service. I had passed into the second half of my service and held the rank of a subaltern officer. As such I was privileged to visit the officers' casinos, or clubs. Upon the occasion of one of these visits to one of the casinos I noticed a group of officers of rank deeply in their cups. One of their number in particular was boasting and mentioned the name of the lady to whom I was engaged. He calumniated her and spoke of her in derision. Incensed at the insult, I walked up to him, dashed a beaker of wine into his face, calling him at the time such epithets as he deserved. He was a captain in the Imperial Regiment of Guards, and an adjutant of the Emperor. I had desecrated the imperial uniform. The only satisfaction for this was a duel. The matter was speedily arranged on the spot. My antagonist—Baron ——, a member of one of the most aristocratic families of the Empire—had the good fortune to draw for first fire and, in delivering it, wounded me slightly only in the left temple. I also aimed at my antagonist's temple, but, instead of simply wounding him as I intended, my bullet penetrated his temple, entered the brain and he was mortally injured.

The Emperor learned of the affair and was so incensed that I was arbitrarily sentenced to five years' imprisonment in a military fortress.

My older brother, a first lieutenant in the army, heard of the orders before they were promulgated and he hurriedly communicated the news to me. I lost no time in making my escape. I made my way disguised to Hamburg, and ultimately landed in the United States.

A very reckless life I led after leaving the parental roof in Germany, and such a thought as seeking the care and the comfort and the aid of God never entered my mind. Truth to say, religion was to me but a jest. Home, position, the woman I loved, and who was to be my wife, all lost, and the knowledge that I had taken the life of one of my fellow-men (the baron died of his wound a month after the duel); these thoughts pursued me incessantly, robbed me of all peace of mind and made life a burden. To forget, I sought oblivion in drink. I continued in this course until 1888, when I was taken down with typhoid fever. After my recovery from the fever I became a victim of epilepsy. My mother had been afflicted with this terrible malady since her childhood. The doctors after a time concluded that I was suffering from epilepsy in an incurable form.

My malady may indeed be beyond the reach of the physicians of this world, but of one thing I am assured —and to this assurance I was brought through the teachings of good Dr. Hallimond and the other workers of the Bowery Mission—that to the "Great Physician" nothing is impossible, and in him I put my trust and my faith. He is my comfort and my hope!

I visited the Bowery Mission for the first time as the result of an acquaintance with Victor Benke, the former organist, now dead. He was the indirect cause of my own conversion, which occurred on October 2, 1902, and I will say that I shall never cease to be grateful to him and to his memory as long as I live.

The Bowery Mission became an inexpressible blessing to me. There I not only found my beloved Master and Saviour, but many other blessings were showered upon me within its walls, and through its kindly ministrations and good offices.

15 YEARS HERE

DEWEY, STRONG & CO., San Francisco, Cal., Aug 10, 1910.
MESSRS. OSTERMOOR & CO.
Gentlemen—It is about fifteen years since I received from you a wonderfully comfortable Ostermoor Mattress. Although we have had an earthquake since then, the mattress is still in use, in first-class condition, giving satisfactory service. I take pleasure in enclosing a photograph of my house, 271 Lee St., Oakland, Cal., where that Ostermoor Mattress is a most valued possession. Very truly,
G. H. STRONG.

Built — Not Stuffed
Ostermoor $15.

When buying a mattress, the real question is, "How is it made—what record of service is behind it? Never listen to mere claims. Demand proof!

Then you discover the difference between the Ostermoor Mattress and imitations—for the Ostermoor is built, not stuffed.

We challenge any other mattress in the world to produce letters from actual users showing service of terms of years up to half a century, with the mattress as comfortable today as when new. Ostermoor offers such proof.

In the face of this overwhelming proof of quality—proof in advance of what the Ostermoor will do for you—can you feel justified in accepting an inferior imitation when you know that an imitation can give you nothing more than an imitation of satisfaction.

For genuine service be sure you get the genuine Ostermoor—our trademark is your protection. Costs no more than the "just as good" kind.

144-Page Book WITH SAMPLES Free

The Ostermoor is not for sale at stores generally, but there's an Ostermoor dealer in most places—usually the livest merchant in town. Write us and we'll give his name.

We will ship you a mattress by express, prepaid, same day your check is received, where we have no dealer, or he has none in stock.

MORE THAN EVER

Increased Capacity for Mental Labor Since Leaving Off Coffee.

Many former coffee drinkers who have mental work to preform, day after day, have found a better capacity and greater endurance by using Postum instead of ordinary coffee. An Illinois woman writes.

"I had drank coffee for about twenty years, and finally had what the doctor called 'coffee heart.' I was nervous and extremely despondent; had little mental or physical strength left, had kidney trouble and constipation.

"The first noticeable benefit derived from the change from coffee to Postum was the natural action of the kidneys and bowels. In two weeks my heart action was greatly improved and my nerves steady.

"Then I became less despondent, and the desire to be active again showed proof of renewed physical and mental strength.

"I am steadily gaining in physical strength and brain power. I formerly did mental work and had to give it up on account of coffee, but since using Postum I am doing hard mental labor with less fatigue than ever before."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville, in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Farmer Folk of Portugal

THE peasant and small farmer has had practically no active part in the present revolution, which was carried through by one wing of the army and the republicans of Lisbon. He is not interested in politics, and would not care to be bothered with political discussion. He is always ready to "let well enough alone," and does not see why his compatriots in the city do not feel the same way. The country people are contented. Most of them own their small farms. In fact, in northern Portugal it is rare that a laborer does not own a plot of ground on which to grow his vegetables and also a few of the bright colored flowers which so delight his eye.

In the country districts a peasant plodding home to supper will not think he has done much out of the ordinary if he goes a mile out of the way to set you on your right road. He expects no reward, and the idea that a "tip" should be forthcoming for an act of civility, though a generous one, has not permeated the country districts. If you happen by when he has sat himself down by a wayside tree to eat his noon lunch he will offer you half of his bread and oil, and will be pleased if you accept it in the same spirit of friendliness with which he offered it.

A good part of the farm work is performed by the women, who see no reason why they should regard digging, hoeing and plowing as the work of men alone. The man who owns a few acres of land will often leave its cultivation to his wife and daughters, while he labors as carpenter, stone mason, or cooper, for cask-making is one of their important industries. He also likes to get a job as a waiter in one of the numerous hotels at seaside resorts, for the country has thousands of Continental and English visitors. Women share in the heavy work of the cities as well. There are female porters, laborers on the docks, market tenders, and even women coal-heavers, fishermen, or rather fisherwomen, and sailors. They are as strong and hardy as their husbands and brothers and seem to stand long hours and hard labor as well. Of course it rather takes away the glamour of romance when one sees a young woman with finely chiseled features and beautiful black eyes, digging with spade and mattock or heaving a basket of coal into a ship's hold with as much ease as the American girl plays tennis and golf. They seem happy under what we would consider hard conditions, so the reformer would probably have his labor for his pains if he suggested a change in this department of Portuguese national existence.

The Portuguese country people, as a usual thing, have great physical durance, doubtless as a result of "survival of the fittest" for many g erations. The laundry workers are example of this. People come in fr long distances to get soiled clothes city customers. The clothes will placed in big panniers on the fam donkey and the peasants will st back late in the afternoon. Some them will travel all night and it w be sun-up before they reach th homes many miles from Lisbon Oporto. A day or two later they trudging back to deliver the clot now spotlessly clean, and to get other lot from some other patr Many a countryman and his wife t a jaunt of fifteen miles or more, wh make one think that there might many who could rival the feats Weston and O'Leary as walkers, they tried.

The Advertiser to the Rescue

A SHORT time ago we received a communication from one of our reade who stated that as a result of an advertisement in THE CHRISTIAN HERA several years ago he had invested some money in a financial propositi In the meantime hard times had come upon him and he wrote us asking if thought the advertiser would be willing to refund the amount of money whi this subscriber had paid.

The advertiser expressed the opinion that our subscriber was very foolish desire his money back at the present time, inasmuch as the property owned him would most certainly rise in value within a few years. Our subscriber, ho ever, stated that the ready cash at once would be worth more to him than larger amount in the future, whereupon the advertiser very promptly sent t amount of money paid, together with all expenses which the property h incurred in the meantime.

This shows the quality of the reputable advertiser. Not only did tl advertiser have faith in his own proposition, but he was desirous of having o subscriber reap the benefit of the natural increase which might have come to h could he have but waited a while longer; and, this being impossible, the adv tiser was willing to pay back to his customer all the money which that custom had paid in.

Of course it would have been better if the subscriber could have wait In the meantime, however, he has not lost any money whatever. The investme was paid for on the instalment plan. Had it not been for the investment, tl subscriber might not have been able to raise as large a sum of money as he w able to secure in his hour of trouble.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in TH CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscrib who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to t advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the da of the appearance of the advertisement.

The "Good Man of Jolkina"

F you wish to locate the town of Jolkina on the map, you must look r it somewhat east of Moscow, the cient capital of Russia. The near- t railroad station is called Karlovo. etween the station and the town is a ctory, employing thousands of work- gmen. The surrounding towns are nsely populated.

If a stranger comes to Jolkina, he ll hear, doubtless with astonish- ent, the children cry; "Thomas! homas!" An older person here and ere will also say: "Thomas!"

The fact is that in Jolkina lives a ussian ex-priest, named Thomas asakoff, and when a stranger arrives, the people now take for granted that some one is coming to visit him. For whom should a foreigner visit but Thomas? He has accepted the faith of the foreigners and is propagating their doctrines. When a Catholic begins to waver in his convictions, he always goes to Thomas. When some one has a grievance with his priest, he threatens: "I will go to Thomas."

Thomas, to whom every one in Jolkina looks up as to one who is either a dangerous antagonist or a blessed leader, was only two or three years ago the priest and spiritual father of the town. He was honored and loved by all, and had a good post in every way, until he began to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ to his people. After that the church excommunicated him and refused to pay him his salary, which amounted to 300 rubles per month. People began to persecute him. He, a man of sixty, took the spade and earned his own living by digging ditches. He kept on this hard labor till he was taken sick and had to be sent to a hospital. After his recovery, he went about with his wife, peddling thread, buttons, cloth, etc., making just enough to keep from starvation. Some sympathized with him, and by degrees he won a following of men and women who listened to him and became more friendly to him. Some were converted and these converts organized a church with the ex-priest as their leader and pastor and his house was their meeting-place. And so the old ex-priest struggles amid poverty and hardships, but firm in the new faith to which he was won over so strangely. His teaching has been greatly blessed and he is no longer depressed, but to many is the most beloved and respected man in Jolkina. Having accomplished so much under adverse conditions, what might he not do even yet, if he had substantial support for his ministry?

His Better Self

By THOMAS JAYHEWS

A Better Book cannot be obtained For the Young Man or Woman

In whose character, welfare and success in life you are concerned. It is also interesting and helpful to older readers --- a story that is human, realistic, novel, full of practical subjects, presenting an ideal of life in harmony with Christian precepts.

"Its great attraction is found in its realism, in its homely, human appeal."—Minneapolis Tribune.

"One of the most helpful stories of this season's issue."—Grand Rapids Herald.

"The tale is a present day story, and subjects of vital interest to every progressive man and woman are dealt with in a masterly way. Unless you are in the rut, or have reached the period in life where further advancement is neither desirable nor possible, His Better Self will do you good."—New York Tribune.

"A story of stirring adventure, to which love adds spice. His Better Self is well worth reading. Mr. Thomas has done a good piece of work."—San Francisco Bulletin.

but earnest affirmations again answered her. "Is there not one more who will promise?" The man whom she had considered the hardest responded, "I will try." "And will you take Jesus Christ for your Saviour?" "I will try."

Behold how much good can come from a little seed sown in Christ's name! Mrs. Smith's own experience is another illustration. She was fond of the world and its gaieties; passing through Atlanta, she attended a service at the Second Baptist Church; something said awakened her deeper spiritual nature; and she at once gave up all to work for Christ. One incident she told me of will, I think, specially please the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"My aunt in Connecticut," she said, "has been taking THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for years. Now she sends me bundles of them for distribution. So, in the Tower, you will see the moonshiners reading that paper. I carry literature to my friends in the Tower, but I am careful to take only the best and most helpful things."

Dr. White tells me that the temperance sentiment is very strong in the mountains; that there is growing opposition to moonshining, the better classes realizing that it is wrong and a peril in every sense to the community in which an illicit still may exist, however secretly. There are more arrests by the government now than heretofore, but the reason of this is not so much that more moonshining is done, but that opposition to it is on the increase and detection is easier.

A Mother in Israel

MRS. THOMASINA CARTER, mother of Rev. William Carter, D.D., pastor of Madison Avenue Reformed Church, New York, died in St. Helen, Mich., Friday, October 21, in the eighty-first year of her age. Mrs. Carter was born in Tavistock, County Devon, England, in 1829, and was married in 1847 to Joseph Carter of the same county. She was the mother of eleven children, of whom nine survive. One other of the sons is a minister and is pastor of the Methodist Church at Frontier, Mich. Three other sons live at St. Helen, Mich., and one unmarried daughter, the other three daughters living respectively in Canton, Ill.; Benld, Ill., and Baltimore, Md. Mrs. Carter was left a widow at Houghton-le-Spring, County Durham, England, thirty-one years ago, and came four years later to this country with her large family, settling in Streator, Ill., and moving from thence five years ago to St. Helen, Mich., where three of her sons are developing large timber claims and settling communities from other States upon them.

Mother of such a family, and widowed for so many years, she was one who had many cares and responsibilities thrust upon her which she always bravely met with the strongest Christian faith and fortitude. She was indeed one of those rare Christians who combined faith with works to a remarkable degree. She had literary instinct as well as insight, broad mental vision and a grasp of intellectual things that comes not so much from the schools as from a heart-directed, soul-moved mind. Her chief joy and strength, however, was in the life that is hid with Christ, and it was in this that she continually trusted and rejoiced. This trust in God and the desire to leave everything with him was never better expressed than in the tender poem her own hand penned and gave to her children on her eighteenth birthday.

"Dear Saviour, I am weary,
And my life is incomplete,
But I bring the tangled meshes
And lay them at Thy feet;
Thou'lt unravel all the tangle,
And straighten out each thread,
And what I've failed in weaving,
Thou wilt make a perfect web.

"Thou knowest I intended
To make my life complete,
But heavy grow my hands and heart,
And weary grow my feet;
Still I'm trusting in Thy merits,
And Thy words so true and sweet,
Thou'lt accept 'the willing spirit.'
Although 'the flesh is weak.'

"Dear Saviour, I will trust Thee,
For Thy weary feet have trod
The rough and thorny pathway
Which leads me up to God;
And by Thy precious life and death
I'm freed from every sin,
I'm only waiting, now, to hear
Thy welcome call, 'Come in.'"

This Picture, "An Autumn Reverie,"

FREE TO YOU FOR A FAVOR

THE Cover Page of our October 26 issue, "An Autumn Reverie," was so favorably received that we have decided to print a number of artist's proofs of the picture for distribution to those of our readers desiring them. We reproduce here a miniature of the picture, which does not by any means even suggest the beauty of the original. Look up your October 26 issue now so that you will have a good idea of the picture we propose to send to you in return for a favor. The picture is 13½ inches high by 11 inches wide. It will be printed on plate paper, in the Autumn colors of dark brown with the dress of the pretty girl subject in light brown, just enough contrast to make a most pleasing effect. There will be no advertisements on the front or back of this picture; it is to be printed especially to accommodate those readers who would like additional copies for their friends, or for wall decorations.

Eloquent Silence of Jesus*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

LET those who read this lesson, either stand in front of the clock or have a watch in hand to turn the hands as each incident is given connected with the arrest and trials of Jesus. (Not only the trial before Caiaphas will be noted, but the other trials as well, as no other lesson is assigned for them.) Between midnight and one o'clock Friday morning, Judas with his band comes to the Garden of Gethsemane, arrests Jesus and takes him to the palace of the high priest. "Then all of the disciples left him and fled" (Matt. 26: 56 R. V.). But Peter followed him afar off" (v. 58). We read of one, not an apostle, who continued with him: "A certain young man followed with him, having a linen cloth cast about him (his upper garment) and they laid hold on him, but he left the linen cloth [cloak] and fled naked" (without the upper garment). This is the account Mark gives of himself (Mark 14: 51, 52). Mark's presence is to be explained by the probability that Judas with his band went first to the house of Mark, where he thought Jesus and the apostles were still at the supper. Undoubtedly Mark followed from his home Judas and his band as they proceeded to Gethsemane.

Christ Before the High Priest

Towards two o'clock Friday morning, Jesus was brought by Judas and his band to the palace of the high priest. The Roman soldiers, who had acted as hirelings, then returned to their quarters in the Castle Antonia, which was adjacent to the temple. There were in reality two high priests, Annas, the past grand—a man over seventy years of age, still enjoying all the dignity of the office and also its influence, as he had power to promote as his successors those most closely connected with him. And there was Caiaphas, the son-in-law of Annas, who was the nominal high priest. Jesus was brought both before Annas and Caiaphas; presumably both lived in the same palace.

Two of the apostles followed Jesus to the palace of the high priest, one of them more closely than the other. In John's Gospel we read: "Simon Peter followed Jesus, and so did another disciple. Now that disciple was known unto the high priest, and entered with Jesus into the court of the high priest; but Peter was standing at the door without" (John 18: 15, 16). "And so he who leaned on Jesus' breast at the Supper" (John 21: 20) was still the closest to him in the hour of his extremity. John, seeing Peter at the door, obtained permission for Peter to enter the court.

Towards three or four o'clock Friday morning, as the first streaks of the dawn were showing, Jesus was taken before the Sanhedrists, who were gathered together awaiting their prisoner. Jesus was their prisoner because they had paid Judas thirty pieces of silver to apprehend him. The Sanhedrists were assembled either in the house of Caiaphas, or in the hall of the Sanhedrin, a part of the temple. Probably they were met in the high priest's palace, as it was not legal to hold a regular meeting of the Sanhedrin during the night hours. But if the trial of a prisoner had gone on all through the day, sentence might be passed at night, but no trial might be commenced in the night. And so we may consider Jesus' trial before the Sanhedrin as a part of his trial before Caiaphas, and his final condemnation of him as the act of the Sanhedrists, members of the Sanhedrin, if not the Sanhedrin itself. In that trial occurred the terrible scenes of false witnesses brought against Jesus, and the high priest himself becoming the chief inquisitor. One has said: "Now the hounds of hell have their turn; 'They did spit in his face and buffeted him, and others smote him with the palms of their hands'? Six fists fell on him in a shower, and the villains said: 'Who smote thee, thou Christ?' Then they all spat together, and asked him to name them one by one." "Something did grieve Christ more than the enemy. Peter cut his heart in two when he said three times, 'I know not the man.'" (Dr. Joseph Parker.) And what did Jesus do? As far as the actions and accusations of the high priest and the Sanhedrists, he "held his peace"; but he "turned and looked on Peter." It was a look of tender reproach that brought Peter to himself.

Christ Before Pilate

In the morning about six o'clock, the Sanhedrin passed sentence upon Jesus that he should be put to death.

From six to eight o'clock, they led him away to Pilate, the Roman governor, because the Sanhedrin did not have the power of the sword. The Jews might condemn, but only the Romans could execute. Pilate's judgment hall was probably located in the Castle of Antonia. It was called "the Prætorium." They had to trump up a new charge against Jesus, for Pilate could not be supposed to be interested in their Jewish contentions, so they brought the charge to Pilate against Jesus that he, in claiming to be the king of the Jews, was guilty of treason against Rome, and was a leader of sedition. But Pilate recognized it as wholly a Jewish question, and suggested that they should settle it among themselves. But urged on by the vociferous demands of the Jewish authorities, Pilate proceeded to examine Jesus, and asked him a direct question, "Art thou the king of the Jews?" And Jesus replied: "Thou sayest."

Near eight o'clock, still on Friday morning, Pilate sent Jesus away to Herod for trial, because he had been told that Jesus was a Galilean, and Herod was the ruler of Galilee. He chanced to be in Jerusalem at that time. Herod looked upon Jesus as a pretender, so he had Jesus arrayed in a royal robe, and sent back to Pilate. Jesus offended Herod by not consenting to work a miracle in his presence.

The View of Pilate

Nearing nine o'clock Friday morning, Jesus is the second time brought before Pilate; this time Pilate held court outside of the Prætorium, for Jesus might not enter there. And Pilate wanted to make an appeal to the people on Jesus' behalf. He said to them: "I find no fault in him," and he proposed his release, giving them the choice whether he should release the noted prisoner Barabbas, a robber and a seditionist, or Jesus, the faultless. But they cried for the blood of Jesus, and although Pilate tried to wash his hands in innocency, he at length delivered up Jesus to be crucified. Alas! And so it has gone round the world that Jesus suffered under Pontius Pilate.

We have the following from Greenleaf's Testimony of the Evangelists (Greenleaf being a great legal authority): "What Pilate lacked was not a correct view of the case as presented to him, but the courage to resist the clamor of the Jews for the death of Jesus. He finally sentenced him to death, when he knew there was no foundation for the sentence, and this on his part was an act of judicial murder, making him forever infamous."

So the case of Jesus appears in the Gospel narrative, which is the only

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Is the Best Weekly Magazine for the refined American Home. It appeals to the high and the low, both sexes, and all ages. Its readers constitute a great family of well-wishers who find The Christian Herald more than helpful. It contains an assortment of stories, news, illustrations, sermons, editorials, and as many other miscellaneous features, as you can find in any weekly published to-day. Please read over this issue carefully. Note the many interesting articles, the pictures, the special departments, the sermons, the editorials, and then ask yourself if there isn't as much value contained in The Christian Herald as you could expect for 5 cents. But we don't charge you that much for it — our rate is $1.50 a year for 52 issues—less than 3 cents a copy. A recent estimate and comparison with three of the leading magazines brings to light the fact that The Christian Herald prints annually enough words of pure reading matter apart from advertisements to fill nearly six extra monthly magazine issues precisely similar in size and in number of reading pages to the regular issues. In short—The Christian Herald's 52 issues that cost you $1.50, equal in reading matter nearly 18 monthly issues of the magazines that lead all the others in this particular respect. 12 numbers of these monthly magazines would alone cost you $1.50.

source of our knowledge as to the facts. He was not guilty of blasphemy under the law of Moses, since he was divine as well as human, and as such had a right to assume the attributes and prerogatives of the Godhead. He was not guilty of any offense against the Roman authority, and Pilate repeatedly so declared. His death considered as the act of men and as procured by men is the most awful tragedy of crime upon which the sun ever shone. That death, considered in relation to the purpose and appointment of God, and to the object for which Christ came into this world, and the results ensuing therefrom, make it the most important event that ever occurred on earth, perhaps the most important that ever occurred in the universe. What the Jews intended is one thing, and what God intended is quite another and different thing. Malignant destruction was their purpose. A glorious salvation for a guilty race was God's purpose. Paul's statement to the Corinthians gives us God's purpose: "For I delivered unto you first of all that which also I received: that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." (I. Cor. 15: 3.)

Christ Illegally Condemned

Proved by Dupin in 1828, after a calm, searching legal examination of the great trial:

1. Our Lord's apprehension was illegal.
2. His being conducted to Annas was illegal.
3. Examination at night was illegal.
4. Ill treatment in the hall of Caiaphas, illegal.
5. Proceeding on a fast day, illegal.
6. Caiaphas, who had been the accuser, to be judge was illegal.
7. Testimony of witnesses perverted was illegal.
8. His own admission insufficient, and its reception, illegal.
9. Condemnation by Jews for an alleged capital offense concerning which, if capital, they had tried before a competent tribunal and accusation had failed.
10. Acquitted also by Herod. Detention, illegal.
11. Pilate yielding to murderous clamor for fear of the Jews, against his own conscience and his wife's entreaties, grossly illegal and criminal.
12. Pilate's last appeal to deliver Barabbas admits the illegality of his conduct toward Jesus.
13. All subsequent indignities and execution on Calvary, violation of the law and constitution.
14. Scarlet robe, crown of thorns, illegal.

"Who when he was reviled, revil not again." These are the words the Golden Text selected for this le son. We may say that they represe the secondary benefit from all th Christ suffered for us, our salvati being the first benefit. Even grand than when Jesus rebuked the waves the sea, saying: "Peace, be still," hear him on those times of trial, sayi to our oft-troubled hearts, "Pea be still." And the peace of soul greater than the peace of the sea. learn from him how great and nol and grand it is to suffer and be st and how much greater and grand and nobler it is to be still than it is answer back or strike back.

One has said: "There is a force passiveness, there is an energy silence; there is a magnificent ret of non-resistance which puzzles men common mind and ordinary heart, very mystery of heroism to those w mistake noise for music and tumult power. Two boys were sawing piece of wood, and they noticed wl no one had ever told them, that a s grows hotter and hotter as it is us And it is the same with the saw contention.

We are quite sure that Paul h been learning of Jesus when he wrc "Render to no man evil for evil. it be possible, as much as in you lie be at peace with all men" (Rom. 1 17, 18).

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
  Soft resting on thy breast;
Soothe me with holy hymn and psalm,
  And bid my spirit rest.

Calm in the sufferance of wrong,
  Like him who bore my shame;
Calm 'mid the threatening, taunting throng,
  Who hate thy holy name.—HORATIUS BONAR

We sometimes find excuse for o selves for hitting back by saying, "" are not understood." How grossly w Jesus misunderstood when brou into his several trials before the hi priests, the Sanhedrin, Pilate a Herod! He was not guilty of thing with which he was charg Have we ever been so grossly and tirely misunderstood?

Not understood. How trifles change us!
  The thoughtless sentence or the fancied slig
Destroy long years of friendship and estrange
  And on our souls there falls a freezing bligh
    Not understood.

O God! that men would see a little clearer,
  Or judge less harshly where they cannot see
O God! that men would draw a little nearer
  To one another, they'd be nearer thee,
    And understood.—THOMAS BROCHE.

THE OLD PICTURE

UP in a dim old attic
  Among some relics rare,
I found a precious treasure
  That long had nestled there.
It was an olden tintype
  Of mother's gentle face.
With eager, trembling fingers
  I drew it from its place.

With mingled pain and sadness
  I scanned the features dear;
And as I gazed upon it,
  It seemed that she was near.
Memories round it clustered;
  My tears fell thick and fast,
While through the darkened attic
  The twilight shadows passed.

I still could see the cottage
  Beside the mountain high,
Where I was, oh! so happy—
  In days long since gone by.
I sat beside the window
  In mother's worn arm-chair;
My heart was filled with anguish;
  I longed to meet her there.

In that celestial city
  Where all is peace and love,
And weary souls find refuge
  In God's own home above.
That precious, faded tintype
  I'll keep in reverence sweet
Till some glad day my mother
  And I again shall meet.

ESTHER PETERSON.

HAPPINESS

GOD did not make his world a place of wr
  A wilderness with naught to cheer the gloo
For listen, as we travel on our path
How the birds sing and how the roses bloo
And though the sunshine oft may be o'erc
Yet even shade is fair; and when 'tis past,
The sunshine all around us looks more bri
And a new beauty bursts upon our sight.
He whose pure heart is open to the good,
The beautiful, the true, has ample food
To stay his heart, and speed him on the r
With joyous spirit to his blest abode.

Far different he, who plodding sadly on,
With downeast eyes, all weary and alone,
Crushing the flowers of joy beneath his f
And heeding not the songsters, gay and sw
The sunshine laughs and ripples round his w
Yet not one bright beam in his heart can s
He lifts the cup of Marah to his lips,
And as he journeys on, he sadly sips
The bitter dregs, and all that's left of life
Is turned to gall and bitterness and strife.

This world is but a mirror of the one
We love to dream of; and, our journey don
We hope to gain. Who sees no beauty her
And has for the sad heart no word of chee
Cannot be happy in that world where all
Are serving, at the heavenly Master's call—
Helping each heart to drop its load of sin;
Helping to keep it pure and clean within;
Leading it ever in the perfect way;
Helping to bring the bright, millennial

Sin of the Drink Traffic*

THE great Western States which have, wholly or in portions, "gone dry," are offering the most remarkable testimonies to the good results of closing the saloons.

It was almost universally said by their opponents, "You can't get along without the license money. It pays the chief expenses of government."

Most of us know that, very often, reducing expenses saves as much as adding to one's income.

Lo and behold, in the same way, jail, court and police expenses are curtailed to an astonishing degree by prohibition. In other ways also the direct expense of local government is lowered. In a single year, in some cases, the reduction brings the city to the same point financially to which the license money brought it during the reign of the much-vaunted high license.

Indirectly, the gain is even greater. The merchants have fewer bad debts to collect. They sell more goods. There are fewer drunkards reeling about the streets.

Instead of proudly flaunting his detestable trade in the faces of the community, the liquorseller no longer carries the brand of legality and respectability. He is marked as a criminal, as he ever should be. He hides in cellars and shanties, and the hounds of the law are after him.

The law has ever to run in advance of the people. Many are so dense that they are prone to think whatever the law allows is right. If the stamp of unlawfulness is put upon anything, then and then only do they see that it is wrong.

It is stated by Lady Henry Somerset that in one district in Liverpool, England, in which there is no saloon, there is but one pauper to every 1,000 inhabitants. In another, containing 200 saloons, there is one pauper to every twenty-eight inhabitants.

After Georgia had abolished the saloons, in January, 1908, this telegram was sent from Atlanta: "Such a scene as that in the police court this morning is undoubtedly without a parallel in the history of a city the size of Atlanta. But one lonely case appeared on the docket for trial."

Matilda Erickson, in her "Temperance Torchlights," says: "An Oklahoma sheriff reports that prohibition has reduced crime in his county 75 per cent."; and, "Out of 9,300 murders and homicides in the United States in 1906, Maine furnished but three."

A good record for the great original prohibition State.

The superintendent of the Santa Fé railroad says: "I consider the prohibition law in Kansas as worth more to the railroad men than any other one thing."

Governor Hoch of Kansas, in his Thanksgiving message, said: "One-third of our counties are without prisoners in their jails or paupers in their almshouses. One-half of our counties put no convicts to our prisons this year. One-half of our prison inmates never lived in Kansas long enough to acquire a residence here. Churches and schools flourish, the spiritual outlook is hopeful, and the saloon is practically vanished."

If every State in the Union could send forth a report like this, the millennium would be well on its way.

There is much to encourage the workers for prohibition, but the task is not a quarter done.

If we cannot close the saloons in a whole State, let us close them in as many counties as possible. If we cannot close them in a whole county, let us close them in as many towns as possible. If we cannot close them in a whole city, let us close them in as many wards as possible.

God will surely help us if we do our best, for this is his own work.

The Overland for 1911

There Are 22 Models of Overlands

They run from 20 to 35 horsepower—from 96 to 118 inch wheel bases —from $775 to $1,675. All the latest improvements—all the new ideas

In the evolution of the past three years the Overland has become the most popular car in the country. No other car now commands such a demand.

More than 20,000 Overlands are now in use, and dealers have already paid deposits on over 18,000 of the new-season models.

Five factories are required to keep up with demands. Their daily capacity is 140 cars.

The Reasons Are These

The initial success of the Overland was due to a wonderful engine —to a practically trouble-proof car. The matchless mechanism set a new standard in motor car construction.

Inspection was carried to extremes. The various parts of an Overland car must pass more than a thousand inspections.

Each engine is run for 48 hours before it goes into the car. Each crank shaft is turned 6,000 times in its bearings. Each finished car is given at least two severe road tests.

As a result, there are 20,000 delighted Overland owners. Each owner tells others about his car. There has been many a time when we could not fill half the resulting orders.

New Conditions Now

Now conditions call for a lower cost. We have met those conditions by investing $3,000,000 in modern automatic machinery.

By these labor-saving methods we have cut the cost of Overlands 28 per cent in two years. And we get, in addition, exactness to the thousandth part of an inch. No ordinary maker can begin to give what the Overlands give for the money.

And we are now making 22 models, so that every buyer can find in the Overland line a car which meets all his ideas. Whatever you want in size, style, cost or power, you can find it here.

These 22 models include almost every desirable type of a car. They include Torpedo Roadsters, the new Fore-door Tonneaus and Inside-Drive Coupes. And the newest models — the fore-door models — in the Overland line cost the same as the open front.

Our 1911 Prices

For $775 we are making a 20-horsepower roadster, with a 96-inch wheel base—a four-cylinder car which is easily capable of 45 miles an hour.

We are making a Torpedo Roadster—the latest type of a racy car—as low as $850.

The 25-horsepower Overlands, with 102-inch wheel bases, sell for $1,000. Five styles of body, including delivery body.

The 30-horsepower Overlands, with 110-inch wheel bases, sell for $1,250. The bodies include the torpedo roadster, the fore-door tonneau and the open-front touring car.

We are making a four-passenger inside-drive coupe for $1,250. It is ideal for winter driving.

The 35-horsepower Overlands, with 118-inch wheel bases, sell for $1,600 and $1,675. All prices quoted include magneto and full lamp equipment.

Heroic Missionaries*

MANY of them are now nameless, except in the Book of Life. They are, perhaps, recorded on long-neglected lists on earth. Mothers' hearts broke at the news of their death. Old friends mourned them for a while; and some newspaper or missionary journal spoke of their "devoted labors," and the pity that they died before they had reached their prime.

Some poet has said that the heroes of whom we never hear, surpass in number and in the greatness of their courage all the heroes that we know.

But there are many that we know—and no other cause has elicited more noble efforts or has made us more proud of our humanity than has the cause of missions.

In 1843, Fidelia Fiske sailed for Persia. Dr. Anderson said that of a thousand missionaries that he had known none had left a brighter record than hers.

She found the Nestorians among whom she was to work, in a pitiable condition. Many families lived, and had lived for generations in the same single room. Their clothing was rags. They had no word for home. Filth abounded. Women were despised. Husbands almost universally beat their wives when the mood seized them, and the birth of a daughter was deplored.

Both sexes regarded it as immodest for a woman to learn to read. Profanity, lying, stealing and all kinds of vice were prevalent. Girls were married when mere children. Good women never appeared alone in the streets. Miss Fiske found herself in a most depressing situation. Read the story of her devoted and unselfish efforts, of the opposition she encountered, the sore trials she endured, the wonderful results of her labors.

Surely here was the hero spirit in its purest form.

Read of Stephen Hislop, the highly educated missionary to Nagpur. His life was often in danger. In 1853, his mission house was attacked. Mr. Hislop was saved only by the desperate defense of his native converts.

The next year he was attacked by a fanatical Moslem mob, and seemed dying from awful wounds on his head; but he lived to pursue his labors, in the midst of which he met a tragic death by drowning.

Look back to the lives of some of the ancient missionaries. The story of Columba and his wonderful work in Iona is one of the most beautiful. Purity of life and disinterested zeal marked his labors. His story reads like a charming creation of the imagination, but the good he did was incalculable.

Another romantic story is that of the conversion of the Russian Princess Olga at Constantinople in 955, her fidelity to her faith, and her labor to convert others after her return to her northern home. The conversion of her royal grandson Vladimir was probably the chief factor in the spread of the Christian faith throughout Russia.

Have you ever read of the noble Krapf, who worked untiringly for the evangelization of Abyssinia and the Gallas? Struggling against the fevers of an intemperate clime, he persisted, though repeatedly in the greatest extremity from hunger and thirst, wild beasts and savage robbers. He passed through extraordinary adventures, but kept the faith and led many to Christ, besides translating the Gospels and other works into the Galla and Swahili languages. He was found dead on his knees in the attitude of prayer, in 1881—an heroic soldier of the Cross to the last.

Prodigious Profits in Poultry!

I—Ernest Kellerstrass—Owning but 1,638 Chickens, Cleared Over EIGHTEEN THOUSAND Dollars Last Year

Scene on Kellerstrass Farm. 2½ lb. Broilers Eight Weeks Old

I made just $18,178.53 last season from a flock of 1,638 chicken I made each bird pay me an average profit of $11.09—not each he but each cock, cockerel, hen and pullet. The original records of la year's sales and expenses here on the farm are open to any interest person who wishes to verify these facts.

The secret of my unequaled success as a poultry breeder is thi I breed the biggest egg-laying and meat-producing strain of chicke in the world—the famous Crystal White Orpington strain, of which am the originator.

My method of breeding, hatching, growing and marketing poult is unique. It is based solely on my 36 years of poultry experienc I now raise the very finest chickens at less e pense and on less ground than others ha been able to raise commonplace poultry.

"Peggy"—My Famous $10,000 Hen, Awarded First Prize Last Year at All the Big Poultry Shows

The BIG profits in this business are knowing how to raise big egg-layers a big meat-producers.

Learn "The Kellerstrass Way"

I have just written and copyrighted the most comprehensive a authoritative book ever published on the subject of poultry raising. is based upon my 36 years' experience as a successful poultry breed I begin at the start and tell in a fascinating way how, step by step, I built up a business that now p me more than $18,000 net profit a year. This book contains every known valuable poultry secret. novice can follow my directions and suggestions and make poultry raising pay well right from the st I know it to be a fact, because I have already started hundreds of successful people in the business.

The book tells you—

How I made $3,600 in one season from 30 hens on a 24x40 foot lot, feeding them scraps from my table. I give you the names and addresses of people who paid me more than $2,000 for the eggs alone.

How I made a flock pay me $68 per hen in 10 months.

How I raised 98 out of every 100 chickens hatched.

How I make chickens 8 weeks old weigh 2½ pounds.

How I breed my big egg-laying strain, getting as high as 263 eggs in 272 days.

How I run my incubator.

How I built my indoor and outdoor brooders for 85 cents each.

How I prepared my chickens for the show room, so as to win over 90% of all the blue ribbon prizes awarded in two years—how I raised five chickens that I sold to Madame Padcrewski for $7,500—how I feed my chickens for egg production—how I keep them healthy and free from disease — how I tell the good layer from the poor layer — how I break up my broody hens without injuring them. I tell you how to pack eggs to keep them fresh—how I mate my chickens for breeding and fertility—I tell you all about broiler plants, egg plants, etc.

In truth, I tell everything necessary to success in the poultry business.

Here is a sample of the letters I get from people who have secured my book. I have a hundred or more such letters that I will be glad to send you.

Our Price for Any One of these Books is 47 Cents!

TELA, by Robert Barr.
The romance of love, war and politics of the thirteenth century is one of the best tales of its kind. A brilliantly breathless romance.

THOMPSON'S PROGRESS, by C. J. Cutliffe Hyne.
Mr. Thompson, Poacher, Merchant and Prophet is a resourceful personality whose adventures make an exciting, amusing, and readable record.

THE CALL OF LEIF THE LUCKY, by Ottilie A. Liljencrantz.
A story of the Viking days. A vivid, sparkling tale.

THE THREE PARTNERS, by Bret Harte.
A story of the California Wilds that thrills with excitement and heart-throbs!

TRIX, by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.
A tender, sweet story—likely to become as much a classic as Black Beauty.

VICTOTT, by Baroness Von Hutten.
The sin of the father visited most cruelly upon his sensitive child, darkening and sullying his boyish career—that is the story of Victot Maulc. There is much that is beautiful, much that is sad, in this pathetic tale.

WATCHERS OF THE TRAILS, by Charles G. D. Roberts.
A Book of Animal Life. Appeals alike to the young and to the merely youthful-hearted. It gives a sense of the great Wild and its denizens.

WHO GOES THERE? by B. K. Benson.
The best spy story of the Civil War. A remarkable story of personal adventure.

PEGGY AT SPINSTER FARM, by Hellen M. Winslow.
The Spinster, her niece "Peggy," the Professor, and young Robert Graves—not forgetting Hiram, the hired man—are the characters to whom we are introduced. A book that breathes of the fresh country and the good people who live there.

QUEST OF JOHN CHAPMAN, by Newell Dwight Hillis.
A romance of early Colonial days, when Johnny Appleseed sowed and planted the seeds that were to prove a benefaction to future settlers. This quaint pioneer figure is Mr. Hillis' "forgotten hero."

RED FOX, by Charles G. D. Roberts.
The story of the Fox and his adventurous career in the Ringwood Wilds, and his triumphs over the enemies of his kind. A brilliant chapter of natural history.

RISE OF SILAS LAPHAM, by William Dean Howells.
A story of a sturdy Vermonter, who found it easier to gain wealth than social position.

SOLDIERS OF FORTUNE, by Richard Harding Davis.
One of the cleverest books ever written. The story of a civil engineer and the rarest and sweetest kinds of love.

SONS OF A SINGLE NOTE, by Amelia E. Barr.
It is the story of New York during the British occupation. A graphic picture of social life in the metropolis at that time is given.

THE SOUL OF LILITH, by Marie Corelli.
A story dealing with the return to earth of a disembodied spirit. Passages of a psalmlike dignity are of frequent occurrence.

A SCEPTRE OF POWER, by Charles Egbert Craddock.
A story of the struggles of the French and English in the early eighteenth century for possession of the Cherokee territory.

ST. ELMO, by Augusta J. Evans.
A notable work, by a notable woman. As old and popular as "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

THE STORM CENTRE, by Charles Egbert Craddock.
A war story; but more of love and courtship than of fighting or history.

TALES OF THE ARGONAUTS, by Bret Hart.
A vivid portrayal of life in the far West fifty years ago.

TALES OF THE ENCHANTED ISLANDS OF THE ATLANTIC, by Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
There are twenty tales, and it is an especially acceptable and stimulating book for young readers.

ABROAD WITH THE JIMMIES, by Lilian Bell.
Jimmy himself is likable; one grows fond of him in the course of the trip. Mrs. Jimmy's insight into human nature delights your soul.

THE AMERICAN PRISONER, by Eden Phillpotts.
A romance of the West country. Full of atmosphere of the rugged, weatherworn, untrammeled moor.

ASHES OF EMPIRE, by Robert W. Chambers.
The story of two British journalists and two French girls, with an historical setting that is finely wrought out. Told in Chambers' most pleasing vein.

AT HOME WITH THE JARDINES, by Lilian Bell.
A faithful and amusing record of the joys and sorrows of first housekeeping. It contains a very pretty love story.

AYESHA, by H. Rider Haggard.
A story that can and does what no other living writer can do: it creates a fairy world of passion and romance so vivid as to be almost real.

BARLASCH OF THE GUARD, by Henry Seton Merriman.
A story of an old veteran of Napoleon's guard, who devotes himself heart and soul to a girl who has been separated from her newly made husband at the church door.

BETWEEN THE LINES, by General Charles King.
An exciting story of the Civil War, with which is interwoven a charming romance.

A BROKEN SWORD, by General Charles King.
A story as "military" as it can be. General King has had the experience from which he writes.

THE CALIFORNIANS, by Gertrude Franklin Atherton.
A story of the exuberant spirit and crude civilization of the Pacific coast.

CAROLINA LEE, by Lilian Bell.
A well-told story, entertaining, and cleverly mingles art, humor and sentiment.

CAPTURED, by General Charles King.
A rattling good story of army life in the Philippines that is full of fresh and vivid material.

FLOWER O' THE ORANGE, by Agnes and Egerton Castle.
A volume of delightful tales of bygone days.

A CHANCE ACQUAINTANCE, by William Dean Howells.
The action of this delightful story takes place in Canada, of the scenery of which it contains full and fascinating descriptions.

A CHICAGO PRINCESS, by Robert Barr.
A characteristic, breezy and humorous romance of an over-rich Chicago girl with a craze for titled personages.

CHILDREN OF THE GHETTO, by Israel Zangwill.
A masterpiece as a novel—a picture of Jewish life, exceedingly valuable and interesting.

THE COMMON LOT, by Robert Herrick.
Its chief virtue is to be found in the impressiveness with which it presents the ethical problem and enforces the teaching that the moral life is a unity.

THE CROSS TRIUMPHANT, by Florence Morse Kingsley.
Admitted to be the strongest description of the crucifixion of Jesus extant. Realistic word-pictures of the life and times are reproduced.

DAY BEFORE YESTERDAY, by Sara Andrew Shafer.
A story of a village and the children and a mischievous leader, Rachel. Leaves an impression of cleanness and coolness and sweet living on the memory.

A FOREST HEARTH, by Charles Major.
A sunny love story of early Indiana; a picture of one's own people. Sweet and charming.

THE GREAT MOGUL, by Louis Traey.
Strange and weird are the adventures involved in this tale of intrigue, plot, counterplot and sword-play.

HAUNTERS OF THE SILENCES, by Charles G. D. Roberts.
An animal book with character studies told with graphic power. Mr. Roberts has taken for his subject those animals rarely met with in books, whose lives are spent "In the Silences," where they are the supreme rulers.

HEART OF THE ANCIENT WOOD, by Charles G. D. Roberts.
A realistic romance of the folk of the forest—a romance of the alliance of peace between a pioneer's daughter in the depths of the ancient wood and the wild beasts who felt her spell and became her friends. It is an actual romance, in which the animal characters play their parts as naturally as do the human.

IN BABEL, by George Ade.
Gives vivid scenes from the Human Comedy in the Babel of Chicago. Ade observes as closely as a Dickens and writes with the breeziness and picturesqueness of a Kipling.

THE JESSAMY BRIDE, by F. Frankfort Moore.
The hero of the novel is Oliver Goldsmith, and its central motive is the pathetic story of the love of the author of "The Vicar of Wakefield" for Mary Horneck.

A JOURNEY TO NATURE, by J. B. Mowbray.
The book is an evangel of the quiet life, the life freed from the unnecessary perplexities of man's own making, the true life of the spirit for which so many of us strive. It is a beautiful book.

THE KINDRED OF THE WILD, by Charles G. D. Roberts.
This volume is in many ways the most brilliant collection of animal stories that has appeared.

A KNIGHT OF COLUMBIA, by General Charles King.
A strong story of army life.

THE LITTLE MINISTER, by James M. Barrie.
One of the classics of literature. The reader is held spellbound by the strong sympathy which is worked in his breast with those whose fortune he is asked to follow.

LOURDES, by Emile Zola.
It is an attempt by a keen mind to present psychic healing in such a form as to be understood and realized by the average reader.

McTEAGUE, by Frank Norris.
A story of San Francisco, depicting California life with vigor and accuracy.

McTODD, by C. J. Cutliffe Hyne.
The chief character is an engineer. A story story of life that is well knit, forceful, and absorbing.

THE MAGIC FOREST, by Stewart Edward White.
Simple and charming. The sympathetic way in which the children of the wilds and their life is treated could only belong to one who is in love with the forest and the open air. Based on fact and throbbing with life.

MAKING OF A MARCHIONESS, by Franees Hodgson Burnett.
A delightful story. Graceful, sprightly, almost delicious in its dialogue and action; it is a truly charming and entertaining work.

MANY INVENTIONS, by Rudyard Kipling.
This story takes us over a mystical land which has such a fascination for the Western mind, and which Kipling knows so intimately.

THE MARKET PLACE, by Harold Frederiek.
A strong story of finance and business for men, and of social struggles and English country life for women. A strong and interesting story.

THE MEDAL OF HONOR, by General Charles King.
The action of the story is in the great West. There is plenty of exciting action in which the wives and sweethearts of the soldiers take conspicuous parts.

MEN OF THE MOSS-HAGS, by S. R. Crockett.
The strong presentation of Scottish life gives a delightful charm to this story. Full of strength and charm.

MY MERRY ROCKHURST, by Agnes and Egerton Castle.
Being some episodes in the life of Viscount Rockhurst, a friend of King Charles the Second, and at one time constable of His Majesty's Tower of London.

PAUL: A HERALD OF THE CROSS, by Florence Morse Kingsley.
This vivid and picturesque narrative of the life and times of Paul brilliantly portrays the Great Apostle of Christianity.

THE PRIDE OF JENNICO, by Agnes and Egerton Castle.
A stirring, brilliant and dashing story that is almost bewitching in its romanic theme.

Our Price for Any One of these Books is 50 Cents!

THE SHUTTLE, by Frances Hodgson Burnett.
A story of an American girl who rescues her sister from the ruins of her marriage to an Englishman of title. As a study of American womanhood, and as a love story, The Shuttle stands alone in literature. 512 pages.

LORNA DOONE, by R. D. Blackmore.
Who has not heard of Lorna Doone? It is a story that will live forever. The edition of this story is the most expensive ever made. It is 5⅜ x 8¼ inches in size, bound in cloth, with decorative cover of floral design and colored top. Printed on smooth wove paper, and embellished with over 250 drawings, initial letters, head and tail pieces, 703 pages. Every copy is inclosed in an ornamental box.

JAPAN, an Interpretation, by Lafcadio Hearn.
Many thousand books have been written about Japan, but this is one of the rarely precious volumes which opens the door to an intimate acquaintance with the wonderful people who command the attention of the world to-day. 549 pages.

THE CROSSING, by Winston Churchill.
describes the battle of Fort Moultrie and the British fleet in the harbor of Charleston, the blazing of the Kentucky wilderness, the expedition of Clark into Illinois, the beginning of civilization along the Ohio and Mississippi, and the opposition against Washington and the Federal Government. 6 illustrations, 598 pages.

WHEN PATTY WENT TO COLLEGE, by Jean Webster.
A bright, whimsical and thoroughly entertaining story. To any woman who has enjoyed the pleasures of a college life this book cannot fail to bring back many sweet recollections; and to those who have not been to college the wit, lightness, and charm of Patty are sure to be no less delightful. 6 illustrations, 280 pages.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE GREY-HORSE TROOP, by Hamlin Garland.
The hero is an American army officer who is detailed to act as Indian Agent at a Western Reservation. There is life in it, and human nature, and the still primitive West, which its author knows and interprets so well. 415 pages.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN, THE BOY AND THE MAN, by James Morgan.
Lincoln's early struggles, the striving for an education which seemed impossible to obtain, his business failures and many wanderings, his defeats and victories as a lawyer, all these are told impartially and vividly. The story should be an education and an inspiration to every one who reads it. 23 illustrations, 435 pages.

DR. ELLEN, by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins.
A story of life in the California Sierras. Doctor Ellen is a medical practitioner with plenty of character, who, for a sufficiently compelling reason, sacrifices her future to retire to a mountain village. The story of her struggle against adverse conditions and of the man who came into her life is dramatic and has absorbing interest. 280 pages.

LAVENDER AND OLD LACE, by Myrtle Reed.
The story centres around the coming of love to two young people on the staff of a newspaper, and it is one of the prettiest, sweetest and quaintest love stories in the language. A suitable gift for any member of the family. 267 pages.

THE FAIR GOD, by Lew Wallace.
A tale of the conquest of Mexico and defeat of Montezuma by Cortes. Considered superior to Ben Hur. As a dazzling picture of Mexico and the idol worshipping people, it leaves nothing to be desired. 8 illustrations, 586 pages.

DEBORAH, by James M. Ludlow.
A tale of the times of Judas Maccabaeus. Deborah is herself a noble and striking figure, and adventures she undergoes in aiding the cause of Judas Maccabaeus, the "banner of God," are many and thrilling. 406 pages, 4 illustrations.

ELEANOR LEE, by Margaret E. Sangster.
A story of a man's redemption through a wife's love. Its characters are every-day human folk. A picture of wedded bliss that goes straight to the heart of every one who has known the meaning of love or home. 322 pages.

PATHFINDERS OF THE WEST, by Agnes C. Laut.
The thrilling story of the young adventurers who sacrificed all earthly possessions to the enthusiasm of discovery and made their way among the Indians twelve years before Marquette or Joliet had thought of visiting these regions. A fine historical novel. 380 pages, 6 illustrations.

BLACK ROCK, by Ralph Connor.
A tale of the Selkirks. Sweet, true and wholesome, here is a story so delightfully fresh and different it makes all better for the reading. Tastefully printed, bound in best silk cloth, with elaborate cover design and encased in ornamental box. 270 pages, 8 illustrations.

REBECCA OF SUNNYBROOK FARM, by Kate Douglas Wiggin.
Rebecca is a favorite in the hearts of the thousands. Native wit and the wholesome charm of untrammeled American girlhood brighten every page. Rebecca is the book of books, bright, laughable and lovable. This quaint figure wins new hearts every day. 327 pages.

HANS BRINKER; OR, THE SILVER SKATES, by Mary Mapes Dodge.
A story of life in Holland. It is earnest, simple, yet it has all the glow of bright wit. It is alive with incident, and adorned with useful facts. There are 8 specially drawn illustrations by H. K. Cranmer. 313 pages. Beautiful inlay cover in gold and colors of a scene in Holland. Encased in an ornamental box.

A SWEET GIRL GRADUATE, by Mrs. L. T. Meade.
This writer knows the heart and mind of girlhood better perhaps than any living writer. Her keen insight, and her wonderful portrayal of sweet girl characters lend a rare charm to her books. This is a charming story well worth reading. Beautifully bound, handsome picture cover in colors, packed in attractive box. 305 pages.

LOVE IS THE SUM OF IT ALL, by George Cary Eggleston.
This is a plantation romance, sweet, vigorous and real; just the kind of a story to read for clean, beautiful recreation. It is a beautiful book, handsome cover, well bound. 6 superb drawings, 387 pages.

Questions and Answers

In forwarding MSS. to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, enclose stamped envelopes for return, if unavailable.

T. R. H., Beverly, Mass. Why do boats float and people sink in water?

Because the specific gravity of wood is much lighter than that of water, while the body is only a very little lighter, and this is counteracted by the movements of limbs which obtrude above the water, with the result that an additional weight is put upon the trunk of the body, causing it to sink.

L. M. S., Hamburg, Pa. 1. When did the Russo-Japanese War occur? 2. Name the members of President Taft's cabinet.

1. February, 1904, to September, 1905. 2. Philander C. Knox, Secretary of State; Franklin MacVeagh, Secretary of the Treasury; Jacob M. Dickinson, Secretary of War; Richard A. Ballinger, Secretary of the Interior; George von L. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy; James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture; Frank H. Hitchcock, Postmaster-General; George W. Wickersham, Attorney-General; Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

P. O. M., Newtown, Conn. What does "Lebanon" mean?

"The white mountain."

F. R., Mt. Vernon, S. D. How do writers get their books published? Do the publishers buy the manuscript of the writers and bring them out at their own expense? Or do writers pay publishers to bring them out?

The wise writer studies the catalogues of different publishers to find out which bring out books of the kind he has written. Then he submits his book to one or several of them. If the publisher likes it, he will publish it, offering the writer a percentage (usually about 10 or 15 per cent.) of the profits. Often he prefers to buy the MS. outright, paying a lump sum. If no publisher can see any advantage for himself in publishing a particular book, the writer will have to pay out of his own pocket the expenses of its publication.

H. P. H., Hunter's Point, N. Y. Of what is benzine composed?

It is a compound of carbon and hydrogen.

A. L. F., Providence, R. I. Will you kindly inform me when the first Indian war occurred in this country?

In 1622 the Indians massacred the whites in Virginia and the settlers had several severe skirmishes with them. The first war with the Indians in New England was the one waged against the Pequots by the English in 1637. The Pequots were wiped out of existence. In 1643 came the first Indian war in New York, when the Dutch massacred the Indians at Hackensack.

T. M., Newbury, Mass. From what language do we derive our word bishop, and what was its original meaning?

It comes from the Greek word episcopos, meaning an overseer. It was given to inspectors in the city of Athens.

P. X., Harrisburg, Pa. Is the quadrant a modern invention?

No: the solar quadrant was invented about 290 B.C. The astronomers of Arabia under the Caliphs in 995 A.D. had a quadrant twenty-eight feet eight inches in radius. These were used for measuring altitudes. Davis' quadrant, for measuring angles, was invented about 1600; Halley's quadrant about 1731.

M. E. P., Richmond, Va. When was the M. E. Church South separated from the M. E. Church North?

The M. E. Church in America originated in 1766, and was formally organized in 1784 by Bishop Coke. The M. E. Church South was formed in 1845 by a division from the original body, in accordance with the resolutions of General Conference held in New York, May, 1844. It adopted the discipline of the M. E. Church, comprehending the doctrines and entire moral, ecclesiastical and economical rules and regulations, except only such verbal alterations in the discipline as might be necessary to a distinct organization and to take the name of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

A. L., Bridgeport, Conn. When and by whom was the bicycle invented?

A velocipede, a kind of bicycle, was invented by Blanchard about 1779; at least it is described in the Journal of Paris, July 27 of that year.

M. B. R. 1. When were cannon first made in the United States? 2. Did the Americans at the time of the war for independence have to get cannon abroad?

1. Cannon were cast by Henry Leonard at Lynn, Mass., in 1647, and one year later they were made at Orr's foundry in Bridgemaster

Our 1911 Calendar with Every Order

The Calendar has been exquisitely finished by an absolutely new photogravure process, and it is one of the first color paintings ever reproduced in this manner. The colors are rich and perfectly blended. The baby is pictured against a background of a soft, shimmering orange; the beautiful pale-blue bows give a delightful contrast that produces a perfect composition; and the radiance of a rose-like complexion, a charming pink and white combination so typical of health and happiness, have been so faithfully retained that they melt and shade one into another in absolute harmony. The miniature half-tone shown here is incapable, of course, of conveying any adequate idea of the Calendar itself, which is 14 x 18 inches in size, printed on heavy de luxe stock, a dream of artistic perfection. Think of the good old memories this little baby would awaken in your home—memories of the time when those near and dear to you were chubby little ones. The Calendar will be prized by the whole family. It is free with each new and renewal subscription.

Photogravure of Dr. Klopsch—FREE

We will also send a photogravure portrait of the late Dr. Klopsch, one of the world's greatest and most dearly beloved philanthropists. You all know of Dr. Klopsch, and you are sure to welcome this opportunity to obtain a good picture of this sterling man in order to perpetuate his memory in your own home. Address your orders to in the same State. 2. There were quite large number of cannon in the possession of the patriots, as it was the custom in almost every seaport town and some interior towns to have one or more as public property. Some were captured from English military posts and probably some were brought from France after the outbreak of the war.

L. H., Saratoga Springs, N. Y. From what do we get our word "puppet," speaking of an easily influenced person?

It comes from the Italian word puppi, which was used to designate small figures moved by strings.

A. M. W., Fairview, O. What part should a retired pastor or his family take in the church work of the congregation over which he was formerly pastor? Should they be expected to entertain supplies who come to fill the pulpit? Should the retired pastor be expected to contribute to the support of the present pastor?

A pastor who loves his work will never cease his spiritual activities while health and opportunity permit. Even if he be retired from the pastorate, he will still take pleasure in rendering aid in the church work wherever possible and in giving counsel if so desired. It would not be out of place for him to entertain supplies if his circumstances permitted, and even to contribute; both of these, however, must depend upon his financial ability. He would be under no compulsion to do this, but it would be looked upon as very gracious if it lay within his power to show his patriarchal interest in his former flock and in his pastoral successor.

Subscriber, Greeley, Colo. Over 4,000,000 slaves just prior to the Civil War.

Mrs. J. L., New York. Write to McDowell, 316 Sixth Avenue, New York City.

S. A. B., Pittsburg, Pa. We believe there is such an institution. Write to Secretary Christian and Missionary Alliance, New York City, for information.

Mrs. L. L. W., Wilmington, N. C. Anne of Austria was so called because she was daughter of Philip III. of Spain, who sprang from the royal house of Austria.

Anxious, A. P., Canada. You have repented and made efforts at restitution. Devote the money to some worthy charitable cause. It will then burden your conscience no longer.

Mrs. S. S. J., Hollywood, Calif. If your tank is galvanized iron—that is, iron coated with tin by the galvanic process—and then immersed in a zinc bath, it will be suitable for water reservoir; but if it has not been properly galvanized and is merely the common sheet iron of commerce, usually called tin, it will be unsuitable, as it will cause oxidation and render water unfit for use.

W. R. J., Carmen, Okla. We can do no more than give the gist of the best orthodox scholarship on the subject. Prophecy is a field which affords ample room for investigation and there will always be many differing opinions. "Babylon" is used in three senses i. e., as the historic city or the Babylonian nation; as the Roman power, and lastly as the forces of sin anywhere. We have no sympathy whatever with the fanatical sect mentioned in your letter. We believe the Church is a divinely ordained institution and deserving of the fullest support God's people can give it.

H. K. B. B., Hayden, Md. 1. The passage implies that Timothy was physically weak. Paul, however, did not have to contend with the curse of intemperanee, as we know it nowadays. If he had, then he probably would never have given such advice. 2. The "thorn in the flesh," some commentators assume, was sore eyes, but this is mere conjecture. It may have been any one of fifty different things. 3. Question not sufficiently clear. 4. Ahab was one of Israel's wicked kings, the weakest of all her monarchs. The besetting sin of his reign was idolatry. See his history in I. Kings, chapters 16 to 22. He was slain in battle.

WE THANK THEE

WE thank thee, oh our Father,
For blessings of to-day;
For friends who help and cheer us
Along our earthly way.

We ask that we, oh Father,
May grow more thankful still,
Until our lives are moulded
Into thy perfect will;

Until our circle gathers—
Earth's parting scenes all o'er—
To hold a glad reunion,
Thankful forever more.

Elephants Recently Captured

CHANGING KINGS IN SIAM

WHILE you in America are putting on heavier clothes to ward off the chill November winds, and are going into spasms f excitement over the election returns, and are ooking forward to the Thanksgiving turkey, we in he Land of the White Elephant are having a airly comfortable time with the thermometer rang- ng no higher or lower than it should with our now omewhat Orientalized ideas on climate. As for olitical interests, we have had a change of rulers, ut in the only way such a transference of author- ty can take place here—that is, by the hand of eath. Probably no one class of peo- le in this land of canals, wats and lephants will miss the late ruler more han the Europeans who have made heir home in Siam, and especially in Bangkok. King Chulalongkorn was s much an Englishman in his ideas nd way of life as it is ever possible or an Asiatic to be, and this was rgely due to the fact that he early earned the English tongue, and to his isits to India and Great Britain.

English influence is still dominant n Siam, and will so continue, for the ew ruler and nine of his brothers ere educated in English schools, and re quite like English lads of the same ge. All of these are possessors of as any names as their late father, but ortunately not even their next of kin re required to use more than a section f them at a time. The late king's full ame was Phra Bat Somdeth Phra 'aramindr Maha Chulalongkorn Phra hula Chum Klo Chow Yu Hua, and his does not include his titles. A wag n Bombay saw it in the paper when he ruler was visiting that city and as being received by the British offi- ials, and passed it over to a young rish subaltern with the challenge that e pronounce it. The young fellow ooked at it a moment and then handed t back. He said he was not long nough winded, but he was sure he ould play it on the garrison club piano f the instrument were a couple of ctaves longer. The king's uncle, owever, who was also a Prince High riest, had for one name alone the fol- owing collection of letters: Pawarat- awariyalongkaun. Any one who can et through this and not flat one of the otes has lived a long time where he an look out of the window and see the ilded peak of a wat or temple shim- ering in the equatorial sun.

Besides sending his sons to English chools, he encouraged the higher no- ility to send theirs to French, German nd English universities. Education in is own country was fostered and some of the most prominent men in Siamese affairs to-day were trained at home.

One of the most interesting ceremonies of the installation in authority of the new sovereign was the oath of fealty taken by the nobles of Siam. They finished by drinking his health, we should call it, in water, stirred previously with spears, swords and pistols.

The late king introduced as early as 1881 a telegraph line twenty-five miles long for his personal use, and two years later he had cable connection with the entire world by the station at Saigon. His trips to Europe made him dissatisfied with his palace, and he built another, the Chakr Kri Maha Prosat, which is a most remarkable structure. It has combined in its walls almost every style of architecture known to Europe, but above this conglomeration of the Classic, the Gothic, the Renaissance, and a few others, rises the characteristic roof of Siam.

Chulalongkorn abolished slavery soon after his accession, though this did not do away with a system of debtor slavery which did not seem to be very unpopular among those who found themselves in the power of some master through its operation. The entire legal system has been undergoing revision. For a few years the king had at Bangkok a distinguished professor of law from Harvard University. He died a short time ago, greatly to the regret of the king and of the American university of which he had been one of the leading teachers.

The work of the missionary in Siam has been going on for many years and the results are gratifying.

At Nan there is a missionary station which is doing much to improve the moral and spiritual condition of the entire section. Dr. and Mrs. Taylor have charge of the church, and also of a school for girls. Besides doing effective preaching, they are capable instructors and administrators. Rev. M. B. Palmer has charge of the boys' school. Mrs. Palmer is his efficient aid.

Recently the new Governor's Bridge was opened—a costly structure for this country. It is about two miles from Nan and the entire Palmer clan rode out on an elephant to see the ceremonies—a very comfortable way unless this houseboat on four legs can get its trunk into a pool, when umbrellas would hardly keep off the deluge.

About fifty wild elephants are captured near Nan every year, and are trained in the vicinity. Although this is called the Land of the White Elephant a true albino tusker is a great rarity; the whitest they have is merely light colored or spotted. The so-called white elephant is only a little lighter than the ordinary tusker. One of the most satisfactory to the Siamese in recent years was a light brown, with some white hairs on the back. There are records, however, which show that probably real white elephants have been caught. Back in the eighties a European circus came to Bangkok with a white elephant, but the paint came off, and there was much public indignation.

WHERE THE PUMPKIN IS KING

THE pumpkin enjoys a unique position among the indispensable adjuncts of the Thanksgiving season, inasmuch as it has a dual significance at this joyous time, combining the useful and the ornamental to an extent not equaled by any of the other bounties of nature that go to make Thanksgiving an occasion of feasting as well as a festival for the acknowledgment of gratitude to Providence. Moreover, the seeming appropriateness of the pumpkin to the general atmosphere in the afternoon of the year gives it a certain prominence throughout the entire autumn, although the climax waits upon the national holiday.

To realize that the pumpkin all but overshadows the fowl which becomes for this one day our national bird it is only necessary to pause and reflect that as Thanksgiving approaches we think of the turkey, the celery, the cranberry sauce and most of the other complements of the Thanksgiving dinner table only with reference to their culinary attributes. With the festive pumpkin the case is quite different. While in no sense scorning its mission as an article of food we are wont to acclaim also its value as a decorative factor. With its generous outline and glowing well-rounded surface it seems to typify as nothing else can the fulness of the mature year. So instinctively does it fit into every mental picture symbolic of the Thanksgiving period that, together with the shock of cornstalks, it has come into recognition everywhere as the ideal emblem of the harvest season. Churches and schools especially make use of it in the decorations incident to special services at this season of the year and no color scheme could prove more effective.

While considering its function in filling the eye as the insignia of the prosperity of the waning season we should not overlook its virtues as an article of food. The people of some other countries are ever expressing wonder at the universal penchant of Americans for pie, but there would be no surprise, but praise instead, if these prejudiced aliens could really know the full joys of the Yankee pumpkin pie. Every imported delicacy suffers by comparison—not even the vaunted English plum-pudding can hold a candle to this masterpiece of New World cookery. Some self-constituted authorities try to tell us every now and then that the old-fashioned New England pumpkin pie is a lost art; but few people—certainly none of the rising generation—take such laments seriously.

Speaking of New England in connection with pumpkins it may be recalled that more than once during the past century persons of prominence have suggested that the pumpkin be selected as the emblem of this section of the Union. In support of the suggestion it is pointed out that nowhere else does the pumpkin thrive as in the New England cornfields; and, moreover, the pumpkin was one of the first fruits utilized by the Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth to ward off starvation during their first terrible winters in the new land.

Despite the fact that the pumpkin in all its forms has found its fullest meed of popular appreciation in the United States, it is by no means certain that the plant had its first home on this continent. Some authorities claim that it did, and produce evidence to show that the aborigines of North America planted it among their maize. Others contend that it is of Asiatic origin and still others point out that pumpkins have been cultivated either as a curiosity or as an article of food in England since the year 1570. Even to-day we have not a monopoly of pumpkin culture. The orange-hued orbs of joy are grown in various European countries, notably in France, where the market gardeners in the vicinity of Paris go to the trouble of sowing their pumpkin seeds in April in a hotbed under glass and nurture them carefully until they are transplanted in May.

From the standpoint of the thrifty American housewife not the least of the virtues of the pumpkin is found in the fact that it is one of the few articles of food that has not appreciably advanced i cost in this era of high prices. There is probabl not a large city in the country where a pumpkin c the largest size cannot be purchased for fifty c sixty cents, and in some markets tiny pumpkins— large enough to make a couple of pies—can be ha as low as four or five cents. In some sections c the country the squash, which belongs to the san family as the pumpkin, vies with the latter as "fi ing" for pies, but no lover of the good old-fashion pumpkin pie, the kind that mother used to mak will accept the squash substitute without a protes

Though the American people consume such a unaccountable aggregate of pumpkins every autum we have in this country no tillers of the soil wl make a specialty of raising pum kins, as they would celery apples or even melons. There no "pumpkin king" and no "pum kin belt," because pumpkins a raised in pretty much all parts the country. Every truck ga dener has some of the vines san wiched in among his other gro ing fruits, grains and vegetable and it is an exceptional farm who doesn't plant pumpkins e tensively in his cornfields, if wi no other thought than to provi food for his stock. It depends on the next Panama assembly enacting suitable banking laws for the safeguarding of foreign interests.

—A NOVEL SENTENCE has just been pronounced by a Kansas City Solomon. "Break rock for one hundred days or go to church every Sunday for six months," was the ultimatum delivered by the President of the Board of Public Welfare to three boys who had been convicted of throwing eggs at pedestrians. The boys have chosen to attend church regularly.

—A PLOT to assassinate the Emperor of Japan has been unearthed and twenty-six conspirators—including one woman, wife of the leader—have been found guilty. The court has recommended the "severest" punishment, therefore it is expected all will undergo the death penalty.

—THE CHOLERA SCARE is causing American and English tourists to steer clear of Rome and its neighborhood. Italian hotels and hoarding houses are suffering from loss of patronage. Most of the familiar resorts and amusement places are deserted. Trades people are complaining bitterly in face of the fact that the scare has been so magnified as to ruin their business.

—VIOLENT SCENES were witnessed in the streets of the City of Mexico last week, when crowds of students paraded the principal thoroughfares, hooting, howling and wrecking the places of business of American residents. The Stars and Stripes were desecrated, the flag being torn into shreds, spat upon and trampled in the dust. Americans on the streets were insulted and assaulted. Street cars were stoned and windows smashed. The disgraceful orgies were occasioned by the bitter comments of the Mexican press on the lynching of a Mexican, Antonio Rodriguez, in Texas on November 3. Mexico has made deman on the United States for reparation and indemnity for t lynching of Rodriguez. An effort will be made to punish th who insulted the American flag.

—THE RECENT ELECTION had an interesting result in the St of Washington in giving ratification to the Woman Suffra amendment to the State Constitution. This amendment, f which every county gave a majority, will become a law as so as the governor acts. Under it, at least 130,000 wom throughout the State will be added to the electorate. T State Equal Suffrage Association has issued a proclamati setting apart November 24 as a day of thanksgiving for t newly enfranchised women.

—SERIOUS RIOTING has taken place in the Rhondda valley, Sou Wales, in connection with a heavy strike of the coal mine Most of the disturbance centred around the Glamorgan p near Tonypandy, where the manager of the mine and a score engineers, clerks and stokers were attacked by the men, wh operating the engines so as to keep the pumps going in ord that the mine might not be flooded. Police and troops fina restored order, but not until much damage was done.

Millionaire Mike's Thanksgiving

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

HE was not Mike at first; he was only the Millionaire—a young millionaire who sat in a wheel air on the pier waiting for the boat. e had turned his coat-collar up to at out the wind, and his hatbrim wn to shut out the sun. For the ne being he was alone. He had sent attendant back for a forgotten ok.

It was Thanksgiving, but the Mil- naire was not thankful. He was t thinking of what he had, but of at he wanted. He wanted his old ength of limb, and his old freedom om pain. True, the doctors had id that he might have them again in ne, but he wanted them now. He nted the Girl, also. He would have r, to be sure, that very evening; but wanted her now.

The girl had been very sweet and ntle about it, but she had been firm. s he could recollect it, their conver- tion had run something like this:

"But I want you myself, all day."

"But, Billy, don't you see? I prom- ed; besides, I ought to do it. I am e president of the club. If I shirk sponsibility, what can I expect the hers to do?"

"But I need you just as much—yes, ore—than those poor families."

"Oh, Billy, how can you say that, hen they are so very poor, and when ery one of them is the proud kind at would simply rather starve than after their turkey and things! hat's why we girls take them to them. on't you see?"

"Oh, yes, I see. I see that I don't unt. It couldn't be expected that I'd unt — now!" And he patted the utches at his side.

It was despicable in him, and he new it. But he said it. He could e her eyes now, all hurt and sorrow- l as she went away. . . And so is morning he sat waiting for the oat, a long lonely day in prospect in is bungalow on the island, while be- ind him he had left the dearest girl the world, who, with other petted arlings of wealth and luxury, was to istribute Thanksgiving baskets to the oor.

Not that his day needed to be lonely. e knew that. A dozen friends stood eady and anxious to supply him with good dinner and plenty of compan- nship. But he would have none of hem. As if he wanted a Thanksgiv- ng dinner!

And thus alone he waited in the heel chair; and how he abhorred it—hat chair—which was not strange, erhaps, considering the automobile hat he loved. Since the accident, owever, his injured back had forbid- en the speed and jar of motor cars, llowing only the slow but exasperat- ng safety of crutches and a wheel hair. To-day even that seemed denied im, for the man who wheeled his chair id not come.

With a frown the Millionaire twisted imself about and looked behind him. t was near the time for the boat to tart, and there would not be another or three hours. From the street hur- ied a jostling throng of men, women, nd children. Longingly the Million- ire watched them. He had no mind o spend the next three hours where he vas. If he could be pushed on to the oat, he would trust to luck for the ther side. With his still weak left rm he could not propel himself, but if e could find some one——

Twice, with one of the newspapers hat lay in his lap, he made a feeble ttempt to attract attention; but the Millionaire was used to commanding, ot begging, and his action passed un- oticed. He saw then in the crowd he face of a friend, and with a de- pairing gesture he waved the paper gain. But the friend passed by nheeding. What happened then was o entirely unexpected that the Mil- ionaire fell back in his chair dumb with amazement.

"Here, Mike, ye ain't on ter yer job. Youse can't sell nuttin' dat way," scoffed a friendly voice. "Here, now watch!" And before the Millionaire could collect his wits he saw the four papers he had bought that morning to help beguile a dreary day, snatched into the grimy hands of a small boy and promptly made off with.

The man's angry word of remonstrance died on his lips. The boy was darting in and out of the crowd, shouting "Poiper, here's yer poiper!" at the top of his voice. Nor did he return until the last pair of feet had crossed the gangplank. Then in triumph he hurried back to the waiting man in the wheel chair and dropped into his lap a tiny heap of coppers.

"Sold out, pardner! Dat's what we be," he crowed delightedly. "Sold out!"

"But—but—I—you——" gasped the man.

"Aw, furgit it!—'twan't nuttin'," disdained the boy, airily. "Ye see, youse got ter holler."

"To—to 'holler'!"

"Sure, Mike, or ye can't sell nuttin'. I been a-watchin' ye, an' I see right off ye wa'n't on ter yer job. Why, pardner, ye can't sell poipers like ye was shellin' out free sody-checks at a picnic. Youse got ter yell at 'em, an' git dere 'tention. 'Course, ye can't run like I can,"—his voice softened awkwardly as his eyes fell to the crutches at the man's side—"but ye can holler, an' not jest set dere a-shakin' 'em easy at 'em, like ye did a minute ago. Dat ain't no way ter sell poipers!"

With a half-smothered exclamation the Millionaire fell back in his chair. He knew now that he was not a millionaire, but a "Mike" to the boy. He was not William Seymore Haynes, but a cripple selling papers for a living. He would not have believed that a turned-up collar, a turned-down soft hat, and a few jerks of a newspaper could have made such a metamorphose.

"Youse'll catch on in no time now, pardner," resumed the boy, soothingly, "an' I'm mighty glad I was here ter set ye goin'. Sure, I sells poipers meself, I does, an' I knows how 'tis. Don't look so flabbergasted. 'Tain't nuttin'. Shucks! hain't fellers what's pardners oughter do a turn fur 'todder?"

The Millionaire bit his lip. He had intended to offer money to this boy, but with his gaze on that glowing countenance, he knew that he could not. He had come suddenly face to face with something for which his gold could not pay.

"T'thank you," he stammered embarrassedly. "You—you were very kind." He paused, and gazed nervously back toward the street. "I—I was expecting some one. We were going to take that boat."

"No! Was ye? An' he didn't show up? Say, now, dat's tough—an' T'anksgivin', too!"

"As if I cared for Thanksgiving!" The words came tense with bitterness.

"Aw, come now, furgit it!" There was a look of real concern on the boy's face. "Dat ain't no way ter talk. It's T'anksgivin'!"

"Yes, I know—for some." The lips snapped shut grimly.

"Aw, come off! Never mind if yer pal didn't show up. Dere's odders; dere's me now. Tell ye what, youse come home wid me. Dere won't be no boat now fur a heap o' time, an' I'm goin' ter T'anksgive. Come on! 'Tain't fur. I'll wheel ye."

The man stared frankly.

"Er—thank you," he murmured, with an odd little laugh; "but——"

"Watching a slip of a girl wheeling herself back and forth"

"Shucks! 'Course ye can. What be ye goin' ter do?—set here? What's the use o' mopin' like dis when youse got a invite out ter T'anksgivin'? An' ye better catch it while it's goin', too. Ye see, some days I couldn't ask ye—not grub enough; but I can ter-day. We got a s'prise comin'."

"Indeed!" The tone was abstracted, almost irritable; but the boy ignored this.

"Sure! It's a dinner—a T'anksgivin' dinner bringed in to us. Now ain't ye comin'?"

"A dinner, did you say?—brought to you?"

"Yeaup!"

"Who brings it?"

"A lady what comes ter see me an' Kitty, sometimes; an' she's a peacherino, she is! She said she'd bring it."

"Do you know—her name?" The words came a little breathlessly.

"You bet! Why, she's our friend, I tell ye! Her name is Miss Daisy Carrolton; dat's what 'tis."

The man relaxed in his chair. It was the dearest girl in the world.

"Say, ain't ye comin'?" urged the boy, anxiously.

"Coming? Of course I'm coming," cried the man, with sudden energy. "Just catch hold of that chair back there, lad, and you'll see."

"Say, now, dat's sumpin' like," crowed the boy, as he briskly started the chair. 'Tain't fur, ye know."

Neither the boy nor the Millionaire talked much on the way. The boy was busy with his task; the man, with his thoughts. Just why he was doing this thing was not clear even to the man himself. He suspected it was because of the girl. He could fancy her face when she should find that it was to him she was bringing her turkey dinner! He roused himself with a start. The boy was speaking.

"My! but I'm glad I stopped an' watched ye tryin' ter sell yer poipers. T'ink o' youse a-settin' dere all dis time a-waitin' fur dat boat—an' T'anksgivin', too! An' don't ye worry none. Ma an' Kitty'll be right glad ter see ye. 'Tain't often we can have comp'ny. It's 'most allers us what's takin' t'ings give ter us—not givin' ourselves."

"Oh," replied the man, uncertainly. "Is—is that so?"

With a distinct shock it had come to the Millionaire that he was not merely the disgruntled lover planning a little prank to tease the dearest girl in the world. He was the honored guest of a family who were rejoicing that it was in their power to give a lonely cripple a Thanksgiving dinner. His face grew red at the thought.

"Ugh-uh. An', oh, I say, what is yer name, pardner?" went on the boy. " 'Course I called ye 'Mike,' but——"

"Then suppose you still call me 'Mike,' " retorted the man, nervously wondering if he could play the part. He caught a glimpse of the beaming face of his benefactor—and decided that he must play it.

"A' right, den; an' here we be," announced the boy in triumph, stopping before a flight of steps that led to a basement door.

With the aid of his crutches the man descended the steps. Behind him came the boy with the chair. At the foot the boy flung wide the door and escorted his guest through a dark, evil-smelling hallway, into a kitchen beyond.

"Ma! Kitty! look a-here!" he shouted, leaving the chair, and springing into the room. "I've bringed home comp'ny ter dinner. Dis is Mike. He was sellin' poipers down ter de dock, an' he lost his boat. I told him ter come on here an' eat wid us. I knowed what was comin', ye see!"

"Why, yes, indeed, of course," fluttered a wan-faced little woman, plainly trying not to look surprised. "Sit

The World's New Song of Praise

A THANKSGIVING SERMON BY REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, TOPEKA, KAN.

WE are living in an age of criticism; an age of dissection; and, in many ways, an age of complaint. There is only a thin edge between honest criticism and bitter faultfinding, and many men, newspapers and pulpits have slipped over the edge and are simply chronic wailers. I picked up six magazines the other day from the news stand and found leading articles in every one of them finding fault with the Church, the Sunday School, and the Endeavor Society. There was a minimum of honest criticism and a maximum of bitter faultfinding in all of the articles.

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon

Nevertheless it is a paradox that the world is getting better, and in the midst of all this flood of faultfinding and criticism we who are Christian people need to realize the fact that Christianity is doing things; that it is leavening the lump; and we have a right to assert what is a fact—that the Church is not a failure; the Sunday School is not obsolete; the Endeavor Societies are not dying out; the Bible is not discarded.

We need to learn to sing a new song to Jehovah. We have twanged the old harp of pessimism long enough. We have criticized everything in the country from the government up to the home and the Church, and there is almost nothing left now to find fault with except the sun, moon and stars, which many men seem to think they could improve on with a few days' practice. This is not to say that much of the probing and light-throwing has not been of great value. It is simply saying that we can go on letting in the light, investigating conditions, bettering them, and at the same time keep optimistic.

The new song which the world ought to learn to sing to the praise of Jehovah at the Thanksgiving time is the song of praise for what God has done through the powerful influence of Jesus Christ. Consider what we have in the world to-day in the way of tremendous forces for righteousness and goodness which Paul never knew.

Paul never saw an organized church such as civilization sees to-day. It was absolutely unknown to him. Paul never saw a Sunday School in action. We have in the world to-day nearly thirty million people studying the Bible regularly in organized Bible classes. Paul never saw a genuine organized Christian home as we know it. There were beautiful homes no doubt amongst the Jewish people and occasionally some among the heathen nations, but such a home as any minister can call up at once among the people of his own parish was practically unknown to Paul and the men of his time. Paul never saw a republic. Our republic is bad enough in many ways, but it is infinitely better than a tyrannical monarchy such as Paul was born into. Paul never saw a public school. The public school is the direct fruit of the teachings of Christ.

Paul never saw the printing press. There is much that is bad about the newspaper life of the world, and evil publications of all kinds, but on the whole the world is infinitely better off for the printed page, the thing that Paul never saw. Paul never knew of the Young People's Endeavor Society. Young men and women were never organized to work together as they are to-day. Paul never heard of the Young Men's Christian Association or Young Woman's Christian Association. There was not a single temperance organization in the world during Paul's lifetime. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was unheard of. The Anti-Saloon League and the Woman's Temperance Union have been simply the church in action in America, shaping at the same time towards what will finally be national prohibition. Paul never knew anything about public institutions for the relief of all kinds of trouble. Provident Associations in the great cities, Salvation Armies, juvenile courts, State institutions for the insane, the blind, the deaf, the dumb, paralytic, incapable old men and women, friendless people—all these were absolutely unknown to the Roman Empire. Paul never saw a hospital in action for the relief of all kinds of physical diseases.

Paul never saw a labor organization. There are many evil things about labor organizations, but on the whole labor has been helped and will be helped more and more by the union of labor for its own good. There were no reform movements in the time of Paul that amounted to anything. The Christian management of prisons and jails was unknown to Paul. In one of our great Western States to-day, the warden of a great penitentiary is a great big-hearted Christian man. He is not appointed as a reward for political services, but because he is a great lover of men. That was absolutely unknown in the time of Paul. Countless reform movements have sprung up all over the country for better municipal life, for the care of the city, and for the betterment of its entire organization. This was totally unknown to the rulers whom Paul knew.

Paul never heard of a co-operative business. We have many instances of such business in this country and in the world. Paul never attended a peace conference. It is impossible to imagine the emperor of Rome sending out an invitation to the governors of his provinces asking them to come together and discuss measures looking towards peace. Imagine the emperor Tiberius or Nero writing letters to all of the governors of provinces to come together and discuss better agriculture, the conservation of the forests, or the opening up of water ways for the people! Imagine the Roman emperor calling a convention to discuss the matter of child labor! Paul never saw a health department at work. Thanksgiving Glimpses

By ROSE C. WEBB

THANKSGIVING Day! What rapture thrills
The heart of every blessed boy
Who, knowing not life's cares nor ills,
Its pleasures truly can enjoy!
What glimpses through that pantry door
He gets!—no nearer dare he stand;
'Tis from afar with longings sore,
He views the wealth of promised land;
With what glad eagerness he waits
The approaching feast, the gladsome sound
Of chattering tongues and clattering plates,
When all that festive board surround!

Thanksgiving Day! In Mother's cheek
There blooms a rose not seen for years;
And father's step seems not so weak,
And smiles have banished all their tears;
For God has heard their earnest prayers,
And sent their boy, the wanderer, home;
Has whispered, "Son, God loves and cares,
No more in sin and darkness roam."
And so the merry feast goes on,
And loving hearts forget past pain;
Forget all things, save that their son,
Their wandering boy, is home again!

Thanksgiving Day! The pearly gates
Are opened wide; with welcome sweet
The loving Father there awaits
A pilgrim old, with weary feet;
"Dear child, thou hast much need for rest!
Life's cares and sorrows now are o'er;
Lean thou thy head upon my breast
And weary thou shalt be no more,
Nor lonely; for thy loved ones here
Are waiting for thee, while they sing,
With thankful hearts and voices clear,
Hosannas to thy Lord and King!"

hurches who are otherwise good men o not learn until late in life the lesson f brotherhood. The spirit of revenge lso, and all hatred of men dies out of he world slowly. Nevertheless the ense of brotherhood has come into the orld and can not go out again. Some ne has said that one of the greatest efinitions of a Christian is this: "A hristian is a man who loves people e does not like."

Christianity has given to the world thought of personal indignation at rong. Imagine the emperor at Rome etting personally indignant over the ourging and killing of a slave at lexandria, or the rubbing out of a ild's life in the rice fields near Cairo, the bitterness of some poor wretch one of the dungeons in his own cap- al! This feeling of personal indig- ation at wrong is at the hearts of hristian people to-day so that if there suffering among the men who gather ubber for the rubber trust, over on he Kongo, men and women in England nd America, who never saw the poor retch who had his foot cut off because e could not gather his proportion of ubber, feel indignant at it and take eps to put an end to it. This is hristian and does not belong to other eligions.

Christianity has brought into the orld a passion to improve its physical fe. Sanitation of the world, pure ood laws, healthful surroundings in ictories, decent and reasonable hours f labor, new and improved methods of urgery, legislation guarding the pur- ase of food, are all products of hristian thought. They do not be- ng to pagan countries and never did. hristianity has brought into the world longing for righteousness. It is not ough to keep out of jail; one ought be walking away from it as fast as e can. This hunger and thirst for ghteousness is a product of Christian eaching. Christianity has brought nto the world five great ideals: first, he Christian home; second, a Chris- an Church; third, a Christian school; ourth, the Christian State; and fifth, Christian press. These are the five reat factors of civilization.

Christianity has brought into the orld the ambition to save the whole orld. Imagine the emperor of Rome anting to save the world! Imagine ny man anywhere in Paul's time with passion to save the world! Imagine ocrates wanting to save the world. his ambition to save the world is hristian.

Christianity has brought into the orld the emphasis on the spiritual as ompared with the physical. It has rought into the world eternal hope ver against despair, and it has rought into the world a knowledge of he future so that men can live and do heir work knowing it is only the be- inning of a tremendous life here- fter.

Let us sing a new song to Jehovah— he song of optimism, the song of raise for what has been done. Jesus aid: "If I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto me." After wo thousand years since he said it, he not being disappointed. The world being drawn up to him. Men and omen who are Christians have apolo- ized too much and too long within heir own organizations. Let us stop ur fault finding, our criticism of the ost splendid things in the world, ex- ept as we criticize them to better hem. No man has a right to knock f the head of an angel on a cathedral nless he can carve a better one to put n its place. The most splendid things e have in civilization are not failures. merica is full of Christian homes, splendid churches, of great Sunday chools, of magnificent Young Men's hristian Associations, splendidly quipped public school teachers and ollege teachers, great crowds of hon- st, true, pure young men and women n the Endeavor and other societies.

LINKED UP WITH GOD

By Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D.*

"I FEAR John Knox's prayers more than an army of 10,000 men." Why did Mary, Queen of Scots, fear the prayers of John Knox? Because he was linked up with God and had power. What do I mean by being linked up with God? An anchor is made of strong links and one end of the chain is fastened to the ship. On the other end of the chain is a double hook. When the anchor is thrown out it takes hold upon the rocks in the sea and holds the ship. The ship is linked up with the rocks, and is therefore safe. We are linked up with God, who is called the "Rock of Ages." God has given us an anchor which is called "Hope," and when we throw this anchor out into our troubles it takes hold of God and we are safe.

Advent is one of your new words and last week you learned its meaning. During this season of Advent you should pray without ceasing so that all the good blessings of the Christmas time may come to you. The Bible tells of wonderful things done by prayer. Prayer opened the Red Sea; brought water gushing out of the dry rock. Prayer made the sun stand still. But you must not think that the power of prayer came to an end when the Bible was written. If God were writing his Bible to-day he could tell of wonderful things done by prayer in our own age. Here is one of them.

HUDSON TAYLOR was a man of great faith in God. When he first went out as a missionary to China it was in a sailing vessel. Very close to the shores of a cannibal island the ship was becalmed, and it was slowly drifting shoreward, and the savages were eagerly anticipating a feast. The captain came to Mr. Taylor and besought him to pray for the help of God.

"I will," said Taylor, "provided you set your sails to catch the breeze." The captain declined to make himself a laughing stock by unfurling sails in a dead calm. Taylor said: "I will not undertake to pray for the vessel unless you will prepare the sails." And it was done. While engaged in prayer there was a knock at the door of his stateroom.

"Who is there?"

The captain's voice responded, "Are you still praying for wind?"

"Yes."

"Well," said the captain, "you'd better stop praying, for we have more wind than we can well manage." And sure enough, when but a hundred yards from shore a strong wind had struck the sails of the boat so that the cannibals were cheated out of their human prey.

I CAN almost hear some one say: "We pray, but our prayers just go out from us, and we do not see the one to whom we pray; how can we know whether any one hears us?"

A short time ago one of my boys had a birthday. On the morning of this day I wanted to speak to him and to give him my best wishes. I went to a telegraph office and wrote what I wanted to say on a piece of paper. The telegraph officer took it and said that the message would be delivered in a few minutes. I was standing by a window from which I could see the Atlantic Ocean and I knew that my boy was in his office from the window of which he could see the Pacific Ocean. The telegraph operator made a little machine say "Tick-tick," and told me that the message had gone. Now how did I know whether my son would receive these ticks or not? I had faith and believed that that telegraph operator was linked up with another telegraph operator in that far-away city. But you say that does not prove that my message was received. That is true, but later on I got the proof. It came in a message stating that my congratulations had been received. The proof, you see, was in the answer. The first time you pray to God and receive an answer to your prayer you will have proof that you are linked up with God and that God can and will answer your prayer.

OUR text says, "Pray without ceasing." Some of you are thinking how it is possible to pray without ceasing. We must have time to play and time to eat and time to talk to our friends. As you always expect a story I shall let the story answer your question. It is a story of how a little girl prayed without ceasing. "When I first open my eyes in the morning I pray: Lord, open the eyes of my understanding; and while I am dressing I pray that I may be clothed with the robe of righteousness; and when I have washed, I ask for a washing of regeneration; and as I begin to work, I pray that I may have strength equal to my day; when I begin to kindle up the fire, I pray that God will kindle a fire of love in my soul. And as I sweep my room, I pray that my heart may be cleansed of all impurities; and while preparing and partaking of breakfast, I desire to be fed from the hidden manna and the sincere milk of the word; and as I am busy with the little children I look up to God as my Father and pray for the spirit of adoption, that I may be his child; and so on all day, everything I do furnishes me with a thought for prayer."

Pray without ceasing. Be "linked up" with God. Do your best and some one will finish all that you begin. Commit to memory these verses by Whittier:

Others shall sing the song;
Others shall right the wrong;
Finish what I begin,
And all I fail of win.

What matter, I or they,
Mine or another's day;
So the right word be said,
And life the sweeter made?

The newspapers publish the sin of the world. If all the papers of New York would publish all the good things done in New York every day they would not have paper enough to record them. There are ten thousand more good things done in New York every day than bad things. The same is true of Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston and all of our great cities. "Let us sing a new song unto the Lord." The world is being saved. God is not going to be disappointed. Jesus is seeing of the travail of his soul and is going to be satisfied. "Sing a new song unto Jehovah"; "for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth." And the world is going to be saved; not lost.

Home in the Dark

[When Sidney Porter (O. Henry) was dying, a nurse came into the room and began to turn down the light. He looked at her smiling and said, "Let it alone, nurse; I do not want to go home in the dark."]

INTO the chamber of death she came softly,
And on her wet lashes there trembled a tear;
She reached out her hand to turn the light lower,
For she knew he was dying, the end drawing near.

Gently he spoke as her hand touched the burner,
And his fading eyes glowed with a last, tender spark
As smiling he whispered, "Leave it alone, dear,
I do not want to go home in the dark."

There's sunshine and shade on life's checkered pathway,
And smiling and tears on our way to the tomb;
An Eden may blossom to-day, while to-morrow
Some night-shrouded Calv'ry may wrap us in gloom;

But a hand there will lead us, and keep the light burning;
If we hold our faith steadfast and true to the mark;
And hope at the last put a lamp in our chamber,
Nor leave us alone to "Go home in the dark."

Mayesville Institute's Loss

EMMA WILSON of Mayesville Industrial Institute, Mayesville, S. C., writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "On November 2 our barn was burned with all its contents, including one hundred two-horse wagon-loads of forage fodder, pea-vine hay, food oats, forty bushels of seed oats that we were preparing to plant, all of our cotton seed, a portion of our corn, and all of our farm implements except one plow. A valuable horse perished. A conservative estimate places our loss at $1,800. I am at my wits' end to know what to do. We had no insurance on the barn, so our loss is total. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers have done much for Mayesville already. Will they not help us in our present straits? We must have another barn and more farm implements, and we must have feed for our stock for the winter."

The Result of the November Elections

Hon. A. O. Eberhardt
Republican, Minnesota

Hon. Hiram Johnson
Republican, California

Hon. R. S. Vesey
Republican, South Dakota

IN 15 out of 27 States in which State tickets were chosen on November 8, the Democrats won. They carried 12 of the Northern and Western States which usually go Republican. In the Sixty-second Congress they will have a majority of 56 in the House and a gain of 8 seats, if not more, in the Senate. They will elect the next speaker, to succeed Mr. Cannon. Should they combine with the "insurgent" Republican Senators, they may be able to control both branches of the national legislature.

This extensive political overturn was not unexpected, but it brought many surprises when it actually happened. Perhaps it astonished none so much as it did the politicians themselves. In Pennsylvania, John K. Tener (Republican) was chosen governor by about 20,000 plurality, and the usually heavy Republican majorities were cut down greatly. Tennessee for the first time in many years elected a Republican, Benjamin W. Hooper (Fusion) for governor. West Virginia elected a Democratic legislature and a Democrat will succeed Nathan B. Scott in the United States Senate. Montana is claimed by both parties. California elected Hiram W. Johnson (Republican) governor by 50,000 plurality, the battle being conducted on State rather than party issues. Massachusetts gave Eugene N. Foss (Democrat) for governor 33,000 plurality; but the rest of the ticket was beaten. Connecticut gave Simeon E. Baldwin (Democrat) for governor 3,500 plurality. New Jersey elected that distinguished scholar, Dr. Woodrow Wilson (Democrat), governor by 45,000 plurality, after a notable campaign. In Ohio, Judson Harmon (Democrat) was chosen governor by over 75,000 plurality and the entire Democratic State ticket, except Attorney-General, was elected. Indiana's legislature is close, the Democrats, however, electing their State ticket by pluralities ranging from 5,000 to 20,000. It was claimed that Senator Beveridge (Republican) would not return to the United States Senate. Another doubtful State is Iowa, in which both sides claim the governor. In Kansas, Walter R. Stubbs (Republican), for governor, has 10,000 plurality.

National interest centred on the battle in New York, in which Mr. Roosevelt's personal influence had been a prominent factor. John A. Dix (Democrat) and the entire State ticket (with probably one exception) were elected by pluralities which surprised even the politicians themselves. Ordinarily the Empire State, outside of the city proper, gives a Republican plurality of 100,000 or over; but there was a "landslide" which cut this down in almost all the rural districts, while the city gave its normal Democratic majorities. The result was the election of Dix for governor by 69,316 plurality in the State. His plurality in the metropolis was 105,081. For the first time in sixteen years the Democrats are in control in New York State. The legislature is Democratic by 25 majority on joint ballot and will choose a Democrat to succeed Chauncey M. Depew. The Democrats will also gain 6 Congressmen. It is estimated that 100,000 Republicans abstained from voting.

Other governors elected were: Alabama, Emmett O'Neal (Democrat); Colorado, John B. Stephen (Republican); Idaho, James H. Hawley (Democrat), plurality, 1,000; Michigan, Chase S. Osborn (Republican); Minnesota, Adolph O. Eberhardt (Republican), plurality, 40,000; Nebraska, Chester H. Aldrich (Republican), plurality, 12,000; Nevada, Denver S. Dickerson (Democrat); New Hampshire, Robert P. Bass (Republican), plurality, 7,000; North Dakota, John Burke (Democrat), plurality, 1,000; Oklahoma, Lee Cruce (Democrat), plurality, 20,000; Oregon, Oswald West (Democrat), plurality, 2,500; Rhode Island, Aram J. Pothier (Republican), plurality, 903; South Carolina, C. L. Blease (Democrat); South Dakota, Robert S. Vesey (Republican); Texas, O. B. Colquitt (Democrat), plurality, 120,000; Wisconsin, Francis E. M'Govern (Republican), plurality, 25,000; Wyoming, Joseph M. Carey (Democrat).

Keep Abreast of the Times

EVENTS are moving rapidly in this day and generation, and if you really desire to be considered well informed you must take some periodical which has a world view, is up-to-date and unbiased, and is able to keep its readers abreast of the times. Frequent comment has been made on the fact that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gets the story of important events before its readers while these events are the absorbing topics of interest. With its great resources for securing facts it has made itself the News-Weekly of the entire country, and it is able to inform you thoroughly on what really happens in a concise and readable way.

Often a great event, which will affect thousands, occurs after the paper has gone to press, and we decide that our readers must have an account of it. Time and expense are not considered, the presses are stopped, a new page is inserted and hardly have you read a short and garbled newspaper account before you receive one brimful of information in what is justly called the Leading Family Weekly. The word "leading" is no misnomer. More times than not we have had the story printed from three days to a week ahead of any other weekly in America. We have been able to do this because we have a large corps of special correspondents scattered all over the world and living in every country, and they send us at once news, often by telegraph and cable, of earthquakes, floods, revolutions and other events which occur in their districts. If it is of paramount importance we send a writer of note to see things for our readers. When the Messina earthquake occurred, we cabled an American of note in Switzerland to go at once to the scene. In a few hours he was in Italy and reached Calabria on the government relief ship. His wonderful stories from Messina are fresh in most of our readers' minds. That was only one of many instances.

That our illustrations are equally up to date with the articles and among the first from event to reader is another fact which should influence you when you are about to subscribe or to renew your subscription.

A HAPPY THANKSGIVING

By GILBERT PATTEN BROWN

Author of "The Blacksmith of Concord," "Tales of the Forecastle," etc.

CLARENCE FITCH was of an old New England family. His paternal emigrant ancestor, Deacon Zachary Fitch, had settled in Lynn, Mass., in 1633. The "Fitch Manor" was one of the renowned spots of old Reading. Here Clarence was born, and spent his childhood days in rural nature. When arriving at suitable age his parents sent him away to be fitted for college. A beautiful day in September found Clarence somewhat downhearted as to the new situation. His heart was not in the work before him, and it seemed to him as if it must be lead, as he slowly endeavored to unpack his trunk amid the new surroundings. His eyes looked suspiciously red, and the plain truth was that he was unmistakably homesick, this being his first venture away from home. At first he was greatly delighted to be allowed to come to Alden Manor, a boys' boarding school, but now that he was there he wished that he was home again. He felt that he could never stay—never; he must go home. His desire for an education had passed away. He wished to see mother, father and the rest, and last, but not least, to breathe the autumn air of the pine-covered hills of the town of his fathers. The old home had captured his ambition.

"Who could study with such a lump choking him?" he said to himself. "I can't, and I don't believe any one could."

He gave a heavy sigh and the hot tears filled his deep blue eyes and rolled down his cheeks, but he grabbed his handkerchief and hastily wiped them away as there came a rap at the door.

"Come in," he called, and in walked a slender boy, who greeted him with a pleasant "Good afternoon." "Good afternoon," Clarence responded, "if it is afternoon. I thought it was midnight; it seemed so," and he smiled grimly.

The boy who entered the room was observant and quick-witted, consequently he knew by the trace of tears and the remark about "midnight" that Clarence was homesick.

"I'm Samuel Webster," he said by way of introduction, "and I know how you feel, and I'm sorry. But it will be lighter soon. Cheer up."

"I know it'll be 'lighter' soon—I'm going home," was Clarence's rejoinder as he arose from his kneeling position, and, closing the trunk, sat down on it.

"Well," said Sam, "I'm glad you have a home to go to. That's more than I can claim. But I hope you'll stay where you are until vacation."

"Perhaps you've never been homesick. There isn't any particular fun in it, I can tell you."

"You can't tell me anything I don't know about homesickness, but I can tell you."

"What? I'd like to know what."

"You have a home, haven't you?"

"Well, I guess so; and a pleasanter one you couldn't find," was Clarence's smiling reply.

"What made me feel so fearfully homesick when I came here was the fact that I didn't have any home. You see, I was homesick—and still am—for what I'd had and lost."

Clarence regarded his caller with surprise.

"What do you mean?" he asked. "What became of your home?"

"It was all broken up. Mother died and father went abroad. I was an only child, so perhaps you can imagine how sad and lonely I was. Before father went away I came here. Everything and everybody was strange, and I really thought for a while I'd break down. It seemed as if there was nothing to look forward to—nothing; and I wasn't as brave as I might have been. I couldn't think of much else except that mother was dead and that I had no home. So, you see, I know what it is to be homesick. Cheer up, and let me help you unpack. You ought to be willing to stay when you know there's a home waiting for you."

Clarence jumped up from his trunk and grasped Sam's hands in a close clasp.

"I'm sorry for you, old fellow," he said, "and I'll be glad to have you help me get my things to rights; and I'm greatly obliged to you for telling me about your experience. It has done me good. It's made me realize what a calf I've been."

The boys were friends from that moment. It did not take long for them to unpack the trunk and arrange the clothing in bureau and closet, and then they had a talk which cheered them both. Clarence, however, did most of the talking, and with so interested a listener, it did him good to tell about the dear old country home. To Sam it seemed like a beautiful story, for, although he had never been on a farm, he had longed to see one ever since he could remember. It made him feel good to hear about Clarence's jolly father and his lovely mother and pretty little golden-haired sister, Beth. And it did him good to hear about the horses and cows, chickens and lambs. After Clarence's recital of the country home and its indoor and outdoor delights, Sam saw it in a dream and awoke with a smile on his face.

It was early in September when Clarence came to Alden Manor. Early in October—by mutual consent—the two boys roomed together. Both were doing well in their studies. November opened cold and stormy, and continued so. As the days passed on there was a something in the air that made most of the boys jubilant. It was "Thanksgiving" — that day so dear to all American hearts.

"Going home!" Going home!" This was the theme most talked of.

As for Sam Webster, his heart, notwithstanding his brave effort to "endure what couldn't be cured," felt like a lump of lead. Every boy at Alden Manor except him was going home to spend Thanksgiving, and he was to stay where he was—where, in fact, he had already stayed for the two other Thanksgivings since his mother died. She, the "sainted woman of Duxbury," had left a deep impression on Sam's life.

It was a bitter cold evening just three days before Thanksgiving, and Sam sat in his room trying to study a difficult lesson. But he found it uphill work. There was a mist over his eyes so that he could not see the letters. There was a hunger in his heart that made him long to cry out—a hunger for "home and mother." From all the coming joy he was shut out. Suddenly along the hall came a quick step and Clarence came into the room like a small cyclone, his eyes alight, his face aglow. He flourished an open letter before Sam's wondering eyes. The book was at once put aside. "Have a seat, Clarence; take my big mission rocker and make yourself at home."

"Thank you, Sam," was the reply.

"What's the news?" asked Sam.

"You're going home with me, old fellow," said Clarence, "and if you're as glad about it as I am we'll weigh in a great deal in gladness. Here's what mother says: 'Bring along the dear fellow; we'll all be glad to see him. As for myself, I think it safe to promise that I will mother him to his heart's content.' What do you think of mother's message, Sam?"

Whatever Sam thought of the delightful message, he could not speak just then. His lips quivered, his eyes became misty.

"Well," said Clarence, "are you going home with me?"

"I'd like to see the one who would keep me from going, now that I have a bid," Sam replied huskily.

The next day was very cold. Little studying was done by either of the boys, and as the shades of night came on they were seen with their dress-suit cases at the Reading station, where Mr. Gerrish met them with the big sleigh and a span of fine horses. He greeted Sam as if he were an old friend. His arms were thrown about him in hearty welcome. The snow was falling fast and blowing furiously, but stout-hearted Sam did not care. The warm greeting had made him happier than he had been before since the old home was broken up. The trio were warm and comfortable under the big buffalo robes. They talked and laughed while the horses trotted swiftly of their own accord, knowing that they were going to home and shelter from the storm. Sam did not think they had possibly gone five miles—the distance from Reading station to the Fitch farmhouse — when Clarence called out joyously: "Home! Home!"

Mr. Gerrish had seen service in the War between the States in the unpleasant days of 1861-1865, and said to the gathering: "This is a most happy meeting. We boys of Joe Hooker's corps did not receive a warmer welcome when 'Father Abe' mustered us out." There was a barking of dogs, and then a door opened, letting out a flood of light, and then there was a grand transformation scene. Old Jake, a colored man, had taken the horses, and Mr. Fitch and his two boys were "within the doors." Mrs. Fitch, a sweet-faced, lovely woman, after giving her son a loving greeting, began her promised "mothering" of Samuel. "Dear boy," she said, "I'm so glad you are here," and she put her arms around him, kissing his forehead. And then after the mother's greeting little golden-haired Beth held out her hands, shyly saying: "God's good. Ma and I prayed every day that he'd bring you home on Thanksgiving Day."

"Kiss sister Beth, if you want to," laughed Clarence. "She's only a kid, you know."

"Mr. Gerrish met them with the big sleigh"

A Thanksgiving Greeting to Our Readers

DEAR FRIENDS OF THE FAMILY CIRCLE: Our most cordial greetings go out to every member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD household at this Thanksgiving season. Every one of you we regard as a personal friend. Some have been with us many years, while others are comparatively newcomers; but we are glad to have you all alike as sharers in those activities that have made this journal the greatest FAMILY WEEKLY in the world.

Under the direction of Dr. Klopsch, who enjoyed the privilege of your friendship and confidence for many years, the closest bonds existed between the paper and all of its readers. Their welfare was its highest concern. We wish to assure you that all Dr. Klopsch's methods are ours, and that his generous attitude toward THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family Circle will be faithfully continued by his successors, who labored by his side from the beginning, and who remain to carry out the high ideals for which this journal has always stood.

Every year sees our Family Circle grow larger. Over 330,000 American homes now welcome the weekly visits of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. This year we hope to see it climb to the half-million mark. You can help us to accomplish this. Our greatest aim is to make the paper a comfort and a joy to every one who reads it, a true and faithful spiritual helper and a strong ally of God's people everywhere. In creed and character it is unchanged. It stands for an orthodox Gospel. In all the essential features that go to make a live, up-to-date, first-class Family Magazine it is to-day better than ever. Remember, that in the volume of its reading matter, apart from all advertising, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, equals eighteen monthly issues of any leading American monthly magazine! Besides, its variety is infinitely greater than that of any other weekly or monthly publication.

The Holiday Season brings greatly increased business demands upon us. It is the time when a very large proportion of our readers renew their subscriptions, and within the next few weeks, they will be sending in their renewals by thousands in every mail. At the same time, many who read our outside advertisements will be coming in as new subscribers. These two great streams of subscribers, flowing in upon us simultaneously, would seriously tax the managerial resources of almost any other paper than THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Now, if you who already belong to the Family Circle will co-operate with us this season, as you have always done in the past, you can help us materially. You can do this by sending in your renewals, together with your premium orders, a little in advance. We have always made it a rule to attend to the needs of our CHRISTIAN HERALD Family first, so that none of you should meet with delay or disappointment.

You will receive with next week's CHRISTIAN HERALD our colored Premium Supplement. You will find in it many famously good things to interest you in the way of valuable Book Premiums, not forgetting the beautifully illustrated "LIFE-WORK OF DR. KLOPSCH," which takes you clear round the globe with him on his wonderful career of world-wide philanthropy. We are confident you especially will welcome this splendid volume, which will be in universal demand. You will be immensely pleased, too, with the fine variety of other books suited to all tastes and ages, and also with the Magazine Combinations which you can choose from; the very best of the famous monthlies are there. Many of you will want The Outlook, which tells of the activities of that remarkable citizen, Colonel Roosevelt. But we won't anticipate. As soon as you receive the Supplement, write us at once, making your choice. Whether you wish a book Premium or not, please remember that you are entitled to our fine photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, which you will esteem as a precious souvenir, and you will also receive our beautiful "Baby Calendar," size 13 ¼ 19 inches and printed in many colors. These will be mailed to you immediately on receipt of your subscription. By renewing ahead you will help us greatly in the dispatch of our holiday business and will enable our clerks to avoid errors due to haste. Of course, a renewal is from the date of your expiry, no matter how long ahead you may send it. You won't lose a single number by anticipating; but you will do us a real service.

It was Dr. Klopsch's oft-repeated prayer that not one familiar face might be missing from our Family Circle when the renewal season came around. He always regarded it as the season of Family Reunion. We will esteem it a pleasure and an inspiration to have you, and all the other members of the Circle, with us during the coming year, that we may keep in frequent touch with you, and have the benefit of your counsel, your hearty association in the Lord's work, and your prayers.

We wish you all a very Happy Thanksgiving.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

After the Election

NOW that the election, with its victories and defeats, is a thing of the past, the average American citizen is satisfied to accept the results with philosophic good humor and leave to the politicians the dull and thankless task of conducting the post-mortem on the careers that were rudely snuffed out by the "landslide" of November 8. Whether it was the tariff and the high cost of living, or the New Nationalism, or the stormy weather, or any one of a dozen other reasons which induced a considerable number of sovereign voters to change their views, or to stay away from the polls on election day, may never be satisfactorily decided. The one palpable fact evident to the unbiased mind is that the American people exercised their ancient, indisputable privilege of taking a hand in national affairs and of setting things right in their own way. When the people are conscientiously convinced that change is desirable, they bring it about, regardless of partisanship. May good come out of the upheaval. May it conduce to purer politics in both parties, to better government, State and civic, to stability in business, and to the welfare and comfort of the whole country. And may Divine wisdom guide the new incumbents, of whatever party, and lead them in honor and righteousness to serve the highest interests of the nation.

The Churches and World-Peace

IT has been well said that if the so-called "Christian Powers" were to determine upon world-peace, there would be an end of war. The churches are taking up the question of arbitration in earnest. At the Interdenominational Ministerial Conference held in the Marble Collegiate Church in New York City, a few days ago, resolutions were adopted urging a concerted movement among Christians everywhere for world-peace. Secretary Knox, of the State Department, in a recent official statement declared that the leading nations had made so favorable a response to the suggestion regarding arbitration that he believed a truly permanent court of arbitral justice, composed of judges acting under a sense of judicial responsibility, representing the various judicial systems of the world and capable of insuring the continuity of arbitral jurisprudence, will be established in the immediate future and that the Third Peace Conference will find it in successful operation at The Hague.

Here is an opportunity for the Christian ministry of America of all denominations to unite in developing public sentiment favoring the cessation of war and the establishment of an Arbitral Court of Nations with power to enforce its decisions. It is suggested that this should be the theme of their sermons on Christmas Sunday, and we heartily approve the proposition. There could be no more fitting time for this than on the world's gladdest day—the anniversary of the birth of the Prince of Peace.

The Spirit of Thanksgiving

THANKSGIVING Day stands out by itself on the calendar. There is no other day with so many delightful associations and tender memories, no day upon which the heart so spontaneously pours out its grateful tribute to the Father above for all his goodness through the year. And this applies equally to ourselves as a nation, as communities and as individuals. For peace within our borders, for generous harvests, for the health and welfare of our communities, we owe to God a debt of love and gratitude which finds expression in prayer, praise and the festivities appropriate to the annual festival of Thanksgiving. We are usually so much engrossed with the active business of life as a nation that we leave too little time for reflection on the Divine goodness; yet every day we are surrounded by blessings. Sleeping and waking, on the farm, in the store, the office, the workshop, we are still the objects of His wondrous bounty and care. Whatever reverses we encounter, he enables us to overcome them. So, while the passing year has had its sorrows, we feel that the joys have outweighed them, and that we are still God's debtors in thanks for multitudinous blessings. Let us show our gratitude for all of these mercies by reaching out a helping hand to others who have been less fortunate than ourselves. Remember the poor at Thanksgiving—the sick, the destitute, the hungry, the unemployed. In every community there are those to whom a kindly word or a generous hospitality would bring a real touch of the spirit of the festival. Pass on your blessings. By so doing, you will make your own heart the lighter, your own home the brighter and your own Thanksgiving table more enjoyable to all who sit around it.

The Samaritan Pentateuch

MR. ISAAC (standing at the right), a Samaritan priest from Shechem, Palestine, son of the high priest of his people, is now in England on business relative to the proposed sale of this ry ancient manuscript copy of the Pentateuch—e first five books of the Hebrew Scriptures, our d Testament. It is probable that he will bring e precious parchment rolled on its silver rods to e United States before finally disposing of it. his photograph was made six months ago on the emises of the Samaritan synagogue in Shechem, here about 200 descendants of the ancient people partly of Jewish, partly of old Assyrian stock) ill live, separated by their religion from all other ople, Jewish or Christian. Their copy of the cient Bible is believed by them to have been ritten down by Abishua, a great-grandson of aron, and to be about 3,500 years old; it certainly nnot be less than 2,000 years old, for the characrs are of a style abandoned by Jewish copyists me twenty centuries ago. The high priest is a ndly, scholarly man, who has for many years led e worship of the dwindling congregation and ught their children. The three younger men own in the picture are his own sons. In 1904 he d some other Samaritans attended International Christian Sunday hool Convention at Jerusalem and made a short address in Hebrew, ying: "As representatives of one the most ancient, though indeed at resent one of the smallest, of the ur monotheistic forms of religion, e, priest and laymen of the Samarins, bid you a hearty welcome to the nd of Promise. We seize this opportunity to record our appreciation the fact that the Founder of Chrisnity and all sincere disciples of s have always evinced a deep symthy with our people. May the God Israel bless you in your coming in d going out, from this time forth d forever." There is no doubt that is is the oldest copy of the Pentauch in existence. The fact is aditted by the best scholars. There no Jewish copy of the Pentateuch old, because it was a custom of the ws when the copy of their Pentauch had become handworn to copy anew and destroy the original. t the Samaritans, on the other nd, even when they transcribed the riptures, preserved the originals th the greatest veneration and re. It was a becoming reverence hich the Samaritan high priest ade to the Founder of our Chrisnity, who said:

Think not that I am come to destroy the , or the prophets: I am not come to destroy. t to fulfil. (Matt. 5:17.)

Lover's Long Journey

Miss Olive Macleod, daughter of r Reginald Macleod, has just arted on a journey of 4,500 miles the interior of Africa to lay a hite cross on the grave of her beothed, Lieutenant Boyd Alexander, ho was killed by natives last April. e will have to travel a thound miles through the jungle beeen the Niger River and Lake Chad in central frica. She will have been the only white woman er to have undertaken such a journey. Lieutent Alexander, an explorer of great promise, started his remarkable journey across Africa from the iger to the Nile. He had two white companions, s brother, Captain Claude Alexander, and Captain E. Gosling, both of whom died of fever during e journey. The Lieutenant remained many onths in the neighborhood of Lake Chad, often aist-deep in the mud and reeds, mapping the outes of the mysterious disappearing lake. The exorer did not emerge from the wilderness at the ead waters of the Nile till 1907. The region own as Wadai is inhabited by fanatical black ohammedans very poorly under the control of the rench. Alexander was traveling this region on s way to Egypt after revisiting Lake Chad when was killed. He had somewhat of Stanley's intelctual ability and Gordon's all-daring courage, and s loss to the scientific world will be great. In these ays, when engagements are so easily broken, when e marital tie is so easily unbound, it is beautiful to see the love of this English woman for her betrothed, which reminds us of the affection which the maiden had for her spouse.

As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters. (Solomon's Song 2:2.)

Gave Up Their Queues

Li Yung Yew, Chinese Consul-General at San Francisco, with the entire staff of his consulate, appeared at their headquarters the other day, with their queues cut off and attired as American citizens in accordance with the Imperial edict issued at Pekin that all members of the diplomatic corps and consular offices of China residing in foreign countries, as well as other representatives of the Chinese government in foreign service, should cut off their queues and adopt the dress and customs of the country to which they have been sent. There was a great sensation in Chinatown when these officials appeared on the streets with short hair and in the robes of an American gentleman. In what a revolutionary age do we live when the despotic habit of centuries can be laid aside so easily and when a government can show such good judgment in accommodating the relations of its officials to the many nations with which it has to deal. Some of the nations of the Far East are giving up their old religions as easily and swiftly as these Chinese officials have thrown away their queues and taken upon themselves the American garb. The imperial edict reveals great wisdom in recognizing the rule of expediency to which the apostle refers.

The Samaritan Pentateuch and Its Guardians

I am made all things to all men, that I might by all means save some. (I. Cor. 9:22.)

Magnet Kills Steel Worker

John Warnack, thirty-five years old, was carrying a steel billet through the yards of the Jones Laughlin Steel Company in Pittsburg when a huge 30-ton magnet, used to unload scrap iron from cars, lifted the steel billet which he carried and himself ten feet into the air, crushing him between the big horseshoe and the steel so badly that he died two hours later in the Southside Hospital. Workmen who witnessed the accident had considerable difficulty in extricating the victim. They forgot to shut off the current supplying the magnetic power. When the power was shut off, the body and steel fell to the ground, the billet striking one of the rescuers on the right leg, breaking it. Warnack was so badly frightened that he did not let go of the steel at once, which would have saved him. There are magnetisms of evil drawing men to destruction as well as those of virtue attracting men to life. There is the old sea story of a magnetic island which drew every particle of iron from a passing vessel and threw passengers and freight into the ocean. It is a dangerous thing even for good people to go too near to persons and institutions that are charged with this evil magnetic power. Against the danger of this evil communication Moses issued a warning in these words:

And he spake unto the congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins. (Num. 16:26.)

Growing Costly Pearls

Professor Bashford Dean, of Columbia University, at a meeting of the American Fisheries Society in the Aquarium in New York recently, told of a secret method of growing pearls, which are valued at $200 apiece, at the trifling expense of $2 each. The most costly pearls have been produced in a little harbor about fifty miles south of Tokyo, Japan. They are grown by causing the oyster to secrete perfect and round pearls. Professor Dean said that when he was at the University of Japan the Emperor of Japan himself opened one of these oysters and took from it this new pearl. The secret is the discovery of the late Dr. N. Nishikawa, a graduate of the University of Tokyo; and he left his secret to his father-in-law, Mikemoto, one of the most famous pearl-raisers of Japan. The discovery has been kept sacredly secret. Professor Dean suspects that the process consists in introducing into the shell in which the pearl is formed a piece of mother-of-pearl, to take the place of the worm which nature uses to form the core of the naturally grown pearl. Japanese people are intellectually very brilliant, and this discovery in pearl culture is very valuable. Our spirits are adorned with jewels. By the introduction of the Christ-life, the jewel of piety, the pearl of great price, is produced. The importance of this treasure Christ indicated in the parable.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls, who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it. (Matt. 13:45, 46.)

Express and Taxicab Drivers Strike

As a result of the energetic efforts of Mayor Gaynor, the great express strike seems to have come peaceably to an end in New York. The striking drivers and helpers at a mass meeting accepted the companies' terms on two conditions. These were that the employers should not discriminate against any striker except for acts of violence or inciting to violence. The second proviso is that the strikers over in New Jersey also agree to these terms. This does not affect the chauffeurs' strike which started in connection with the express "walk-out." There is still a chance that even yet the negotiation may fail. There was danger for over a week that a general strike would be ordered of all public vehicle drivers, including truckmen and hackmen, and bus drivers. These, with those already out, would affect 100,000 employees of one kind or another. It was rumored that the sympathetic strike would tie up the ferries on the Hudson River. An order was sent from police headquarters directing that no police escort be provided for any vehicle which is in charge of a driver who has not a city license. The question of a closed shop is the rock on which all peace conferences to date have split, and if a general strike is called it will be over this issue. The Mauretania was delayed some time because of the inability of a number who were about to sail to get their baggage to the ship. We trust that the question of hours, wages, open or closed shop, and every other one of difference, will be speedily settled and thus avert the hundreds of thousands if not millions of dollars of damage and the possible loss of precious lives that would result. Mutual concessions, it appears to us, would be a part of wisdom at this time, and society might adopt the instruction given to the individual:

If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men. (Rom. 12:18.)

Aunt Hannah's Girls

By Mary B. Wingate

AS cold weather came on, I noticed Aunt Hannah seemed to be thinking deeply and I wondered what new benevolence she was planning out; for I knew she generally has something on hand.

One day, I saw her coming, and I knew by the way she carried her head and by the sparkle in her eye that she had some important matter well under way.

"Well," she said, "I've been jest longin' to do somethin' for them poor men on the Bowery. 'Course, some of 'em might soon get work; but most of 'em can't. I had a letter from my nephew, James Henry, the other day. He says when there's a man drops out of the concern that he's foreman of, there's a lot standin' waitin' for the job. He sent me money to come up to New York an' visit him; but I can't leave home, an' besides I want that money to help out with.

"But I should jest love to see that new Mission Hall I've read so much about," she continued. "I was never gladder in my life than when they built such a good place for them poor men. It'll cost a lot to feed that Bread Line from Thanksgivin' till Easter, an' I'm jest bound to have a finger in the pie, tho' 'tain't no pie, but bread an' coffee they'll get fer their midnight breakfast."

"But you must look out for yourself, Aunt Hannah," I said. "You know prices are very high and growing higher."

"Yes, I do know, an' that makes it harder fer them poor men. I've laid awake nights plannin' how I could save somethin' for them and not scrimp in church money nor in helpin' the poor we have always with us.

"Now, I did need a new bunnit bad; but I told my girls I wouldn't have no slop-bowl with no dead bird on top, nor no wings nor tail feathers neither. And Amy Cole, who works to the milliner's, asked what I had on hand an' I showed her some velvet an' ribbon an' she took it an' added a little to it, an' made me a real tasty bunnit. An' they do say I look a lot younger in it. She wouldn't take nothin' for her work an' that saves me two or three dollars.

"I've been studyin' upon tithin' an' I'm teachin' it to them blessed girls of mine, an' will you believe it, every one of 'em has begun to keep account of their income, and most of them is workin' girls, you know, an' they say what is left of their tenth after they take out their money for the church and missions, they shall bring to me to use as I shall advise 'em.

"That has made me so happy! You see they call me their 'shaprone' an' say my house is their club-room an' they take their beaus to see me instead of goin' to the nickel show an' other places of the kind. I allers give 'em a warm welcome an' we have jolly times together. Sometimes 'tis funny, tho'. A girl will tell me her troubles with her beau; then, perhaps, he'll come an' ask me what makes Louise or Mariar act so queer—as if she didn't care nothin' about him any more. Then I tell him to 'make a man of himself,' an' give him a hint or two about his manners or habits, an' tell him to be patient and things will come out right, an he'll take my advice.

"Yes. I know it's solemn business, guidin' young lives, an' I have to pray a good deal 'fore I dare to talk to 'em. I often tell

A Song of Thanksgiving

FANNY J. CROSBY — HUBERT P. MAIN

1. Praise ye the Lord, O come with joy be-fore Him; Hope of the world, the God in whom we trust; Praise ye His name, with thank-ful hearts adore Him; Hail ye the Bless-ed One, the on-ly Wise and Just.
REFRAIN.
He is the Word, whose truth en-dur-eth ev-er, He is the Light whose glo-ry fad-eth nev-er; He is the Rock, where safe-ly we a-bide, He is the might-y Lord, there is none be-side.

Copyright, 1910, by The Biglow & Main Co.

Praise ye the Lord for clouds that, o'er us bending,
Break into showers that lave the thirsty soil;
Praise for the sun, whose genial rays descending
Smile on the tender blade and cheer the reaper's toil.

Praise ye the Lord for autumn's many treasures,
Praise for the fruit from laden boughs that fall;
Thanks be to Him for homes and social pleasures,
Thanks to His gracious hand that giveth bread to all.

THE HEART'S GRATITUDE

OUR Father, we adore thy grace
To us so richly shown,
And thank thee for the tender love
That leaves us not alone.

We thank thee that thy kingdom comes
To our poor hearts each day;
We thank thee that through all the earth
It wins its widening way.

We thank thee for the daily bread
To soul and body given;
That often on our hungering hearts
The manna falls from heaven.

And oh, we thank thee, most of all,
That sin may be forgiven,
And that with penitence and faith
We dare look up to heaven.

We thank thee that thou dost, each hour,
A thousand ills avert;
The soul which thou dost deign to guard
Even Satan cannot hurt.

With gratitude unutterable
We thank thee and adore;
We thank thee, but we pray for grace
To thank thee more and more.

Aunt Hannah's Gir

'em the Lord is the only one to can see the future an' they must ask him to lead 'em; but I always sympathize with 'em, for some of 'em do seem to have a lot of trouble. But as I was sayin'—what was I sayin'—oh, yes, 'bout tithin'. I've found it the best way to learn how much I must give, tho' I allers want to add a free will offerin' if I can.

"Now," she went on, smilingly, "if them blessed girls begin to —an' I've learnt their beaus to thinkin' of doin' the same—some of 'em anyhow—what a lot of money 'twill bring into the Lord's treasury, an' there's so much happiness in doin' for his sake, I believe they'll jest keep right on thru life. I think they'll be able to give five cents a week all around during the cold weather on the bread and coffee for the starvin' men. Jest think what a lot that will be! I'm jest as happy as I can be. My cup's full an' runnin' over. Here I be a lone woman without learnin', or money, nor relations, yet I'm set surrounded by these bright young girls who love me so. I reely think I owe the Lord a good thank offerin', don't you? To be sure I don't know what may be ahead; but I've allers found when I've been the most dan' 'bout givin' to the Lord, he's paid me back, 'good measure, pressed down and runnin' over."

Mr. Montefiore's Religio

IN a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, an article from the pen of ex-Rabbi Leopold Cohn, of the Williamsburg Mission to the Jews, was published in which the statement was made that Claude Montefiore, of England, a scion of the famous Jewish family of that name, had espoused Christianity, and was making a tour of the United States, urging the Jews of America to accept the Gospel. This statement was called in question by the American Israelite of Cincinnati, O., which absolutely denied that Claude Montefiore, either "publicly or privately, had espoused Christianity or any other religion than Judaism," and added that his visit to the United States was for a totally different purpose. Ex-Rabbi Cohn, when this criticism of his article was called to his attention, substantiated his statements by directing attention to an article in the New York Jewish Daily News of September 13, 1910, in which the writer said:

Mr. Montefiore does not write concerning Christianity as an analytical critic, but he writes as a missionary, who seeks to make propaganda to his belief. . . . Achad Ha'am calls the attitude of Montefiore by its right name. He says that this is the last step of apostasy and turning away from Judaism. . . . This is exactly what has happened with Montefiore and his friends. They have sought for all their lifetime in the Scriptures to turn away from Judaism, and they have gone further and further, until they have now reached Christianity.

The same paper (Jewish Daily News) in its issue of September 18, 1910, said:

Achad Ha'am, the greatest of modern expositors, has enlisted in the fight against the Gospel campaign ("Judenmission") which Mr. Claude Montefiore is carrying on in England. Achad Ha'am's article was written as an answer to Mr. Montefiore's book on the New Testament. In that book, Mr. Montefiore seeks to raise Christianity to the sky and to make Jesus the true forerunner of the highest kind of religion and morality. . . . Here is a wealthy Jew in London and suddenly the spirit strikes him a craving for Jesus, and he writes a book of 1,100 pages in which he repeats all that the Christian commentators of the New Testament say. . . . The one important thing about him is that he has become a believer in Jesus. . . .

THANKSGIVING
At the Bowery Mission

By JOHN G. HALLIMOND, D.D., Superintendent

T may considerably surprise CHRISTIAN HERALD readers to know that ose who in this country suffer most ignantly the harrowing horrors of verty are American-born citizens. ne foreign immigrant poor are comratively well taken care of. From uses which I have not space to deribe, but which, in my Bowery Mison work, I am face to face with ntinually, it is much easier for the ewly arrived immigrant to secure emoyment and to keep it when he has tained it, than it is for the unskilled merican laborer.

Thanksgiving day is such a distinctwely American institution that in our fort to bring happiness to the poorest omes we naturally seek out the sufrers born under the Stars and tripes, and endeavor to cure for them some articipation in it. This oes not at all mean that e overlook the necessies of the poor who suf- r not only the pangs of overty, but the additional woe of separation om the land of their rth.

At nine o'clock Thanksving morning there will gathered together, in ne commodious breakst room of the Mission, ne representatives of the ost needy families that, fter painstaking effort, n be found in the great etropolis.

Cases of the most disressing need have genally to be sought for. he professional almsnplorer that so boldly nd persistently accosts ou in the street and deands aid, is, as often as ot, the least needy. So very family helped by us at Thanksving has been personally visited, and ne lack of the wherewithal to procure ne necessities of life, to say nothing of mforts or luxuries, has been placed eyond all doubt.

Alas, it is often found that many her things besides a Thanksgiving nner are needed to bring real happiess to the sufferers!

Last year, one of our brethren who as engaged in the work of visiting, me in great haste to inform me of a se of dire distress. I went off at nce, and found in the dark rear room a tenement, a man dying of tuberculosis. He had been the bread winner r a large family, who were now owded into this airless, cheerless om, waiting for the end to come. hey had not dared to inform the auorities of his illness, knowing that e would have been at once removed to hospital; and now it was too late. e died half an hour after I left the room. The distracted wife and little ones were at their wits' end, so in addition to the task of providing the usual Thanksgiving dinner, a great many other absolutely necessary things demanded our immediate attention.

I wish CHRISTIAN HERALD readers could be brought to realize two particular things that stand out prominently in our Bowery Mission experience. The first is the gratitude of the poor for the least kindness shown to them. Shakespeare said that gratitude is "the exchequer of the poor," and I, more than most men, know just how rich in this virtue these lowly ones are. I like to take it for granted that they would be just as generous if they had the means, as they are now grateful for what they receive. Oh, if you could just see how eyes shine, and hear how voices tremble when a kind word is spoken! If, as has been said, "gratitude is the soil on which joy thrives," then that is truly a happy crowd that receives the baskets in our Mission room on Thanksgiving morning. These baskets contain ample provisions for a dinner for five or six persons.

The other fact I refer to is the part the children of the poor play in this pathetic drama. I wonder when the Christian Church will realize the fact that tens of thousands of babies under one year of age die every year of malnutrition, a pretty name given to the ugly fact of starvation. Starved to death! Fifteen thousand babies will die in New York City this horrible death before another Thanksgiving comes round. Poverty's woe and horror fall most heavily upon the children of the city, the half-starved, beaten, neglected child of the inebriate, and the weak child of the consumptive. Oh, did not the childless, homeless Man of Nazareth give the children their place in his kingdom? Did he not use his marvelous power for their protection? Did he not tell us what our duty is to the child?

This is why, in order to make Thanksgiving Day a happy time amongst the poor, we feel it to be our duty to provide, as far as we can, the prime necessity of food for the underfed bodies of the children of poverty.

How the Thanksgiving Baskets are Prepared for Poor Families by the Bowery Mission

Mrs. W. is stone deaf, and in delicate health. She lives in one room of a rear tenement with her two boys, one thirteen, the other eleven years of age. Her husband is a worthless drunkard who has left them to care for themselves. The eldest boy was looking forward to soon getting his working papers, and thus being able to assist in the support of the family. Whilst at a summer home, however, in August he fell from a tree and broke his arm. He was taken to the hospital, where his arm was amputated, and where he still lies. The little bread-winner is therefore incapacitated, and the home is poverty-stricken.

Mrs. H. has a family of six children, the eldest nine years old, the youngest two weeks old. Her husband is a brass polisher, but only employed irregularly, and has never earned more than five or six dollars a week for several years. The woman makes every effort to keep her home and little ones clean and tidy, and in the task often overworks herself.

Mrs. C., her husband, and three children are all more or less invalids. She herself has dropsy, her two girls are subject one to epilepsy, the other to hysteria, whilst the youngest in the family, a boy of nine, is like his father, who has heart trouble and cannot work. Lately the two girls, notwithstanding their ailments, have been working in a factory ten hours a day, earning together four dollars eighty cents per week, and this is about all the family has to live upon.

These are types picked out at random of families who will on Thanksgiving morning receive one of the Bowery Mission dinner baskets.

I have left until the last a mention of my own poor, homeless, hapless men folk in the Bowery. For them there will be no happy home circle in which to gather, except for those who are fortunate enough to get into the meeting over which "Mother Bird" will preside on Thanksgiving evening. Here everything will be done to make them feel at home. Songs that will "reach the heart," prayers that will reach the Throne, glowing testimonies, and kindly, sympathetic, brotherly talks will lift them above their stinging sorrows and maddening misfortunes, and bring them near to God.

The "Bread Line" will open at 1 A.M., at which one thousand shelterless wanderers will be entertained. The Brotherhood will gather in great force an hour before the evening meeting. They will "swap stories," and prepare by prayer and counsel for the larger meeting which will follow.

Away in distant homes in the country hundreds of redeemed men will, as they partake of their substantial dinners, remember with joy and gratitude the Bowery Mission, the institution that made it possible for them to be really happy this Thanksgiving Day.

[Readers of this journal who are interested in the work of the Bowery Mission and who wish to have a share in its charity work at this season, may send their contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York, for that purpose. A single dollar will feed twenty men and boys in the "Bread Line"; or it will furnish a substantial Thanksgiving dinner for a family of five. Any contribution, large or small, will be welcomed.]

THE "SPITE FENCE"

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

LUTHER SHERWOOD and his wife were lingering over their breakfast longer than usual, because of a letter which had come in the morning mail. It referred to a bit of meadow-land in a village some twenty miles from New York. Within ten years this particular village had sprung into being and grown with the rapidity of Jack's famous bean-stalk. A railroad had brought the quiet farming country near enough the great city to make it attractive to people who longed for gardens and fresh air and a play-place for their children out of doors.

The bit of meadow-land was all that was left of what had originally been a large farm, and it had been a wedding present to Mary Sherwood from an uncle who had sold the rest of his estate, and who told Mary to do with this precisely as she pleased. Before her marriage to Luther, who was a rising young lawyer, Mary had been a hard-working hospital nurse. One of her dreams had been to live in the country and gaze upon the hills which rimmed around the little valley where she had spent much of her childhood. They were low hills, friendly and kind, not the great stern mountains, but hills where children could play and lovers could stroll, with green spaces and trees that turned to red and gold in the autumn and made a protecting wall around the valley in the spring and summer.

Mr. Sherwood looked up from the letter as his wife handed him his cup of coffee. "The real estate man has an offer, Mary, for your wedding present. His client offers to pay a generous price, considerably more than it is valued by anybody else. The man is in Italy, and will be there for a while yet. He already has large holdings in Forestville, and he has built a superb house on the site of your grandfather's old home. For some reason he especially wants the piece of ground where we have been intending to build our bungalow. Do you wish to consider the offer?"

Mary lifted her brown eyes, and her husband saw that there was no indecision in her glance. She answered without an instant's hesitation: "Whoever the man may be, Luther, he has not money enough to tempt me. We have the plans for our bungalow, and we can afford to build it without the delay of a month. I have furnished every room in my fancy. I know what is going in the south chamber, in the west room, in the dining-room and the living-room. We shall be as cosy as birds in a nest, and I can hardly wait for the time to come when we shall be householders under God's blue sky, and not go on being homeless tramps in the stifling city."

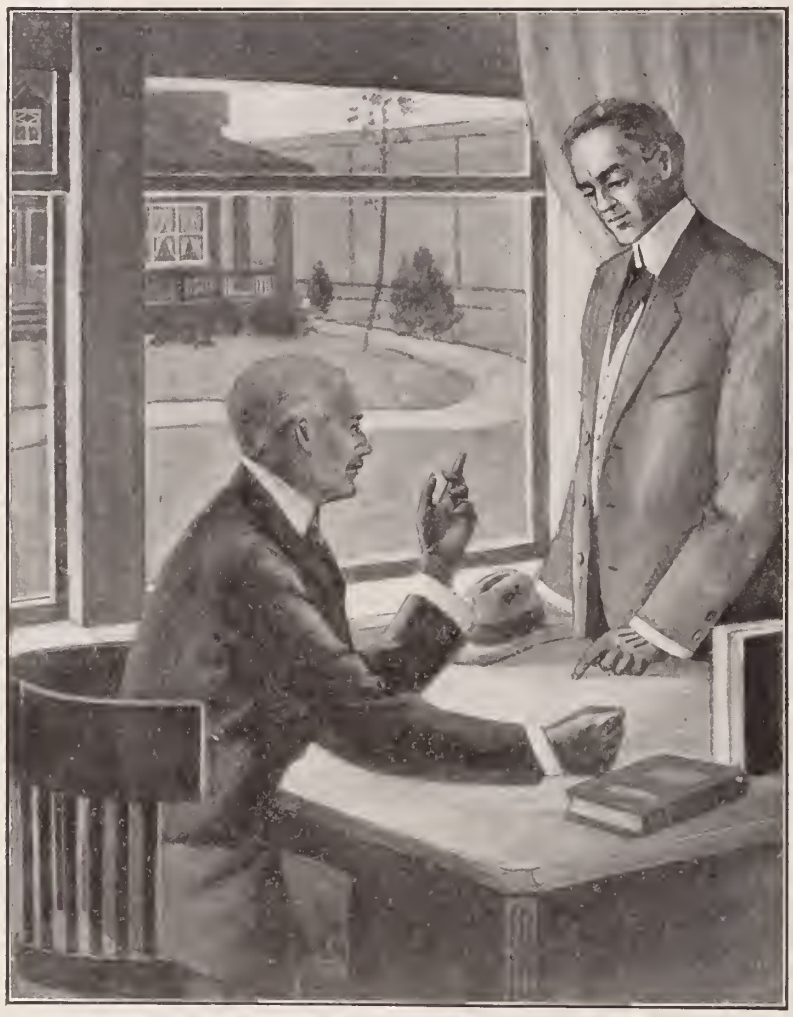
"Is this boarding-house your idea, wife, of a shelter for homeless tramps?"

"Yes, Luther, with all its luxury it is unhomelike. I am sorry to disappoint King Ahab. This persistent customer reminds me of him. We shall keep our little corner of the earth for ourselves and here we shall build our bungalow."

They carried out their plan, and as houses go up like magic when there is no strike to interfere with the labors of mason and carpenter, and the people who build have cash in hand to make their fairy dreams material, no lengthened period elapsed before the Sherwoods were safe in their own domicile. They had windows on every side, and Mary's special delight was the view from her south chamber across a field or two. The green hills that she loved seemed to her like guardian angels. A sleeping porch on this side of the house gave it the last touch of comfort and luxury, and she went about her home-making with a light heart and little bursts of happy song.

Several months passed before the Dormans, who were her nearest neighbors, and whose garden wall came close to her boundary line, returned from their trip abroad. They had not been at home a month, when early one morning a number of workmen suddenly appeared with loads of lumber. Luther, glancing from the window, wondered what they meant to do, and Mary said she hoped they did not mean to build a shelter for cows or a series of chicken coops at this end of their plantation.

The hen coops and the cow shed would have been preferable to the sort of building John Dorman speedily erected. Higher and higher it rose, a broad and gloomy fence near enough the Sherwood home to shut out completely their view of the hills and to make the south chamber, which was Mary's especial pride, a prison cell instead of an airy lodgment. The sleeping porch was not ruined for sleeping purposes, but it, too, was robbed of its greatest attractiveness, and the spite fence, a great ill-tempered barrier, reared itself, a blot upon the landscape and an eye-sore which Luther and Mary resented hour by hour, as they looked upon it.



"'Sell me your bungalow,' said the millionaire"

Remonstrance proved in vain. Mr. Dorman declared himself within his legal rights, and upon investigation Mr. Sherwood found himself helpless. "Sell me your bungalow," said the millionaire; "give me the land I want and settle anywhere else in this village that you choose. There are plenty of other spots in Forestville where you would be as comfortable as you are in this neighborhood. Unless you oblige me, my fence shall remain where it is."

Luther might have yielded, but the blood of the Puritans flowed in the veins of Mary and she obstinately declined so much as to consider any proposition coming from the Dormans. One day as she was sitting with her book on the other side of the house where she could not see the objectionable fence, she had a visitor. It was John Dorman's wife. The lady approached Mary timidly. "My dear," she said, "you know who I am. I want you to know that I hate that fence as much as you do, and am ashamed of it through and through. I have used every argument in my power, but my husband is as stubborn as the Rock of Gibraltar. I had ... come and tell you and let you know that I hav... had no share in this wretched business. As woma... to woman, I have come to ask you to forgive Jol... and pray with me that something may break dow... his wicked obstinacy."

Something did break down his obstinacy, and tha... before many days. John Dorman had one id... whom he loved and worshiped. It was not h... gentle wife, whose influence with him was so sligl... that she could not move him from his purpose; ... was his only daughter, Mabel, fifteen, the light ... his eyes and the pride of his heart. He had a hear... Most men have. The testing time came when Mab... was suddenly taken desperately ill between mi... night and morning. The doctor, sent for in a hurr... said that he must have a nurse at once, and whe... Mr. Dorman spoke of telephoning to the city, d... clared he could not wait. "The best hospital nurs... She will com... if I ask her, and if the little girl is ... be saved there is not an hour to los... Not a minute, in fact. Stand asid... man, and let me get to the telephone."

There is a verse in the Bible abou... heaping coals of fire on the head ... one's foe. All at once the paltrines... of his obstinacy, its selfishness, it... shamefulness, were revealed to him a... by a searchlight. The doctor, going... away, promised to return in the course... of the morning, and said as he left ... "You owe a debt which it will be hard... to pay to Mrs. Sherwood. She knew... just what to do and how to do it.' ... Then, as if obeying an impulse, the... doctor laid his hand on Mr. Dorman's... shoulder. "Don't you think, friend,' ... he said, "that you would better turn... that fence of yours into kindling wood?" He... awaited no reply.

Downstairs in the library Luther Sherwood alone... listened for Mary to come to him. He had brought... her over, and stayed in the house to see if there... were anything he could do. Mr. Dorman entered... the room, advanced and took his neighbor's hand. ... "Pardon me," he said; "I have been a fool and a... mule and everything hateful. If you'll forgive me... I'll be a better man and a better neighbor."

Thanksgiving that year was kept with the voice... of joy and praise in two homes of Forestville. ... Mabel, completely restored to health, little dreamed... how precious she had become to the father and... mother who had faced the prospect of losing her. ... The Thanksgiving they kept was without a flaw. ... The bungalow where Luther and Mary were host... and hostess to a circle of kindred and friends was... flooded with sunlight, and the beloved hills again... wore, in Mary's eyes, the look of guardian angels. ... There was no sign of the spite fence. It had been... split into kindling wood and had gone to the fire.

ttle Jimmy Preston, aged six, gets a letter e post office for his sister Barbara. On i way home it is lost. Barbara Preston has b trying to keep the farm, the last of her f er's estate, for Jimmy, but it is mortgaged t Honorable Stephen Jarvis, who is comparati y young. He threatens to foreclose. Peg rison, the old farm hand, is as greatly con- ed over the loss of the letter as is Barbara. S goes to Mr. Jarvis to ask for more time on t mortgage. He tells her that he is disposed t o it, and also that he is tired of his pres- e housekeeper and would like her to fill the p e. She leaves without a word. The old h ekeeper at once becomes her enemy.

IV

JIMMY PRESTON sat curled up on one foot by the table in Peg Morrison's loft. His hair was damp a towsled, for he had run bareh ded through the rain, bearing his p cious book of Vallable Informat n tucked under his blouse.

I didn't bring my red ink," he expined breathlessly to Peg, " 'cause I v 'fraid I'd spill it. I fought I d ld borrow some of yours."

You can, an' welcome, son," agreed P , "but remember that'll give me an o ion on yours. Them that borrows o ht to be willin' to lend."

I'll lend you my whole bottle of red i an' I'll lend you my pen, too," said Jimmy magnificently.

The little boy spread his book open o the table for Mr. Morrison's in- s ction. "You see I've begun it al- r dy," he said with pride.

Le' me see; what you got here?" a Peg traced the first wavering line w h a horny forefinger.

That's how not to lose a letter," s l Jimmy proudly. "Barb'ra says s metimes letters are 'portant, an' y don't want to lose 'em."

Lev letters in the Posoffis. They v l be saf ther," read Peg slowly. He p sed and screwed his mouth in a r seless whistle.

Don't you think that's a vallable i 'mation?" demanded Jimmy anxi sly. You can't tell 'thout you read a tter whether it's 'portant or not; a you can't read it when it's lost."

So you lost a letter 'dressed to Irb'ry; did you? H'm! Where'd y lose it?"

If I knew, I'd go an' find it," said Jimmy soberly. "I put it in my pocket, a it was blue, an' it was f'om out W st. Barb'ra doesn't know who it w s f'om. But she'd like to know."

H'm!" repeated Peg. "You'd ought t carried it all the way right in your h d', where you c'd see it. I'ockets a kind o' dangerous when it comes t letters. I know a whole row of litt boys 'at ain't alive at all, 'count o' a tter bein' lost. They never was h n," he added.

Jimmy drew a deep sigh of sustained i erest.

You see it was this way," contin- u Peg circumstantially. "The' was a oung feller 'at I used to know, an' I was workin' in a lumber-camp one w ter where the' wasn't any pos'offis; c o' the men used to carry the letters i an' out, a matter o' fifteen miles. One t e he lost a letter this young feller w te to his girl, an' didn't think to s nothin' 'bout it; an' she got all w rked up 'cause she didn't hear f'om h , an' after a spell she up an' marr d another man; an' so the young m n I was speakin' of never got marr d, an' never had any little boys o' h own. He felt awful bad 'bout it f a long time; but he ain't never los' a tter 'at b'longed to anybody else."

The pattering sound of the rain on t barn roof increased to a steady r r as Peg related this short but instructive tale.

"I sh'd think those little boys would feel bad," said Jimmy sympathetically, "I'd hate not to be alive."

"Mebbe they do; an' agin, mebbe they don't," observed Peg cautiously "Anyhow some of 'em would be growed up by this time; farmin' it, mebbe, or keepin' store."

"Peg," said Jimmy, after a period devoted to reflection, "the Hon'rable Stephen Jarvis is in our house."

"Dear me! You don't say so!" ejaculated Peg, with a frightened start.

"He makes Barb'ra cry," said Jimmy, scowling fiercely. "I wanted to stay an' keep him f'om doin' it; but Barb'ra said for me to come out here and see you."

The subject of these dubious comments, more ill at ease than his worst enemy had ever hoped to see him, sat in the dull light of the rainy afternoon looking at Barbara Preston with new eyes, to wit, the eyes of a man.

"I suppose," the girl said, steadily, "you have come to tell me that you will foreclose the mortgage." She gripped her hands close in her lap.

"No," said Stephen Jarvis, "that was not my intention. As I have already informed you, the mortgage will foreclose itself, when the time comes."

He stopped short and narrowed his lids frowningly.

"I have been thinking about you," he said harshly, "since you left me so abruptly yesterday. I want to tell you that I stood in my library door and witnessed my housekeeper's dismissal of you from my house. Her own followed without delay."

"I am sorry," Barbara told him mechanically. She was noticing dazedly that Jarvis was dressed as she had occasionally seen him in church and that his gloves and linen were quite fresh and immaculate.

"Why should you be sorry?" he demanded with a straight look at her.

"I—why, I think I should be sorry for any woman who lost what she wanted to keep," Barbara answered.

"You were not primarily the cause of her dismissal," he said coolly. "I had already told you that I was tired of seeing the woman about."

He was silent for a long time gazing frowningly at the floor.

Suddenly he looked up and, meeting Barbara's astonished and somewhat indignant eyes, held them steadily with his own.

"You are wondering why I came here to-day. You are afraid of me, and you doubtless fancy with the rest of the world that you—dislike me."

Barbara opened her lips to reply.

"Don't take the trouble to deny it," he went on with a faint sneer. "I know what most people think of me, perhaps with reason. But I am myself, not another; and so far, fear—dislike have seemed to me unavoidable." Again his rigid lips relaxed into something like a smile, and he looked questioningly at the girl.

"It ought to be easy," she said uncertainly," to make people like you. You might——"

"'He asked me to marry him,' said Barbara to Peg, abruptly"

"I know what you are thinking of," he interrupted rudely. "But it wouldn't do. People fear and hate a hard man; they despise a fool. I refuse to be despised."

He rose and walked up and down the room impatiently as if his thoughts irked him. Finally he paused before the window where a scarlet geranium blossomed on the sill, and turned a singularly flushed face upon the girl. For a dazed instant she wondered with a thrill of painfully remembered fear if he had been drinking.

"You will be startled at what I am about to say to you," he said in a changed voice. "I should have laughed at the idea if any one suggested it to me a week ago. But—I want you to marry me. I want you to be my wife. No! don't answer; don't refuse! You haven't thought what it means. You cannot consider the matter so suddenly. But this much you can understand: I will give you this place on our wedding-day—to do as you like with, and I will attach no conditions to the gift."

Barbara had not removed her fascinated gaze from his face. She felt like one dreaming fantastically and struggling unavailingly to awake.

"Perhaps you do not realize what you have asked of me," she said at last. "But—I will not sell myself for this farm. That is what you have asked me to do."

Her eyes sparkled blue fire; her lips curled disdainfully.

"Don't be a fool," he said roughly. "I want nothing of the sort. I want you—you! I need you. I am more sure of it now than ever."

He took three steps toward her, his rugged face alive with determination—the grim determination which had wrested all that he possessed from the grip of a hostile world.

"When I want anything," he said doggedly, "I always get it. Didn't you know that? I want you."

"You'll not get me—ever!" cried Barbara.

She knew it must be war to the bitter end between them, and she flung the gage of battle full in his face with fine recklessness.

"You may take everything I have, if you can. But you'll not get me!"

He stood up and buttoned his frock coat over his white waistcoat.

"I'll not take your answer to-day," he said, quite unmoved by her anger. "I had no intention of doing so."

He strode to the door without another look at her, signaled his coachman, stepped into his closed carriage, shut the door hard behind him and rolled away, with a smooth whirr of shining wheels.

"I'll give her time to think before I see her again," Jarvis decided, as his swift-stepping bays carried him along through the April rain. He dropped the window of his brougham and drew in deep satisfying breaths of the moist air. He was glad that she had not yielded supinely, as a weaker woman might have done. There was to his mind something heroic, splendid in her attitude as she defied hm.

"I'll give her time to think—to be afraid!" he repeated; "then——"

The blood hammered in his temples and involuntarily he clenched his strong hands, as if already crushing that weaker woman's will and subduing it to his own.

V

But Barbara Preston was not thinking of the fact that Stephen Jarvis had asked her to be his wife. Being a woman, and, moreover, hard driven by cruel necessity, she might have been pardoned if for a moment she had allowed her thoughts to linger upon this interview which had just ended. She might even have recalled with a certain speculative interest the luxurious interior of the carriage into which he had stepped and the smooth roll of the wheels which had borne him away, safe shut from the wind and the weather. So might she be lifted and sheltered from the bleak pelting of poverty, and life become a smooth progression instead of a painful pilgrimage. The girl sat quite still by the window looking out through the misty panes into a mistier world, and only vaguely aware of dripping lilac sprays, ruddy with swelling buds, and of the flash of wet brown wings athwart the gray sky.

Stephen Jarvis, master of fate, and thrilling with the clash of his will upon hers, could hardly have known that the ghost of another man stood between him and the object of this new, urgent desire of his. He would have laughed the shadowy presence to scorn had he known it.

Yet it was this mere shadow of a man which chained Barbara's thoughts while the April rain softened the landscape to a soft green blur. After all it was but natural that her one pitiful little love story should come back to her now, even to a vision of David Whitcomb's eager face, his dark impatient eyes and tossed hair, and the strong clasp of his hand upon hers in the dusk of the summer twilight.

It was Jimmy who had come between them; little motherless Jimmy, then a baby a year old, with big appealing eyes under a fluff of soft yellow hair, and a voice sweeter than any bird's.

"If you really loved me," David had said hotly, "you would not let any one or anything come between us."

And she had told him that she could not go to him over the bodies of a sick father and a helpless child. And since he had asked this of her, she did not, indeed, love him.

After this stormy scene—the last between them, since David Whitcomb had gone away, no one knew whither, nor indeed cared, since he was young and friendless and poor—Barbara had cried herself to sleep for many successive nights, quietly, so as not to disturb the sleeping child. But one does not weep overlong at night whose brain and hands and feet are employed in the daytime. In time the pain of that parting subsided to a dull aching memory, which wakened once to cry out bitterly when she heard that he had been seen on a ship bound to the Yukon region in the early days of the gold fever. Many perished along the trail that year. It was rumored that David Whitcomb was among the number. No word ever came back to contradict the rumor, which after the lapse of months was accepted as a fact, and so—forgotten.

It was a long time—as youth measures time—since she had thought of David Whitcomb. Now she deliberately traveled back over the years between, and stood looking at her anguished young self, torn between love and duty, and at her one lover, who was not noble enough — she saw this with mournful certainty now—to help her lift and carry her heavy burden. Nevertheless she forgave him— as she had done hundreds of times in the past, excusing him tenderly, as a mother might have done, for his hot young selfishness, which refused to share her heart with a dying man and a helpless little child.

"I am glad," she said aloud to the shadowy presence of her one lover, "glad that I did not yield."

But her face was grave and sorrowful as she rose to answer a gentle knock at the kitchen door.

Peg Morrison stood there under the shelter of an ancient green umbrella, his puckered face smiling and healthily pink against the pale green of the outside world.

"I lef' the Cap'n a-studyin' over his book," he chuckled, as he stepped into the kitchen, carefully wiping his feet on the braided rug inside. "He takes to vallable info'mation as the sparks fly up'ards, an' I'm glad to see it. Thinks I, as I looks at him settin' down improvin' maxims in red ink, this is a good time to talk over the situation with Miss Barb'ry."

Barbara drew a deep breath.

"Come in," she said briefly.

Then, as Peg seated himself in a wooden chair, ceremoniously arranging his coattails on either side, she added, "There isn't any use of talking. The mortgage is going to be foreclosed the first of June."

"Foreclosed—eh? Foreclosed!" echoed the old man. "Wall, I was 'fraid of it when I seen his buggy here yist'day an' ag'in t' day. Farmers 'round here say they hate th' sight o' that red-wheeled buggy worse'n pison snakes. It gene'ally means business o' th' kind they ain't lookin' fer. Say! I wisht I'd got a-holt o' this 'ere article on onion-growin' before. I really do. Jes' listen t' this; 'Onions are profitably grown in th' North. Ebenezer N. Foote of Northampton, Mass., has perduced av'rage crops s' high es nine hundred an' ten bushels t' th' acre! He says he expects to raise that to twelve hundred! The annual value of this crop ranges f'om five hundred to six hundred dollars per acre!"

Peg's voice swelled into a veritable pæan in a high key; his face glowed with the ecstasies of his imaginings. He carefully folded the newspaper and stuffed it into a capacious pocket.

"Now, y' see," he went on oratorically, "exclusive o' the orchards, which had ought to net us at least five hundred this year, we could put in, say, twenty acres o' onions, at five hundred dollars per acre, that would net us—lemme see, five hundred dollars times twenty acres 'ud make—here, lemme figger that out."

The old man fumbled in his vest pocket for a stubbed pencil.

"I ain't th' lightnin' calc'lator you'd expect fer such a schemin' ol' cuss," he murmured apologetically, as he wet the lead preparatory to computation.

Barbara smiled. "It would be ten thousand dollars," she said. "But Peg, don't you see—"

"Ten thousand dollars! Whew! I guess that 'ud make a mortgage look kind o' sick; wouldn't it? We'd ought to hold on a spell longer an' give onions a try."

"But we can't, Peg. Its only six weeks before the first of June, and I've only got twenty dollars in the world." Barbara leaned back in her chair, her face relaxed and weary and unutterably sad.

"You must look for another place right away, Peg," she went on, "I'll try and find one for you. Then, if I can get a school, or—some sort of work. I don't care much what it is, if it will keep Jimmy and me."

"The's a whole lot o' money in p'tatoes, too," grumbled Peg, his anxious blue eyes on her face. "I'd ought to 'ave sowed peas an' oats on that hill lot las' fall an' plowed 'em in this spring. It says in this 'ere article on big crops that ground fixed that way'll grow p'tatoes like all possessed. I wisht I'd come acrost the' inf'mation b'fore."

"Mr. Jarvis says the farm is worn out," Barbara said, a growing despondency in her voice. "He says the orchards are worthless, too; they are old."

"Shucks!" exploded Peg. "'Course Jarvis 'd talk like that when he's gittin' it away f'om you fer nothin' like its value. I'll bet he'd have another story to tell ef anybody was to try 'n buy it of him. Values has a way o' risin' over night like bread dough once the Oner'ble Jarvis gits a-holt o' a piece o' property."

"He asked me to marry him," said Barbara abruptly, then bit her lip angrily at the old man's look of amazed incredulity. "I'm sure I don't know why I told you, only I haven't any one to speak to, and—no one—to advise me."

Peg's face grew suddenly grave.

"Don't you be afraid I'll mention it, Miss Barb'ry," he said gently. " 'Course I was kind o' s'prised—at first. But I don't know's I be, come t' think o' it. He asked you to be Mis' Jarvis? Wall! You goin' to do it, Miss Barb'ry?"

"He said he would give me the farm," Barbara went on slowly, to do as I liked with. I could—give it to Jimmy."

She looked at him with a child's unconscious appeal.

"Do you think I ought to—to marry him, Peg?"

The old man was still eying her soberly, even wistfully.

"I've know'd you since you was a little girl no higher'n my knee, Miss Barb'ry," he began. "I've seed you grow up. An' I've seed you go through some pretty hard experiences. Now, I ain't the kind to talk very much 'bout sin' religion, an' the's times when I don't 'pear to have a nawful lot of it, but the's a God that hears an—an' takes notice. That much I've found out, an' ef I was you I'd go to headquarters an' git the' best advice. But I'll say this! ef the farm is wore out, as he says, it 'pears t' me he's askin' a pretty high price fer th' prop'ty. He wants your youth, Miss Barb'ry, an' your pretty looks an' your life.

"I've a notion," he went on, "that the Lord'll advise ye 'long th' same lines. But don't take my word fer it."

He got to his feet slowly.

"Wall, I mus' be gittin' out t' the barn."

He fixed his friendly, anxious eyes on the girl.

"I guess I'd figger a spell on that marryin' proposition, ef I was you," he said softly, and shook his head.

He turned with his hand on the latch to cast a dubious look back at the girl.

"It 'pears t' me you ain't cut out right fer the second Mis' Jarvis," he said. She'd ought o' rights t' be a big, upstandin' female with—with red hair."

He shut the door hastily behind him.

VI

Barbara Preston stopped by a big chestnut tree at the roadside to read the notice of an auction of farm stock and household furniture advertised to take place in a neighboring township.

The notice was printed in bold red letters on a buff gackground, calculated to seize hold the eye of the passerby, and set forth the fact that one Thomas Bellows, auctioneer, would, on the twenty-fifth day of April, sell to the highest bidder, on the premises of the owner, four milch cows, three farm horses, and sixty-four sheep. Also one young carriage horse, well broken, sound, kind and willing. Other items relating to household gear and poultry followed, set down in due order of their relative importance.

The red letters on the buff ground passed into Barbara's eyes—as indeed they were purposefully intended—and impressed themselves on her memory. She considered them half angrily as she pursued her way to the post office, picturing to herself the day when Thomas Bellows or another would noisily exploit the contents of her own well-loved home. The mortgage covered stock and furniture as well as the land itself. She had learned this from a curt letter addressed to her by Stephen Jarvis in reply to questions of her own as concisely put.

Apart from her half dazed recollection of the rainy afternoon a week since, their relations as ruthless creditor and hopeless debtor appeared to be unchanged. During the interval she had gone doggedly about her self-imposed labors. Between times she was casting about for another home and other modes of livelihood for herself and Jimmy. It would be difficult, if not impossible, she was told, to secure a position to teach. To become a dressmaker's apprentice was possible; but the woman who provided the opportunity offered instruction for the first six months in lieu of wages. And obviously one could not live on information alone, however valuable. Household servants were always in brisk demand, she had been reminded; but pride of race wrestled with the untold humiliation of such a lot. Besides there was Jimmy. Her heart grew faint at the thought of the loving, carefully shielded child in the cold shelter of an "asylum," or the bound property of some shrewd farmer.

She was turning these things wearily over in her mind when the quick whirr of wheels sounded at her back. She stepped aside to allow the vehicle to pass, without raising her eyes.

A harsh, domineering voice, the sort of voice to be slavishly obeyed, ordered the horse to stand still.

She looked up quickly to meet the eager gaze of the man who was in her thoughts. A vivid color, of which she was angrily conscious, rose to her forehead. She stammered some sort of greeting, her eyes drooping before the dominant insistence in his.

"I was just on my way to your house," he said.

His voice as well as his eyes were eager, insistent.

"Get in, won't you, and ride with me? I have something to say to you."

The girl hesitated, her cheeks paling. He sprang to the ground, speaking sharply to his young, restive horse.

"Allow me to assist you," he said, with a politeness wholly unfamiliar to Barbara.

She gave him an astonished look, which he interpreted correctly, with the acumen of a trained politician.

"You have been thinking that I was exceedingly abrupt—even rude, in the way I spoke to you the other day," he said, as he took her firmly by the hand and lifted her to a seat in the vehicle, which was "dreaded more'n pison snakes" by the delinquent debtors in the countryside, according to Peg Morrison.

He bent to look keenly into her face, as he seated himself at her side. "Isn't that so—Barbara?"

At the sound of her name in that new, strange voice of his the girl started and almost shivered. She was beginning to be afraid of herself—this no less new and strange self, who was tired of being poor and hard-worked and anxious, and who longed after comfort and ease and affection of some strong, compelling sort. She lifted her eyes to him.

"I have been thinking many things," she murmured, "since—since you——"

He laughed under his breath.

"Yes; and you've been doing some things, too," he said. "I heard you were looking for a place to teach, and—it didn't encourage me to suppose that you were thinking very favorably of what I proposed. Did you secure a position?"

"N-o; I didn't," she acknowledged. She hesitated visibly; then added, "They told me you were a school commissioner, and that I must apply to you."

"Why didn't you apply to me?" he wanted to know. "Didn't you think I would be a good sort of person to help you in your desire for independence?"

"I didn't ask you," she said, "because——"

A HEARTY Thanksgiving to you, my boys and girls, and to all the little people in the homes where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes. I wish you plenty to be thankful for, and plenty of thankfulness, too.

STORY-TELLING DOLLS: "Welcoming a Cavalier." The Home of a Virginia Planter about the Time of the First Thanksgiving in America

Thanksgiving never comes along but it recalls to me a song—the old Frog Song, we called it, that Mammy used to sing in the old days in Kentucky. Like many a negro melody, it was endless, and a fresh verse appropriate to any passing moment was likely to pop into it at any time; but as nearly as I can remember the verses that did not change were these:

I'm so thankful de sun is a-shinin',
My honey, My honey.
I'm so glad my coat's got a linin',
My honey.
I'm so thankful de rain is a-pourin',
My honey, My honey,
For it's just de day to have a scourin',
My honey.
I'm so thankful de wind is blowin',
My honey, My honey,
For by and by dere's gwine to be snowin',
My honey.
I'm so thankful de ole crow's gone,
My honey, My honey,
Dat stole de corn from master's barn,
My honey.
I'm so thankful de hips and de haws
Is gettin' ripe for de pies and de daws.
I'm just as glad as I can be
Dat dey're cuttin' down de rosin tree.
I'm so glad it's warm in de house.
It's good for de folks and good for de mouse.
I'm so glad it's cool in de pond,
Dat de woods is yonder, and de sky beyond.

I can shut my eyes and see the old nursery at home and hear good, faithful Mammy coming in strong on "de hips and de haws," crooning along, rocking, patting, comforting until the last youngster was tucked into bed, snug and fast asleep.

Yes, there is almost no doubt about it, the best part of Thanksgiving is the thankfulness.

Remember we shall all be thinking of you at this sweet, special season, and you may be sure much of our thankfulness here in these busy offices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is for our boys and girls all over the world, and for the good times we shall be having as we grow to know and love one another here in the dear Cozy Corner.

Story-Telling Dolls

Dolls, dolls, dolls! The story of the world does not go back to a time when there were no dolls. In the famous collection in the British Museum in London there are dolls four thousand years old, which the little brown-skinned people in Pharaoh's time rocked to sleep, in pretty much the same way, I fancy, that our little folk put their dolls to sleep to-day. It is quite safe to say that there have been as many dolls of one kind or other as there have been people on the earth, for almost every one has owned a doll.

Some of the most interesting dolls in this country are the famous story-telling puppets at the Children's Museum in Brooklyn, N. Y. The directors of this museum plan that in a large hall set apart for the purpose, hundreds of dolls shall set forth the principal events in the history of America.

STORY-TELLING-DOLLS: The Home of a Wealthy Dutch Patroon in the New Netherlands about 1620

Do you remember Gulliver when he came to the land of the Lilliputians?

Well, it is like that when you first come among those fascinating little folk, for many of the groups are already completed and set up.

Imagine happening in at the Court of Ferdinand and Isabella, in all its splendor, while Columbus is making his famous plea for funds with which to equip his ships. Fancy coming up Ponce de Leon sailing among fai islands of blooming flowers, huntin for the fountain of youth, or upon th Pilgrims, tattered and storm-beate landing at Plymouth, and the very fir Thanksgiving exactly as it was cel brated in 1621, all set forth in puppe averaging less than nine inches hig

It is a most surprising and deligh ful experience, I can assure you.

Before long there will be such scen there as the Boston Tea Party, Pa Revere's ride, Washington at Valle Forge, Davy Crockett's last stand the Battle of the Alamo, Daniel Boo and the Buckskin Knights in the Wi derness, Perry's victory on Lake Eri Barbara Frietchie, Lee's surrender, th charge up San Juan Hill, Cervera fleet bottled up in the harbor at Sa tiago with Morro Castle in the di tance, and ever so many more.

The pictures on this page are charr ing examples of the doll groups th have been completed and set up.

After the Mince Pie

Put a tablespoonful of bruise gum benzoin into a saucer, balance light sprig of any small-leaved pla in the centre, set fire to the gum, ar invert over it a tumbler. Almost in mediately, dense little fumes will ari from which a deposit of delicate cry tals resembling leaves will begin form and hang in silky tendrils fro every part of the sprig. As the fum clear away a delicate fairy tree of almo transcendent loveline will appear beneat the glass. This is pretty table trick an worth trying.

Here is another one Cut a circular sectio of an apple into th shape of a horsesho and ask the guests t cut it with two stroke of a knife into si pieces.

Can you do this? is easy. Write me an I will tell you how.

THE BIRD'S MESSAGE

ONE more day's work for Jesus," Sang a voice so sweet and clear hat it rang across the meadows
To a farmer's list'ning ear.
e stopped his work to ponder,
As he said, "I wonder now,
lay I share that precious blessing`
In my work here at the plow?

Can I claim to work for Jesus
As these lowly tasks I do?
hut out from the world's great workers,
Can I to the best be true?"
'was the "still small voice" that answered,
And the sweet unspoken words
ouched his heart with cheer and comfort
As he listened to the birds.

weetly sang they from the woodland,
With a song of trustful love,
nd the words that piereed the shadows
Drew him close to heaven above.
All may count as work for Jesus
Like these songs that are unheard.
hough your work in life be hidden
Ye may he doers of the Word."

Oakland, Calif. M. E. HITCHCOCK.

Garibaldi Remembered

THE visit to this country of the granddaughter of the brave Italian patriot, General Garibaldi, and the welcome accorded her, has recalled to my memory one of the most delightful days of my not uneventful life.

It was the occasion of the great liberator's visit to London.

Like thousands of other mechanics, I stood at the city end of Westminster Bridge and waited the coming of the hero, whose sword had liberated and united Italy, and who although a conqueror had refused a crown. I have never forgotten the joy I felt as the car on which the general stood came in sight and my eyes lighted on his tall dignified form. The radiance of his smile, as he gracefully acknowledged the salutations of the vast assemblage, beamed over all. Accompanying the car as a guard of honor were a number of men in uniforms which had excited the curiosity of the waiting crowd as those who wore them passed on their way to meet the general. We learned they had volunteered and had left England at the risk of their liberty to fight under Garibaldi and were now sharing with their chief the honors of the day.

As a Christian, the scene impressed itself upon me as a forecast of a yet grander when the desire of all nations shall came—He whose life was given to liberate all mankind. Not alone London, but every eye shall see him and every tongue confess he is Lord to the glory of. God the Father.

I was not alone in regarding it in this light. On the following day, speaking to a young Christian brother, referring to Garibaldi's smile he exclaimed, "When I saw him, I thought of my Saviour." As he said these words, we clasped hands and prayerfully said, "Even so come, Lord Jesus!"

JOHN C. FLETCHER.

I WAS not among the myriads who thronged the streets of London to welcome Garibaldi. I was attending the annual meeting of Baptists as delegate from the ancient and renowned church of Eythone, Kent, April 21, 1864, when the liberator of Italy received the freedom of the city. I was present at the Crystal Palace and sat near him when he spoke to delighted thousands in the nave of that famous building and was warmly congratulated by peers and people of all ranks who literally thronged the vast edifice. The M. E. Church is highly honored in having a graddaughter of the great man a member at Rome. May her visit to the United States be a grand success. I am

Yours very sincerely,

Among the Workers

—REV. EZRA T. SANFORD, of the North Baptist Church, New York City, writes: "We have just closed a successful evangelistic meeting with Evangelist H. C. Compton, of Athens, Ga., in charge. The church has been built up and the spiritual life materially deepened by these services."

—A NEW Gospel Hall, named "Tent Evangel Mission Hall," will be opened about the middle of December on Eighth Avenue, near Columbus Circle, New York. Rev. G. W. McPherson, of Yonkers, N. Y., will superintend this new work. It is planned to have a popular revival centre where all classes can be reached. Noted evangelists and workers will be employed and the nightly campaign conducted on the same basis as the summer work in Tent Evangel.

—MISSIONARY H. W. SCHWARTZ writes us from Sendai, Japan: "Your letter of July 15, enelosing check for fifty dollars—the gift of a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Illinois, was received. Express our thanks to our unknown friend for the money, which is a great blessing to work we have in hand. That fifty dollars from our unknown friend in Illinois will help us to provide medieine for many who are in sickness and poverty."

—THE NEW YORK Evening Post telling of a recent meeting in the Bowery Mission (during the series of revival services) at which a number of bluejackets were present, said: "The sailors began to crowd in upon the platform, even into closer quarters than aboard ship, and the large body of men in the audience rose and gave them three ringing cheers. 'Now,' said Dr. J. F. Morgan, the speaker, 'I have the navy behind me, and the army in front, and I am all right,' and as he delivered his address it was seen clearly that it was taking effect, for after remarkable testimonies had been given some forty-five men in the audience came forward and took the following card of declaration, which admits them to the Bowery Mission Brotherhood: 'I ——— ask that my name be enrolled as a member of the Bowery Mission Brotherhood, and I promise by God's help to live a good, true, and upright life.'"

Advertising Helps Everybody

DID it ever occur to you that it is almost impossible to mention any public institution, or private one of any scope, which has succeeded without the power of advertising? True, the advertising may not have been in the advertising column, but it was part of the general power of the press of which advertising is the main stay. The telegraph, the cable, automobiles, gas ranges, a hundred household conveniences, have been made possible to the public by the advertising that sells the volume of goods and so reduces the cost to the individual.

We heard this proposition disputed recently by a man who declared that it did not help his neighbors who were supporting themselves by raising corn and other vegetables for a cannery. He forgot that the goods which were canned and shipped to cities were sold for the most part through the advertising in different papers.

There is hardly a wish you can express but you will find some phase of it talked about in advertising columns. Look through the current issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and see the wide range of articles advertised. Note the clean cut, intelligent, and honest statements made regarding them. It is only advertising such as this—advertising of the dependable kind—that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD publishes and guarantees.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement.

FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN
All the newest colors now on show

Our yarn costs an average of 70c per lb. We could use 30c yarn, but the hose wouldn't be soft and attractive like "Holeproof." We spend $33,000 a year merely for inspection. So every pair is right. Six pairs of men's "Holeproof" guaranteed for six months cost $1.50. The extra light weights cost $2. The mercerized—finished like silk—cost $3. One color or the newest colors assorted. We sterilize each pair twice in the making, so the colors are fast—the hose sanitary.

We don't know where else you can get hose like these, though you pay twice what we ask for "Holeproof." They are made for women and children, too. Six pairs of women's hose cost $2 (mercerized $3). The children's hose cost $2 for six pairs

Sold in Your Town The genuine "Holeproof" is sold in your town. We'll tell you the dealers' names on request or ship direct where we have no dealers, charges prepaid on receipt of price.

Saving the Pennies

"IT is all very well to give advice to the wage-earner as to investments," remarked a young man of our acquaintance recently, "but how is a man going to get the money to invest? Here I am, young, unmarried, and with eleven dollars a week, but the end of the year sees me just as poor as did the beginning."

A man who can put three dollars a week in the savings bank for ten years, as was shown in a former article, is in a fair way to becoming, if not rich, certainly well to do, and if he continues to reinvest his interest, within twenty years he will be practically above want.

A Street Car Conductor

We know a man—he is just forty-one and looks younger, for he leads a temperate life—who lives near Fort Hamilton in the Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York. This man is worth over two hundred thousand dollars. For nearly twenty years he was a conductor on a street car, and as he made it a point never to work on Sunday, his weekly wages averaged during this time about ten dollars a week.

"He must have inherited the money," you say.

No, he never had a cent given him that he did not earn. His mother, a widow and a seamstress, had a little frame house of six rooms, three of which she sub-let at eight dollars a month. When the son was thirteen he had to give up school and take a position as errand boy at two dollars a week.

When the boy was fourteen, he advised his mother to put the rent and his earnings into a building association just started in the neighborhood. This was done, with the result that within four years the house was bought, and an addition made to it that brought the rent up to twelve dollars a month.

At eighteen the boy became a conductor, a position he occupied with never a complaint against him from company or passengers. He paid three dollars a week to his mother for board. She would take no more, for she regarded the house and the rent as his, though the property was in her name. His clothes and other expenses cost him about seventy dollars a year, and he dressed decently, so that on every December thirty-first he was three hundred dollars to the good, and more too, for he kept his money in a savings bank and saw it growing.

After ten years of this work and saving, the young man—he was now twenty-eight—heard rumors of a real estate boom approaching the place where he lived. He had now about four thousand to his credit in two savings banks, and this he decided to draw out and invest in unimproved realty in the neighborhood with which he was acquainted.

How the Profits Grew

He bought ten lots for six thousand dollars, paying four thousand cash and giving a mortgage for two; then he went on conducting his car and waiting for two years.

The interest and taxes prevented his saving so much from his earnings, but at the end of the two years he sold four lots for thirty-two hundred dollars; he paid off his mortgage, put twelve hundred dollars in bank, and had six lots to the good, each worth at least eight hundred dollars.

It would take long to give all the details of the young man's advance in prosperity. He stuck to his car and his ten dollars a week until his personal interests compelled his resignation. By this time the railroad company had learned his worth and offered him a superintendent's place at three times his former compensation, which he refused.

To-day this young man is married, and his mother, no longer a seamstress, is living with him, in a house that she speaks of as "a palace." The ex-conductor is interested in all the good work of his neighborhood, and is noted for his charities. That he will be very rich in the end every one believes and hopes, for there is not one who knows him, who envies him or who does not believe that his success was deserved.

No, it does not matter what you earn; if there be a little left after paying for life's necessities you can rise above want and have money to invest, as we have been trying to advise in these articles.

Of course, you never heard of Catherine Meehan, not only because that is not her name, but because she is modest, and does not crave notoriety. As the name suggests, "Kate" Meehan was Irish, is Irish, and would feel insulted if you intimated that she was anything else.

Some thirty years ago, this woman was left a widow, with the added burden of a step-daughter of ten. Kate Meehan could not read nor write, but with a fine sense of duty she resolved that the girl in her charge should not be so handicapped.

Untrained, there was nothing left her but to take in washing, or to go out by the day and do, as best she could, the one work for which she was qualified. Kate Meehan lived in a squalid part of Jersey City, where her husband, a longshoreman, had rented poor quarters on the top of a rickety tenement, the roof of which was used as a common drying ground.

Made More Than She Spent

The step-daughter, always comfortably clad, was sent to school, and the sturdy Kate went on washing for the sailors and longshoremen. She made more than she spent, and so when the step-daughter, at the age of twenty, had left the normal school, and had secured a teacher's place at seven hundred a year, Kate Meehan had over fifteen hundred dollars in the savings bank.

The tenement in which she lived was foreclosed, and she had the daring to buy it in, paying one thousand dollars and removing the original mortgage. With the five hundred over she fixed up the place, introducing water and gas for the first time, and so doubling the rentals.

That was the beginning of this illiterate washerwoman's real estate transactions. She kept up her ventures and gave up the wash tub, and to-day, at the age of sixty, she is out of debt and a rich woman.

It may be urged that the two cases just cited are exceptions, and that the conductor and the washerwoman had each an exceptional talent for business.

Nothing of the kind. They had common sense, honesty and industry, and above all, self-denial. That is, they could get along without those luxuries which the self-indulgent regard as necessities.

There is not a man or woman who reads this, who cannot succeed equally well, provided always that the same energy and the same desire to save is manifested.

Dr. Klopsch Remembered

I am more than pleased with the Red Letter Testament. It is the first of the kind I've ever owned, and this one is especially prized, because of the part Dr. Klopsch took in its arrangement. I fully and deeply realize the loss we sustained in not having him among us; yet for his sake I think the ties of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Circle will go on strengthening more and more. ISABELLA HOLT.

BEFORE THE DAYS

WE stand at gaze before the days
That beckoning haste before us.
To God above in fervent love
We lift a grateful chorus.

What yet shall be we cannot see.
We trust our Heavenly Father.
His constant care is everywhere
Though dark the clouds may gather.

Awake, asleep, His angels keep Their watch and ward about us.
No demon foe shall overthrow
Our toil, or dare to flout us.

We stand at gaze! Our devious ways
Are leading to the River
Where Death and Life in ceaseless strife
Clash keenest blades forever.

Beyond the tide, the other side
Shines forth in golden splendor;
When Earth has fled, and Death is dead,
What praise we there shall render?

We stand at gaze before the days
That one by one are bringing,
From God above, such gifts of love
As wake our happy singing.

New Bureau of Mines

THE act establishing a Bureau of Mines in the Department of the terior has recently become effective. s originally approved, the law conmplated the transfer of the entire echnologic Branch of the United ates Geological Survey, the mine cident investigations, fuel investigaons, structural materials investigaons, the entire personnel, property d equipment, to the Bureau of Mines, t the Sundry Civil Appropriation t amended the law to such an extent at the structural materials investitions, including the personnel and uipment for these investigations, nt to the Bureau of Standards, Dertment of Commerce and Labor.

Carrying out the spirit and intent of law the Secretary of the Interior s transferred to the Bureau of ines the investigation of mine accints and fuels, has transferred to the ureau of Standards the structural aterials investigations and the emoyees of the Technologic Branch of e Survey. The fully equipped Test-g Station at Pittsburg also goes to e Bureau of Mines.

The work of the Bureau of Mines r the first year will be a continuaon and expansion of the work car-d on by the Technologic Branch of e Geological Survey. The law in self provides for a variety of other oblems that properly belong to the ureau of Mines and which should entually be undertaken, such as ethods of mining and metallurgical ocesses, but these activities will be ferred for the most part until Coness gives additional authorization in e shape of adequate appropriation. The mine accident investigations ve been transferred from the Geogical Survey to the Bureau of Mines. mine experiment station was establhed in Pittsburg during 1908, at hich, since that time, investigations explosives, coal gas, dust, electricity d other possible causes of mine exosions have been continually under ay. The mining engineering field rce of the Geological Survey has ready made decided progress in the udy of underground mining condions and methods. Practically all of e coal mines in which mine exploons have occurred during the last ars have been carefully examined, e gases, coke and dust have been alyzed at the laboratory at Pittsrg and every effort has been made to termine the explosibility of various ixtures of gas and air in the presence shots of different types of explo-ves. Considerable progress has also en made in the investigation of exosives used in coal mining, and the nditions under which they may be ed with least risk. Manufacturers ve submitted many explosives for st at the station and a considerable rtion of them passed and have been assified among the permissible exosives. The investigations and edutional work in connection with the e of artificial breathing and other pes of mine rescue equipment, the so-called oxygen helmets, have not only been useful in developing a more satisfactory use of such equipment in the examination of mine explosions, but also better methods for using this equipment in mine rescue work.

The fuel investigations under the Geological Survey and which are transferred to the Bureau of Mines have already resulted in a better realization throughout the country as to the value of fuels. One result of this work is that nearly all of the fuel now purchased by the federal government is bought on specifications and subject to test by the fuel division, or purchased after examination made of the coal supplied by the mines from which coal is delivered to the government.

A Royal Speeder

THE late King of Siam, who was an enthusiastic automobilist, owned over thirty cars. In comparison with its size, Bangkok has four times as many automobiles as New York, the most luxurious in the city being that owned by Queen Sowayi Pongsi, the chief lady, whose car is fitted up as a boudoir.

Being alarmed at the speed at which the king traveled, and afraid for his safety, his ministers petitioned his Majesty to give up automobiling.

"At the service of your Majesty," the document read, "there are bearers, and when time presses, carriages. We therefore beseech you to give up the use of the automobiles, or at least go at a more moderate pace."

To this the king answered in a marginal note, "The danger lies not in the automobiles, but in the hearts of men."

Astronomical Queries

F. L. P., Buenaventura, Pinar del Rio, Cuba. 1. Is the so-called Southern Cross visible in this country? I wish you to state as to what parts of the year same can be seen. 2. Also, what position does it take when visible here; that is, does it always appear upright or not?

1. Are you not mistaken in the stars? The Southern Cross is a constellation very close to the south pole of the sky, and is thought to be invisible to observers so far north of the equator. The Cross is composed of four principal stars, two of which are of the first magnitude and two of the second, interspersed with and surrounded by various stars of a lesser magnitude. It is a beautiful exhibition, with the bright stars in the form of a square set in a blaze of wonderful light. 2. The Cross, with other stars, revolves somewhat like the Dipper of the northern sky.

E. B. S., Leeton, Mo. 1. What was the cause of the ring around the moon in the eclipse lately? 2. How large is the moon? 3. How far is the moon from the earth?

1. Caused by the radiation of light. While the shadow of the earth covered the body of the moon, yet sufficient light was radiated from the enrth to cause an apparent nimbus around the satellite. It was the luminosity of our atmosphere. 2. Diameter of the moon, 2,163 miles. 3. Its mean distance from earth, 238,854 miles.

L. E. D., Clinton Falls, Minn. During the late summer and early fall of 1883 a large comet was visible here. What was it called, and has it been seen since, or is it likely to appear again?

The only recorded comet of any considerable magnitude for 1883 was one known as the Pons-Brooks comet. This was visible to the naked eyes. Its period is about seventy-one years.

W. G. S., Wilmington, Del. What is the curvature in inches on the earth, in one mile of its surface, and how is it ascertained?

This is an easy mathematical problem for those who have the time to solve it. The curvature is probably about eight inches to the mile.

"Working Around For Jim"

THE true philosophy of service is suggested in a cowboy's idea:

"Lots of folks who would like to do right, think that serving the Lord means shoutin' themselves hoarse and praisin' his name. Now I tell you how I look at that: I'm working here for Jim. Now, if I'd sit around the house here tellin' what a good fellow Jim is an' singin' songs to him I'd be doin' just like what lots of Christians do, but that wouldn't suit Jim and I'd git fired mighty quick. But when I hustle among the hills and see that Jim's herds are all right and not sufferin' for water an' feed, or bein' off the range branded by cattle thieves, then I'm servin' Jim as he wants to be served."

A Watch Case To Be Proud Of

ONE way to cheapen a watch is in the case. It is an easy thing to do because the average buyer doesn't think much about the case—so that is where he gets bitten.

Thousands of men and women today are carrying watches that are away below the standard they have set for themselves in other things. It is a sort of shoddy thing to do—to carry a cheap watch just because it is worn inside the pocket and not outside.

Now don't put all the blame on the jeweler. You talk to him about the movement or "works" of a watch and you get the movement you ask for. You squeeze the price down as low as possible—and you get a trashy watch case, or a case that is scamped in workmanship. It does not last. It does not serve you well while it does last. It is not the right protection for the "works."

The trade marks illustrated on this page are your safeguard. They are standard with the fine jewelry trade, and have been for 50 years. They mean absolute integrity in bullion value, in assay, in construction of a watch case. Be sure to find them. Every good jeweler in this country knows the marks and carries the cases. They are made for ladies' and men's watches—plain, engine-turned, engraved or enameled. All sizes, all patterns.

The Work that Counts

There is no wasted energy, no lost motion in the work of the 'Varsity Crew. Perfect team work, co-operative effort and uniform action are strikingly exemplified.

The same principle of intelligent co-operation exists in telephone communication in its broadest application.

In handling the talk of the nation, the Bell operators respond to millions of different calls from millions of different people, twenty million communications being made every day.

Ten million miles of wire, five million telephones and thousands of switchboards are used to handle this vast traffic.

More than one hundred thousand employees, pulling together, keep the entire system attuned. Unity is the keynote. Without this harmony of co-operation such service as is demanded would be impossible.

One policy, broad and general, in which uniformity of method and co-operation are the underlying principles, results in universal service for nearly a hundred million people.

But Sam looked upon the beautiful child almost reverently. How he longed for a little sister! He would not have ventured to kiss her had not the innocent child taken the initiative.

"You can kiss me if you want to," she said sweetly.

Something seemed to choke Sam, but he arose to the occasion and pressed his lips to the fair little forehead with its crown of gold.

The white oak logs burning in the old open fireplace furnished a beautiful picture in a typical New England home. In the spacious drawing-room sat Grandmother Fitch at the old organ, playing "Coronation." Not a dry eye was under the ancient roof. When the dear old lady had finished her part of the programme, then came a war story by their dearest neighbor, Simon Gerrish, entitled, "Thanksgiving on the Potomac."

Presently supper was served, such a supper as boarding-schools never serve, and which to Sam, unused to country board in hospitable farmhouses, was a revelation. In all his life he had never tasted such ham as was served that night; it was home sugar-cured, sweet, tender and delicious. And such eggs! And such biscuit and honey! In fact, there was nothing served but that he thought of it wonderingly and gratefully.

It was with wondering gratitude, too, that he watched the happy group about the table and realized that he was "in it."

After the supper there was a cozy and delightful evening in the big sitting-room. Corn was popped and sweet apples were baked in the fireplace.

When bedtime came Sam received a good-night kiss and a tender bedtime message from Mrs. Fitch. Thanksgiving was a red-letter day to Sam; it was full of joy from beginning to close. "Thanksgiving" seemed to fill the atmosphere. They all went to church in the morning—to a dear old country church where Pastor Goodwin and his flock were all friends together and wished each other a happy Thanksgiving. Then after the jolly ride home there was the Thanksgiving dinner. The big, fat and golden-brown turkey was in itself a feast, saying nothing of home-made pumpkin pie and the other dishes of an endless variety.

It was a day that Sam Webster would never forget. He thanked God for it in his heart. In the gloaming the dear mother sat down beside him and, stroking his hands gently, said:

"We've taken you right into our hearts, father and I, and we want you to come home whenever Clarence does. We'll be such a happy family together."

And sweet little Beth said: "Sam's just as nice as my big brother Clarence."

As the boys were about to leave the Fitch homestead to return to the Alden Manor, Sam looked at the ancient timbers hewn from live oak and thought of the good family whose forefathers had erected the dwelling more than two centuries before, thus making it possible for him to enjoy one real New England Thanksgiving dinner.

vn, Mr. Mike," she finished, drawi up a chair to the old stove.

'Thank you, but I—I——" The rn looked about for a means of eape. In the doorway stood the boy h the wheel chair.

'Here, Mr. Mike, mebbe youse nted dis. Say, Kitty, ain't dis nd?" he ended admiringly, wheelit the chair to the middle of the m.

From the corner came the tap of tches, and the man saw then what had not seen before: a slip of a l, perhaps twelve years old, with a pless little foot hanging limp below skirt-hem.

'Oh, oh!" she breathed, her eyes me with excitement. "It is—it is wheel one! Oh, sir, how glad and ud you must be—with that!"

The man sat down, though not in wheel chair. He dropped a little plessly into the one his hostess had ought forward.

'Perhaps you—you'd like to try it," managed to stammer.

'Oh, can I? Thank you!" breathed apturous voice. And there, for the xt five minutes, sat the Millionaire tching a slip of a girl wheel herself k and forth in his chair—his chair, ich he had never before suspected being "fine" or "wonderful" or rand"—as the girl declared it.

Shrinkingly he looked about him. where did his eyes fall upon anyng that was whole. He had almost uggled to his feet to flee from it all en the boy's voice arrested him.

"Ye see, it's comin' 'bout noon—de ub is; an' it's goin' ter be all cooked we can begin ter eat right off. Dere, w's dat?" he questioned, standing ay to admire the propped-up table and his mother were setting with a broken dishes. "Now ain't ye d youse ain't down dere a-waitin' r a boat what don't come?"

"Sure I am," declared the man, gazg into the happy face before him, d valiantly determining to be Mike w no matter what happened.

"An' ain't the table pretty," exulted e little girl. "I found that chiny p with the gold on it. 'Course it n't hold nothin', 'cause the bottom's ll out; but it looks pretty—an' looks unts when comp'ny's here!"

The boy lifted his head suddenly.

"Look a-here! I'll make it hold sump-'," he cried, diving his hands into his ckets, and bringing out five coppers d a dime. "Youse jest wait. I'll t a posy up ter de square. 'Course, e'd ought ter have a posy, wid mp'ny here."

"Hold on!" The Millionaire's hand as in his pocket now. His fingers ere on a gold piece, and his eyes—in ncy—were on a glorious riot of cqueminots that filled the little room overflowing, and brought a wonous light to three pairs of unbelievg eyes—then Mike remembered. Here," he said a little huskily, "let e help." But the fingers, when he ld them out, carried only the dime at Mike might give, not the gold ece of the Millionaire.

"Aw, go'wan," scoffed the boy, jubintly. "As if we'd let comp'ny pay! is is our show!" And for the secd time that day the Millionaire had und something money could not buy.

And thus it happened that the table, little later, held a centrepiece of flow-s—four near-to-fading pinks in a ttomless, gold-banded china cup.

It was the man who heard the honk f a motor car in the street outside. nstinctively he braced himself, and one too soon. There was a light nock, then in the doorway stood the earest girl in the world, a large asket and a box in her hands.

"Oh, how lovely! You have the able all ready," she exclaimed, comng swiftly forward. "And what a ne—Billy!" she grasped, as she ropped the box and the basket on to he table.

The boy turned sharply.

"Aw! Why didn't ye tell a feller?" he reproached the man; then to the Girl: "Does ye know him? He said ter call him 'Mike.'"

The man rose now. With an odd directness he looked straight into the Girl's startled eyes.

"Maybe Miss Carrolton don't remember me much, as I am now," he murmured.

The Girl flushed. The man, who knew her so well, did not need to be told that the angry light in her eyes meant that she suspected him of playing this masquerade for a joke, and that she did not like it. Even the dearest girl in the world had a temper—at times.

"But why—are you—here?" she asked in a cold little voice.

The man's eyes did not swerve.

"Jimmy asked me to come."

"He asked you to come!"

"Sure I did," interposed Jimmy, with all the anxiety of a host who sees his guest, for some unknown reason, being made uncomfortable. "I knowed youse wouldn't mind if we did ask comp'ny ter help eat de dinner, an' he lost his boat, ye see, an' had a mug on him as long as me arm, he was that cut up 'bout it. He was sellin' poipers down t' de dock."

"Selling papers!"

"As it happened, I did not sell them," interposed the man, still with that steady meeting of her eyes. "Jimmy sold them for me. He will tell you that I wasn't on to my job, so he helped me out."

"Aw, furgit it," grinned Jimmy, sheepishly. "Dat wa'n't nuttin'. I only showed him ye couldn't sell no poipers widout hollerin'."

A curious look of mingled admiration and relief came to the face of the Girl. Her eyes softened.

"You mean——" She stopped, and the man nodded his head gravely.

"Yes, Miss. I was alone, waiting for Thompson. He must have got delayed. I had four papers in my lap, and after Jimmy had sold them and the boat had gone, he very kindly asked me to dinner, and—I came."

"Whew! Look at dis!" cried an excited voice. Jimmy was investigating the contents of the basket. "Say, Mike, we got turkey! Ye see," he explained, turning to Miss Carrolton, "he kinder hung back fur awhile, an' wa'n't fast on comin'. An' I did hope 'twould be turkey—fur comp'ny. Folks don't have comp'ny ev'ry day!"

"No, folks don't have company every day," repeated the Girl, softly; and into the longing eyes opposite she threw, before she went away, one look such as only the dearest girl in the world can give—a look full of tenderness and love and understanding.

Long hours later, in quite a different place, the Girl saw the man again. He was not Mike now. He was the Millionaire. For a time he talked eagerly of his curious visit, chatting excitedly of all the delightful results that were to come from it: rest and ease for the woman; a wheel chair and the best of surgeons for the little girl; school and college for the boy. Then, after a long minute of silence, he said something else. He said it diffidently, and with a rush of bright color to his face—he was not used to treading quite so near his heart.

"I never thought," he said, just touching the crutches at his side, "that I'd ever be—thankful for—these. But I was—almost—to-day. You see, it was they that—that brought me—my dinner," he finished, with a whimsicality that did not hide the shake in his voice.

Let me send you one of my beautiful silk petticoats

—Mrs. Delworth

I WANT to show you how easy it is to get one of my high grade all-silk petticoats, exactly as shown in the picture. Notice the very high trimmed sectional flounces, the upper section, trimmed with two groups, each consisting of four dainty air tucks; lower sections joined with fashionable bands; all tailor made and beautifully proportioned, with full flare at bottom of about four yards. Full depth underlay and dust ruffle of good quality cotton.

The silk in this petticoat is very heavy and strongly woven, a fine, rich, lustrous black. In fact, if you bought the silk alone at your local store, it would cost more than I am asking for the completed skirt. I give you all the middleman's profits, and by selling direct from mill to wearer, give you the most astonishing petticoat value you ever heard of. You also get, with each skirt, my absolute guarantee of satisfaction or money back, and buy for less than the actual retail price of the material.

Samples FREE

This petticoat is sold at such a low price that I cannot afford the large investment that would be necessary if I made it in a variety of colors, and hence I offer it in black only, but I will gladly send free samples of the silk used in making it, together with sample card of colors and petticoats of other styles. You will be delighted, I know, with the catalogue, and I urge you to send for it to-day, even though you may not be quite ready to buy a petticoat. I want every woman to know how easy it is to get her petticoats, both black and colors, at a lower price than even her store has to pay.

THIS Handsome $5 Petticoat, $3.75

A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED

Give me the length desired (from 36 to 44) and I will guarantee a perfect fit or the skirt may be returned at my expense and I will refund every cent paid. The petticoat shown in the picture is my Fall leader, latest style, fashionable cut. At $5.00 I know you would say it was extra good value, but for a time I will send it to any reader of this magazine for only $3.75. Send your express or postoffice address with money order for $3.75, and I will send you the best petticoat value in the world.

My Special Dresden Skirt

I have a limited number of my attractive Dresden or Persian silk petticoats that I can sell at a special price of $4.00, on my regular guarantee of money back if not satisfactory. State color desired—golden brown, reseda green, navy, silver grey, or wistaria—and enclose money order or N. Y. draft for $4.00. We cannot send sample of silk, but it's the heavy, best quality and if you're not fully satisfied with your petticoat when you receive your petticoat we will promptly refund the money. Both this and my regular black petticoat would make a pleasing and useful Christmas present.

Write me personally to-day and get a beautiful silk petticoat by return express. You run no risk, as my guarantee is absolute—money back if not satisfactory. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would not accept this advertisement if they were not fully assured of my responsibility.

HEALTH AND INCOME

Both Kept Up on Scientific Food.

Good sturdy health helps one a lot to make money.

With the loss of health one's income is liable to shrink, if not entirely dwindle away.

When a young lady has to make her own living, good health is her best asset.

"I am alone in the world," writes a Chicago girl, "dependent on my own efforts for my living. I am a clerk, and about two years ago through close application to work and a boarding-house diet, I became a nervous invalid, and got so bad off it was almost impossible for me to stay in the office a half day at a time.

"A friend suggested to me the idea of trying Grape-Nuts food which I did, making it a large part of at least two meals a day.

"Today, I am free from brain-tire, dyspepsia, and all the ills of an overworked and improperly nourished brain and body. To Grape-Nuts I owe the recovery of my health, and the ability to retain my position and income."

When Silence Was Sin*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THIS lesson is timely at the portals of December, for the sin of leading ourselves into temptation, as Peter did, is never more common than when the annual celebration of the birth of Christ introduces a period of holidays that to many people are by no means holy days. Much of the dissipation of the holiday season is bad manners as well as bad morals.

And the approach of winter gives timeliness to the story of Peter's sensitiveness to the cold when the trial of his innocent Master by a perjured judge should have made him oblivious of the weather. He is not the only one more concerned about the cold than about Christ. This history repeats itself as whole Sunday Schools "crucify the Lord afresh and put him to an open shame" by closing for months in winter because of the cold, or for months in summer because of the heat. In Baedeker's guide book to Italy, the streams that flow all the year are printed in blue; those that dry up in summer in brown. That hue of rust is fitting for the religion that dries up in summer or freezes up in winter. May all who are in such state achieve at last, as Peter did, the strong steady flow of an abundant river that defies both heat and frost.

The Sin of Self-Confidence

The story of Peter's graceless denial really begins in his brags at the Lord's Supper. There are some who at the Lord's Supper to-day fix their eyes unduly on their own weakness and "unworthiness." They should rather fix their eyes on the worth and power of Christ our Advocate. Peter, too, should have had confidence in Christ, instead of looking at himself in such self-confidence as was both sin and folly. Far better if he had been in the mood of the lowly saint who, being asked for his experience when he applied for church membership, replied to question after question as to himself and as to Christ:

> I'm a poor sinner and nothing at all,
> But Jesus Christ is my all and in all.

Avoid self-confidence, but cultivate self-reliance—only let that self-reliance include the indwelling Christ of a new self. Peter thought himself already an immovable rock, but Jesus saw he hadn't even "sand," and warned him that Satan was about to put him in his sieve to sift out whatever was good in him, and that before the cock-crow of the next morning he would have thrice denied his Lord.

"Lead Us Not Into Temptation"

"He denied, saying, I am not." (The teacher should have a consolidated or interwoven Gospel in which all of this story that is given in other Gospels is added to Matthew's story. The story of Mark is especially important, as that is really Peter's own account—Mark having been his secretary.) Peter, in spite of Christ's warnings, walked straight into temptation, which we should always avoid as much as possible, even when strong in Christ. His self-confidence proved to be but a paper shield that broke at the first touch of a servant's finger at the very door of the Sanhedrin court. His thought that he could bear prison and death surrendered to the toy pistol of a maid's sneering finger. "Art thou also one of this man's disciples?" asked the maid who kept the door. Fear and shame and cowardice instantly put his self-confidence to flight, and in a few moments he had not only lied, but added his old fisherman's sin of profanity. How swiftly in his case "evil associations had corrupted good manners"!

Peter's story puts strong emphasis on that First Psalm, which every boy and girl should put in their memories as a shield: "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the wicked, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of scoffers." It is bad enough that many must in hours of business sit beside the scoffers, whose mouths are open sepulchres of lust and sacrilege, which even the courteous protest that it is our duty to make may not still. But in hours of leisure, one should shun the society of even the respectable sinner, save as duty calls one strong enough for the service to missionary work in his behalf. Many a young man, many a young woman deliberately goes into moral peril, saying "I'll take the risk," and they take ruin in many cases. In choosing a business and in choosing how to use leisure we should take no needless risks.

"Confess Me Before Men"

Peter's denial in words was scarcely worse than his denial by silence—standing by without a protest while Christ was falsely accused and unjustly condemned. In such a case speech is golden and silence is sin. It is so impossible for one to be a coward and a Christian at the same time that Christ has ever required open confession even when it involved danger and death. The very word martyr means confessor. How mean to hide our faith when the only thing we fear is a sneer! The writer, as a boy of nine, made his first open confession of Christ in response to his father's sermon on the text, "He that is ashamed of me before men, of him will I be ashamed before my Father and the holy angels." I became ashamed of my shame.

The writer well remembers a high school boy in Dover, N. H., who made open confession of faith one evening at church. A lot of his schoolmates who had heard of it gathered at the playground the next morning to "chaff him" when he should arrive, but never a sneer got to their lips, for he walked boldly to them and said, "Boys, I have become a Christian and I am not ashamed of it." He afterwards became a brave preacher.

> Ashamed of Jesus? Sooner far
> Might evening blush to own a star.
> Ashamed of Jesus? Just as soon
> Might midnight be ashamed of noon.

The Sin of Cowardice

It is not alone in neglecting to make open confession of Christ that we follow Peter in cowardice. Almost every day we must conquer or be conquered by the sin of fear. The Christian business man often lives the life of a coward rather than do his civic duty in opposing what he knows to be the arch enemy of all honest trade as well as of the church and home. Even the preacher sometimes yields to the sin of fear when called to rebuke sin in his main aisle. Let him preach to himself and all others that moral cowardice is not a mere fault but a deadly sin. It is really infidelity. No one can really fear to do right who believes in God. "Why should we fear anything with Him looking at us?" exclaims George Macdonald. Let teachers in the Sunday School bring to the children such a vision of the ever-present God that faith shall cast out fear through all their lives. Peter became fearless when the Holy Spirit at Pentecost put God in his soul. To the same Sanhedrin he then exclaimed, when told to stop preaching: "We can not but speak." Then he proved able to go for Christ to prison, and later to death.

The chief priests and elders and all the council sought false witnesses. The Sanhedrin, the supreme court of the ews, had gathered at night for judi-ial murder, which they sought to ustify by false witnesses. Think of t; a false high priest trying the great Iigh Priest of whom he was but a ype! On the white cap of Annas were he golden letters: "Holiness to the ord"; but under it Christ could see Murderer" as his true label.

A college student visited a Philadel-hia photographer the other day, and at for his picture. When the plate as developed, the astonished photog-apher saw plainly on the young man's orehead a clearly defined death's head ith crossbones beneath it. Thinking was some imperfection in the plate, he photographer arranged another tting. Again the skull and cross-ones appeared in the picture, and the ystified photographer was fairly truck dumb with amazement. Then e noticed the smiling sitter, and nally induced him to tell the joke. he trick simply consisted of painting n the forehead the grim design with a olution of bisulphate of quinine. This invisible to the eye, but shows pure hite to the camera.

History clothes Annas not in white, ut in black, with the skull and cross-ones of a midnight assassin upon his orehead. Not rank but character de-rmines the judgment of history, the upreme court of this world.

We need not linger upon the trial of hrist with its half truths that were er the worst falsehoods. Enough at the world has reversed the verdict.

The story is valuable to show how hrist bore every woe of mankind, of hich one of the greatest in history as been unjust judgments in and out courts. How many of the innocent ave suffered in such courts as those the bloody Jeffreys and of Bloody ary! And how many of the guilty ave escaped through equal injustice nd non-enforcement of law! The urts of the United States are the eanest part of its politics, but how uch the poor and weak suffer even in em from the tricks of lawyers and e delays of judges! But the courts private judgment are yet more fre-ently unjust, and inflict no less suf-ring. Therefore, Jesus said, not to agistrates but to private citizens, udge not," a command that few of s disciples did not disobey. It does t mean that we are not to condemn ighteousness, for in other passages e are called to "judge righteous dgment"; but it certainly does for-id much of the hasty judging of our llows that is so common. We need judge ourselves more sharply, and hers more charitably, reversing our ual opposite course. Many a man no could run a carpenter shop with e beams in his own eyes, chooses ther to be an eye-doctor for the otes in the eyes of others. It is re-arkable how many of the stones are rown from glass houses. We need judge others with charity, even to dge them with justice, for the ten-ncy of almost every one, because of s own sinfulness, is to believe every arge of sin against others, and espe-ally when it seems to make some one equal or greater sinner than him-f. Putting another down seems to t us up.

I have said we should judge our-ves more severely, while we judge hers more gently. There is force in e wish of Burns:

> O wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursel's as ithers see us.

t in reality others always see us tter or worse than we are. No one n judge us rightly with balanced stice and mercy save God. When rist, in a later scene, said to Peter, ovest thou me?" the repentant apos-t replied, "Thou knowest all things, rd; thou knowest that I love thee." this world and the next he is our st and merciful judge.

"Hereafter shall ye see the Son of Man sitting on the right hand of power." Christ heard the false and frivolous accusations against himself for a while in silence, usually the best answer of the innocent to envious and malicious attacks. But at last the prisoner spoke, not with his head bowed in the shame of guilt, but with the mien of a judge, though bound and bruised and spit upon. He declared that he would sit on the bench of the Supreme Court of the Universe to reverse such unjust judgments as Caiaphas was then contemplating. "He shall come again to be our judge." That word may bring terror to unpardoned evildoers, but it should bring joy to all who have previously accepted Christ as Saviour and Advocate.

There was a small, under-witted, but faith-filled lad in this country at the time of the great meteoric shower of November, 1833. When, on every side, men and women were that night in terror at the thought that the hour of final doom had come, this lad's mother aroused him from his sleep with a cry: "Sandy, Sandy, get up, will you? The Day of Judgment has come." Instantly the boy was alive to that call, and was on his feet shouting, "Glory to God! I'm ready." In that court no superficial professions will pass muster, but character shall be searched to its depths. In a North Sea island, named Keldive, there is a strange lake which has fresh water at the top in which live fresh water fish, while the depths of the lake are salt and filled with the life of the sea. Nansen found a similar condition in some parts of the Polar Sea. Caiaphas and those about him were godly only in surface forms, with envy and hatred and covetousness and hypocrisy hiding in their deeper nature. Even Peter was at this time only superficially Christianized, the Holy Spirit not having yet displaced the pride and vainglory of his natural disposition. But he repented and became Christian to the core, faithful unto death. Caiaphas and all of the Sanhedrin save Joseph and Nicodemus, seem to have carried their sin to the end, and have since stood as guilty prisoners at the court where Christ sits in perfect justice.

A NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SONG OF OUR SYRIAN GUEST"

JUST PUBLISHED

No Room in the Inn

Bound in vellum, price 50 cents net. In ooze morocco, price $1.25 net.

A beautiful and tender Christmas story of modern Palestine in which the reader is carried back to the days when Joseph and Mary journeyed from Galilee to the city of David, and to the birth of Jesus on the first Christmas. Drawn from the leisurely days which Mr. Knight has recently spent at Bethlehem, talking with the villagers, watching their life, gathering their folk-lore of the nativity.

Attractively printed in two colors with Oriental border designs similar to "The Shepherd of Jebel Nur," but with different color scheme. Photogravure illustrations. 64 pages.

OTHER BOOKS BY MR. KNIGHT

The Signs in the Christmas Fire

Vellum edition, printed in gray-green and gold bronze. Gilt top. Photogravure frontispiece. Price 50 cents net. Envelope edition, 25 cents net.

In this very human and touching Christmas story Mr. Knight has shown sympathetic insight into human lives of all ages and races, tender sentiment, fresh power of interpretation, and delicate grace of expression. He has created a dramatic setting for his helpful Christmas meditations in the story of the old Greek exiled in America with his beautiful daughter.

The Shepherd of Jebel Nur

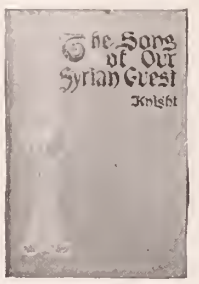
Vellum edition, with photogravure illustration, 50 cents net. Envelope edition, 25 cents net.

The central figure of this story, who compares so delightfully the Shepherd Psalm and the words of Jesus in the tenth chapter of John, bears a striking resemblance to an honored missionary known to many of us. He doubtless afforded no small part of the local color and inspiration of this story, and his rugged character stands out effectively against the Oriental background.

The Love Watch

Vellum edition, 50 cents net. Bound in double folded dove-gray Italia Oscl with decorations in violet. The text borders are exceedingly dainty in design and coloring. Enclosed in envelope, 25 cents net.

A story in which with insight and sympathy Mr. Knight imagines the feelings of those watchers in the Bethany home when Jesus was in the hands of his enemies. Among these loved ones, the figure of Lazarus recalled from death stands out with peculiar interest. The characters of Mary and Martha are also feelingly interpreted.



The Song of Our Syrian Guest

After more than half a million copies have been sold, the demand is greater now than ever. A new edition, produced in a unique manner. An interesting frontispiece from a painting by Harold Sichel; also the Twenty third Psalm printed in two colors, with decorative border and embellishments. White vellum edition, 35 cents net. Envelope edition, 25 cents net.

THE COPELAND EDITION. Bound in pearl gray cloth, with white enamel design, gilt lettering and illustrations by Charles Copeland. This is the edition so widely used as a gift book, 50 cents net. A charming edition in full leather, $1.25 net.

This story happened to be one of those simple products in literature which are brought forth in a quiet manner and after a time are found to be a distinct gift to mankind. It is unlike anything else ever written on the Shepherd Psalm.

Worth-While Life*

A YOUNG girl wrote not long ago to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, saying, "I want to make the most of my life. In order to do that, I see that I must get as good an education as I can. If I know more, I may, perhaps, be able to bring more people to Christ."

Alas, it is not always those who know the most who bring the most to Christ. The learned mind does not always go with the simple, loving heart; and it is the loving heart which wins, every time.

But the trained mind, when it is backed by that loving heart, adds limitless power. Let us all store up as much of knowledge as we may. It is better than gold or rubies.

In Mr. H. G. Wells's book, The Wonderful Visit, an angel comes down to earth. A clergyman who is out hunting sees it flying about in the air.

He thinks it is a new kind of bird and shoots it. The angel can now no longer fly, and he becomes a pilgrim on earth.

But he still retains the standards of the angel. He is interested in people not because they happen to be rich or handsome, but because they have interesting characteristics in themselves.

Thus in a certain servant-girl he finds a nobility and a devotion to God which delight him. Instead of responding to the invitations of the wealthy people he prefers to go and talk with the servant girl.

The angel could not understand the explanations which these people made to him of the reasons why he should not talk with the good servant girl; and he could not show them why it was worth his while to talk to her rather than to them.

In heaven there are no silly class distinctions, so how could the angel understand ours? But he saw that the poor girl had thoughts which it was worth an angel's while to hear; and on the other hand the idle rich, interested in mere sport and sordid trifles, naturally did not attract him.

One of the lives which has been most useful in this world, is also one of the most encouraging; for it shows, as do many others, that a poor boy, without any worldly helps, may rise to a lofty position.

Sir George Williams, the founder of the Young Men's Christian Association, was the youngest of the eight sons of a poor English farmer. Six of them were farmers when George left school at the age of thirteen.

The question now arose, could George make a successful farmer?

The family gave him a fair trial. One day he was bringing home a load of hay along a rutty lane, when suddenly hay, horse, boy and all, tumbled over into the ditch.

It was an accident, and not due, so far as the family could prove, to any carelessness on the part of George; but they felt that if he had been really "smart," it would not have happened. No—he was not equal to the destiny of a farmer; so he was apprenticed to a draper in Bridgewater.

There he was converted to Christ. His conversion was not merely in name. It meant a burning thirst for souls for the Master.

Out of his great love sprang the wonderful idea of the Young Men's Christian Association, which has founded branches in every country.

His sovereign bestowed knighthood upon him. When he died, he was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Not every worth-while life is so amply rewarded here. Said Dr. Lyman, "There may be an Iliad of heroism behind a ten-dollar-a-week wage."

But let us, every one, make the most of God's great gift of life.

$3,600 Profit—30 Hens

I—Ernest Kellerstrass—made $3,600 in a single season from Crystal White Orpington hens, on a lot 24 x 40 feet, feeding scraps from my table. Pursuing same methods, I made just $18,178.53 net profit last year from my poultry farm. My books a records, verifying these figures, are open to inspection.

The secret of my success is knowing how to raise the biggest eg laying and meat producing strain in the world—Crystal White Orpi tons. I originated this strain as well as the methods I use in breedi hatching, growing and marketing. My experience covers 36 years.

"PEGGY"
Mr. Kellerstrass' $10,000 Hen

During the past two years I have started hundreds of people in s cessful poultry raising. You, too, by following "The Kellerstrass Wa of Raising Poultry, can become a successful poultry raiser. There enough room in the average backyard to do it.

This Book Tells how I made $3,600 in one seas from 30 hens on a 24x40-ft. lot; I give you the names and addresses people who paid me more than $2,000 for the eggs alone—how I made flock pay me $68 per hen in ten months—how I raise 98 out of every hu red chickens hatched—how I make chickens 8 weeks old weigh 2½ pound how I breed my big egg-laying strain, getting as high as 263 eggs in days—how I run my incubator—how I prepared my chickens for the sh room so as to win over 90 per cent of all the blue ribbon prizes awar in two years—how I raised five chickens that I sold to Madame Paderewski for $7,500—how I f my chickens for egg production—how I keep them healthy and free from disease—how I tell good layer from the poor layer—how I break up my broody hens without injuring them. I you how to pack eggs to keep them fresh—how I mate my chickens for breeding and fertility. tell you all about broiler plants, egg plants, etc. In truth, I tell everything necessary to succ in the poultry business. I hold back no secrets.

Book Sells at Cost I sell this valuable book for $1.00, just what it costs me, in or to acquaint people with the famous Crystal White Orping strain, of which I am the originator. Write me. REG. TRADE MARK

Every letter we publish goes as far and means as much as the contract, for they tell of results that are true. They are from actual users and are honest in every word they say.

Marshalltown, Ia., Aug. 10, '10.—I used "Save-the-Horse" on a mule; was kicked on the hock, the whole joint enlarged; was the size of a child's head. He would not put his foot on the ground. His hip was shrunken to skin and bone. One of the State veterinarians and another one of our townsmen said he would not be worth a son. I gave a pig and 50 cents for him and used the bottle of "Save-the-Horse" as directed and now he is sound. It is wonderful stuff. W. S. HAYNES.

THE TROUBLESOME BABY

By Margaret E. Sangster

THE little ones cling to the mother,
With kisses that softly fall,
But somehow the troublesome baby
Is nearest her heart of all;
Ill and fretful and small,
But dearest to mother of all.

The neighbors wonder and pity,
Hearing its querulous cry.
"She is losing her youth and beauty,"
Say friends as they pass her by:
"Well were the babe to die,
And the mother have rest," they sigh.

But over the wee white cradle,
Her soft eyes full of prayer,
Bendeth the weary mother;
And never was face so fair,
Pale and tired with care,
But the glory of love is there.

Rosy and round and dimpled,
Dewy with childish sleep,
She tucks in her other darlings,
Whom angels watch and keep.
Ah, if a darker angel
Anear this treasure creep!

Bless thee, beautiful mother!
Thy heart hath a place for all,
Room for the joys and the sorrows,
However fast they fall;
Room for the baby small,
That may love thee better than all.

Meliton, the Forerunner

HE is taller than his fellow Porto Ricans, standing full six feet; a ian of strong physique and a clear ye. He has the musical name of Meliton. He once carried the mission-ry's baggage fifty miles from the ountain top to the city, slept all ight on the hard floor, then together, ie next morning early, they started to imb back over the same ranges, in nother direction, forty miles to tuado, where the Annual Conference as to be held. He walked every step the way, fording rivers and climb-ig the hills; taking short cuts and oming out on the main road now and ien ahead of the mounted missionary. ometimes he would appear black gainst the sky, on an overhanging rag, wave his hand and disappear, on to be seen again in the valley elow, winding along the trail with the ride of a giant, his minister's bag-age, forty or fifty pounds of it, poised racefully on his head. You could ever forget his bright face and white eeth. Bishop Wilson named him Happy Face."

Meliton can neither read nor write, nd has never known a school, but he as a keen mind, as many of his ethods prove. For example: He ould get some one to write on a piece paper a simple text, like the one eginning "For God so loved the orld——" Meeting a traveler on one the mountain trails, he would pull ie little crumpled paper from his ocket, saying, "Brother, can you ead?" If the man could, he was sually proud of it, but always curious know what was in the note and to hom it was sent. Meliton would ave him read it twice, then his big, arnest eyes would come near the ranger and he would almost whisper, What is it, what does it mean?" And ie stranger would look confused and ay: "I don't know; maybe it is from ie Bible." Then the forerunner ould ask if it were true and where a an might find God. Then, "There is be a meeting up in the mountains, ou better come back with me and hear ow the preacher explains it." The rong thing about his work was that aroused such great interest in the ranger, he always sought out some iends to go with him.

It was his custom to start out an our or so ahead of the missionary, in rder to gather the people together for ie preaching service, and as the reacher appeared, riding into the en-osure, Meliton would step out from ie crowd, and in a voice that could be eard far down the mountain, he ould cry out in the musical tones of ie Spanish tongue: "How beautiful pon the mountains are the feet of im that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation, that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!"

While the preacher was delivering his message, Meliton would slip away quietly and set out for the next place, repeating the same work as the Forerunner of the Gospel.

The Balloon Hoax of 1844

IN the New York Sun of April 13, 1844, there appeared a remarkable article which attracted widespread attention at that time. It purported to be an account of a balloon voyage across the Atlantic. Sir Everard Bringhurst, Mr. Monck Mason and six other persons set out from a point near Penstruthal, North Wales, in the balloon Victoria on April 6, and after a perilous trip and many adventures, alighted safely at Sullivan's Island, near Charleston, S. C. The detailed account of this mythical journey, and indeed the whole story, originated in the fertile brain of Edgar Allan Poe, who gave what purported to be a daily journal of the voyagers. The Victoria was described as a dirigible and the picture of her printed in the Sun shows her with a car, a propeller, and anchors. In some respects, she resembled Wellman's balloon Amcrica, in which he made his recent attempt to accomplish that which Poe, the poet and dreamer, with his unrivaled imagination, made his voyagers do successfully. Poe's aeronauts were 75 hours in completing the journey from shore to shore. Wellman and his associates were 71 hours in the air and covered some 850 miles before abandoning the attempt. In view of this latest experiment, Poe's brilliant fiction seems even more remarkable now than when it was written.

The Farmer and the Auto

That the automobile has come to stay is clearly demonstrated by the phenomenal increase in farmers' machines throughout the West and Southwest during the last two years. Social life in these sections has undergone a great change. People living fifteen or twenty miles apart are now brought into close touch with each other by the new annihilator of distance and time. The beneficial effect on the roads is almost impossible to estimate and social economies in many lines of human industry have been changed for the better by the automobile.

The Philo System is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success
from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks
are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler, and the broilers are of the very best quality bringing here, 5 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-months-old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each per Month in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell
One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel
Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves Two Cents on Each Chicken
No lamps required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

Two Matchless, Wonderful Gift Books=Built by the People

HEART THROBS and Heart Songs are world renowned as "gift books the people built." Heart Throbs is the collaboration of 50,000 people in work of collecting scraps in prose and verse, the pathetic or humorous little things that have appealed to the people as they sat at the fireside reading newspaper, book or magazine. Heart Songs, no less remarkable and unique, is the collaboration of 25,000 musical loving people in the collecting of more than 400 of the dearest songs known to the heart and soul of man. Each book is imperishable as a touch-stone of human sentiment, affording an insight into the tastes and aims of the "plain people of America"---as Lincoln loved to call us---such a nothing else could do.

Many of the selections sent in were yellow with age, taken from mother's scra book, sacred with hallowed memories; some came from between the leaves of th family Bible or the old school book in the attic; many were sheets worn thread bare and carefully prepared and strengthened, odorous with lavender, rose and ori ---the heart treasure-trove of American homes. What could be a more inspiring entertaining and useful Christmas gift than "the books the people built."

Heart Songs=A Great Musical Library

LIKE its sister book Heart Songs is the expression of the people. The power of music in the swaying of human emotion is the greatest force in the world. Heart Songs mirrors the musical taste of the nation, and is a book to give unending joy to those who delight to play and sing. A review in The New York Times describes the book as follows:

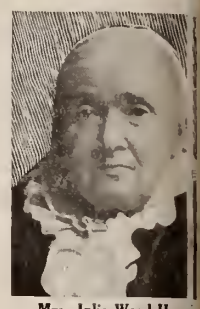
"Heart Songs" contains nearly all the favorites of an earlier generation. Old, yellowed sheets of music published 'before the war,' and the songs of the war itself; love songs and college songs, and the hymns that are dear to a plain people. The 'Tannhauser' song of the 'Evening Star' is there between Raymond's 'Take Me Home' and George Cooper's 'Sweet Genevieve.' The classics of popular song, from 'The Campbells Are Coming' and 'Annie Laurie,' the folk songs that have withstood a sea change, the persistent airs of Michael William Balfe, are as inevitably in such a book as Stephen Foster's once familiar tunes, and the old American love songs of the 'Bonny Eloise' and 'Juanita' type. Nobody would expect to miss here, of course, a single song of Franz Abt. They are all in evidence, including 'When the Swallows Homeward Fly.' Handel's 'Angels Ever Bright and Fair,' Mendelssohn's 'I Would That My Love,' Schubert's 'Sylvia' and the familiar setting of Ben Jonson's 'Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes' are music that no cultivation of the ear and the mind can ever banish to obscurity. 'Lohengrin's bridal chorus, and Verdi's 'Trovatore' melodies, with adapted words, and Sullivan, too, is largely represented, while the patriotic songs, the national hymns of various countries, the real darky songs and the imitations of black minstrelsy's palmy days are all here.

One may pick up the book at random and surely encounter an old friend by merely turning the page. Words and music alike are given, and it would be difficult to say what has been omitted. The range is large in date and quality. There are melodies whose origins are forgotten. There are songs of the present hour by Victor Herbert. 'Yankee Doodle' and 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' 'Kathleen Mavourneen' and 'Bohunkus' appear with the 'Erminie' lullaby, 'When the Springtime Comes, Gentle Annie' and 'I Lost My Money on a Bobtail Nag' close at hand. 'Barbara Allen' and 'Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms, are side by side. The book has a positive historical value.

Heart Songs has aroused more sincere, heart-felt interest, than any other musical book ever published. Over 25,000 people loving the dear old songs treasuring the tender words, of melodies rich in sentiment, and tradition, harboring the sacred memories that only the strains of some almost forgotten song might evoke, or feeling the glow of the swinging measures of a romping tune of days gone by, or living anew the pleasures of the occasional opera with its wonderful masterpieces—all are in evidence, that these treasures might be preserved for future generations, between the covers of the l k. The 400 and more songs that comprise this book H r Songs include, Patriotic and War Songs, Sea Songs d Chanteys, Lullabies and Child Songs, Plantation and Negro Melodies, Hymns and Revival Songs, Love Songs of all Races, Operetta Selections and Ballads, College, School, and Fraternity Songs.

From the impressive strains of the inspired religious composition or the stately measures of the wedding march of the plaintive love song, or the crooning lullaby to the rollicking college glee, solos, duets, choruses, obligatos, all complete with words and music.



Mrs. Julia Ward How Author of "The Battle Hy tof the Republic," selected Theodore Roosevelt.

Have you ever been face to face with this situation? —a group of friends in for an evening—a call for music, something everybody can sing—and no music exactly suitable for the o s ion. You should have a copy of "HEART SONGS"—s gs that will be sung at every evening party throug t the festive season and right through the winter.

Heart Throbs=A Typically American Book

NOTHING like Heart Throbs ever has appeared before in any language. No other people but Americans with their cosmopolitanism could have made it. Within us are blended the hopes and aspirations, the sentiments and convictions of every nation on the globe.

In the truest sense, HEART THROBS is a book of the people, by the people and for the people. A typically American book.

The Late Wm. McKinley
Whose gentle and noble life typified the true American spirit as revealed in Heart Throbs

Its poems, stories and anecdotes have stood the test of time. They have comforted us in affliction, cheered us in adversity, inspired us with nobler ideas of living, gave us new heart and courage to face the battle of life, or brightened a gloomy day with wholesome good cheer, humor, wit and hearty laughter.

What has appealed to so many of your fellow Americans must appeal to you.

Love, patriotism, faith, hope, charity, lofty aims and noble purposes; an honest reverence for all family ties and affections, a manly and womanly regret for failure to do the very best that is in one, coupled with a firm determination to rise up and make another attempt; a deep and tender sense of bereavement blended with the noblest resignation in the hope of a blessed and immortal life—all this is in HEART THROBS for you.

Heart throbs of happines! Heart throbs of courage! Heart throbs of righteousness! Heart throbs of tender, beautiful and exquisite sentiment!—they are all here for you.

It is a great and good book, and a wonderful book. It is a book for you to give to every friend and loved one.

And it is a book for you yourself to keep by you always.

Most books you east aside as soon as you finish reading them—they can give you pleasure for only a short while. But this is a book that will mean more and more to you as the years go by. It will be a sympathetic friend at all times.

DON'T GIVE UP THE HYMN!

[Suggested by the proposal to eliminate "Greenland's Icy Mountains" from the Hymnal now under revision.]

FROM Greenland's icy mountains
There comes a startled cry,
And Afric's sunny fountains
Would know the reason why.
From many an ancient river,
From many a palmy plain
They call: "Cease not forever
To tug at error's chain."

Where dawn seemed brightly breaking
Will night reign as of yore;
False gods will leave off quaking
If Greenland's sung no more.
'Twas writ by one inspired,
This missionary hymn;
Our fathers heard, admired,
Then sang it with a vim.

And like to old-time rockets,
The silver coins did bound
From depths of Christian pockets
At hearing of the sound.
The hymn that leads all others
In making clear the cry
Of far-off heathen brothers,
Such hymn should never die.

New York City. CLARA MARSHALL.

The Heart of the Gospel*

WHEN we say that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin, we state in the strongest terms the great truth that by his coming into the world, by his saintly life, and by his voluntary death, he shows mankind how to live in order to avoid sin.

But this truth contains another which is even deeper and sweeter. It is that Christ was not obliged to come. He came because he loved us. The most vital part of his example is that, as he loved us and sacrificed himself for us, so we must love men and sacrifice ourselves for them.

And it means still more. It means that not only did Christ suffer and die for us, but he left with us "the Comforter, which is the Holy Spirit."

And the Spirit cries aloud in the soul of every man in every Christian land, reminding him of the shed blood and the promised remission of sins.

Some heed the voice and seize the freely offered salvation. Others are indifferent. Still others reject the gift with scorn. The situation is well described in the parable of the sower and the seed.

"Life was sweet to this young man of thirty-three years," says the eloquent Alfred Wesley Wishart. "He loved the beautiful world. He loved his fellow-men. It was no easy task to face an awful death and to endure bitter hatred. Inscrutable mystery, that the progress of civilization has ever been purchased by the blood of the brave and holy! Christ had no doubts about the subject. He never wavered in his confidence in the goodness of God. To do his will was his mission, his joy, his life.

"Has not history justified his superb confidence? Has not history proved that love is the mightiest force in the world, and that the man who loves God is the real power among men? Take Jesus at his word. Try to live as he lived."

It is the love expressed in Christ's immeasurable sacrifice which should most appeal to us. It is the love in that shed blood which most whitens the souls cleansed with it.

"Bear in mind," said Henry Ward Beecher, "that the ruling influence in time and for eternity is God's love.

"Bear in mind that, whatever may be the long delays, the equity that springs from love, and the intellectual developments that spring from genial love, are to rule.

"Let each one of us refashion his heart upon the great doctrine of God's love. Let every one reconstruct his household on it. Let love administer correction, censure, criticism. Let every one of us undertake to develop the true spirit of love in his business. Thus we shall have our hand upon the wheel and in every place where it turns slowly, we can give it impulse.

"And when once you shall have beheld that loving, adorable face, though you had suffered on the cross, though you had been broken on the rack, one look will be more, a thousand times more, than all the suffering."

But the way to this bliss is paved with thorns. To walk by love, and to follow the pattern set for us on Calvary, are no child's play. Dr. Parkhurst wisely reminds us that "no man has such terrific enemies to fight as he who wants to be holy. We have not the courage and the constructive purpose needed for the winning of so immense a victory. It was the Lord's consummate achievement that he could be a man, born of human flesh, and still be holy."

It is only through his help that we can tread the strait path that leads to his perfection.

A Veteran Missionary Dead

ON Saturday morning, November 5, the well-known missionary, Rev. Joshua Heath Sobey, late of Panama and Costa Rica, fell asleep in Jesus. For forty years, Mr. Sobey has been actively engaged in the work of the Gospel ministry. He held successful pastorates in England, and in 1882 the English Baptist Missionary Society invited him to take charge of the Second Baptist Church at Montego Bay, Jamaica, West Indies. His subsequent work led him to the Cayman Islands, the coasts of Central America and the Republic of Costa Rica. At Port Limon his efforts were abundantly blessed. He greatly helped the cause of religious liberty in those regions. Mr. Sobey in 1907 became active in missionary work on the Canal Zone. His life in that climate undermined his health and he came north a few months ago. He passed peacefully away at Watkins, N. Y. He leaves a widow and two sons: Rev. Wilfred Heath Sobey, of Watkins, and Melville M. Sobey, of Hudson, N. Y.

If you want to succeed with poultry as the CURTISS brothers have succeeded, subscribe NOW and get the new

CURTISS POULTRY BOOK

Over $100,000 A YEAR

Roy agreed that if his father (a grain merchant and farmer) would furnish the feed he (Roy) would take all care of the flock and supply eggs and chickens for the farm table, and all that were left over were to belong to him. In two years Roy was using so much feed that his father had to cry quits, but the boy kept right on. He would start at two o'clock A.M. for Niagara Falls, 13 miles away, with poultry and eggs to sell. His brother joined him, and the business grew and grew. They took the farm and paid off the mortgage. They built and added to their plant, learning slowly how to avoid losses and make the greatest profits.

But they had no guidance, and had to learn by their own mistakes. If they had had such a guide as the CURTISS POULTRY BOOK, it would have saved them thousands of dollars and years of lost time.

This capital book was written right at Niagara Farm by the veteran poultryman, MICHAEL K. BOYER. Mr. Boyer had the Curtiss brothers right at his elbow with their records and data. He says he never saw a general poultry plant so well managed at every point. No "putting on style," no fancy buildings, no ornaments, but straight solid business. Everything is planned for months ahead. Every day shipments go off, every day money comes in. You could hardly believe how little they lose. Their percentage of fertile eggs, of live strong chickens hatched, of day-old chicks shipped, without loss, to Kansas or Florida, is really wonderful.

And this book gives all their methods of managing incubators, handling eggs, feeding chickens and ducks, killing, dressing, packing, and marketing, their formulas for mixing feed at different ages. And all these have been tested and improved by years of experience, resulting in the most profitable general poultry plant in the world. Whether you raise chickens, ducks, or eggs, whether you keep forty fowls or forty thousand, you will find here help that you can get in no other way.

Profusely illustrated, with many fine engravings, from actual photographs taken from life.

Have you use for such a book? Then read the offer below.

The CURTISS POULTRY BOOK is sold in combination with the Farm Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

The FARM JOURNAL is the standard paper for everyone who lives in or near the country, or ever has, or ever expects to. A particularly fine poultry department, more valuable than most poultry papers. 33 years old, 750,000 subscribers and more. Goes everywhere. Clean, clever, cheerful, amusing, intensely practical. Cut to fit everybody, young or old, village, suburbs, or rural routes. Unlike any other paper and always has been.

AMERICAN POULTRY ADVOCATE, the great New York State paper published at Syracuse, and full of good reading matter, is always welcomed by the subscriber. Now in its 18th year. It is conceded to be one of the best poultry papers published in the United States. Well edited by recognized authorities on the subject of practical poultry raising. Has a circulation of 45,000 copies per month.

SPECIAL OFFER For $1.00 (cash, money order or check) we will send postpaid the Curtiss Poultry Book and the Farm Journal for two years, and American Poultry Advocate two years, all for $1.00 if order is sent at once to

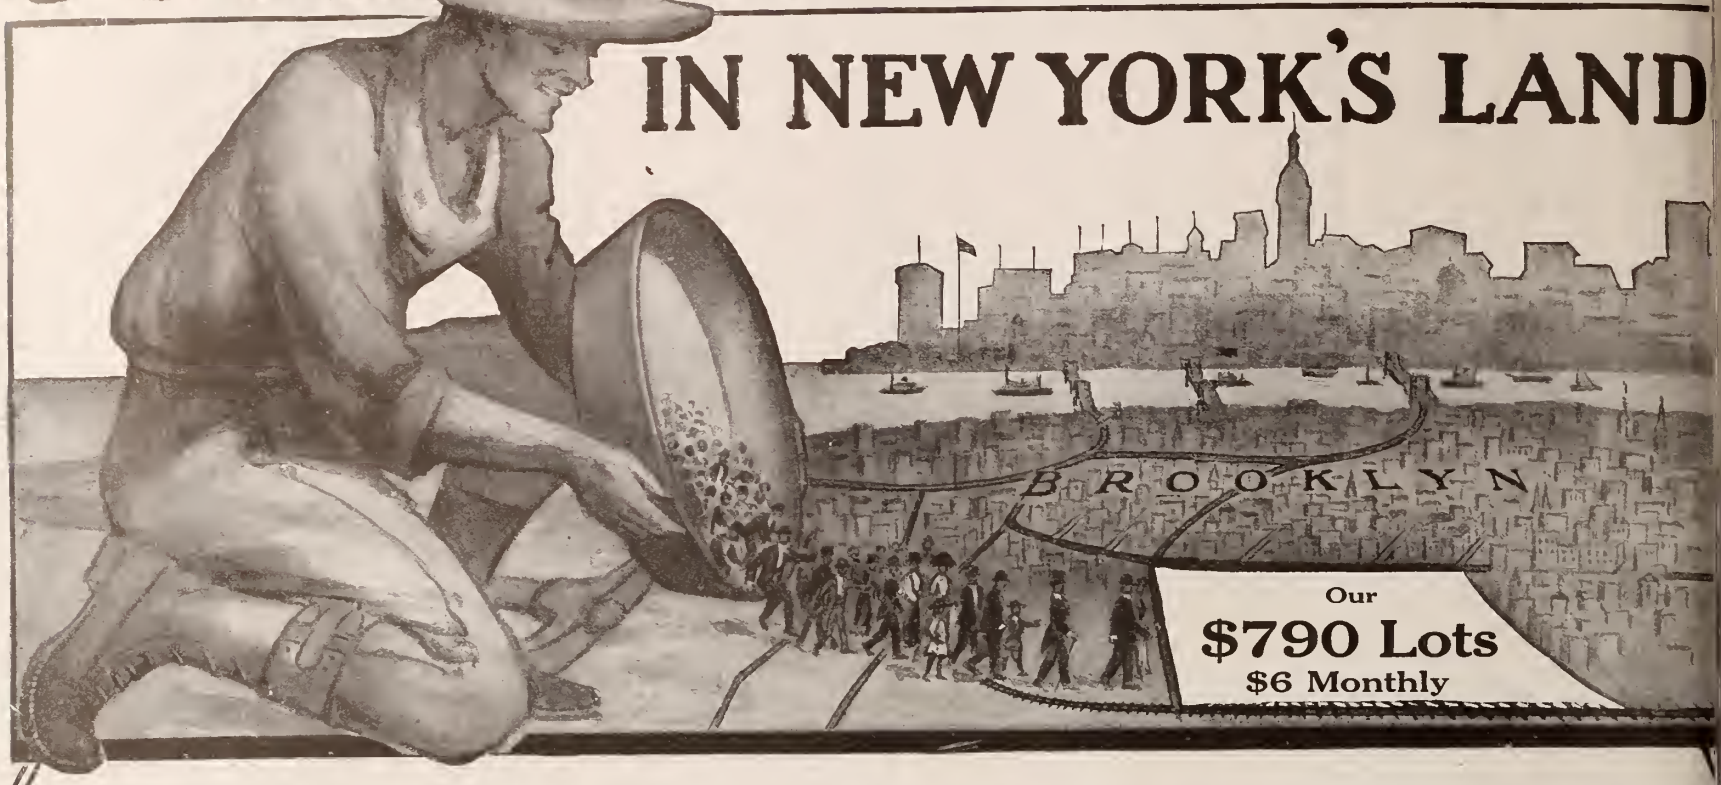
GOLD DISCOVERED

IN NEW YORK'S LAND



WE put this startling headline at the top of this page for two reasons—first, to get you to read it; second, to bring forcibly to your mind the fact that New York real estate is the most profitable investment in the world.

In the past ten years New York yielded more wealth to its owners than all the gold mines in the world combined. You may doubt this but you will find that the increase in the bare assessed valuation of New York City real estate exceeded by over one hundred million dollars the world's output of gold for the same period.

In the next ten years New York will have added to itself a St. Louis and a Boston. The increase must come on land now within the city limits. In the little area of New York City is gathered a population 50 per cent. greater than that of Texas, the largest State in the Union. New York real estate never goes back. It can't. It moves one way only—upward. The tremendous pressure of new population creates new and higher levels of value. To buy and to hold is to amass wealth.

Brooklyn grows faster than old New York. Out of 18,928 new buildings in 1909, 10,314 were in Brooklyn. 47 per cent. of Brooklyn's splendid total was in the 29th, 30th, 31st and 32nd wards—the sections where our properties lie.

Will you come with us now? Will you make money without effort or risk by simply waiting for the onward march of the city? We own hundreds of lots, and by selling some for $790 we can hold others until they sell for $2,000, or even $5,000 apiece.

We Offer New York City Lots at $790

$10 down—$6 a month

Remember, our offer carries a free deed or money back in case of death, high-class improvements free, free round trip (railroad fare) to New York, east of Chicago or like distance.

Give us a chance to tell our story. It won't last long. It will be interesting. Or, better still, get best choice by sending us $10, the first payment on one lot, with the distinct understanding that if you are not entirely satisfied with our selection, we will at once refund your money. But write anyway. A postage stamp, a pen full of ink, may bring you a fortune.

Money Back If Not Satisfied

Come to New York at any time within a year after you purchase; visit our properties; keep what you have if you think it is the best bargain in our $10,000,000 holdings; change it for any other lot if you will, or go to our cashier's desk and get back every dollar you have paid us. It is all the same to us. We would prefer to have you a good friend and not a customer, rather than a customer and not a good friend. But a decision is required at the time of the examination of the property, and the offer extends only to those who visit New York within said year. In other words, we do not give options. We do give you twelve months to examine your property and get your money back if you are not satisfied.

Our "money back" and "free transportation" offers are both limited to 12 months from date of purchase.

OUR DIPLOMATS IN HOLIDAY TIME

Baron and Baroness Uchida of Japan

By WALDON FAWCETT

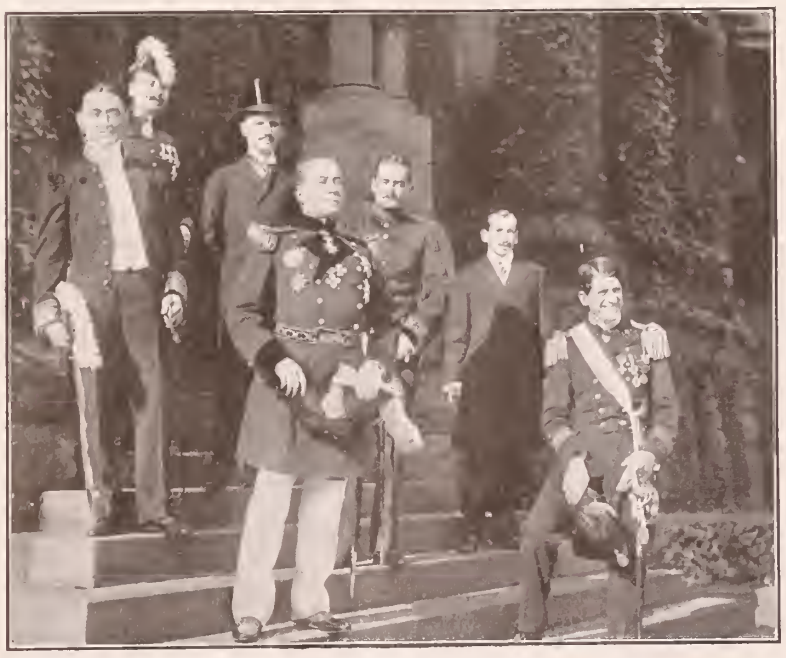
THE holidays always find most interesting observance in our official "foreign colony" in Washington. In these transplanted homes, set down at Columbia's court, the usual holiday festivities are novel and impressive, presenting an odd combination of up-to-date American ideas and the principal features that are followed on such joyous occasion in European countries, in South America and in other quarters of the globe. These diplomats are "birds of passage." Were they in the position of the foreigners who migrate to the United States to establish eir permanent homes and to become citizens of e republic, they would probably want to adopt our liday customs just as they would want to adopt e language and the manner of dress of the people their new home; but the diplomats are only temrary residents of the city on the Potomac. They ay be here only a year, or at the longest a dozen ars at a stretch; but they know that they will timately be transferred to similar posts in some her country, or be ordered home. So it is quite tural, aside from all considerations of patriotic ide, that they should accord the Thanksgiving and ristmas holidays such recognition as they usually ceive in their own native lands.

However, while these foreign officials are acting the accredited agents at Washington of the rious world powers, their children are attending merican public or private schools. This circumance holds the real secret of the invasion of the reign homes by our American holiday observances. ne little foreigners, many of whom speak not a ord of English when they land here, master our ngue with the facility that is proverbial in chil-en. They yield to the fascination of American mes and pastimes; and, hearing their playmates lk for weeks in advance of the joys of our annual merican gift carnival, these little strangers yearn share in its delights.

Each succeeding year finds an increasingly specular diplomatic Christmas, as Uncle Sam exnds his visiting list. More and more foreign officials come with their families to tarry for a time at the hub of our national life. The holiday season of 1910-1911 in the foreign "colony" is sure to be especially interesting, primarily because of the large number of children. In this congress of nations as elsewhere, it is children who make the season festive in its outward forms and it is the child converts to American ideals who give Christmas in our foreign households the dual character which makes it doubly picturesque.

There have been many changes in the diplomatic corps at Washington since last winter. One of the most notable was the retirement of Baron Mayor des Planches from the post of Italian ambassador. He had been for years the "dean of the corps," and, under rule of seniority of service, his retirement resulted in the promotion automatically to the coveted deanship of Baron Hengelmuller, the ambassador from Austria-Hungary. This insures a big holiday celebration in the first household of the diplomatic corps, for the real social ruler of the Austro-Hungarian embassy is little Miss Hengelmuller, a sunny-haired young lady, just on the threshold of her teens, who has spent practically her entire life in the United States and who has had a big American Christmas tree every year ever since she can remember. The monster tree, laden with presents, is disclosed to view on Christmas Eve instead of on the morning of Christmas Day. The little mistress invites numbers of her young friends for the occasion, and her mother has made it a custom for years past to ask many of the elders in the official circle to look on at the illumination.

The new Italian ambassador, Marchese Cusani Confalonieri, who has just been transferred from Switzerland to the United States and who, as the newest arrival, takes his place at the foot of the line of ambassadors, in so far as official precedence goes, has brought with him a numerous official staff and a family that includes several young people, who have planned a lively observance of their first Christmas on this side of the Atlantic.



Marchese Confalonieri, Italian Ambassador, and Staff

There are no children at the French embassy in Washington, but two American women occupy the most prominent feminine positions in the establishment maintained by our sister republic and they are firm in their allegiance to the American Christmas tree. Madame Jusseraud, the American wife of the ambassador, invites to her tree party all the children of her acquaintance. Sometimes she has not one Christmas tree, but three standing in a row. Countess de Chambrun, the wife of the military attaché of the French embassy, is a sister of Congressman Nicholas Longworth and consequently the sister-in-law of the former Alice Roosevelt. Her home is usually the scene of a notable family reunion at the holiday season.

The Japanese ambassador and Baroness Uchida took their places on our official roster only the day before Christmas a year ago, so that this will really be their first Yule-tide in their new environment. At the Mexican embassy, too, are newcomers

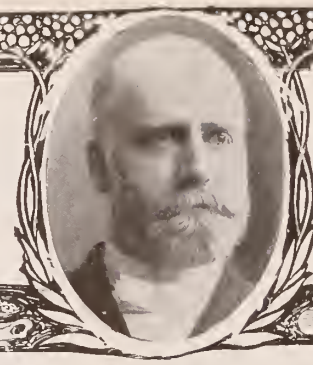
THE AMERICAN PULPIT

A Sermon by

Rev. R. A. Torrey, D.D.*



A PRAYER-ANSWERING GOD

TEXT: I. John 3:22—"And whatsoever we ask, we receive of him, because we keep his commandments."

MY subject is "Who can pray so as to get what they ask?" A great many people have an idea that any person can pray and that God will answer. They go through their Bibles and take all the wonderful promises about God's answering prayer and they take these promises as belonging to themselves, and when they don't get what they ask they say, "I don't believe these promises are true." But the trouble is not with the promises; the trouble is with the person that takes the promise. The promise was not made to you. God's promises to answer prayer are not made to everybody. They are just made to a certain class of people, and God has been very careful to define in his own Word precisely who the people are whose prayers he will answer, and he tells us how we can get into that class. I would rather be in that class than any other class on earth. Some people want to get into the best society. The society I want to get into is the society whose prayers God answers. The Bible tells us very plainly who the people are whose prayers God will answer, and who the people are whose prayers God will not answer. Who the people are whose prayers God will answer is given in I. John 3: 22—"Whatsoever we ask we receive of him because we keep his commandments, and do those things which are pleasing in his sight."

Finding Out God's Will

Have you ever noticed what a remarkable statement it is that the apostle John makes here? John says, "Whatsoever I ask I get. I never offer a prayer to God, but God gives me the thing I ask for." "Whatsoever we ask we receive of him." Can you say that? Can you say, "Every prayer I offer to God, God gives me the thing I ask of him"? Many of us doubtless could say, "God answers some of my prayers." Some of us could say, "God answers most of my prayers." Some of us must say, "God does not answer any of my prayers." But John says, "God answers every one of my prayers." He says, "Whatsoever we ask we receive of him," and then he tells us why he could say that, and how you and I can get to the place where we can say it too—"Whatsoever we ask we receive of him because." Because why? Because of two things: First, Because we keep his commandments. Second, Because we do those things which are pleasing in his sight. Let us take them up one by one.

First of all, "Because we keep his commandments." If you do what God tells you to do, God will do what you ask him to do. If you have a sharp ear for God's commandments, God will have a sharp ear for your petitions. But if you turn a deaf ear to one of God's commandments, God will turn a deaf ear to every one of your petitions. When you study the Word of God daily to find out what the will of God is and every time you find out what it is do it; when you go to God and ask him to show you his will, when he shows it do it every time; then God will give you what you ask of him. God demands reciprocity.

Perplexed About Prayer

He demands first of all that his children listen to him; then he will listen to them. If you will not listen to him, then he will not listen to you. If you are not studying every day to find out what his will is and doing it when you find out what it is, then you have no right to expect that God will answer your prayers. I believe we touch here upon the secret of most of the unanswered prayers in this world. People are either neglecting their Bibles and therefore do not know what the will of God is, or else they are not doing his will when they find it. A maid who worked for a lady in my church in Chicago came to me one day and said, "Miss ——" (that was her mistress) "thinks I ought to talk with you." I said, "Jennie, why does Miss —— think you ought to talk with me?" She said, "I am very much perplexed." I said, "What are you perplexed about, Jennie?" "Because God does not answer my prayers, and I cannot understand it." I said, "I don't believe there is any very great mystery about it. Are you one of the class whose prayers God promises to answer? Let me show you the class of people whose prayers God promises to hear and answer." And I turned to this verse: "Whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." "Does that describe you, Jennie? Are you keeping God's commandments? Are you studying your Bible every day to find out what the will of God is, and when you find it, do you do it every time?" She said, "No, I don't, Mr. Torrey." "Then," I said, "the verse doesn't describe you, does it?" "No," she said, "it doesn't."

Belief An Essential

In my first pastorate, there was a lady who was one of the brightest and most intelligent women in the congregation. One day somebody said to me, "Mrs. —— was formerly a member of this church." So one Sunday morning a short time afterwards we were walking up the street together. Just as I turned into my gate, I turned to her and said, "Mrs. T., why are you not a Christian? They tell me that formerly you were a very active member of the church." She said, "Because I don't believe the Bible." I said, "Why don't you believe the Bible?" "Because I tried its promises and found them untrue." I said, "I would like to have you tell me one single promise in the Word of God that you have tried and found untrue." She replied, "Does it not say somewhere in the Bible, 'What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them'?" I said, "It says something that sounds a good deal like that." "Well," she said, "my husband was very sick. I asked God to restore my husband to health. I believed he would, and he died. Did not the promise fail?" I said, "No, the promise did not fail." "But does it not say, 'What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them'?" "It says something that sounds like that." "Well," she said, "just what does it say?" I replied, "It says, 'What things soever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them.' Are you one of the 'ye's'? Are you one of the people to whom that promise was made?" She said, "Wasn't it made to all professing Christians?" I said, "Certainly not. God tells us exactly to whom he makes this promise." She said, "I would like to know to whom it was made then."

Keeping His Commandments

I opened my Bible to this passage, "Whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." "Were you keeping his commandments? Were you doing the things that were pleasing in his sight? Were you living to the glory of God in all things?" She said, "No, Mr. Torrey, I was not." "Then the promise was not made to you?" "No, it was not." "It did not fail then, did it?" And she saw her error and came back to God. Are you one of the people to whom that promise is made? Are you keeping his commandments? Are you studying your Bible every day, to find out what the will of God is, and whenever you find it, are you doing it every time?

In every great promise of God in the Bible to answer prayer, this connection is the same. Take that wonderful passage in John 14: 13, 14—that promise we are so fond of quoting, "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." But we stop there. But Jesus did not stop there. He went right on to the following verse: "If ye love me, keep my commandments. And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter," etc. In other words, Jesus says, If we have that love for him that leads us to keep his commandments, then the Father will give us the Holy Spirit and he will teach us how to pray according to the will of God; and God will give us what we ask.

Take that other wonderful verse, John 15: 7—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Most of us read it, "If ye abide in me, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." Now, the Bible doesn't say that. It says, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask wl ye will, and it shall be done unto you." If you do study God's Word, it cannot abide in you, for it not in you. And if you do not obey, it does abide in you. But if you will study the Word God every day of your life to learn the will of G and whenever you find the will of God, do it, th when you come to God with your prayers, he v listen.

Sins of Our Social Life

Second, "And do those things which are pleas in his sight." It is not enough that we keep commandments. Further than that, we must those things that are pleasing in his sight. Th are many things that it would please God for us do that he does not specifically command. The i some people have of God's government is this: C is a great lawgiver and lays down a great ma laws, "Thou shalt do this, and thou shalt do this, a thou shalt not do this, and thou shalt not do tha and that the whole of the Christian life consists doing the things which God explicitly tells us to and leaving undone the things which God explici tells us not to do. What an idea of the Christi life! God is not merely a lawgiver. God is Father—that is the conception of God that lies the very foundation of prayer; the very first wo in the prayer Jesus taught are, "Our Father." H does a father govern his children? Does he lay do a whole lot of laws and then rest content if his ch dren obey these laws? Not if he is a wise fath He may lay down a few laws, not a great many; l over and above all the laws he lays down, he expe his children to get acquainted with him and find what pleases him and then do it without waiting be told.

How do I govern my children? I may have l down a few laws; they are very few, and I wo not know what to make of it if one of my childr disobeyed one of those laws. But I am not satisfi with that. Beyond all that, I expect my childr to make it their study to find out what will plea their father, and when they find it, do it with waiting to be told. I should feel very bad if children waited every time to be told.

Our heavenly Father expects us to make it study to find out what pleases him, and then do without waiting to be told. That will settle all questions that perplex you—these questions th come up in the Christian life so frequently no adays. Shall a Christian go to the theatre? Sh a Christian play cards? Shall a Christian danc Shall a Christian do this thing and that thing a the other thing? Just ask yourself, "Would please my Father?" The way a great many atter to settle it is this, "Does it say anywhere in t Bible, 'Thou shalt not go to the theatre'? Does say anywhere, 'Thou shalt not dance'? Does it s 'Thou shalt not play cards'? Does it say anywh in the Bible, 'Thou shalt not do this thing or th thing or the other thing'?" That is not the qu tion. If you were a really loyal child of God, y would not ask that question. The question y would ask would be, "Will it please my Father

The Question of the Theatre

Now if I thought it would please my Father mo for me to go to the theatre than for me to stay aw I would go, no matter what anybody else said did. But if I thought it would please him better f me to stay away, it would not make a particle difference to me who went. When I am at home Chicago, or when I am living in Philadelphia, often get complimentary tickets to this and that a the other show, telling me how they are putti on a highly moral play; and how this minister a that minister and this doctor of divinity has a cepted a complimentary ticket, and what bish accepted a ticket. The question with me is, "Will please my Father?" But if I thought it wou please God better for me not to, I wouldn't do it all the preachers in the land did it. The wh question is, "Will it please my Father?"

Now every person has to settle these questions f himself. I can't settle them for you, any more th you can settle them for me. But settle it in th way: Ask yourself, "Will it please my Father

God says in his Word "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch no unclean thing." And the theatre to-day is an unclean thing.

How about the dance? I do not believe that every girl who dances has impure thoughts. Many a sweet, innocent, pure Christian girl dances. But I do believe that if pure-minded Christian girls knew what the thoughts were of the men with whom they are dancing, they would never go on the floor again. The hardest fight that the American young man who wishes to lead a true life has on hand to-day is not the fight against intemperance in intoxicating drinks; the hardest fight the young man has who wishes to lead a true life has on hand to-day is the fight for personal purity, and there is no other institution countenanced in decent society that makes the fight for personal purity so hard as the modern dance.

How about the cards? I don't think the case against the cards is as clear as it is against the theatre and the dance, but it is clear enough. Every one of us knows that the cards are the gambler's darling weapon. We all know that there is scarcely a gambler on earth to-day who did not take his first lessons in gambling at the quiet family card-table. I have never known a reformed gambler who did not hate the cards like deadly poison, for he knew what led to his ruin.

When we were holding meetings in Nashville, my wife went to the prison there. She learned that there was a man there under a life sentence for shooting a man over a game of cards, and he said that he took his first lesson in playing cards, keeping tally as a child at his mother's knee, while she was playing cards at home. "Oh," you say, "but it has never hurt me." What about your influence upon somebody else? I knew a father and mother who proceeded upon the theory that they would make home so pleasant that the boys would not care to go anywhere else. And they made home pleasant. The boys never cared to go anywhere else. They taught them to play cards. That worked all right as long as the boys remained at home. The time came when those boys left home. One of the three had never had any taste for cards, and therefore did not learn how to play. The other two who had a taste for cards and had learned how to play at home both became gamblers. Some women are gamblers. You don't call it gambling, but it is—this playing for prizes, which is nothing but disguised gambling.

Another thing about the cards. It is practically impossible to play cards moderately. A person who plays cards will do one of two things—take so little interest in playing that he will give it up or else he will play immoderately. All over America, there are mothers—and some of them professedly Christian mothers—who are neglecting their home duties, neglecting the Bible, and pretty much everything else, in order that they may go to at least one card party every day. I have known places in the last two years where women play cards in the morning, play cards in the afternoon, and play cards at night. God forbid that my son should ever marry a card-playing woman.

I was in a party of gentlemen a few weeks ago and we were discussing this topic and it was mentioned how the women played for money. One of the party said he didn't believe they played for money. Another one of the party, a banker, said, "Why, you don't know what you are talking about. Of course they play for money. A lady said to me the other day, 'I won't play unless they play for money; there is no excitement in it.'" Money or prizes, it is exactly the same thing. Some of the women club together and put their money together to buy the prize, and then play for it, beating the devil about

NOTHING VENTURED, NOTHING WON

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

YOU have learned that Advent means coming; the coming of Christ. But if your life is all coming and no going it will be a failure. When Christ came to this world he said, "Go ye into all the world and tell others the good things I have told you." This is the third Sunday in Advent. I would like to call it Adventure Sunday. What does adventure mean? It means an effort to do something without knowing just what the result will be. It means something in which you can wrap your faith. "Nothing ventured, nothing won." Have faith in God and then venture to do something for God and man.

In the book of Esther there is a beautiful story about adventure. Mordecai was a good man and was linked up with God. He had an advent. God came and talked with him and after this advent he found that it was necessary to have an adventure. Some one must take God's message to the king. The king had "No Admittance" on his door, and any one who went in without being asked was in danger of death. Mordecai told Esther to go, but she was afraid. When urged she just wrapped her faith in an adventure and said she would go. She asked all the people of God to fast and pray for three days and told them that she and her friends would do the same.

AFTER these three days she told Mordecai, "I will go unto the king, which is according to the law, and if I perish, I perish." This was a brave adventure. She made the effort without knowing just what the result would be. Esther was linked up with God and was successful with the king. All of her people who trusted in God were saved. There are little adventures for little people just as there are big adventures for big people. There are Juniors whose parents, brothers and sisters have not learned about the Advent of Christ. A little boy or girl may be the only Christian in the home. To kneel and pray before those who do not love God is an adventure.

MARY P. LORD, a teacher among the Sioux Indians, tells us this beautiful story: An Indian baby was dying. It lay in its father's arms, while near by stood another little daughter, a few years older. "Papa," said the little daughter, "little sister is going to heaven to-night. Let me pray." As she said this, she kneeled at her father's knee, and this was the sweet little prayer which fell from her lips: "Father God, little sister is coming to see you to-night. Please open the door softly and let her in. Amen." That was a real adventure. Do you ever visit little friends who are not Christians? Try kneeling and saying your prayers before them. You will probably find it an adventure.

AFTER this season of Advent comes Christmas; it is almost in sight. You boys and girls must remember that at the first Christmas all the gifts were brought to the child Christ. Does this not teach us that Christmas is a time to give rather than a time to receive? The time for adventure rather than the time of advent? You ask, How can we take gifts to Christ? We can take all our gifts to Christ by venturing to help some one that is in need. Christ says whatever we do for other boys and girls and any one who needs help we are really doing for him. I catch you smiling; you think giving to others is no adventure. So many are just waiting and anxious to receive gifts. But those who need them most and those to whom we should take gifts are those to whom it is most difficult to give them. Here is a story in which you can learn just what we mean:

THE window of a little shop in an old arcade in Berne was filled one day with crosses and hearts intended for the decoration of graves, and among them were several slabs of marble with the inscriptions, "In Memory of my Sister," "To the Best of Husbands," etc.

As we were in the shop, three or four idle tourists had halted to laugh at the uncultivated taste shown in these cheap votive offerings. Apart, and quite unconscious of them, stood a poor Swiss maid-servant. Her eyes were full of eager longing. The slab she coveted was the cheapest of the lot, a black slab, white-lettered; but the inscription was, "To my dear Mother."

"She stops every morning to look at that," whispered the shopkeeper. "But she won't have enough money to buy it in years."

"Tell her she can have it," said one of the tourists, a well-dressed man, in a loud voice. "I'll pay for it."

"Monsieur is very generous," answered the shopkeeper. "But I doubt—she is no beggar."

WHILE they were speaking, a young American girl, with sympathy expressed in her face, had been watching the scene. She had real sympathy for the girl, for she too had lost her mother.

She drew the young girl aside and said: "I am a stranger. I am going away to-morrow, never to come back again. I should like to think somebody here would remember me kindly. Will you not let me give you that little slab to lay on your mother's grave?" The woman's face was filled with amazement, and then with delight. The tears rained down her cheeks. She held the girl's hand in her own.

"You, too, have lost your mother? Yes? Then you can understand! I thank you, gracious lady."

"Go ye" with help to some one who is sensitive but in real need. "Nothing ventured, nothing won."

A Prayer-Answering God

the bush. I tell you that cards are inseparably wedded to gambling. Now comes the question, Is a holy God pleased? I tell you, if a Christian has a pack of cards, God is pleased when he sees that child of his throw that pack of cards into the fire.

The use of tobacco is an expensive habit. Many a Christian man spends more on tobacco every year of his life than he would ever dream of giving to foreign missions. One ten-cent cigar a day is $36.50 a year and some of you smoke more than that; and you would faint if some one came and asked you to give $36.50 a year for foreign missions or for the church. We know it is a very selfish habit. No man can smoke without infringing upon the rights of somebody else. There is not a smoker on earth that is not infringing on the rights of others. You cannot smoke without infringing upon the rights of somebody else. Is God pleased?

You say, "Oh, why talk about these things? Are they sins in the sense in which stealing is a sin, and murder is a sin, and adultery is a sin?" I would not say that. "Then what is the harm in them?" They don't please God and they rob prayer of power; and if there is anything that is going to rob me of one ounce of power in prayer, by the grace of God, I am going to give it up. Mind you, I am not trying to legislate for the world. I am simply trying to tell Christians how they can get the best that there is for them in Christ.

An Oriental Fable

THE Eyes and the Nose had a falling out. The question at issue was about the Spectacles.

"They are mine, of course," said the Nose. "See how the bent silver fits snugly on my bridge. How could the Spectacles find their place without my help?"

"True," rejoined the Eyes. "Yet it seems that they are more mine than yours, since I look through them and use them constantly; whereas they do you no service, except possibly to grace you as an ornament."

The Nose sniffed indignantly. "As if I needed any ornament!" it exclaimed. "But I am willing to leave it to the Lips to say to which of us two the Spectacles really belong."

They submitted the question to the Lips, but the latter declined to act as umpire, pleading their near relation to the Nose, which might possibly bias their judgment. "There is no reason, however," the Lips added, "why you should not ask the Ears to decide. They, at all events, will hold an even balance and will deal justly. Besides, they have already overheard your little discussion."

So they appealed to the wise old Ears, which listened patiently.

"Brothers," said the Ears, "since the Spectacles cannot speak for themselves, we will do so on their behalf. Their service is of mutual benefit to all of us. But as the Nose itself has raised the question, the Eyes can easily decide it without a word of argument, to the entire satisfaction of us all."

"How? how?" inquired the others in chorus.

"The next time the Nose raises the question," answered the Ears, wagging sagely, "let the Eyes simply remain shut. Then the Nose, having the field to itself, can use the Spectacles as it sees fit, and itself shall be the judge whether such use is worthy or not."

"No! no!" exclaimed all the features at once. "We will not be led by the Nose!"

"Nor by any one of us alone, but by the united effort of us all, should you be led," said the Ears.

And thus the great question was wisely decided and has ever since so remained.

THE "MOON OF RAMADAN"

By Professor Charles Haddon Nabers, Cairo, Egypt

FROM the summit of the Mokattam hills I gazed down upon the city of Cairo. The night was far spent, but the town was not asleep. The Egyptians, who usually leave the streets, close their shops, and darken their homes shortly after sunset, were still crowding the highways and byways of the great capital, and the noise of thousands of voices blended into one excited murmur reached me on the hill. Five hundred minarets, lighted with circles of bright lamps, rose above the flat roofs and pointed towards the sky. These mosques were lighted for the same reason that the natives were on the streets; it was Ramadan, the ninth month of the Moslem year, the time when all the faithful followers of Mohammed are required to fast.

Ramadan is the month exalted by Moslems above all others. In that month the Koran—according to Moslem tradition—was brought down by Gabriel from heaven and delivered to man in small sections. In that month, Mohammed was accustomed to retire from Mecca to the cave of Hira, for prayer and meditation. In that month Abraham, Moses and other prophets received their divine revelations. In that month the "doors of heaven are always open, the passages to hell are shut, and the devils are chained." So run the traditions.

Since the Mohammedan year is composed of lunar months, the beginning of the fast is dependent upon the appearance of the new moon. The word of the almanac is not taken as true evidence, and before the Mufti, the highest Moslem official in the nation, declares the fast to have begun, two Mohammedans must appear before him and swear that they have seen the new moon. In precisely the same manner the fast comes to a close. The Mufti proclaims a three days' feast whenever the next new moon is seen by two of the faithful. This year, the moon was visible in Upper Egypt the night before it was observed in Cairo. Two Mohammedans up the Nile telegraphed the fact to the Mufti, asking him to announce the feast. This he refused to do on the ground that a telegram could not take the place of two Moslem witnesses. Ramadan lasted one day longer than it would have lasted, had the calendar been strictly followed.

The fast dates from the second year of the Hejira, and is commanded in very positive terms in the Koran: "O true believers, a fast is ordained you, as it was ordained unto those before you, that ye may fear God. . . . The month of Ramadan shall ye fast, in which the Koran was sent down from heaven, a direction unto men, and declarations of directions, and the distinction between good and evil. Therefore let him among you who shall be at home in this month, fast the same month; but he who shall be sick, or on a journey, shall fast the like number of other days."

Like the ordinance requiring five prayers each day at stated intervals, this law of fasting is carefully observed by all classes. No believers are excused except those who are sick, and those who are absent from home. During the days of the month, no one is allowed to eat a bite of food. The most zealous consider the fast to be broken if they even smell perfumes. Some even go so far as to refuse to open their mouths wide, lest they should breathe the air too freely. This month of fasting works a great hardship upon the laboring classes. Some of our servants work all day in the heat, without tasting a drop of water, and in the evening they are completely exhausted from the self-imposed thirst. Yet in no way could we persuade them to drink before sunset.

When Mohammed commanded his followers to fast during the thirty days of the month, he practically commanded them to feast during the thirty nights also. After the verses regarding the fast, the Koran continues: "God would make this an ease unto you, and would not make it a difficulty unto you; that ye may fulfil the number of days, and glorify God, for that he hath directed you, and that ye may give thanks. . . . Now, therefore, go in . . . and eat and drink, until ye can plainly distinguish a white thread from a black thread by daylight: then keep the fast until night, but be continually present in the places of worship."

Sharia Kamel, a Leading Street, During Ramadan

If the Egyptian Moslems are zealous in regard to abstinence during the day, they are much more zealous in regard to the indulgences of the night. The night is turned into day. The Moslems crowd the streets nightly and fill the cafés in merry parties, which eat and drink until nearly morning. Although the Koran commands them to glorify God by fasting during Ramadan, some one has declared that they spend more money for food during its thirty days than they do during any other six months of the year. Of course, this statement is exaggerated, but the food bill of Ramadan certainly exceeds that of any other month. The nights are characterized by the grossest forms of debauchery, and those portions of Cairo which are notorious for their immoralities are the scenes of the wildest orgies. Conditions are so frightful that it is impossible to find strong enough terms in the English language to describe them. A fairly accurate impression of the situation may be obtained by reversing the Moslem quotation frequently used to describe the month:

"In Ramadan the doors to heaven are closed, the way to hell is open wide, and all the devils are loose."

"The Moslems crowd the streets day and night during Ramadan" who will appreciate the American festival. These recent arrivals are the sons of the Mexican ambassador, Francis de la Barra, aged twelve, and Julius de la Barra, aged eleven years. They are bright, intelligent boys, but their lives have been saddened by the death of their mother in Paris, a little more than a year ago. They are now pupils in an American school and are already half won over to the idea of the American Christmas tree instead of the Mexican custom of placing all the presents in a huge earthen jar which is suspended from the ceiling and is beaten by the young people armed with canes until it breaks, precipitating the gifts to the floor.

Christmas is made much of in Germany—indeed, the German Christmas is more like our own than the observance in any Continental country. This, combined with the circumstance that Countess von Bernstorff, wife of the German ambassador, is an American woman, and that their daughter, the Countess Luise-Alexandra, is more like an American girl than a Teuton, insures the proper atmosphere for the festival at the German embassy, where a gaily dressed tree is always the crowning feature of the celebration. Another comparative newcomer among the foreign envoys, who has an American wife and a brood of children, is Count Conrad de Buisseret, the Belgian minister. Countess Moltke, a former Boston belle, now in the role of mistress of the legation of Denmark, infuses holiday cheer in the American branch of the little nation that gets credit for having originated the "Christmas stamp."

This will be the first American Christmas, too, for Dr. Francisco Carrera Justiz, the new Cuban minister, his wife and children. The young people of this diplomatic household, like all the others in the Latin-American embassies and legations, are expected to begin their celebration by attending church at midnight on Christmas Eve. Then they return home to formally unveil the miniature representation of Bethlehem, as it appeared on the night of our Saviour's birth—a portrayal which is set up in every Latin-American home, just as a Christmas tree is installed in the average American home.

Baroness Elizabeth Rosen, daughter of the Russian ambassador, and several other young people in the Czar's contingent at our capital, have an opportunity to enjoy two Christmases, since they can participate in the festivities on December 25 and also observe the Russian Christmas on January 6. There is a whole houseful of young people at the Chinese legation and the children of the first secretary, Mr. Yung Kwai, who have an American mother, have introduced all the others to the anticipations and expectations that fill the weeks before the momentous holiday. At the Chinese legation, too, is a brand new baby, recently born to the minister's son (and secretary), Mr. Henry Chang and his bride, who were married on Christmas Day a year ago. Another new baby that will this year experience its first Christmas is Kurt Ludwig Edward Ritter, who has lately come to take up his abode at the home of the Swiss Minister and Madame Ritter. The Swiss people make much of the holiday season and it has usually been the custom of the Swiss envoy to have a Christmas tree and to load it with presents for the Swiss children in Washington.

THE BOWERY MISSION'S

Thirty-First Anniversary

A Great Celebration With Many Tributes and a Letter From President Taft

THE Bowery Mission observed its thirty-first anniversary with a two days' celebration on Sunday and Monday, November 13 and 14. There were crowded meetings both afternoon and evenings and many wholesome, practical and inspiring addresses were delivered by well-known men—clerical and lay.

The President of the United States, who had personal experience of the good work the Mission is accomplishing when he addressed the men last December, sent a letter of greeting to Dr. Hallimond, the superintendent, which is reproduced on another page of this issue. Letters were also received from the Governor of the State of New York, the Mayor of New York City, the Hon. Seth Low, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., John Purroy Mitchel, Congressman Sulzer and many others, all testifying to their personal interest in the noble movement for rescuing and uplifting fallen men and helping the helpless and all expressing regret at their inability to be present. Many prominent ministers of New York City as well as others from a distance also sent personal letters endorsing the Mission and praying for its welfare.

The first celebration service commenced with Mother Bird's meeting at 11 o'clock Sunday morning. The hall was crowded with an eager, earnest throng of men, ranging from the boy on the sunny side of twenty to the gray-haired septuagenarian. Most of these men had been brought to the footstool of the throne of mercy and receiving grace and blessing through the indefatigable efforts of the sweet-faced, gentle lady who presided on the platform and who is lovingly called the "Mother of the Bowery Boys." They came there to testify to the reformation that had been wrought in their lives.

Seated with Mrs. Bird on the platform was Mrs. Klopsch, who takes a deep interest in the work for which her lamented husband did so much. Others on the platform included Messrs. Otto Koenig and Theodore Waters, the President and Secretary of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. C. Mead, Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Mission, who takes a living, vital interest in all for which the Mission stands. He chose for his text Luke 8: 45, "And Jesus said, who is it that touched me?" In clear, logical and convincing words, the preacher pointed out the importance of getting into contact with God, and the mighty power of Jesus to save, both spiritually and physically, showing how the grace of God makes for temporal as well as eternal good.

At 7 o'clock there was a Brotherhood meeting at which the Rev. Stephen Merritt, dean of the Mission and father-in-law of the late Dr. Klopsch, presided. The regular Sunday night service of the mission was held at 8 o'clock, but on this occasion there were many old friends on the platform—men distinguished in both Church and State—while the body of the hall as well as the gallery was taxed to the utmost and many were unable to gain admittance. The first speaker was the Rev. Dr. J. F. Morgan, of Jersey City, who gave an encouraging, an optimistic address. Many of the men in the audience were aroused by his words and took heart of grace to face the combat again. He was followed by the Rev. Stephen Merritt and the Rev. E. K. Cressey, D.D., the latter being the minister who offered the first prayer when the Bowery Mission was taken over by the late Dr. Louis Klopsch many years ago.

After the addresses came the testimonies. Men stood up who had gone down the path of sin until they had reached a point almost beyond hope of salvation, but who had been led back by the instrumentality of the Bowery Mission to the sunlight of God's grace and love. They told how they had wandered into its doors when all hope had seemed gone. They told how they came, hungry, shivering in the winter's blast, coatless, hatless, shoeless, with not a friend on earth, seemingly abandoned by man and forgotten even by God; how they had been received by the kind-hearted workers of the Mission; how the hand of welcome was extended to them, and how they were greeted as men and brothers, not as outcasts and lepers, too vile for notice and too loathsome for touch. They told how their physical wants were first attended and then of the kindly words that were addressed to them—words which fell as balm on their wounded souls, recalling memories of happier days ere they had wandered, like the prodigal. They told, too, how honest employment had been obtained for them, to give them a chance to redeem the past and make good for the future.

The afternoon meeting on Monday was devoted to a discussion of the labor problem, particularly the conditions affecting New York City as applied to the great army of the unemployed. Superintendent Hallimond stated that when labor was to be had in many places throughout the country, the railroads give no assistance at all. The Trunk Line Associations absolutely refuse to grant to these unemployed men, all American citizens, the same reduced rates they allow to foreigners who come in as immigrants. This handicaps the Mission to a great degree, as there are not sufficient funds to pay for transportation when employment can be had at a distance. It was shown that Americans are discriminated against in other respects. In the construction of such works as the Catskill Aqueduct and the Barge Canal, American citizens are not wanted. When they are taken, the conditions are such and the treatment they receive so bad that they are compelled to abandon the job. One young man testified he had been employed as a drill-worker on the aqueduct. He had to room in a shack into which 168 men were packed, but which had capacity for only thirty-five. There were but thirteen cots for all and half as many foul mattresses. The food consisted of coarse bread and bologna sausage, with weak coffee or tea three times a day. For this the stipulated rate was five dollars a week. This young man held out two weeks, when the treatment compelled him to succumb. He had made application that morning at an employment agency which had advertised for one hundred men for work on a tunnel at Yonkers and had been rejected when he acknowledged himself American born.

Congressman Henry George, Jr., in a practical talk to the men, touched upon this matter of employment in other States. He said that the trans-Mississippi farmers only want men for a few weeks and then turn them out on the roadside, and if they ask for bread, the dogs are set upon them. He stated that in Iowa, there are fewer farms than farmers, and fewer owners of land, and that values have been boosted 120 per cent. within the past few years. There is no opportunity, declared Mr. George, at the present day for an American citizen without a dollar or the means of getting one. "What kind of a republic is this," he asked, "when there is need among American citizens to go to such a place as the Bowery Mission to get a cup of coffee and a roll of bread to appease hunger and sustain life?" Mr. George offered a solution for the problem of the "submerged tenth." He enunciated the doctrine of a heavy tax upon land and such natural wealth as coal mines and forests. The industrial slavery of the present," said Mr. George, "is much worse than that of the black man before the war, for the slave-owners then took good care of their human chattels in the way of providing them with sufficient clothing and good food, and guarded them against illness, because they looked upon them as valuable assets."

Rev. Dr. Farrar Speaking at the Bowery Mission Anniversary

The Rev. Dr. Farrar, of Brooklyn, spoke in a somewhat similar strain, saying that the divine command was that all men should earn their bread in the sweat of their faces. He would make the trusts and monopolies sweat first, that they might enjoy their bread later.

Professor Charles Forbes, M.D., of Columbia University, who, for the past year, has managed a medical department in connection with the Mission, spoke of his work in reclaiming the victims of drink and drugs. He put forth a strong plea for the support of some place as a sanatorium.

Rabbi Michelson, of Trenton, N. J., also addressed the meeting in a vigorous talk, and testified to the good the Mission was doing for the uplifting of the lower stratum of humanity.

The closing exercises were held at eight o'clock, when Dr. S. Parkes Cadman of Brooklyn, Bishop Darlington of Harrisburg, the Rev. Dr. F. B. Stockdale of Asbury Park, and the Rev. Stephen Merritt addressed the assemblage in soul-stirring words, giving them encouragement to rise above their misfortunes and exhorting them to their higher life of grace and godliness. Dr. Cadman took occasion to pay a splendid tribute to the work of Dr. Louis Klopsch, "the friend of humanity, the man who spent his life and talents in working good to his fellow-men, whose voice and pen and purse were ever at their disposal, who recognized in all, no matter how low they had fallen, brothers in the one fold of the Saviour, and who left the world brighter, better, higher, holier, for his having lived and toiled and struggled in it." Tears came to the eyes of many of the poor down-and-out unfortunates at the mention of the name of Dr. Klopsch, men who had been the recipients of his bounty and who hold his memory hallowed in reverence and love.

Before the close of the meeting Mr. J. T. Hunt, in charge of the Labor Bureau of the Mission, read several letters from employers of labor to whom the Mission had recommended men. All these employers testified that these men had "made good" and thanked the Mission for having sent them.

The celebration was announced from many pulpits

Our Holiday Offerings

OUR Colored Premium Supplement goes with this issue to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. We have spent on it weeks and months of painstaking preparation, and we confess that it has been largely a labor of love, done with the sole purpose of bringing entertainment, instruction and enjoyment into every home where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now goes, or will go during the coming year.

Our large circulation enables us to do things on a bigger scale than other weeklies. With a Family Circle of over 330,000 and still growing, we have this year planned on a more generous basis as to premium production than ever before. This enables us to give our readers the full benefit of phenomenally low prices. You will be convinced of this by a glance at the Colored Supplement, which presents the most varied and attractive display of Premiums and Magazine Combinations we have ever laid before you. It's a standing proverb among CHRISTIAN HERALD readers that its premiums are "always better than advertised," and we are sure you will find them to be so this year.

Rarely has it been our good fortune to present so attractive a book as the Life-Work of Louis Klopsch, which is now being delivered to us fresh from the binders' hands—a really beautiful book, as to exterior appearance and workmanship, and one which, when you open it, will please you immensely. We believe it will be welcomed by every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, many thousands among whom had a share in Dr. Klopsch's world-wide benevolences. The book is an admirable record of a wonderful life.

We doubt whether Mrs. Kingsley, who has scored many notable literary triumphs, ever wrote a finer story than Stephen, which is one of our premiums this year. It is a book at once dramatic and inspiring, and no reader will lay it down without feeling pleased and benefited.

Many of you will wish to possess the fine "CHRISTIAN HERALD HOME LIBRARY" of eight books, which you will find pictured in the Colored Supplement. Each of these is of special practical value for some member of the Home Circle. We have carefully avoided all exaggeration in describing these volumes, and we feel justified in saying that, in connection with your subscription to the paper, they are put at a price which is ridiculously low. For home reading, or as single-volume holiday presents to be given to friends, you could make no purchase that would give greater satisfaction.

We have arranged for your benefit a Speeial Magazine Clubbing Rate, which you will find a wonderful money-saver. Among them you'll find the very flower of the popular Magazines—McClure's, Hampton's, Pearson's, the Delineator, the Cosmopolitan, the Woman's Home Companion, the American Magazine, Good Housekeeping and half a dozen others on the same list, any one of which can be secured with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for an extra half-dollar apiece added to your subscription. Thus you will see that our Club Rate gives you, as our subscriber, an opportunity to have in your home during the coming year an abundant supply of the very choicest magazine literature at a figure so small that no other paper can touch it. Then there's the Review of Reviews, a fine three-dollar magazine, that may be had with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and any one of the afore-mentioned magazines—all for three dollars. Take another example: the Outlook, with its 52 weekly issues, the regular subscription for which is $3.00, we supply with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by our special exclusive arrangement at $3.00 for both together—one price for the two. These are some of the substantial advantages you enjoy by belonging to our Family Circle. All of last year's splendid bargains in magazines may be had from us at exactly the same prices, and several have been added.

Let us add here that to every subscriber, old or new, we shall take pleasure in sending free our fine "BABY CALENDAR" and the large beautifully executed photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, or if you do not care for the Baby Calendar you may have free a copy of our beautiful cover design, "An Autumn Reverie," or the photogravure of that world-famous painting "Mona Lisa." You will receive your choice of these, whether you take a premium with your subscription or not.

Don't forget to send in your order early. Many are coming in now; but soon the rush will be overwhelming and you will help us greatly by forwarding your renewal, or your new subscription, this week—if possible TO-DAY. Every hour counts with us at this busy season.

Finding Jesus

AMONG the very best writings from the gifted pen of that eminent Christian, Rev. Wayland Hoyt, was a little story concerning a young Japanese student who had heard of the "Beautiful Life." He asked the minister to direct him how he might find it. Mr. Hoyt urged him to read the Bible; but the searcher wanted something else. He had read a little of the Bible and also in other good books, he said, but he would not be satisfied until he had seen a living example. He had known one old man, a carpenter, who lived not for himself, but who was continually planning and working to serve others, and that man wore a smiling face and was happy. But it was only the merest glimpse of the Beautiful Life that the student got from this experience. He had searched elsewhere and had got further glimpses. He would now see the Beautiful Life in all its fulness; no less would satisfy his earnest longing. Then, for the first time, he was led to read the New Testament, which he had never touched in his previous readings. Many weeks after, he saw Mr. Hoyt again. His face was shining; his voice vibrant with delight. "I have found it!" he cried, "the Beautiful Life! I have found Jesus!" So may our lives, patterned after that of our dear Lord and Master, attract others and lead them to look from our poor and imperfect selves to Him who alone can satisfy the soul's longing. If we "have been with Jesus," our whole life will be an open testimony to the fact, which all who come within the sphere of our influence may read and understand.

Mistaken Leniency

ATTORNEY-GENERAL WICKERSHAM has held up to public view as an illustration of corporation contumacy the case of the Imperial Window Glass Company of Pittsburg, whose officers and directors were fined recently by the United States Court in that city and ordered to suspend operations. It was convicted of violating the Anti-Trust Law. The evidence showed that it manufactured no glass, but was a selling agency and controlled the entire glass output of ten States. In three months it earned net profits equal to its entire stock by putting up prices, and shutting down factories to limit production. Mr. Wickersham says the corporation was "one of the most flagrant he had ever known." Yet the court was lenient, and sent none of the directors to jail. Now, it is said the defunct concern proposes to recoup its loss in fines by forcing a reduction of 30 per cent. in the wage scale of the glass factories in Fayette County, Pa., and if this be not accepted, over 700 men will be thrown out of employment. If the facts be as the Attorney-General indignantly states, then it is a very flagrant case indeed. There should be some law to deal with such offenders as they deserve.

The Gospel of Helpfulness

IN a religious as well as in a sociological sense, the thirty-first anniversary of the Bowery Mission, which has just been celebrated in New York, is an event of national interest. During those years, the unmistakable seal of Divine approval has attended its work. It has been instrumental in bringing thousands who had fallen deeply into sin, back to right living and good citizenship.

Next to the Gospel itself, the chief work of the Bowery Mission has been in dealing with the unemployed and homeless. In its Labor Bureau, which has found work for thousands of men; its "Bread Line," which, every year since it was established, has fed over 120,000 destitute and hungry ones, and in its Thanksgiving and Christmas meals for the suffering poor and the sick or disabled, it has done a phenomenal work, and has brought a measure of happiness to multitudes. It was not surprising that President Taft, who knows the work of the Mission from personal observation, should have written as warmly and sympathetically as he did in the letter which appears in another column. These same characteristics commend the Bowery Mission to all classes, high and low, rich and poor, without distinction. Our own readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have aided it generously for many years, and to their loyal support is largely due the splendid development of the Mission, and its effective work under Dr. Klopsch's management. It has combined practical helpfulness with the teaching of the old Gospel—feeding the hungry first and preaching to them afterward. It was this feature of the work, this sense of direct practical responsibility for the welfare and uplift of our fallen brothers, that led Dr. Klopsch less than a year ago to write these memorable words: "I verily believe that this work of the Bowery Mission has a broader ground of human appeal than any I have ever known."

Every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD can have a share in the Bowery Mission's benevolences this winter. Your gift, sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, may bring you the greatest blessing of the year.

Russia's "Grand Old Man"

IT was with genuine regret that America heard that the life of Count Tolstoy was slowly ebbing away in the little hut of the station-master with whom he had taken refuge a few days after he had begun his remarkable pilgrimage. Of course it was a foregone conclusion that the time was past when more could be expected from the pen which has produced some of the most remarkable novels which have delighted readers of any land for a century. To his writings we owe the interest in Russia, her social and political affairs; in other words, he introduced his country to hundreds of thousands who became her friends and wished her well because they admired the character and genius of Tolstoy.

Count Tolstoy is greatly beloved by his tenantry. He showed a sincere interest in the common man of Russia and wished to devote his life to making his lot better, to make Russian peasant life more "livable." To keep in touch with this class he adopted their dress and their ways, and for years his simple blouse has been no better nor no worse than that of the peasant who had but a few kopeks between himself and poverty. His ideas probably would not have worked out well, for he did not believe in human governments and wished all men to do very much as they pleased. As a writer he is of the first rank, and his books will long be classed with the great masterpieces of literature, and he will continue to interest people in the progress of his country long after he has been laid to rest.

The Famous "Polly"

AN interesting patriotic ceremony took place recently when the Society of the Daughters of 1812 unveiled a tablet on the old schooner Polly, which had come down to New York from New Bedford, Mass., for the purpose of being thus honored. The Polly was built in Massachusetts in 1806, and has a remarkable career lasting over a century. She has her original oak planking and frame timbers, and they seem sound and strong. She is about sixty-four feet in length and has the bluff bows yet seen in ships of Holland build, but which have not been put on an American vessel for two generations. When the War of 1812 broke out, the Polly was commissioned in the naval service. She had a crew of about twenty men armed with pistols and cutlasses. Two cannon of the type known as "long Toms" were placed fore and aft, and thus equipped she sailed out of the harbor of Marblehead. Within two days she had taken a full-rigged ship after a hard fight. Then she went on longer cruises, and before the war closed she had captured nineteen more ships. Once she was captured, but later she came once more into the possession of a crew from Massachusetts. After the war closed the ship became again a merchantman, and her log-books give the details of cruises which have taken her around Cape Horn and to distant seas. Her present owner bought her for sentimental reasons, but she will still continue in service in the coastwise trade. On her way down from New Bedford she fell in with one of the largest of the new type of schooner and they raced to New York. The Polly drew away at the start and came into New York quite a distance ahead. The crew still use the original capstan of iron and oak, and it was of great interest to the visitors who thronged the schooner's decks while she lay at the dock on the North River. Among those present at the dedication were the descendants of some of the officers and crew of the days of 1812, one of them bringing on board the original log-book. It is an excellent idea that we thus honor the memory of the men who took the posts of danger when their homeland was threatened with invasion and the outlook for the continuance of the new nation seemed dark and gloomy. They were few in numbers, but they felt that their cause was just, and they went on with a strong faith that in the end they must triumph. There is a great lesson in this for us who live in the present times of peace, when various social and economic evils threaten to undermine our national life. Even though we may be few in numbers, we should go manfully forward, each determined to right what is wrong and work for every cause which will make our nation what its founders hoped that it would be.

Deal courageously, and the Lord shall be with the good. (II. Chron. 19:11.)

Ashes Scattered to Winds

Miss Leo Iglesias, who died at South Manchester, Conn., the other day, left as a dying wish that her ashes be scattered to the four winds. C. J. Roadstrand, an undertaker, went to the Springfield cemetery and took from the vault a cut glass urn, containing the ashes of Miss Iglesias. He drove to a bridge, which spans the Connecticut River, and standing in the centre of the structure, removed the lid and scattered from the urn the ashes, which were caught up by the four winds and borne everywhere. Her father was a captain in the Spanish navy, and about sixty years ago met and married the woman who became the mother of Miss Iglesias. The father was very anxious that their child should be born under the Spanish flag, but it so chanced that she was born on the high sea, and it was always claimed that she belonged to no country. She practised the art of mental healing, and was considered by all who met her as a woman of mystery. It was because she claimed no country as her own that she gave the strange command that her dust be scattered to the winds. The story of this woman's life and the disposition of her remains are sad indeed. Without any relatives, with no country to call her own, she abandoned to the fickle winds the precious casket that had held the jewel of her soul. The disposition of the body after death has nothing to do with the condition of the soul, and yet the Hebrew and Christian idea of burial is a beautiful sentiment as well as a solemn and befitting custom. The command of Miss Iglesias at the last appears in striking contrast to that which was given by the patriarch before he passed away. Joseph said to Pharaoh:

My father made me swear, saying, Lo, I die: in my grave which I have digged for me in the land of Canaan, there shalt thou bury me. Now therefore let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, and I will come again. (Gen. 50:5.)

China's New Parliament

The late Empress Dowager sensed the signs of the times in preparing the way for popular representation in the Chinese government and made provision for the establishment of an Imperial Parliament in 1915. The first Chinese Senate met October 3 and in company with the millions of the citizens of the Empire petitioned the throne to grant a parliament immediately. On October 31 Prince U Lang, a member of the Grand Council, made a speech which was heard by the leading Grand Councilors, stating that the entire nation from the highest to the lowest was agreed upon the necessity of the early establishment of a general parliament. The Senators, who took this to mean that their memorial would be granted, spontaneously burst out into cheers long and loud. It is understood that the decision of the Grand Councilors is that the throne, having yielded to the demands of the people, will take immediate steps to convene the national parliament, so that what the Empress Dowager intended should be done in nine years in the governmental reformation of the Empire will have been done in five. In all other nations, the progress of representative government has promoted the kingdom of Christ, and we are sure it will be the case in China. In Israel there was a time of shouting and liberty every fifty years. This is the year of jubilee, the time for liberty and shouting, in the Chinese empire.

And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; and it shall be a jubilee unto you. (Lev. 25:10.)

Killed by a Fly

Mr. Edward H. Pratt, a prominent business man of Jersey City, N. J., died the other day from blood-poisoning caused by a common house-fly's infection of a cat's scratch on his right hand. Physicians claim that the germ communicated by the fly to Mr. Pratt's wound is what is known as malignant œdema, a germ causing hospital gangrene. Health Commissioner Lederle of New York City a few weeks ago secured the passage of an ordinance requiring people to screen fruits and vegetables displayed for sale on the streets, and he thinks of having additional protection by requiring that all kitchens, pantries, restaurants and hotels in the city shall be sufficiently screened against the fly. Mr. Edward Hatch, Jr., leader of the nation-wide campaign against the house-fly, in speaking of Mr. Pratt's death, said that the public was just beginning to realize the danger from this source, and that physicians were believing now that many unaccountable deaths, especially among infants and children, are due to the fatal activities of this little pest. Less than a generation ago we were told that God was good to his children in sending so many innocent industrious flies to act as scavengers and carry away the filth that would breed disease. Science has proven unmistakably that the house-fly, with feet and wings and mouth, carries disease and death to many human beings, and a nation-wide warfare will be waged upon it for its destruction. Flies were a pest in olden times. The Almighty threatened Pharaoh with them:

I will send swarms of flies upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses; and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of swarms of flies, and also the ground whereon they are. (Ex. 8:21.)

Rat-Killing in Bombay

The bubonic plague has killed 169,000 people in the last fourteen years in the city of Bombay alone, the highest mortality being 20,000 in 1903 and the lowest 5,000 during the past year. The reduction of the mortality can be traced very largely to the number of rats killed in the city, who are the industrious carriers of the disease. A half million rats were killed last year in that city alone, of which number 90,000 were examined by the bacteriologists of the health department and 9,000 of them were found to be infected with the plague. The wholesale destruction of these rodents was accomplished by the most careful municipal plan and co-operation of health and police departments, which scattered bread smeared with poison and furnished thousands of disinfected traps to the inhabitants, who caught tens of thousands of them. The plague could not be driven out of San Francisco and some other Western cities until they had learned what a subtle and deadly carrier of disease the rat is, and until the public had been aroused to the necessity and task of his destruction. This method of preventing physical disease suggests the spiritual health which comes to those who are obedient to God's commandments:

If thou wilt diligently hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God and wilt do that which is right in his sight, and wilt give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes, I will put none of these diseases upon thee, which I have brought upon the Egyptians; for I am the Lord that healeth thee. (Ex. 15:26.)

Record-breaking Wireless Message

The Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company lately received word from its London office that Mr. Marconi, who is near Buenos Ayres, has received messages at that point from Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and from Clifton, Ireland. The distance from these points to Argentina is about the same, some 5,600 miles. It is claimed that this is the longest distance over which there has been wireless communication, the previous record being 4,720 miles. Last November the Pacific Mail steamship Korea sent a message to the station at San Francisco, when 3,300 miles out to sea, and sent another message when she had reached a point 4,720 miles west of San Francisco. About the same time the United States battleship Tennessee picked a message from San Francisco, from the air, when she was 4,580 miles from the American coast. It is claimed by the inventor and friends of the system that the wireless telegraphy will still further increase its distance of communication. As we witness the marvelous inventions that facilitate communication between man and man it ought not to be hard for us to believe in the actual communication between the created and the uncreated spirit. The Christian believer is conscious that messages of desire and love do go to the heart of the heavenly Father and that answers of wisdom and love come back to his own soul.

This is the confidence that we have in him, that, if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us: and if we know that he hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him. (I. John 5:14, 15.)

CHANGES IN THE PHILIPPINES

By ELIZABETH W. JANSEN, Cebu, P. I.

DURING the recent visit of the Secretary of War to the Philippines the Moros, who are more dreaded by the Cebuans than any other tribe, declared themselves satisfied with American rule. Not only this, but they have shown they have a strong feeling against the Filipinos getting independence and have manifested a determination to oppose anything in the way of Filipino rule.

'Tis a wonderful change indeed when the insurgents, commonly called the Independence Party of the Philippines, find that they have to count with their deeply dreaded, old-time, sanguinary foes on the question of independence. The situation in its novelty comes very forcibly home to us here in many ways. When my husband is obliged to go afield on missionary duty he is not afraid to leave his wife in any of the old insurgent mountain hamlets, for he knows she will be perfectly safe under the care and protection of Christian men. Such changes are truly remarkable when we remember that some half dozen years ago when Mr. Jansen made his first trips through these mountains they were considered dangerous places for the white man to travel. Many of Mr. Jansen's friends in Cebu doubted that his life would be spared by these wild mountain outlaws. All danger has been now eliminated and its place taken by mildness and peace. Those who a few years ago would have been leaders in wrong doing and political disturbance are now engaged in the blessed work of giving the Gospel to their people. Many of the young are being trained in the Christian homes of their parents and attending not only church and Sunday School where God's Word is taught, but also the village schools which are provided by the government.

Another view of the great changes which have taken place here was brought to our realization a few weeks ago when for a much needed holiday we drove to a friend's home about an hour's distance from Cebu City. The home is by the sea, and the near surroundings breathed so much rest and peace that it almost felt as if we had reached a quiet spot in America. This little town of Talisay is one of memories. Some eight years ago two American lady school teachers spent anxious months here and appeared more than once to be in great danger from their revolutionary neighbors. Since then all is different. Fine houses have been built by the Americans, and altogether the past of rapine and plunder and savagery seems as if it belonged to a very remote time.

When our hostess called to a boy to bring a box she had carefully stored away we were not prepared for its contents. In it lay some of the bones of a Spanish lady and of her two little children. They had been taken out of the well which is on our friend's grounds, in near view of where we sat. A little more than a dozen years before, the Spanish guards had been killed by the villagers who lived around us! After a week of horror, in which the Spanish woman had seen first the l- diers slain, and then at last her s- band, she, with her little boys, o a child of only five years, stepped ou of her home into the midst of her sav ge neighbors, who had for a week r- rounded the house, seeking the de h of each one sheltered within its w s. The plea for water from the little re- year-old lad was answered by a lo cut given by the father of some of he child's playmates, and then when he mother had seen both her child n slain she was attacked and killed a o. Great is the change since then. t no change is deep or lasting ex t that wrought by the Spirit of God n answer to repentance toward God d faith in Jesus Christ. Such, howe r, thank God, has been effected and m y hearts here hold the advance of e kingdom of God to be the most imp t- ant ambition.

A Moro War Dance

About THE CHRISTIAN HERALD r- sion launch Dr. Graham writes as l- lows:

"Since we last sent tidings fr n Bohol we have been on an itinerat g trip with the launch, visiting our c- gregations in the north, and conti- ing our trip down to . . . In one little unknown girl gave her e for her faith. She received the Gos l gladly from the beginning, but s prevented from attending the meeti s by her father. She had been ill wh fever, and when she was able to be p again, refused to join in the hon s paid to the image in their house, s- ing she wished to worship God on . Her father was infuriated, and beg n to beat her so that she became delir s in a short time and was never able rise again. So she died, a little h- den martyr of whom we should ne r have heard if the American teach s there had not lived near by and giv n us the story. Perhaps God has ot r hidden ones who are faithful u p death even as this one."

MARKING A PLACE OF HEROIC DEEDS

ONE more historic spot, made sacred to Americans by the patriotic blood shed there, has been marked by the Daughters of the American Revolution in New York. A large boulder, with a simple inscription, on the site of one of the redoubts of Fort Washington, in Fort Washington Park, just above the Hudson River, was put in place through their efforts and dedicated with appropriate ceremonies on November 16. Here the patriot army suffered one of its worst defeats. Many were killed in the desperate struggle on the slope and nearly three thousand were made prisoners and sent to the prison ships lying in the East River.

The anniversary of the defeat was chosen as a fitting date for the ceremony, and the beautiful park was filled with hundreds of interested spectators. The government was represented by five companies of artillery men from Fort Slocum and Fort Hamilton, and the blue and scarlet of their dress uniforms and the glint of the sun on buckles and rifles added a touch of warlike color appropriate to the deeds of valor performed on the very spot where they were drawn up.

Around the boulder were grouped the Daughters of the Revolution, officials of the national and city governments and officers of the army. Little children, dressed in the picturesque costume of Revolutionary days, pulled the cords when the signal was given, and drew away the American flag which had covered the boulder, while the people cheered and the slopes rang again with the stirring bugle calls to which they have echoed in times past, but with the hollow growl of cannon and the rattle of musketry for an accompaniment.

Mrs. Emily L. B. Fay, Regent of Fort Washington Chapter, made the speech of presentation. It was accepted in behalf of the city by Charles B. Stover, the Park Commissioner. Congressman William S. Bennet spoke, as did Hugh Gordon Miller. The latter said that the sons of the revolution had lost the heights in 1776, but the Daughters of the Revolution had recaptured them. A benediction was pronounced by Rev. John Chamberlain, and then came the beautiful notes of "taps" played by the artillery trumpets, the first time the dead have thus received their proper due from fellow soldiers of the army since they were buried on the hillside without any of the customary military honors for the dead. At a later meeting, General James G. Wilson, Edward H. Hall, Mrs. Florence L. Stegman and several others spoke on the "days which tried men's souls."

The heights in November, 1776, were held by an American force under Macgaw. On the morning of November 16, Cornwallis determined to attack the fort on all sides except that which faced the Hudson River. Earl Percy with a heavy column marched over from Harlem Plains and attacked the lower line of entrenchments. Gene Howe led one part of the attacki force, while Baron von Knyphous led a strong force of Hessian merce aries. Lord Cornwallis himself the attack from the other side af scaling the heights.

Unveiling the Boulder at Fort Washington

It was an original contest. Macga had only about three thousand men told, while Cornwallis had eight tho sand nine hundred. Washington se word to Macgaw from the other side the Hudson that if he could hold h lines until dark he would try to resc his force. Macgaw and his m fought stubbornly; time and aga their ammunition ran low before bei supplied from the fort at the rear, a they met the Hessian bayonet charg with cold steel and clubbed muske but the odds were too great, and Art eryman Macgaw with his Gaelic blo and the Americans were driven fro the outer trenches and forced into t fort. Nearly five hundred men of bo armies had fallen and to avoid t slaughter of his men Macgaw at la surrendered.

It was an important victory f Cornwallis, for it made him master the entire island, and in addition twenty-eight hundred prisoners, l took forty-three small cannon, 2,8 muskets and 400,000 cartridges an fifteen barrels of powder.

Count Tolstoy's Last Pilgrimage

COUNT LEO TOLSTOY, who has been for a generation and a half the best known figure in Russian life to the people of Europe and erica, is fast failing, and it seems even probable t before this strikes the eye of the reader, his rless soul may have found peace.

he aged writer and philosopher has been in poor lth for a number of years and his family and nds have been greatly worried over his physical mental condition. His recent flight from his home, with the avowed purpose of spending his days as a wanderer from country to country, swed that their fears were not unfounded. The dships he endured in his brief pilgrimage before whereabouts was discovered brought on a severe ack of bronchitis, which threatened at any mo- it to snuff out the last spark of life which con- ued to burn so feebly.

he Count and Countess Tolstoy have had a num- of quite serious differences lately over the ques- ns of the copyright of the famous author's works. countess has been the household manager, while count, like many other philosophers of this and er ages, has been the dreamer of the family; and questions of where the family supplies were to e from and what was to become of his children l dependents in the future, seem to have given him little concern. He had a big and generous rt, but his horizon had become so broad that he iked to be reminded of the petty cares of every- life and of the fact that money was needed to re his family from an encounter with the pro- bial wolf which has seemed to threaten the fam- s of reformers and philosophers more than some er classes of the community. The count has used for some time to copyright his recent books, l he had also sent a large number of manuscripts stories and more serious books to England, with purpose of having them given away for free lication. There was enough literary material to ich its publishers several times over, while the ily, under the count's arrangement, would not eive a penny.

Count Tchertkeff has been for a number of years Tolstoy's adviser in England and in other publish- centres, and it was he who was to see to the free lication, which the author so much desired. Tchertkeff has been active in other lines besides the ancement of literature, and as a result was arded with some disfavor by the Russian authori- s. He was expelled for a time from Tula Prov- ce and could only communicate with the author retly and with great difficulty. Tolstoy's wife urally was not sorry over this condition of airs, for she felt that Tchertkeff was aiding her band to carry out his quixotic ideas to the detri- nt of those who were dependent upon him.

A few months ago the decree of exile against Tchertkeff was withdrawn, and he at once started t haste for Yasnaya Poliana to see his friend l patron. His stay, however, was brief, for the ntess objected strenuously to his presence, and Tolstoy's sons were not over cordial. The countess, in fact, forbade the literary agent to come on the grounds. Tolstoy heard of this and there were a number of family quarrels. Then he left home and visited Tchertkeff on his private estate near Moscow. The countess felt that she had an almost hopeless task in trying to preserve the manuscripts for the Tolstoy family, and she was taken ill.

The count, on his one short trip to see Tchertkeff, evidently enjoyed his brief change from family life to that of a man without a care and conceived the idea of becoming a wanderer upon the face of the earth, tramping from place to place, and writing as the fancy seized him. As his health was feeble, and as he has been able to do but little with his pen recently, it was a scheme foredoomed to failure. One reason, which he gave after he had been found, will not flatter those who have felt that if they ever traveled as far as Russia they must go to the quaint, widespread manor-house and see the author whose name had been familiar to them from their youth. The count said he wanted to find a quiet spot where there would be but few visitors. Tolstoy has always been kindness itself in receiving those who came to pay homage to him and to his genius, and he has given hours to entertaining men in whom he could have little personal interest; but they had come to see him and that was enough. Lately, however, the author seems to have felt that the outside world in the form of tourists was taking up time which might benefit the world at large if employed in another way.

The aged count suddenly dropped out of sight as completely as if the earth had swallowed him, and he could not be found anywhere in his own neighborhood. The first rumor which reached the family was that an aged man resembling Tolstoy had come to a monastery of the Greek Church in his home province and had made an application to be received as a monk. Some men inclined to believe at first that this was true; then other rumors equally distressing to his family and friends came now from one quarter and then from another. It was even feared that he had been waylaid.

At last word came that he was lying desperately ill in the home of the station master at Astapova, where he had taken refuge after wondering about for several days in the disguise of a peasant. It seems that he had determined to make Sweden the first place to be visited on his world pilgrimage, but his strength failed and he was taken in by the kind-hearted railroad official, who at first had little idea of the identity of the distinguished man he was befriending. Tolstoy's daughter at once went to him from her mother's sick-bed and tried to nurse him back to health; noted physicians were called, and they began to battle with death itself to prolong his life. His temperature rose at times to 104 and the greatest alarm was felt. Countess Tolstoy heard that her husband much desired to see Tchertkeff, and putting aside her own feelings she at once telegraphed to him to come to the manor-house. When he arrived she received him as a friend and with her two sons started on a journey to the little railway station at Astapova. The count received them all kindly, but refused to be removed to his own home, where he could be much better cared for. He had determined to be a pilgrim, and he would be a pilgrim until the end came. So the entire family settled down at Astapova to do what they could to make easier what they all felt were the last moments of the husband, father and friend. The count has been out of harmony with the world as he found it ever since he began to write his novels, and his final pilgrimage is only the natural outcome of his philosophy, for he desired strongly that all men should go back to a very primitive way of living, as simple at least as that of the poorest Russian peasant; that all should come and go as they willed and not be bound to consider whence should come their food and clothes. He himself wore the peasant costume, though, truth to tell, there have been visitors at his manor-house who have seen a servant in livery standing behind his chair at dinner time. Still the philosopher may not have cared about this, so long as he could wear his own coarse blouse and heavy boots. He tore down at one time a large part of his residence, as he wished for a more simple abode, but his wife managed to save one wing of the edifice, and in this the family still lives. Those who did not agree with his dislike of all government, and thought that the world would go backward and not forward if it took his view, nevertheless admired the man and acknowledged in him one of the greatest masters of Russian literature.

Questions and Answers

In forwarding MSS. to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, enclose stamped envelopes for return, if unavailable.

Reader, Cashmere, W. Va. 1. By what race was the god "Ra" worshiped? 2. Is there any chemical process through which lead may be turned into gold? 3. Are Edgar Allan Poe's works truthful or fiction?

1. Ra, the sun-god, was worshiped by the ancient Egyptians at Heliopolis. His common figure is that of a man with a hawk's head, on which is placed the solar disk and the royal asp. 2. There is no chemical process known by which lead can be turned into gold. 3. The works of Poe were the conceptions of his own brilliant though morbid imagination.

Enquirer, Alsask, Can. 1. Will stones increase in size if left in the ground? 2. What is the fourth dimension?

1. Stone does not increase in the ground. 2. The fourth dimension, as used by mathematicians, is merely an algebraic term, with no corresponding reality.

E. R. G., Tusculum, Tenn. Please tell me the six largest department stores in the world, and the number of dollars' worth each sold in one year.

Bon Marche, Paris; Wanamaker's, New York; "The Fair," Chicago; Siegel-Cooper Company, New York; Macy & Co., New York; Gimble Bros., New York. The maximum of any one would be about one hundred million dollars, roughly estimated.

W. J., Bronx, N. Y. Where do we get our word "yard" as a measure?

It comes from an old Saxon word, either from geard or gyrd, meaning a rod or shoot, or from grden, also a Saxon word, meaning to enclose; the average circumference of a man's body being taken as a measure. It is said that King Henry I. of England decreed that the measure should be the length of his own arm.

R. T. W., Harrisburg, Pa. Where is or was the prison called the Wartburg to which Luther was taken at one time during his life?

The Wartburg is not a prison, but a castle, which belonged in the time of Luther to the Elector Frederick. It is in Saxony in North Germany. The Elector had Luther taken there in April, 1521, after the Diet of Worms in order that he might be protected from his enemies.

L. H., Hammondton, N. J. In a recent book on Constantinople the "sacred standard" is mentioned. What is it?

It is a flag of green silk which is only unfurled by the followers of Mohammed in times of great danger. It was under the guard of 300 emirs. There are several records of its being used; one of the latest, if not the last, was in 1828, when the Sultan of Turkey was engaged in a desperate conflict with Russia.

I. V. McK., Hudson, N. Y. 1. How is Rochelle pronounced? 2. How is the name Medici pronounced?

1. It is pronounced Ro-shel. 2. Med-e-chee.

R. D., Louisville, Ky. 1. Does the government collect any statistics in regard to the poultry business so one can get an idea of its importance in the whole country? 2. What is the leading State in the business?

1. Yes; the figures for 1910 are not yet out, but at the time of the last general census the production of poultry was 250,623,114. 2. Iowa seems to be the leading State, as at that time its production was 20,043,343. Illinois came next with 17,737,262.

L. LeB., New Bedford, Mass. What is the horsepower of the heaviest electric locomotive, and what is the size of the wheels?

The heaviest is on the Pennsylvania Railroad. It is 1,240 horse-power. The driving wheels are 56 inches in diameter.

E. S., Newport, R. I. Have we ever had cholera epidemics in North America?

Yes; in Canada in 1832, in New York in 1832, and a very bad epidemic covering the country from New Orleans to Ohio in the same year. All of these probably came from the epidemic raging in England and Ireland. In 1834 there was another and a small one five years later. In 1855 there was a severe epidemic and one less so in 1866-67. In September, 1892, an epidemic was prevented by energetic quarantine measures. Several infected ships arrived at New York from places where the disease was raging in Europe. Equal care on the part of our medical authorities at Washington has prevented the disease from entering this year from infected foreign districts.

J. S. D., Hoopeston, Ill. I read in Job, "Man dieth and giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" Please explain.

The patriarch was discussing the common lot of mortals and the misery that marks it, where it is unrelieved by the greater hope. Read the thirteen verses (Chap. 14) and then note the change, where Job raises the question of another life beyond the grave. In the whole chapter there is no denial of a future life, but simply of a return to the present condition of life. Job himself clearly hoped for a future state (see v. 13, also Chap. 7: v. 2, also Chap. 19: 24, 26, 27).

M. B., Dubuque, Ia. Which is the larger in volume, the land or the sea?

The total cubic contents of the oceans, lakes, rivers and streams are estimated by scientists to be thirty times the total of all the land lying above the sea level. The land below the sea level is not included in this estimate.

B. M., Des Moines, Ia. How is it, if, as the Bible states, Pharaoh and his host were drowned in the Red Sea, that the mummified body of Menepthah (the supposed Pharaoh of the Exodus) can now be among the other royal mummies in the "Hall of Kings" in Cairo?

It is quite conceivable that his body was recovered after he had been drowned. Eminent Bible scholars take this view. One of the ablest, the Rev. John Urquhart, writes on this subject: "We are told that 'Israel saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore' (Ex. 14: 30). Their bereaved kindred might easily find them where Israel looked upon them. The waters, rushing in from either side, seem to have swept their victims to the shores; and, even though the sea had not in this way yielded up its dead, the Egyptians, whose care of the dead body was one of the highest religious duties, would have searched its deepest depths, and have brought back, for embalmment and sepulture, the remains of their king."

Reader. What was the mark which the Lord set upon Cain? Can you throw any light on the subject?

Shuckford and other authorities agree that it was a sign or token and not a mark, and that the passage (Gen. 4: 15) might more correctly be rendered: "Thus Jehovah appointed a token for Cain, so that no one who met him should slay him." Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D., of Brooklyn, a noted Bible scholar, writes: "It was certainly not a mark of anger, but one of love which prompted forgiveness. It was to serve both as a sign of his forgiveness and as a protection against those who would slay him. The word that is used for this mark is the same that is used in reference to the rainbow. As the rainbow is an assurance against present and future floods, so this mark placed upon Cain was an assurance against his present and future harm."

C. F., Charleston. What are the duties of the Geographic Board?

The United States Geographic Board by executive order in 1906 had its duties enlarged. It passes on all unsettled questions concerning geographic names, changes and determines the names of places in the United States and its possessions, and all names suggested are referred to it. The government accepts its decisions as the final authority. It has advisory powers concerning the preparation of all government maps.

P. E., Detroit, Mich. What is the annual value of all ores and minerals mined in the country?

The last report gives $792,521,705.

J. G., Omaha. Can you tell me how many people, on the average, are killed in railway accidents in a year?

The reports for 1909 are not yet in, but the statistical report of the Interstate Commerce Commission for the year ending June 30, 1909 gives: Employees, 3,470; passengers, 383; other persons, 6,460; total, 10,313. The total number injured in the same period was 105,234.

M. K., Ottawa, Can. Who is the present director of the United States mint?

William Piatt Andrew, appointed in 1909. Previously he was a college professor, teaching economics, and is an expert on the principles of banking.

C. E. D., West Jonesport, Me. Please explain through the columns of your paper the third verse of the eighth chapter of Romans, especially the last part of the verse.

Few passages have been more criticised than this, chiefly on account of its obscureness. The leading commentators hold that the verse means that what the law could not do was to free us from the dominion of sin (v. 2 gives a clue to this interpretation), not because of the flesh, but through the medium of the flesh, since our natures are too sinful and corrupt to heed even threats and commands. But, though the law was powerless to secure its own fulfilment, God sent his Son, who took our nature with all its infirmities, yet sinless; sending him in the character of a blameless sin-offering and thus condemning or loosening the hold of sin over men, so that we, through his purifying and atoning sacrifice, and not through the law or any merits of our own, may be emancipated from sin.

President Taft's Letter to the Bowery Mission.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

October 31, 1910.

My Dear Mr. Hallimond:

On the celebration of the 31st anniversary of the Bowery Mission I want to send a word of encouragement and good will to the men who through stress of circumstances have been forced to turn to you for help. I hope that the tide may soon turn and that the future may brighten for all of them. We all suffered a great loss in the death of Dr. Klopsch, and it does not seem possible that his place in the world ever can be quite filled; but I want to express my admiration for the way in which his work has been carried on by you and those who are associated with you. I send my hearty good wishes to all of you.

Sincerely yours,

Wm H Taft

Rev. Dr. J. G. Hallimond,
Superintendent, Bowery Mission,
227 Bowery,
New York, N.Y.

President Taft, who last winter visited the Bowery Mission and addressed an audience of the unemployed there, sent this very cordial letter to Superintendent Hallimond, to be read at the celebration of the Mission's thirty-first anniversary, which was celebrated lately. A full account of the celebration appears on another page. The President's letter is reproduced in facsimile.

Miscellaneous

A. E. T., Ohio. Send full name and address.

D. F. E., Wawarsing, N. Y., writes: "Several persons have written at different times asking how the apostles or others could remember and report accurately Christ's sayings so long after they had been made. It seems to me the only answer that can be given to this is the one that the Bible states in St. John 14: 26. The sin against the Holy Ghost is made clear in but one place—Mark 3: 29, 30."

T. H. C., Plainfield, N. J., sends to THE MAIL-BAG this definition of Christian fellowship: "It is a friendship sealed by oneness of expectation, oneness of purpose, and oneness of spirit and effort, and is of a kind that bears and forbears. There proceedeth out of a Christian fellowship an agreement that surmounts and vanquishes disagreement, paradoxical though that may seem. It is born of a common Father, a common hope and a common destiny."

W. M. C., Wilmington, N. C., writes: "God did undoubtedly send his only begotten Son into the world to teach the people by example and precept how to live, but eternal life was secured to us by his death and is the 'gift of God' (Rom. 6: 23; Eph. 2: 8, 9). We live right because we are saved, not in order to be saved." Our correspondent states a fundamental principle of the Christian religion, which teaches that salvation comes by faith and not of works.

Appreciation From Canada

I received the Red Letter Bible promptly, and thank you for the beautiful Bible, and other premiums which I appreciate very much. As a weekly visitor, I look forward to the arrival of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with a great deal of pleasure, as there is always something inspiring in its columns. I trust our relationship will continue.

Halifax, N. S. RODERICK MCLEOD.

BY THE GLOW OF THE FIRELIGHT

Women in Council

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

OUR page this week is wholly given up to the problems of parents and children. No subject is more important in the home realm than the training of children for the work they will have to do when they take up the burdens which their parents must lay down. Everything that concerns the welfare of children and young people is of deep interest to mothers and fathers. We are by the way of thinking and saying that the whole responsibility of juvenile education rests upon the shoulders of the mother. This is not so. Fathers have a share in it.

I heard a little story that pleased me one day. It was an anecdote told by an old Scotchman to an eloquent speaker at a Mother's Congress after she had left the platform. He said that a certain little boy was extremely ill. The doctor came, leaving a medicine which he desired the child to take. He intimated to the mother that the recovery of the small patient might depend upon the faithfulness with which the remedy was administered. The boy refused to open his mouth and could not be coaxed to do so. The mother feared to use harsh measures, as the boy was too weak to be forced. She sat down on the foot of the bed and broke into sobs. "Dinna cry, mither," piped up a little voice, "dinna cry, faether'll be home sune, and he'll gar me tak' it." The old Scotchman was of the opinion that as disciplinarians fathers were occasionally useful. They are useful in many other departments of child training. To a small boy or a little girl father represents so much of love, of power, of authority and of gentleness that he is the Gibraltar of the home. In wholesome child training, fathers and mothers are of one mind, and if they differ as to method they are at pains not to do so in the presence of the children. A magazine entitled Modern Society is published by our cousins across the water. Recently it has advocated a return to the rigorous discipline of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. Apparently young girls in England are growing too self-assertive and obstinate to meet the approval of the British mother and school-mistress. Modern Society recommends the use of the rod as a punishment to growing girls. This would be a swing of the pendulum back to the dark ages. Neither girls nor boys need this form of chastisement after they have arrived at years when reason can be appealed to, unless, indeed, parents and teachers have been both stupid and weak. The experience of the mother whose letter is next published is, I imagine, unusual, and I fancy that in most cases mothers would feel that the door should be bolted and a girl sent to her own room and compelled to stay there, if she were as rebellious as the one here described. The mothers who read our correspondent's letter are invited to speak out in meeting and tell us how they would have acted in a similar situation.

Faced With an Issue

"When girls are between the ages of fourteen and sixteen they are apt to be self-willed and think parental restraint irksome, when really it is the time most watchful care is needed. My daughter at that age was extremely stubborn. She was not allowed to go out at night alone. One evening she announced that she was going out, refused to say where, and stated that she did not want to receive company.

"I had often fasted and prayed that she would act more as a daughter should, for she always wanted her own way. On the evening in question, after dressing herself, she started to go in the street. Since she would go I resolved to go with her, and hastily putting on my wraps, I did so. It was a cold winter night and the snow lay thick on the ground. I was not well and soon became chilled through, and stopping near a Methodist church, where a revival service was in progress, I told my daughter that I could go no farther, but must return home. On entering the house I fell on my knees and besought the Lord on behalf of my child. The prayer was speedily answered. After I left her she turned about, entered the church and was soon at the altar. She came home completely changed. Later I sent her away to a good school. She has ever since been my greatest help and comfort. She now takes entire charge of our home, is a faithful teacher in the Sunday School and a constant worker in the church. That night was the turning point in her life. Mothers, do not be discouraged, but wait on the Lord. MRS. I. S."

This Tired Mother

"I am so nervous that I don't know what to do. I am so blue that I feel as if life were all indigo. When I lie down at night there is a weight upon my spirits that crushes me, and when I waken in the morning I dread another day. Husband and children are kind and considerate, but they cannot help me. My physician says I must have a change, but there is no one with whom I can leave my home. My daughters do not understand housekeeping and my maid is incompetent. I do more than half her work myself, and as for ever getting through I have learned that I need not expect it. My basket of stockings is piled up like a mountain, and the darning is the last straw. I am utterly tired out. EDITH T."

Indeed you do need a change. You can't exactly make a bonfire of the stockings, but you can set your daughters at the darning, and hereafter let it be their weekly task. Pack a few things into a suit case and run away somewhere. If you were in your grave the housekeeping and the mending would somehow be done. You must change your blue to rose-color, and you won't be able to do it until you take a rest cure.

Years ago I wrote a poem which fits your case precisely. Here it is. I recommend its homely advice to the children of the tired and wornout mothers.

If mother would listen to me, dears,
She would freshen that faded gown;
She would sometimes take an hour's rest,
And sometimes a trip to town.
And it shouldn't be all the children,
The fun and the cheer and the play,
With the patient droop on the tired mouth,
And the "Mother has had her day!"

True, mother has had her day, dears,
When you were her babies three,
And she stepped about the farm and the house,
As busy as ever a bee;
When she rocked you all to sleep, dears,
And sent you all to school,
And wore herself out, and did without,
And lived by the Golden Rule.

And so your turn has come, dears,
Her hair is growing white;
And her eyes are gaining the far-away look
That peers beyond the night.
One of these days in the morning,
Mother will not be here;
She will fade away into silence—
The mother so true and dear.

Then what will you do in the daylight?
And what in the gloaming dim?
And father, tired and lonesome then,
Pray what will you do for him?
If you want to keep your mother,
You must make her rest to-day—
Must give her a share in the frolic,
And draw her into the play.

And if mother would listen to me, dears,
She'd buy her a gown of silk,
With buttons of royal velvet,
And ruffles as white as milk;
And she'd let you do the trotting
While she sat still in her chair.
That mother should have it hard all through,
It strikes me isn't fair.

What About This Boy?

"Our elder son went through the grammar and high school with distinction, taking the four years' course in the latter in three years. He is now a brilliant student in a technical school and we hope that he will become an electrical engineer. His future is assured, if he continues to have health and strength. Our second boy, a bright lovable lad, is a misfit in school. His teachers never understand him, his marks are low and he takes little interest in his books. His father is anxious to take him out of school and put him at work, but I hesitate to deprive him of the advantages we have freely given his brother. What do you advise? MRS. P. M."

Putting the boy to work is rather vague. If the boy has learned to read, write and cipher he has in his hand the keys to unlock most practical doors in the days that lie before him, but, in choosing his work, there is the opportunity for wise consideration. His father is right in removing him from his present school. Another might be found where the boy would do better. If he really dislikes books why not send him to work on a farm? The time is coming fast when this country must look for its salvation to the farmers.

THE WHITE HOUSE COW

THE President's fine new cow is the admiration of Washington. She came from Kenosha, Wis., and rejoices in the title of Pauline Wayne, 3d, having sprung from a long and honorable ancestry. She is a gift to the President from United States Senator Isaac Stephenson, and was chaperoned during her trip by Jim Torrey, the superintendent of the Stephenson farm. Pauline's promising bull calf, born early in November, has been given to W. W. Price, a Washington newspaper man. Pauline is four years old, weighs fifteen hundred pounds, gives ten gallons of milk per day and is of the purest Holstein-Friesian breed.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

Synopsis of Previous Chapters

Little Jimmy Preston, aged six, gets a letter at the post office for his sister Barbara. On the way home it is lost. Barbara Preston has been trying to keep the farm, the last of her father's estate, for Jimmy, but it is mortgaged to Honorable Stephen Jarvis, who is comparatively young. He threatens to foreclose. Peg Morrison, the old farm hand, is as greatly concerned over the loss of the letter as is Barbara. She goes to Mr. Jarvis to ask for more time on the mortgage. He tells her that he is disposed to do it, and also that he is tired of his present housekeeper and would like her to fill the place. She leaves without a word. The old housekeeper at once becomes her enemy. Stephen Jarvis comes to see Barbara. He asks her to marry him and he will give her the place. She refuses. She thinks of her old lover who went away and whose fate she did not know. Jarvis drives up and insists she ride with him.

VI—Continued

"WELL?" questioned Stephen Jarvis sharply. "You didn't ask me for help because——"

"How could I?" demanded Barbara with a spirited lift of her head. "I asked you for help before and you refused."

He looked at her with piercing keenness.

"Did I?" he said gravely. "Well, I offered you—a position. You haven't forgotten, have you?"

Barbara's heart beat suffocatingly fast. His eyes were on her face, compelling her, mastering her.

"Would you—could I take care of Jimmy just the same?" she asked, in a muffled voice.

He gave his horse a sharp cut with the whip before he answercd.

"I can't see why you should bring the boy into our affairs," he said coldly. "But he can live with us—for the present, if you like. Then there is the Preston farm; as I've already told you, you may do as you like with it."

Barbara looked mistily away over the fields past which they were driving, the sound of meadow-larks, calling and answering, and the soft jubilant gurgle of a bluebird on a nearer fence-rail reaching her like vaguely reproachful voices out of a dead past. Then as now had the meadow-larks called "Sweet! oh my sweet!"—in the one springtime when David Whitcomb loved her.

"I shall have to—to think," she murmured. "I am afraid——"

"Of what?" he demanded. "Of me?"

She did not answer, and again he cut the horse impatiently with his kcen whiplash, holding the spirited creature with a strong grasp on the reins as he did so.

"Well," he said, after a long silence, "I'm afraid I can't make myself over, even for you. But I'll tell you something, my girl, there are worse men in the world than Stephen Jarvis, and perhaps you'll fall in with some of 'em, if you turn me down. Look at me, will you?"

Unwillingly she turned her face to his.

"I shall not take a silly no for an answer," he said under his breath. "I never have, and I shan't begin with you. I need you, and you need me."

His eyes held her powerfully.

"Do you love another man?"

"No," said Barbara faintly. Shc could not bring herself to uncover hcr one dcad love before those pitiless eyes, while the meadow-larks were calling and answering with such piercing sweetness. David Whitcomb was dead. If she had ever loved him it was another self in a dim past, growing ever dimmer.

"Then," said the Honorable Stephen Jarvis quietly, "you will marry me?" He broke into a short laugh. "Do you know I couldn't bear to think of your loving another man? Is that being in love? Tell me, Barbara."

He laughed again, softly, as he bent to peer into her averted face. She felt herself yielding, her weak hold on past and future loosening.

She did not answer, but her red mouth quivered.

He experienced a sudden thrilling desire to touch the fresh innocent lips with his.

"It would be curious," he murmured unsteadily, "if I should learn what love is for the first time. Shall I tell you how old I am, Barbara?"

She looked up at him without curiosity.

"Well; I'm thirty-seven, and I've never loved any woman—I have never loved anything, except money and success. But now—Barbara!"

"She mailed her letter the next morning"

He bent toward her, his cold eyes alive with passion.

"No—no!" she cried, shrinking from him in sudden terror.

His face stiffened into its accustomed mask.

"You're thinking I've waited too long," he said bitterly, and the curling lash stung the bay horse in the flank.

Neither spoke again while the wheels spun dizzily along over the mile of road which brought them to the big stone gate-posts of the Preston farm.

He drew up his foaming horse sharply.

"I won't come in," he said, "if you'll get out here."

She felt herself vaguely humiliated, as she stepped down from the high vehicle without assistance.

"Stop!" he ordered as she passed quickly inside, as if in haste to gain shelter.

She looked up at him uncertainly, her eyes wide with an emotion akin to terror.

"I shall not humiliate myself by coaxing or cajoling you," he said haughtily. "You are best left alone for the present."

He lifted his hat with a sweeping bow, and thc red-wheeled buggy dashed away.

Barbara drew a long struggling sigh. She felt curiously light and free, as if she had made a breathless escape from some grasping hand, outstretched to seize her.

The sight of Jimmy running swiftly down the driveway toward her heightened the sensation to one of almost passionate relief.

"Hello, Barb'ra!" shouted the little boy. "I came home from school, an' you wasn't here. An' you can't guess what I got for you!"

The child's face, glowing rosily with health and mischief, was uplifted to hers. She stooped and kissed it tenderly.

"What have you got for me, Jimmy?"

"Guess!"

"I can't guess," she answered soberly. "You'll have to tell me."

"You ain't cross wiv me, are you, Barb'ra?"

"No, dear, of course I'm not. Why should I bc cross? Why, it—it's a letter! Where did you get it, Jimmy?"

"It's thc one I lost," said the child, puckering up his chin disappointedly. "I fought you'd be glad. Peg found it. He said he 'mcmbered the wind was blowin' that day; so he looked all along the road on bof sides, an' hc found it right under a bush."

Barbara hastily tore the sodden envelope apart. Her fingers trembl as she unfolded the large stained shee

"Is it all spoiled?" asked Jimm anxiously. "Can't you read it?"

VII

Barbara stared at the stained ar defaced sheet with wide, frightene eyes. Her hands trembled.

"Can't you read it, Barb'ra? pleaded Jimmy anxiously, standing o tip-toe to peep at the letter. "Pe said he was 'fraid you couldn't, but h said maybe you'd know who it wa from, an' if it was 'portant."

Barbara did not answer. The rain soaked paper in her trembling finger faced her like a mute accusing ghos out of the past. The lines of writing folded close upon each other an soaked with rain and the stain of th wet brown earth, had been completel obliterated; but two words of the man had escaped: her own name at the be ginning of the letter and another a its close.

"He is not dead!" she murmured "He is not dead!"

Jimmy clutched her sleeve, dancing up and down in his impatience.

"Is it 'portant, Barb'ra—is it? Can you read it?" he persisted.

She faced the child, her eyes clouded with despair and anger.

"No; I can't read it!" she cried "Oh! if you had only brought it to me!"

She turned swiftly and hurried toward the house, the child lagging forlornly in the rear, his blue eyes brimming with tears.

Peg Morrison, digging a patch of garden in the rear of the house, his battercd straw hat drawn low over his eyes, his tceth firmly closed on a twig of apple-tree wood, became presently aware of a small dejected figure lurking in the shadow of the blossoming tree.

"Hello, Cap'n!" he called out cheerfully, relinquishing the twig in favor of a spent dandelion stalk. "Did ye find Barb'ry—heh? An' did ye givc her the letter?"

"I gave it to her; but she—can't read it. An'—'n' I'm 'fraid it was 'portant. She's mad wiv me, Barb'ra is; 'n' I haven't had any dinner, either."

The child manfully swallowed the sob that rose in his throat. Then he selected a tall dandelion with a plumy top which he put in his mouth in imitation of Peg, who watched him with a dubious smile.

"Wall, now, that's too bad, Cap'n," sympathized the old man. "But ef Barb'ry can't read the letter it mus' be 'cause 'tain't best thet she should. Things don't happen t' chance, Cap'n. You want t' remember that. There's Somebody a-lookin' out fer things as don't make no mistakes."

Jimmy pondered this dark saying while the dandelion stem slowly uncurled itself into a dangling spiral.

"Then it was all right for me to lose that letter. 'N' you said——"

Peg frowned thoughtfully at the antics of a pair of barn swallows swooping in and out from under the eaves.

"No; it wasn't right fer you to be careless an' lose the letter, Cap'n," he said decidedly. "But the Lord—wall, you see, the Lord is consid'ble smarter'n what we be, an' he c'n fix things up that go wrong. Kind o' arranges it so't the universe won't fly the track, no matter what we do. We ain't p'mitted t' disturb the gen'ral peace t' any great extent. You'll understan' these things better when you're growed up, Cap'n."

HOLIDAY GREETING

A Personal Letter from The Christian Herald

DEAR FRIENDS:— Those of you who knew Dr. Klopsch, not so much as the Grand Almoner of the world in distress, as the friend who was ever ready to give his time and his counsel to your personal and spiritual needs, must have imbibed something of his enthusiasm in striving to make The Christian Herald the great power for good it has been in the world.

It was a laudable ambition and a herculean task, that idea of creating a medium through which the woes of mankind could be given voice and so be rectified—a task which no one without his own undauntable character would have even attempted.

Do you remember, you of the Old Guard, how he strove to make you see it with his eyes, the realization of a great Christian Herald Family that was to become an ever growing power, an ever widening influence for the common good? how year after year he toiled in the stoutness of his heart and the oneness of his faith, until indeed he did succeed in building up the greatest single private enterprise of charitable endeavor and spiritual impulse combined that the world has ever seen? The famine-stricken sufferers of India and China, the orphans that followed in their wake, the human derelicts of the Bowery Mission, the waifs of the tenements, remember it if you do not.

And yet he died with his complete ambition only partly fulfilled, for he had set his heart on a particular goal — the million mark.

Don't you remember in that "personal message to you" how he said:

"I have always contended and still contend that in a Christian community a monopoly of large circulations should not be accorded the secular press, and I see no valid reason why a clean, beautifully illustrated, ably edited weekly like The Christian Herald should not become a household word the world over, and a blessing to millions at home and abroad."

That was his dream: to place The Christian Herald in one million homes. Do you realize what that meant—a million homes? that is to say, over five million souls banded together by one thought — the thought of Louis Klopsch — the welfare of human kind, the godspeed of his fellow-man, the happiness of little children—five million souls.

The Late Dr. Klopsch

A lifelike photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, 12 x 15 inches, will be given with each subscription to "The Christian Herald."

That he realized the greatness of the task, that he appreciated his own earthly limitations, may be gathered from a remark which he made not long before his death. He said:

"There is no reason why The Christian Herald should not reach the million mark, but it is for the readers to decide. They, not the Editor and Proprietor, are the real strength of the paper. If they choose to band themselves together for the cause, nothing can prevent The Christian Herald from becoming the greatest single agency of right and truth on earth. If they do not, then no single man or company of men can hope to bring about the desired result. But I believe they will. I am but a steward. I shall pass away, but The Christian Herald will go on, for I know our dear people, and they have shown in the past that they love their paper too much to forsake its standard after I am gone."

And his words were prophetic; for his people, far from deserting the standard which he defended so long, seem to have been drawn to it closer than ever by a great bond of sympathy that was inspired by his loss and is fostered by his memory. We have received so many letters of encouragement, so many assurances of loyalty, that we do not fear the loss of one old friend. We know that their devotion to the traditions and policies established by Dr. Louis Klopsch will hold them true to The Christian Herald.

And so we wish to assure them, here in the place where he used to write his annual greeting to his friends, of our own determination to carry The Christian Herald forward to the goal of his ambition, along lines that were laid down by him before his death, and with the same editorial staff who helped him for years to make it the most loved and most influential home paper published.

But, as he himself said, with your help, dear friends. Only with your help can we place The Christian Herald in that million of homes, whose members he could see in anticipation, banded together with a power for good and right that will be irresistible. We know we can count upon you.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Our Money-Saving Magazine Combinations

The American Boy

Full of the reading that makes manly fellows. 500,000 careful parents endorse it. Boys everywhere are enthusiastic readers. The best of boys are in danger of being lured away by cheap novels and wild story papers. Here is a clean, fascinating, inspiring magazine that satisfies the boy's craving for mental stimulant, gives him bright ideas for work and play, amplifies the knowledge he gets from his study, and supplements his home training.

The American Magazine

There will be a new novel by Frances Hodgson Burnett, author of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" and "The Shuttle"; more "Barbarous Mexico" articles, more of those delightful "Adventures in Contentment," by David Grayson; new stories by William J. Locke; articles by Samuel Hopkins Adams, Ida M. Tarbell, Ray Stannard Baker, Dr. William Osler, William Allen White, F. P. Dunne, and many others. The two most extraordinary and sensational series cannot yet be announced because the very announcement would shut off the information necessary to complete them.

Cosmopolitan

Cosmopolitan is strong, sane, and thoroughly American. It is progressive. Robert W. Chambers, Sir Gilbert Parker, Charles Edward Russell, George Randolph Chester, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Upton Sinclair, and many others contribute regularly. It always contains something of vital interest to women. It prints more and better pictures than the high-priced magazines. It is a "different" magazine because it covers an entirely different sphere. No matter how many magazines you read, you surely need the Cosmopolitan.

The Delineator

The Delineator is the fashion authority of the world. It tells what the American woman will wear. There will be fiction serials by Maurice Hewlett and George Barr McCutcheon, articles by David Graham Phillips, Samuel Hopkins Adams, Jack London and others. From the women by Gwendolyn Overton, Anne Forsythe, Rebecca Insley and others. Literature, art, the stage, domestic science, politics, education, religion, the care of the child—everything that pertains to the home—will be found in The Delineator.

Farm Journal

Is the standard farm and home paper of America: made for housekeepers, boys and girls, as well as fruit-growers, truckers, poultrymen, stockmen, dairymen, suburbanites and village people. It has always "stood up" for women. It is clean, brief, bright, "boiled down," intensely practical. "Cream, not skim-milk," is its motto. It is thirty-three years old, and known everywhere. "Judge Biggle" and "Peter Tumbledown" are characters better known to many than Hamlet or Micawber. Its poultry department is famous.

Good Housekeeping

Helpfulness. That's the idea that is now, and always has been, back of Good Housekeeping Magazine. Comfortable economy and easier living come naturally to those who read its pages. Real inspiration for lowering the cost of living, for bringing up children, for lessening housework, and for every littlest part of women's work as well, shines forth from every page—and besides all this the magazine is always interesting.

Hampton's Magazine

LaFollette, the fighting Senator from Wisconsin, will write a series of articles dealing with the country's most interesting economic, political and social problems. Judson C. Welliver, whose political articles are famous, will write for Hampton's, analyzing the political situation. General Theodore A. Bingham will reveal facts that should be known. The greatest short story writers, such as Robert W. Chambers, Arthur Stringer, George Randolph Chester, Frederick Palmer, Owen Johnson, Harris Merton Lyon and many others.

Harper's Bazar

Is the great magazine for the ambitious and thinking woman of to-day, whatever may be her station in life. The work the Bazar is doing has the co-operation of the best thinkers and writers in the world. During 1911, the Bazar will have a serial novel, "The Making of a Fortune," by Harriett Prescott Spofford, with illustrations by Alice Barber Stephens; short stories by Alice Brown, Mary E. Wilkins Freeman, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy, Rose O'Neill, Fanny Y. Cory, Frank Craig.

Little Folks

Love and joy and goodness will be presented in stories of real and of imaginary children and creatures and things. Besides the charming stories and pictures, there will be suggestions that will keep them happily busy in beneficial work or joyous play. The child will love the magazine, and will remember the donor with gratitude. Little Folks tells stories that are intense in interest, fascinating in fancy, charming in childishness, amazingly amusing, and real. Its pictures are delightful, artistic and numerous.

A Book for Every Member of the Household

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD HOME LIBRARY" consists of eight books. Each book is complete in itself. The books are all new, they have never been published before, and each one was especially written for us by writers employed for that purpose. Each book is 4 x 6 inches in size, nicely bound, and well printed on good quality stock. The illustration gives a good idea of the set.

FULL OF VALUABLE INFORMATION

THE idea in compiling this set of books has been to make them of real practical value and helpfulness to each and every member of the family. We have endeavored to seek out those things which every member of every home needs know and wants to know. We believe we have succeeded in producing a set books that will appeal to every member of the family, and particularly to all classes people who read, or think, or work; for women as well as men—for girls as well boys. They are written in a plain, everyday style appealing to all.

If there is a boy in your home—a boy rapidly approaching manhood—much con-n should be felt for his physical as well as his mental development. The book Healthful Sports for Boys," contains the key to all clean sports that go to make rdy, well-balanced men. He'll like to read this book, too, because it is written a way that is easily understood, and about all of the things that boys delight in.

"Helpful Talks with Girls" is a "different" kind of "Girls' Book." It gives vice to the girl about ways of increasing her popularity and prosperity. Girls ways look forward to their career with live interest, and this book is offered as a lp-mate. The ideas and suggestions are invaluable to any girl.

The average woman or housewife wants to make the pocketbook go as far as ssible, and so we have filled the woman's book with practical recipes for cook-g and matters of a general household character. The task of providing amuse-ent in the home for the children or guests, in church for the social betterment of e congregation, and in school again for the children, always falls to the lot of the oman, and so we have also provided amusements that will fit any possible occasion r any number of people. You need this book—every woman does.

The books for men are filled with practical information that every man needs know. From the latest achievements in science, to the methods used in con-ucting various kinds of commercial business, How to Make a Will, Run an Auto-obile, Endorse a Note, Make an Investment, Build a House, etc.

WE unhesitatingly cordially, and without any mental reservation whatever, recommend this Library to the favorable consideration of our numerous readers. Every word may be safely read aloud in the family circle. A high price could be charged for these books, but we are not book publishers, and we do not aim to make a profit out of this set, other than the popularity and continued patronage to be gained for The Christian Herald. Just read the titles of these books. Read the short description of the contents. And then just think of how helpful each one of these books can be right in your home and how each and every member of the family—father, mother, the boys and the girls—will revel in the interesting, fascinating and valuable information that is poured out on every page.

We have ordered enough sets to accommodate one in about every twenty of the members of the Christian Herald Family. "Helpful books, like dependable friends, are priceless," and we believe you will find this new Library of Eight Books bright, cheerful, optimistic, helpful, and above all, interesting and instructive. Devoid of fiction, but crowded with interesting facts and valuable suggestions to make the home life more delightful, these Eight Books are sure to receive the royal welcome they deserve in the homes of all intelligent Christian Herald readers. Clean and practical, they are sure to be helpful to all.

Our Offer to You is as follows:

The regular subscription price of The Christian Herald is $1.50 a year. Add one dollar to your subscription this year (new or renewal) making $2.50 in all, and we will send you the following: The Christian Herald (52 issues), Christian Herald Home Library (8 volumes), Our 1911 Baby Calendar, A Photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, ALL FOR ONLY $2.50.

If you do not want all of the Eight Books, simply add 20 cents for each volume you desire to the subscription price ($1.50) of The Christian Herald and we will send them to you, together with the Calendar and Photogravure of Dr. Klopsch. $1 added to any Christian Herald offer in this circular secures these books.

ISAIAH 61 — The Mission of the Lord's Anointed One

22 A [b] little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the LORD will hasten it in his time.

CHAPTER 61

The Redeemer Comes to Zion with Blessings.

THE [a] Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me [b] to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim [c] liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; ★

2 To [d] proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and [e] the day of vengeance of our God; to [f] comfort all that mourn;

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, [g] to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness, that they might be called trees of righteousness, the [h] planting of the LORD, [i] that he might be glorified. ★

4 ¶ And they shall [j] build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And [k] strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers.

6 But [l] ye shall be named the Priests of the LORD: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

7 For [m] your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, [n] and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the LORD hath blessed.

10 I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as [o] a bridegroom decketh [1] himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord GOD will cause [p] righteousness [q] and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

CHAPTER 62

The Redeemer Calls the Watchmen to Awake.

FOR Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

2 And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: [a] and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be a [b] crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou [c] shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed [1] Desolate: but thou shalt be called [2] Hephzi-bah, and thy land [3] Beulah: for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and [4] as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 ¶ I [d] have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: [5] ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

7 And give him no [6] rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem [e] a praise in the earth.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, [7] Surely I will no more give [f] thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast labored:

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it to-

Jesus Baptized; he Undergoes Temptation and his meat was locusts and wild [1] honey.

5 ¶ Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And [j] were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

7 But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from [k] the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for [1] repentance:

9 And think not to say within yourselves, [l] We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: [m] therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

11 I [n] indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: [o] he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly [p] purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will [q] burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

13 ¶ Then cometh Jesus [r] from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

14 But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to [s] fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

16 And [t] Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and, lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the [u] Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And [v] lo a voice from heaven, saying, [w] This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

Our Red Letter Bibles and Testaments

Our Red Letter Bible ONLY GENUINE EDITION

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible is the Authorized or King James' Version, unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

1 In the Old Testament, the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2 In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of the Saviour are Printed in Red.

3 A Red Star (★) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

Our Red Letter Bible, illustrated above, Contains Full References; also a Concordance, Subject Index, and Dictionary—all under One Alphabetical Arrangement—together with Helps, Maps, and Numerous Illustrations.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

93 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

A Modern Captain of Philanthropy

OUIS KLOPSCH, whom the whole world loved, left to every man and woman a rich legacy. He bequeathed to them the secret of his splendidly successful career. How he found the Master-key which opened doors that led to honorable service, and how he used it; how it abled him to carry out to complete triumph his wonderful work in almost every country on the globe, helped him over difficulties that would have halted most men, put great resources at his disposal, brought powerful people to his side and gave him as voluntary allies kings, premiers, potentates, cabinets, to further his world-wide enterprises—all of this, with much more, is disclosed in Mr. Pepper's book.

Actual Size of Book

The Life Work of Louis Klopsch is not an ordinary biography; it is a volume that thrills with its intense human interest and grips the attention from the first chapter to the close. We trace, step by step, the gradual development of the immigrant boy; we see him as the discoverer of the great secret almost at the outset of his business career, the possession of which transfigured his whole life.

(ILLUSTRATED)

A 20th Century Hero!

Guided by Mr. Pepper's vivid and realistic narration, we travel with Dr. Klopsch through the Western States in that terrible winter of 1892-93, when he succored our starving farmers. Then we go with him over sea to Russia, on his famous "mission of bread." We journey with him to Cuba, where he set food trains flying to save the starving reconcentrados. Now we spin along with him in a dog-sled over the frozen meres of Finland in mid-winter. Anon we wander at his side among the fever camps of stricken India, and listen to words of comfort for the suffering. We see him sending forth from the home ports his food-ships to far distant lands. We are spectators of his audiences with the Kings and Queens of Italy and Sweden, with the Russian Emperor at his summer palace at Tsarskoeselo and with high dignitaries in many lands, receiving congratulations and decorations.

Reads Like a Romance

The scene changes and we see him lovingly surrounded by the tenement waifs at the Children's Paradise which he created, and he joins in their games or leads them in song in the Children's Temple. We stand beside him as he speaks to the men of the Bowery Mission, or gives food and kind, sympathetic words to the gaunt shadowy figures of the "Bread Line." Like the magician's carpet in the fable, this wonderful book takes us almost around the globe with Dr. Klopsch. We feel the thrill of his splendid courage and his enthusiasm, and as we share in his campaigns, we get a glimpse of high ideals, far beyond the ken of sordid souls—ideals that glorify and ennoble life and make it well worth living. Read this Great Book for yourself. Send for it to-day and learn and apply the wonderful Secret of a Successful Life which it illustrates so well. We will send this Great Book, the LIFE WORK OF LOUIS KLOPSCH, 472 Pages, Large, clear type, Bound in Dark Green and Gold; a photogravure of Dr. Klopsch; our beautiful 1911 CALENDAR, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Weekly for ONE YEAR—FIFTY-TWO ISSUES—All FOUR, shipped to you prepaid, for only $2.00

The Christian Herald and The Outlook

BOTH MAGAZINES FOR THE PRICE OF ONE

ALL of Mr. Roosevelt's Editorials and articles on National Issues during the coming year will appear in The Outlook exclusively. By subscribing now you will receive free all of the coming 1910 issues of The Outlook, which means that your subscription to that magazine will begin now and continue to January 1,1912. The regular subscription price of The Outlook alone is $3, but by special arrangement The Christian Herald is enabled to make you this offer:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 52 Issues . . . . . }
THE OUTLOOK, 52 Issues (Including 12 Magazine Numbers) } $3

Of course you will disagree with Roosevelt in some things—possibly in many things: for it is the privilege of every American to have his own opinion on everything that relates to the national welfare or national politics. Our readers know that The Christian Herald is and always has been thoroughly independent, reflecting all shades of opinion and giving impartial presentation to both sides of every public question. There are multitudes of good Americans who regard Theodore Roosevelt as "our foremost living citizen," though others may differ, and it is for the edification of those who so regard him, as well as for those who don't, that we have made this special arrangement. Christian Herald readers of both classes, his friends and his opponents, are thus offered an opportunity to know just what this many-sided, strenuous American is doing and saying, for no matter how you may look at him he is a big newsmaker, and his terse, direct way of doing and saying things—of recklessly poking the truth at you, whether you like it or not—commands respect. Every American should keep posted on national events, and no one can do this unless he knows just what is happening in the vicinity of Theodore Roosevelt.

OUR RED LETTER NEW TESTAMENT

This Beautiful Volume is the Only New Testament which contains all the Words Spoken by Our Lord Printed in RED. It has Clear Type, is Exquisitely Bound in American Levant, Soft and Flexible, with Overlapping Edges, Red-Under-Gold, making a Compact Volume that may be conveniently carried in the pocket or hand bag. This Handy Volume is a Veritable Gem. The type is large and clear, and the printing is all that you could desire. There is no other Testament so serviceable as The Red Letter New Testament, owing to the emphasis it gives to Christ's own words, and the ease and facility with which one's favorite passages may be found.

It is 4 x 5⅝ inches in size, when open it measures 8 inches and weighs 8 ounces. It has gold edges on red, and 420 pages. From every standpoint we know you will find it a most delightful acquisition to your collection of books. We have distributed thousands and thousands of The Red Letter New Testament.

THE Red Letter New Testament is issued in both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is sent, all charges prepaid, together with The Christian Herald every week for one year; together with our beautiful 1911 Calendar, and a photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, ALL FOUR FOR ONLY $2.00

"History of All Nations"--15 Volumes

How often are you perplexed and annoyed and, perhaps, not a little embarrassed to discover that you cannot answer or do not understand a question that relates to history already made? Your children going to school need accurate information now if you desire their education to be thorough and accurate. That is the reason why the "HISTORY OF ALL NATIONS" should be in the Home of every Christian Herald family. These fifteen books cover the world's history from the dawn of civilization to the most modern important events. They are written in an easy, conversational style, free from cumbersome references and superlatives and deductions that make most histories dull and difficult to read. But to dip into any one of the fifteen books is to be swept along amidst the most delightful personalities that arouse your interest almost to a fever heat and you actually find yourself yearning for more. To spend hours with the mighty Napoleon and to witness his downfall, is to experience one of the swiftest changes of sentiment imaginable; and to live with the sad and ever-helpful Lincoln, is to take a fresh grip on life and its many problems.

Only 3⅓ cents a day for the complete set, containing 338 illustrations, 64 maps, 5,000 large pages, 3,000,000 words; each volume 10¼ inches high; weight of set complete, 60 pounds; shelf measurement of set, 20 x 10 inches. Bound in beautiful silk-finish cloth, stamped in genuine gold, with the lettering in gold on a deep red panel. Type is large and clear, and the paper is an especially heavy, rough-finished stock, having a beautiful texture. Every chapter is subdivided into sections; subheads then divide each section. A memorandum of each paragraph is printed on the margin of the page. Easy to locate any event in history—easier than the best arranged encyclopedia.

THE FIFTEEN VOLUMES will be sent, you to pay freight charges, for only $1.00 down, and then $1.00 a month for 19 months, less than 3⅓ cents a day. If the books do not please you, return them and your money will be refunded.

A Lifelike Portrait of Dr. Klopsch will be prized by all who knew him and who have been familiar with his wonderful work, as elsewhere described in this circular. It is from a photograph taken before his last illness, when he was in the full possession of his remarkable powers and engaged in his great philanthropies. It is the best kind of souvenir of the man of whom it was well said that "if every one whom Louis Klopsch has helped, throughout the whole world, were to throw a single flower upon his grave, it would make a fragrant monument higher than the tallest pyramid." Responding to a demand that has grown steadily since Dr. Klopsch's death, we have arranged to include with every yearly subscription to The Christian Herald, one of these fine photogravures, and we are sure you will welcome this opportunity to secure it from The Christian Herald.

The Christian Herald for 1911

In the coming year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will contain many new and striking features of interest for the general reader, in addition to its present excellent variety. These will include the following:

To the Highest Bidder. By Florence Morse Kingsley. Don't miss this serial story just beginning in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Mrs. Kingsley is the author of Stephen, Titus, Through the Needle's Eye, The Resurrection of Miss Cynthia, etc. Her new story is better than these. There is no tiresome introduction; the story moves quickly from the first page to the last, leading the reader with almost breathless interest from one telling incident to another, until the climax is reached. The heroine is one of the most interesting characters that have come from the brain of any author for a long time. Trying desperately to save the farm from the clutches of a money-lender who at the same time makes love to her, she raises the mortgage by resorting to a most astonishing expedient, faces situations which would cause less self-sacrificing hearts to quail, but meets and conquers them—a heroine in the small country town of to-day where great tragedies and comedies are lived out in the white houses on the green lanes One who has read the manuscript said with enthusiasm: "The characters are worthy the pen of Dickens." You cannot afford to pass this great serial unread.

In the Realm of Fiction. Twelve Short Stories by popular authors. Also a strong dramatic Serial Story at the beginning of the new year. Among the authors represented in this branch will be Silas Hocking, Wilfred Grenfell, Eleanor H. Porter, Susan M. Griffiths, E. Ryerson Young, Margaret E. Sangster, Miss E. L. Gebhard, Florence M. Kingsley, Kate Upson Clark and others.

Notable Sermonic Features. The sermonic pages in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are conceded to be unequaled. From week to week it gives the very "flowers of pulpit eloquence." The staff includes Bishops Quayle, Anderson and Warren, Pastor C. H. Sheldon, Prof. Torrey, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Revs. Hugh Black, Newell Dwight Hillis, Charles F. Aked, C. A. Eaton, J. Balcom Shaw, Wallace McMullen, James M. Farrar (of the "Children's Pulpit"), Dr. James Burrell, Rev A. B. Simpson, C. H. Parkhurst and others.

In Defense of the Old Bible. A remarkable series of articles by Clayton Sedgwick Cooper showing how the Word is spreading in our Homes, our Business Circles and everywhere, notwithstanding agnostic and infidel assaults. Every article a source of cheer and inspiration.

Sketches of Real Life. These articles will be vivid, realistic Stories of Actual Fact and Experience—not fiction—by Settlement Workers among the poor in our great cities, all over the country. They will be copiously illustrated with realistic photographs.

Articles by Famous Specialists. These will be valuable contributions on topics of universal interest, by men of distinction in special fields, including Prof. Edgar J. Banks and Prof. Mason P. Young, noted travelers and Orientalists; Pastor Charles Wagner, author of The Simple Life; Hon. C. M. Pepper, Felix J. Koch, John L. Harbour, Waldon Fawcett and others.

A Continuous World Panorama. From THE CHRISTIAN HERALD staff of Correspondents in every land—the largest of any family weekly in the world—there will be a succession of entertaining articles and photographs, describing the social and official life of different countries.

Young Folks' Department. Miss Janet Porter will begin a special department for the Young. It will be a very unique feature, and is sure to delight both the little folk and the grown-ups. Miss Porter has a remarkable talent for entertaining the juveniles, and her articles and illustrations will please them immensely.

Safeguarding the Public Health. Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale, will write on the new campaign for the prevention of disease and the necessity for the establishment of a National Department of Public Health. This touches closely every family in the land and the articles should be eagerly read by the heads of all American households.

OUR BEAUTIFUL 1911 CALENDAR

Did you ever see a more bewitching little baby? You can't help liking this one, because the half-hidden smile is really irresistible. Just stop long enough to look at the eyes—those big black eyes that fairly fascinate you. This baby is dressed as a baby should be, in her loose bonnet with the big clustering bows tied round her sweet, well-formed chin; and a snug little jacket with the inevitable cropped cape that protects and warms the little one. The Calendar has been exquisitely finished by an absolutely new photogravure process, and it is said to be one of the first color paintings ever reproduced in this manner. The colors are rich and perfectly blended. The baby is painted on a background of a soft, shimmering orange; the beautiful pale-blue bows give a delightful contrast that produces a perfect composition; and the radiance of a rose-like complexion, a charming pink and white combination so typical of health and happiness, have been so faithfully reproduced that they melt and shade one into another in absolute harmony. The miniature half-tone shown here is incapable, of course, of conveying any adequate idea of the Calendar itself, which is 14x18 inches in size, printed on the heaviest de luxe stock, a dream of artistic perfection. Think of the good old memories this little baby would awaken in your home—memories of the time when those near and dear to you were chubby little babies. The Calendar will be prized by the whole family. The dates are large and legible. It will be given free with each new and renewal subscription. A photogravure of Dr. Klopsch will be given with each new and renewal subscription to The Christian Herald.

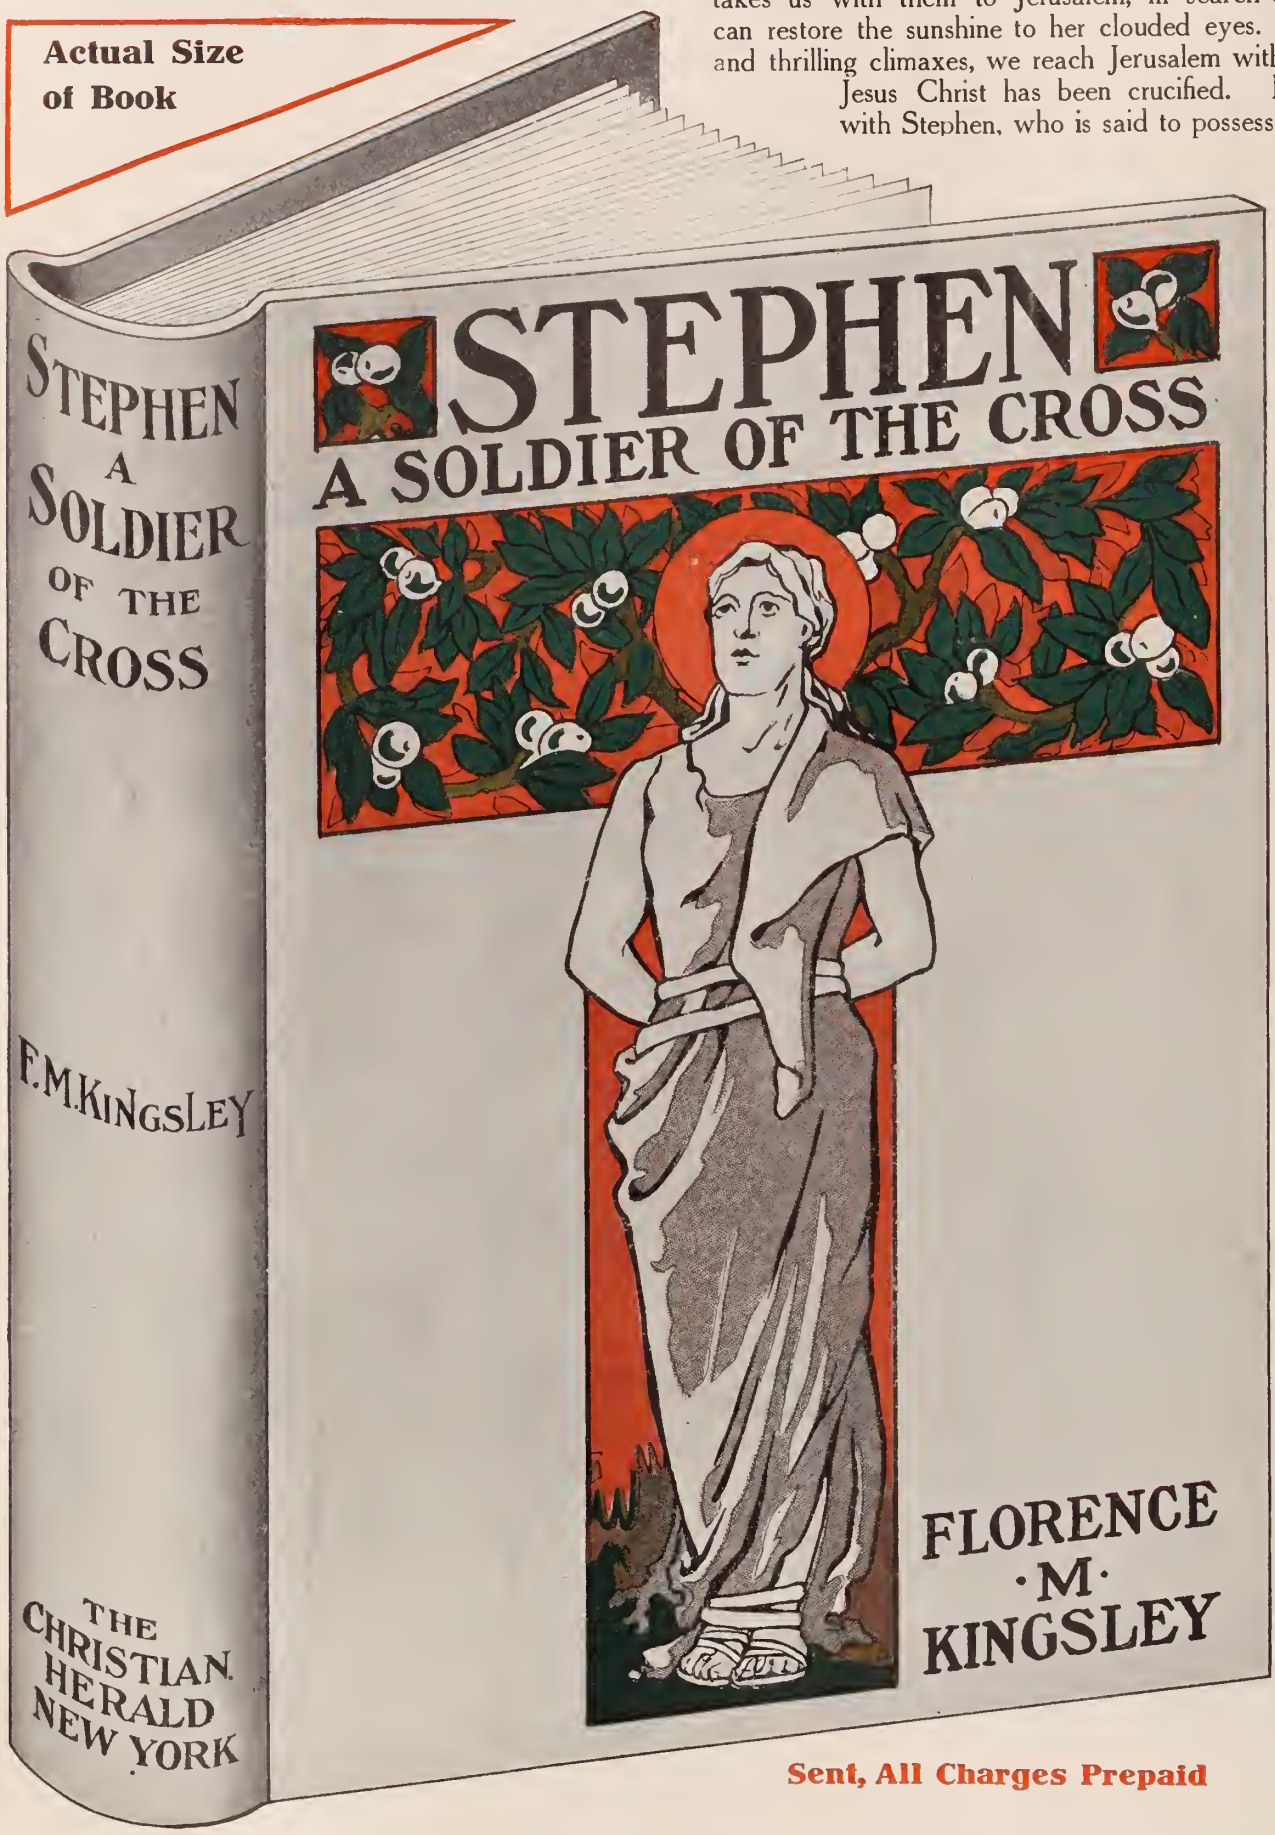
Tender, Dramatic and Full of Charm

THE name of Florence Morse Kingsley, as a writer of Biblical stories, is better known perhaps than that of any other living writer. She is the authoress of many famous stories; her "Titus" is said to have had the largest edition of any similar book. In STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, Mrs. Kingsley has woven a thrilling and intensely dramatic story of a lovable character whose life is little known. Beginning with the adventures of two little children, a blind girl and an active, sweet-minded boy, both forlorn, homeless and friendless, she takes us with them to Jerusalem, in search of Jesus, who the blind little girl believes can restore the sunshine to her clouded eyes. Thrown in the midst of many exciting and thrilling climaxes, we reach Jerusalem with our little wanderers, only to find that Jesus Christ has been crucified. But an accident brings them in contact with Stephen, who is said to possess the power of healing.

Actual Size of Book



Pathetic and Touching

"But she is blind," said Seth, looking wistfully into the face of Stephen, "and we have come from Egypt, seeking for the Jesus who can heal such. A beggar told us that He was dead, but it is not true?"

The face of Stephen glowed with a smile so angelic that the lad involuntarily cried out with wonder.

"Nay," cried Stephen, "He is not dead. He liveth forever more at the right hand of God."

Then raising his head he looked up into the dazzling blue of the sky. "Thou who hast said, 'Lo, I am with thee always even unto the end of the world,' look now upon this child who hath sought Thee for healing, through weariness, and thirst, and pain, these many days; and heal her, I beseech Thee, by the hand of Thy servant, according to her great faith."

Then stooping, while the lad held his breath with awe, he laid his hands gently, tenderly, upon the sightless eyes of Ruth. "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth," he murmured, "receive thy sight." And to the dark eyes of the maiden, erstwhile as irresponsive as soulless jewels, there flashed a look of intelligence. She gazed steadfastly into the eyes of the stranger.

"Art thou the man Jesus?" she whispered softly.

"Nay, my child," he answered. "I am but His servant, Stephen."

A Story That Thrills

To follow Stephen as he goes on his way preaching to the poor, ministering with deeds of kindness and consideration to the needy, healing the sick, comforting the friendless, and making all lives brighter and sweeter because he lives among them, is to be charmed and enchanted in a most delightful way. As the sweetness of his character lends itself to his manly acts and unselfish deeds, he draws you to him, and as you accompany him to the end, your heart overflows with sincere sympathy for one who has become endeared to you. The story of "Stephen" is beautifully told. Mrs. Kingsley has gathered the dust of the vanished life, and built from it the image of its forgotten beauty. It throbs and thrills with emotion and tender pathos. From the quiet, peaceful scenes with the loving apostles, to the stirring and dramatic climaxes, are only a step here and there. You will marvel at the wonderful and realistic descriptions; the vivid and glowing imagination of the writer, and above all her absolute sincerity, will completely captivate you. A special limited edition of STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, has been printed for CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. It is now off the press, and we are prepared to fill orders promptly. It is a splendidly made book, nicely bound in illuminated cloth covers, printed on desirable stock, clear type, the lines set well apart, making the reading easy and well-suited to almost all kinds of eyes. There are 369 pages in the book and a colored frontispiece. The book, STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, will be sent prepaid with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for ONE YEAR and a copy of Our Beautiful 1911 CALENDAR, together with a photogravure of Dr. Klopsch, ALL FOUR for only $1.8

Across the Plains of Palestine

By Prof. MASON P. YOUNG, Assiut, Egypt

NO civilizations of the world can compare with those that have sprung up around the harbors of the Mediterranean. Greece, Italy and Carthage will always be the wonders of history. Palestine, however, is different, in that her shore line is flat, being indented with only shallow estuaries here and there. It is not surprising that the songs of sailors putting out to sea are seldom heard in the records of the children of Israel.

Throughout the history of the Old Testament the Hebrews had little desire to engage in a commercial and sea-faring life. The sea spreads out before them for spectacle, for music, for promise, but hardly for use. In the Psalms, the straight coast line serves to illustrate the irremovable limits which the Almighty has set between sea and land. In the Prophets, its roar and foam symbolize the futile rage of the heathen beating on Jehovah's purpose for the children of Israel. "Ah, the boomings of the peoples, the multitudes, like the booming of the sea they boom, and the rushings of the nations like the rushings of mighty waters they rush. But he checketh it and it fleeth far away, and is chased like chaff on the mountains before the winds."

As it was in their literature so it was in their life—the sea was a barrier, not a highway. From the first, it was said: "Ye shall have the great sea for a border." Only three tribes ever touched the seashore. Dan was "remaining in ships" in Deborah's time, but he left them for the more secluded regions of the Jordan valley. No port is mentioned in connection with Asher and Napthali, the word "haven" being translated as but a "beach" washed by the sea. In the building of the temple timber was brought not to the harbor, but to the sea of Joppa.

Though nature has been so meagre in the provision of harbors, no one can deny her beneficence in the spreading out of the rich plain of Sharon. This stretches along the sea-coast from the extreme north to the farthest south, having an average width of from ten to thirty-three miles. The land is soft and fertile and has always been one of the most desirable sections of the Holy Land. As we pass through the plain, it is dressed in golden wheat and the harvesters are busy with their scythes. Nearby, the farmers are plowing with two yoke of oxen and the late spring cereals are being sown. Mother earth is yet moist and myriads of flowers are pushing their heads through and drinking in the warm sunshine. Among them is the anemone, pushing its tiny head above the others. This is the most beautiful of the flowers and the one that man admires most. It was to this—the most spontaneous expression of the divine in nature—that the inspired writer referred: "I am the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley." The whole plain is bathed in sunshine. The shimmering air is filled with bees and butterflies and with the twittering of small birds, hushed now and then, as the shadow of a great hawk blots the haze.

Such a plain, rising through the heat by dim slopes to the long, persistent range of blue hills beyond, presents to-day a prospect of nothing but fruitfulness and peace. Yet it has ever been one of the most famous warpaths of history. The northern end opens into the plain of Esdraelon, in the heart of Galilee, which would connect it with Babylon; and the southern is in easy and direct connection with Egypt. Along this historical highway have passed the armies of Thotmes, Rameses, Sennacherib, Cambyses, Alexander, Pompey, Titus, Saladin and Napoleon.

Not only were these regions afflicted with the terrors of war; they were frequently swept over with the most violent ravages of plague. The low swampy regions of the southern extremity, with their wells of brackish water and damp atmosphere, have always been the breeders of disease. It was here that the Philistines were struck, at a time when they were in camp against Israel, with "tumors in the groin and sudden and numerous deaths." Here Sennacherib's victorious army was infected by pestilence and melted north like a cloud; here in Justinian's time, the plague started more than once across the world. Here a Crusading expedition showed evidence of plague, and here, in 1779, Napoleon's army became infected and carried the disease into Syria.

In its earliest history, the plain was occupied by the Canaanites; most of its history, however, is in connection with the Philistines. This is the only race the children of Israel never conquered; but one with which, during the early part of their history, they were constantly at war. In her latter period, Israel lost all desire for the maritime plain and was contented to remain on her own hills, shut in from the rest of the world as God's peculiar people. The threats of prophecy against Philistia were not from the Israelites, but from Egypt and Mesopotamia. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zephaniah and Zechariah speak of the Philistine cities not hotly, as of enemies to be met in battle, but as victims of divine judgment which hovered over Israel and Philistia alike.

Thus closes the door of Old Testament history.

RESCUING LITTLE CHINESE CHILD-WAIFS

MANY readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who are interested in our orphan work in China will read with deep interest this remarkable letter from one of the missionaries who is now engaged in saving the poor little rejected and deserted girl waifs. The writer is Rev. O. E. Oberg, a missionary stationed at Saratsi, and the little biographical glimpses he gives us of these poor little wretched beings are pathetic enough to arouse sympathy even in the hardest heart. Some of the children he mentions have died; the others are now being cared for in the Saratsi Orphanage, their support being provided for by the generosity of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers.

Mr. Oberg writes: "Thirteen girls and one boy have been rescued from being put to a cruel death these three months. They are from the following places: Paotéo 2, Sharitsing 2, and Saratsi, with surrounding villages, 10, orphans. A short biography of each one of them may be of interest to their friends in the United States. They have got their names from stars which begin with 'Tien' (meaning heaven). No. 174, called 'Tien-lui' (heaven military wall), was born in Paotéo. She was carried out from her home by her own father. Having thrown her on the ground, he began to beat her with the dust basket in which she had been carried to the place. By good chance, a kindly man came that way, and began to make intercession for the child, but the father refused. Then it turned out into a quarrel between these two persons, and would probably have continued with a fight had not another man mediated between them. A nine-year-old daughter of Elder Heh heard about it, and took the poor little baby to the mission station.

"No. 175, 'Tien-pien' (heaven bonnet), was found outside the west gate of Saratsi. She had probably been put there on account of sickness, which is a very common way there of getting rid of sick children. She died in the afternoon of the same day. No. 176, 'Tien-ki' (heaven remember), was brought here by an old woman, as the parents did not want her. No. 177, 'Tien-huang' (heaven lake or pool), was found in a clay pit, near the temple of the god of wealth. That she had been taken out from such a place was proved by her muddy and cold body. It took time and nursing to get the little body warm again. But by and by she got well, and is all right now. She happened to get a very fitting name even before her story was told.

"No. 178, 'Shan,' was a boy taken from the hands of his father, when on his way to put the child to death, by putting opium in his mouth, before leaving him on the ground. He was very weak, and died on the third day after being brought here. No. 179, 'Tien-chiang' (heaven spear), was found de titute in a poor home, with a sick mother. No. 18 'Tien-uen' (heaven garden), when she arrived w found to be scorched by the sun, as she had be lying naked, exposed to the sun for a long time, a had suffered from its fierce rays.

"No. 181, 'Tien-pan' (heaven class), was co demned to death, because there were already oth girls in the family. No. 18 'Tien-p'ai' (heaven plank Her story is unknown. S died when eight days old. N 183, 'Tien-ch'uang' (heav couch), died from apople when fourteen days old. N 184, 'Tien-keng' (heaven store). Her parents are u known. No. 185, 'Tien-tsue (heaven goblet). Parents a story also unknown.

"No. 186, 'Tien-chian (heaven river), was suppos to be an 'unlucky child,' w would bring affliction to t family, and was therefore r jected. No. 187, 'Tien-ch'ie (heaven coin), was brought the chapel in Paotéo, but v have no statements about he "Pray that these little sta may 'shine for ever and eve and, in the right hand of t Lord, lead many wise and u wise men 'from the east to J rusalem'—which is above.

"We have now succeeded buying a place for the orpha by the side of our mission st tion. There were some o houses, which have been mo or less repaired for use in t nearer future, till we get ne houses built. As the place no purchased is insufficient, we hope to have mo ground before we make up a plan for ne buildings.

"Of the 118 children alive, 35 have been take from their nurses, and are now living in their ne home. 'It is not the will of your Father which i in heaven that one of these little ones should perish

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

"Will I?" said Jimmy hopefully.

Peg thrust his spade into the ground.

"Guess I'd better walk over t' the house with you, an' see if the's anythin' I c'n do," he said briefly.

Barbara was setting the table with quick darting movements of her little figure when the two came in range of the kitchen door. She paused abruptly at sight of them.

"You must come in and eat your dinner quick, Jimmy," she called, "or you'll be late to school!"

"You g'wan in, Cap'n," Peg urged in a diplomatic whisper. "I guess she's pretty nigh all right. But I wouldn't pester her none 'bout that letter ef I was you. Mebbe she'd ruther not talk 'bout it yet."

The child stole into the kitchen with hanging head and sat down at the table spread for two. He was very much ashamed of himself in the stormy light of Barbara's gray eyes; but Mr. Morrison's remarks concerning the Maker of the universe appeared worthy of passing on. He fortified himself with a large slice of brown bread and butter, thickly overlaid with apple-sauce.

"It couldn't have been very 'portant, Barb'ra," he said blandly.

The girl faced about in the act of taking two boiled potatoes out of a saucepan.

"But it was, Jimmy. I know that much; and I can't read it."

"Peg says there's Somebody a-lookin' out for things, an' He made that letter fall out of my pocket."

"Peg," interrupted Barbara wrathfully, "knows nothing about it."

"'N' He let it rain, too," pursued Jimmy determinedly. "'N' He let the ink run, 'n' the mud get on it. Do you want me to tell you who it was? Do you, Barbara?"

"Well, who do you suppose it was?"

"God!" exploded the child dramatically. "Peg said——"

"I don't want to hear what Peg said. He doesn't know."

"I shall put it," said the child, "in red ink, in my Vallable Inf'mation book. It is a vallable inf'mation."

"It would be, if it was true."

"An' if it isn't true, it's a vallable inf'mation. I'll put it down that way."

"I would," advised Barbara gloomily. Then she repented herself and stooped to kiss the child's quivering lips. "Anyway," she said, "I love you; and you didn't mean to lose the letter."

After Jimmy's inquisitive blue eyes were tight shut that night, Barbara examined the blurred sheet once more, holding it between her eyes and the bright light of the lamp. A word here and there appeared to emerge from the chaos, where the sharp penpoint had bitten the paper.

"—never forgotten," was tolerably distinct. Then followed a hopeless blur of brown earth stain and purple ink. But further down the page she read,

"Write—if you——"

That was all, except his name, "David Whitcomb," at the foot of the page.

The postmark had resisted the spoiling of both rain and mould, and read distinctly, as Al Hewett had declared, "Tombstone, Arizona," in a blurred circle, with the date "April 2" and the hour of stamping "2—P.M."

With a sudden glad impulse Barbara pulled a sheet of paper toward her.

"Dear David (she wrote): Your letter just reached me, but I can only read a part of it, because——"

She paused and hesitated, then went on firmly:

"Jimmy lost it and it lay out under a bush in the rain for more than a week. I can make out only a few words here and there, but these few tell me that you have not forgotten and that you want me to write to you."

The girl paused to draw a deep, wondering breath.

"I can't tell you how strange it seems to be writing to you, because I have been thinking of you, David, for nearly three years as dead. They said you were lost on a trail in Alaska. And I thought it must be true. But your letter—even though I can't read it—has brought me the assurance that you are not in some far-away heaven, where I have tried to picture you, David, but on earth——"

She stopped short, laid down her pen and listened breathlessly. She fancied she had heard the child's voice calling her from the room above. She glided noiselessly to the foot of the stair, and listened. Her slight figure seemed to melt, spirit-like, into the shadows. It was very lonely in the old house.

The tall clock on the stair-landing ticked loud and solemnly in the stillness, and the wind in the budding trees without swept past the house with a long sighing breath. The girl shivered as she listened, then she went quickly back to the sitting-room with its cheerful circle of light and draw curtains.

She mailed her letter the next morning, passing the great Jarvis mansion on her way to the post-office with averted looks. On the sixteenth morning thereafter she received back her message to David Whitcomb, with the words printed across the envelope "Not called for." She scarcely knew how much she had been expecting from David till her own unopened letter reached her with the effect of a door shut in the face of entreaty.

It was on that same day, as she walked slowly toward home leaving her fruitless letter in a trail of tiny white fragments behind her, that the high-stepping bay horse and red-wheeled buggy again passed her. She looked up involuntarily, her face white and sad, to receive a cold stare and curt nod from the man on the hig seat. His whip-lash curled cruell around the slender flank of his hors as he passed, and the sensitive creat ure sprang forward with a lunge an a quiver, only to receive a second an third stinging cut from the lash.

Barbara straightened herself as sh watched the light vehicle disappea around a turn in the road.

She was thinking with a vague ter ror that so he would have torture and driven her, cruelly, with no hop of escape. She was not prepared t see him return almost immediately a the same furious speed, and still les for his words as he pulled up his foam ing horse.

"Get in," he ordered her roughly, "I must speak to you."

She looked up at him, her gray eye sparkling defiance from under thei long curling lashes.

"No," she said loudly, "I will not."

"Will not?" he repeated. "But I say you shall listen to me."

She walked on quietly. He stared after her with a muttered oath, as if half minded to go on. Then he leaped down, jerked his horse roughly to the fence rail, tied him fast, and strode after the slim figure in the shabby black gown.

He overtook her in a few long strides. She turned to face him in the middle of the muddy road.

"I told you I would leave you to yourself. I meant to. I intended to let you be frightened, harassed, driven to the wall; but I can't," he said in a low, choked voice. "I—love you! I love you! Do you hear me?"

She shrank back trembling before the man's white face and blazing eyes.

"I never knew before what it was like to—to love," he stammered. "Bu I do now. What did you mean by saying that you would not—sell yourself for a worn-out farm? Sell yourself— to me? Why, girl, I'd give you all that

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Gifts Boys and Girls Can Make

A GREAT many best Christmas gifts can be made from odds and nds around the house, and believe me, boys and girls, I, as an "older," know that mother and father, aunts and uncles, yes, and all the little brothers and sisters, too, if they were old enough to think of it, would rather have a present you had made yourself that was ally useful or lots of fun to play ith, than almost any pretty little ing that you might go and buy. For ample:

Sailor Coaster

Useful Christmas Boxes

I know a boy who for gifts this hristmas has already made a shoe- x for his father, a mending-box for s mother, a shirtwaist box for his ster, a strong wood-box to put by the rary fire (there are ten in all), out common soap-boxes. These boxes e of various sizes, covered inside and t with bright cretonne. Raw edges d seams are hidden under narrow d braid held in place with brass- aded tacks an inch apart. The lids e fastened on with decorative brass nges and hasps, and underneath the etonne, on the top of the boxes, there e several layers of cotton batting.

A Variety of Bags

Bags are sure to be useful and ac- ptable.

A neat, pretty work-bag that any ndy girl can make, an old-fashioned ticule, a gay little bag to hang on e bureau for soiled handkerchiefs d collars, a laundry bag, shoe-bag, rning bag, a party bag for slippers d favors and fan, little linen bags r brushes and combs, hairpins, and ap for your friend who is going trav- ing. A sturdy denim school-bag ith an outside pocket and bound und with leather, for the little sis- r; a string-bag for the pantry; a oom-bag for the broom, and so on d on; there is almost no end to the t of gay bags that are not only hristmassy but are a pleasure to ake and a pleasure to receive.

Artistic and Easily Made

There are many ways of using blot- rs. Get two or three large sheets of ght and dark green or light and dark ue blotting paper. Cut the light eet into smaller right angle oblongs d mount on darker oblongs. Join e blotters by tying them with a piece narrow ribbon, paste a little cal- dar or a photograph of some poet or riter on the upper side.

Large sheets of good colored blotting paper made up with a cardboard back of silk or flowered muslin, make very nice portfolios or letter books. White blotters laid between thin boards and tied loosely with a ribbon are just the thing for the friend who is fond of wild flowers and likes to mount specimens.

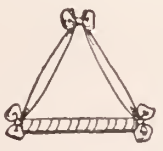
A Table Book-Rack

Take a strip of board 15 inches long, hinge onto either end of it uprights 4½ inches high. Stain with walnut or mahogany stain.

Table Book Rack

Cravat Rack and Pin Holder

Wrap and trim a 1¼ inch cardboard mailing tube with bright ribbons. Red and white is always effective.



Cravat Holder

Lay a piece of cotton batting 10 x 4 inches between a bit of fancy silk and a piece of any soft white woolen material cut the same size. Bind the edges with ribbon, sew a half yard of ribbon onto one end with which to tie the holder when folded. Fill with many sizes and varieties of pins.

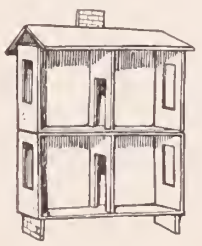
Four Pretty Sachets

Cut a fine handkerchief into quarters. Lay a square of cotton batting over each quarter, sprinkle with one part sachet and three parts powdered orris. Fold into a triangle. Whip narrow lace around the edges.

A Kimono Sacque

Kimono Sacque

In the centre of a 27-inch square of white cashmere or henrietta cloth, cut a round hole four inches in diameter, and proceed to cut the cloth in a straight line to a corner of the square. Turn a one-inch hem around all edges and sew on a broad bias band of silk; blue, violet or pink are the prettiest colors for this purpose. Bind the neck with narrower ribbon, leaving 14 inches at each end for a bow. To make the sleeves, join with short lengths of the narrower ribbon the points aa, bb; see diagram.



Small Pressing Board

Plane a piece of pine board 6 in. by 2½ ft. Bevel the edges and brace two uprights at 4 and 6 inches, respectively, from the end. On top of the uprights fasten a smooth one-inch board with rounded edges, 7 inches at the widest point, 4 inches at the narrowest, and cover smooth and tight with white flannel. Fasten with tacks.

Small Pressing Board

A Nursery Quilt or Table Cloth

On to two yards of bright colored denim, sew an 8-inch border of darker demin. Cut out of books and magazines pictures of animals, and trace the outlines onto demin or muslin of a contrasting color, and appliqué these designs with feather-stitching around the border. This idea may be varied, using illustrations from fairy-tales or any comical pictures that would be effective. A very charming effect can be got with animals and children scattered irregularly or in little groups, and appliquéd over the surface.

A Sailor Coaster

Make a pair of runners of one-inch hickory, 40 inches long and 8 inches high, smooth off the runners to a good angle, and nail strips of barrel iron along the lower edge. Take a ¾-inch board, 3 feet long, set the runners 18 inches apart and nail them on to the board. Allow about 2½ inches of the top to project on either side. For your sail, set an upright about a yard and a half high, fasten a light boom in a groove in the mast. See illustration. There is no end of fun in a Sailor Coaster.

For the Little Brothers and Sisters

One of the nicest gifts a boy can make for his little brothers and sisters is a doll-house and furniture. The diagrams on this page need little explaining or stated dimensions. They were really made from half a dozen cigar boxes in the odd moments of less than ten days, by a clever boy fourteen years old.

MORE PRIZES AND MANY PRIZE WINNERS

Who Was There Whom You Knew

Look with care at this ghostly picture—this strange old Civil War photograph. Perhaps among these Union soldiers about to venture into Petersburg—or among the besieged Confederates who tensely waited for the fire of this gun—which roared destruction five minutes after this photograph was taken—perhaps, in that dread place, someone near and dear to you moved and fought and fell.

To every American who gazes on a scene like this comes a sense of his own heritage, for the great Crisis that tested both North and South found neither wanting in skill or courage, and made our national Government, our unity, brotherhood and character.

But where did we get that war photograph? Why do we print it here? That makes a story in itself; for in securing this picture we secured three thousand five hundred more—an astonishingly vivid panorama of the greatest struggle in modern times.

We will send you that story well printed and illustrated by more pictures. Read this:

How We Got the 3,500 Unique Civil War Photographs

From Sumter to Appomattox—a camera and a dark-room, under protection of Allan Pinkerton and the Secret Service, followed the armies and the navies through the Civil War. The 3,500 photographs taken were bought by the United States Government for $30,000 and promptly buried in the War Department, an important part of our secret records. But the great camera genius who took the photographs kept a duplicate set for himself. When he died, these too were lost—until nearly fifty years after the war they were found again. How they were taken—how they were lost—how they were found again—how the REVIEW OF REVIEWS secured them, is a wonderful story that can't be told here.

But read the panel and send the coupon at once and you'll get the whole story.

I have—and my soul for—Listen! I'll do anything you say, if you'll only marry me. I'll give you a dozen farms. I'll——"

"Stop!" cried Barbara, her face slowly whitening. "I—I am sorry I said that. I didn't mean——"

"Do you mean that you'll marry me? Barbara—Barbara!"

His eyes devoured her.

"Listen!" he went on. "I've put in ten such days and nights as I never expected to spend in this or any other world."

He gripped her by the arm.

"You—must love me," he stormed. "I—I can't give you up!"

His shaken voice dropped into a low, pleading tone.

"You'll not believe it, Barbara. But I—didn't know what it was like to love any one. Why should I? I married for money—I'm not ashamed to tell you. But, Barbara! Barbara!"

The words rang out in a stifled cry, as he read the fear—the aversion—in hers.

She writhed out of his grasp, her breath coming and going in little gasps.

"Stop!" she cried. "I—can't listen!"

She clutched at the fence rail as if she feared his violence.

He folded his arms quietly, his face grown suddenly rigid.

"Something has happened since the other day," he said. "What is it?"

She was silent.

He took two long steps and stood over her, big, powerful, threatening.

"You shall answer me. Who or what is it that has come between us?"

Again he waited for her to speak: but she stood mute with bent head.

His clenched hands dropped at his side.

"You'll not answer me," he said, in a cold, hard voice. "Well, be it so; go your way, and I'll go mine. But—I shall not give you up. You're killing yourself with hard work; it is I who force you to it. I am your master. You can't escape me!

"You are not my master!" she said wildly. "I'm free—free!"

He turned without another look at her, his savage heel grinding an innocent clover blossom into the mud of the road.

VIII

Barbara stole softly down the creaking stair in the gray obscurity of dawn, her shoes in one hand, a smoking candle in the other. There was much to be done, much to be thought of, and Jimmy must not wake up to hinder for two full hours yet.

It was cold in the kitchen and the faint pink light streaming from the east shone in uncertainly through misted panes. Barbara sat down, her red lips sternly compressed, her dark brows drawn into a frowning line above her eyes, and applied herself briskly to lacing up her shoes. It was a relief to be accomplishing something real, tangible, after the whirling mist of dreams from which she had emerged shaken and breathless. Dreams of any description seldom visited Barbara's healthily tired brain, but the vanished darkness of the past night had been haunted with confused visions. Now Stephen Jarvis was pursuing her through trackless forests, where long branches reached down like crooked, grasping hands. Always she managed to elude her pursuer and always he followed, his panting breath in her ears, till suddenly stumbling and falling through a vast crevasse in the darkness she found herself on a wide plain, starred with narcissus, swaying spirit-like in the bright air; high over head white clouds floated and the winds of May blew cool fragrance into her face. Then, with the wild irrelevancy of dreams, she heard the raucous voice of Thomas Bellows, the auctioneer from Greenfield Centre, shouting something indistinguishal in the far distance. She was at hor now, hurrying in anxious haste fr room to room to find everything emp and desolate and the sun shining through dimmed window-panes on t bare floors. Outside on the lawn a co fused pile of household furnitu books and carpets, looking sadly wo and old in the pitiless light of da were being rapidly sold under the ha mer.

"Here you are, ladies an' gents shouted the auctioneer; "lot numb twenty-four, a strong, healthy you woman, kind an' willin'! A good co an' housekeeper. How much am I o fered? Come, ladies, let me hear yo bids!"

The faint light of morning touchi her closed eyelids like a cool finger-t aroused the girl to a consciousness reality (if indeed the experiences this mortal life be more real th dreams). She rose at once, dress hastily, and having by now finished t lacing up of her shoes stood gazing o at the familiar door-yard with gathe ed brows.

"I ought," said Barbara half alou in the silence of the kitchen, "to good for something." She looked dow at her young strong hands, han skilled in many uses, her forehead st puckered with unaccustomed thought

Then she opened the back door, quie ly, for she was still mindful of t sleeping child above, and went out in the frosty dawn. A robin was singi loudly in the top of the budding el down by the gate.

"Cheer up! Cheer up!" the jubila bird voice seemed to be saying. Th the song ceased and the strong brow wings spread and carried the voi toward the dawn, which now flur long streamers of rose and go athwart the frigid blue of the sky. bright, cold moon swung low in t west and the distant houses of t village, huddled close among dark fol of the hills, began to send up delica spirals of smoke which ascended a hung motionless in mid-heaven, lil unshriven ghosts.

Peg Morrison was washing the m off the wheels of the old buggy to t tune of Denis, lugubriously wafted t the winds of morning through his nos

"Peg!" cried Barbara in her imper ous young voice.

The old man stopped short, an apol getic smile overspreading his feature

"Good mornin', Miss Barb'ry," h said. "A nice, pleasant mornin', ain it? Thinks, s' I, I'll wash up this 'e buggy an' make it look 's well 's I ki Then, mebbe, 'long towards afterno I'll git 'round t' call on th' Hon'rab Stephen Jarvis. I reckon I——"

"No," interrupted Barbara decidedl "You mustn't do that. It wouldn't d any good," she added, in anticipation protest.

"It's th' matter o' th' onions I wa thinkin' o' bringin' to his attention, said Peg, raising his voice. "'F I c' prove to th' Hon'rable Stephen Jarvi that onions 'll raise that consarne mortgage within one year f'om dat I——"

"Peg," protested Barbara indignant ly, "How do you suppose I'm ever goin to train Jimmy to speak properly i you persist in using such language?

"Meanin' th' expression 'consarned o' course, Miss Barb'ry," acquiesce the old man meekly. "You're right, ain't no manner o' business to us such words b'fore ladies."

J. reenwood, Westfield, N. J., and the ev. Robert P. Kreitler, Church of the scension, Mount Vernon.

This anniversary of the Bowery lission has riveted the attention of inking people on the social problem f the unemployed. Here, as Superinendent Hallimond said, men gather ot only from all parts of America, but rom the four quarters of the earth. hey read about the wealth and splenors of the metropolis of the Western orld; they dream of it as an El Doado, a land flowing with milk and oney, and they direct their footsteps hither. As a consequence, New York s in certain parts the most congested ity in the world. In these parts, vhich are covered principally by the East Side and the Bowery, men and vomen herd and huddle together under he worst conditions, in quarters where he sunlight never enters, where the ir is poisonous and where disease and leath lurk in every crevice and corner. Sometimes four and five and more amilies occupy a single room, cook, at, wash and sleep in it. Others who re unemployed wander up and down n summer's heat and winter's cold, livng on charity. New York is the city f gilded misery for the poor and the nfortunate. To the man out of work, vithout money and without influence, ramping the streets from early morng till late evening, New York, with ll its teeming population, is as an arid lesert with no speck of green to refresh the eye or drop of water to cool he parched tongue. Yet in this desert f the unfortunates here and there, hough far between, are to be found ome oases. Of these the Bowery Mission is the most prominent. For ver thirty years it has stood as a haven of shelter, refreshing the unfortunates both in body and in soul. No discrimination is made at the Bowery Mission as to race, creed, class or caste. The only passport to its doors is misfortune. Within the past thirty-two months the Mission Labor Bureau has secured employment for almost ten thousand men and not one per cent. of these have been failures.

From November to April the Mission supports the Bread Line. In the depth of winter sometimes this Bread Line is 1,500 to 2,000 strong—an army of homeless, hopeless, hungry men and boys. Each one gets a warm cup of good coffee and a warm grasp of the hand from the genial, big-hearted superintendent and is made to feel that he is still recognized as a human being and a brother man. He is helped to work and to a better life and a nobler manhood. There are thousands who have gone through this experience and who, when they look back on the past, can say with grateful hearts, "God bless the Bowery Mission!"

The Decline in Meat Prices

DURING the second week of November, a general reduction in the price of meats and other stock-yard products took place throughout the country. The drop was from 10 to 15 per cent. The following table shows the difference between lately prevailing prices and those that ruled on November 18:

	Present price.	Former price.
Sugar	5c.	5½c. to 6c.
Flour (bbl.)	$6.75	$6.90
Pork	16c. to 22c.	20c. to 26c.
Lamb	13c.	18c.
Chickens	12½c.	15c.
Beef	10c. to 18c.	13c. to 21c.
Leg of mutton	10c.	15c.
Mutton quarter	12½c.	16c. to 18c.
Pork chops	16c.	24c.
Pot roast	10c. to 12c.	12c. to 14c.
Beef sirloin	15c.	20c.
Roasts	12½c. to 16c.	16c. to 20c.

Various explanations are given for the welcome fall in prices. One is to the effect that the big corn crop of 3,000,000,000 bushels is the potent factor in the situation and that the farmers, instead of selling the grain, will feed it to their live stock. J. Ogden Armour, the great Chicago packer, is quoted as saying that prices will go lower yet for months to come, but the descent will be gradual. He regards it as the outcome of the law of supply and demand. "Cattle are more plentiful and therefore meat is cheaper. The present situation is the result of an enormous corn crop and of previous higher prices that stimulated everybody to raise live stock. The public is getting the benefit of present conditions and should get further benefits, as the increased supply of live stock comes to the market."

Denver, St. Paul, Toledo, St. Joseph, Cincinnati, Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and other packing cities all report a decline in prices. Poultry is considerably cheaper. Hogs are $1.50 a hundred-weight lower than a month ago. Eggs and winter vegetables do not share in the decline, but it may be said, in a general way, that the cost of living promises to be considerably lower this winter than last, which is something for which the working multitudes at least will be thoroughly thankful.

A Husband's Debt to His Wife

HAPPY marriages outnumber the unhappy by ten to one—ay, a hundred to one; yet we hear more about the marriages that fail than we do of the successful ones. Occasionally, however, the public is permitted to know something of the marriages that have not failed. A notable case in point was a recent celebration by an aged couple of the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding. It was a festival occasion and the husband paid this beautiful and no doubt well-deserved tribute to his wife, in presence of the assembled company:

"During my married life of fifty years I have been blessed by having a companion such as a man rarely finds—a pure, good, big-souled woman, always cheerful and hopeful, always tender and wise, always thoughtful of others. She has been untiring in her devotion to her family, yet she has found time to bring sunshine into the lives of multitudes of unfortunate people. All came to her as to a mother, sure of her deep sympathy and ready assistance, and she never failed them. Her first thought has always been for others; her last for herself. One finds few people so loved and respected. She represents the highest type of true, noble womanhood, and my success in life is mainly due to her untiring support."

The influence of such a wife on a man's career is hardly to be estimated. The most fitting description is that in Proverbs, 31st chapter, which shows that a good wife has the same characteristic virtues in all ages and that her price is indeed "above rubies."

Six years ago I planted oranges on 55 acres of land in the San Joaquin Valley California

The land was worth $75 an acre. Today it's worth $1200 an acre. Last year my income was nearly $4000. This year the crop will double and it will increase about 50 per cent each year for two years more.

W. N. Rohrer, Reedley, Cal.

The San Joaquin Valley is in central California, the land of sunshine. Here are 10,000,000 fertile acres, with an abundance of water for irrigation coming from the snows of the High Sierras. Every staple crop is profitable. It's unequaled for citrus and deciduous fruits.

A man of small capital can get quick returns from vegetables, alfalfa, hogs, dairying and poultry. A few acres intelligently handled will support a family while the orange orchard and the vineyard are coming into bearing.

I am employed by the Santa Fe Railway to help settle up the country along its Southwest lines.

I know this valley like a book. I have gone over it thoroughly. I have seen crops planted, growing and harvested. I have talked with farmers, ranchers and orchardists, with merchants and real estate agents. I have kept tab on cost of crop production from start to finish. I have collated the testimony of experts in the raising of oranges, lemons, raisin grapes, vegetables and grains.

All this information is condensed into an illustrated 72-page folder. Won't you write for it, giving me your full name and address? Ask me any question you want to about land and crops. Also I will send you our immigration journal, THE EARTH, six months free.

Jesus, the Saviour King*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

AMONG the ancient Romans only the vilest criminals were crucified. What Roman, then, would have used it in the decoration of any building or worn it upon his person?

The Evolution of the Cross

Now the directly opposite view of the cross is held. Some of the most magnificent buildings in the world are shaped according to the proportions of the cross, while the choicest forms of art and architecture owe their composition to it. And the cross is now worn by kings and potentates, by men and women in high circles and low. The cross is made in every sort of metal, and in every sort of stone: granite, marble, alabaster, iron, silver, gold; and in every sort of jewel stone: pearl, ruby, emerald, amethyst, diamond; nothing is too precious for its use.

"The cross of the God-man hath put an end to the punishment of the cross, and instead made the cross the symbol of humanity, civilization, progress, peace and love."—Edersheim.

It is to-day the most loved and highly honored symbol in all the world. It is the sublimest expression of the love of God for the world. A thing once so low, and now lifted so high, is best described in Christ's own words: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto myself." It is not the cross, so simple in itself, that we love and cherish, but it is the memory of the love of our Saviour crystallized about the cross that makes it so altogether lovely to us.

In St. Peter's at Rome, and in many other Roman Catholic churches, pieces of "the true cross" are shown on Good Friday. Some gullible people easily believe these are true relics. Inquire how they were secured, and you will be told that Helena, the mother of the Emperor Constantine, was shown in a dream the exact spot where the crucifixion had taken place four hundred years before, and that she went to Jerusalem and found a sepulchre by the side of which were three crosses. It was a problem to discover which of them was the cross of Jesus. To prove it, she had all three crosses applied to a sick woman, and while two had no effect upon her, the third one restored the woman at once to health. And Helena caused a church to be erected over the spot where she found the cross, which became known as the "Church of the Holy Sepulchre," and the "true site of Calvary"!

The late Dr. Selah Merrill, who for many years was the American consul at Jerusalem, put much effort in trying to discover the actual site of Calvary. He says: "Everybody accepts the fact that Christ was crucified without the walls of Jerusalem. The New Testament requires this (Heb. 13: 12; Matt. 28: 33; John 19: 17). . . . In 1886 I had the good fortune to discover what is unquestionably the second wall of ancient Jerusalem, and hence the wall without which Christ was crucified. . . . We had already one terminus, and also the direction of the wall. It encircled the north part of the town. This is the statement of Josephus (Wars, v., 4, 2), and what we find corresponds exactly to his description. . . . Less than two hundred yards north of the north wall of Jerusalem, and not quite three hundred yards from the Damascus Gate, there is a hill above what is known as Jeremiah's Grotto. This hill was wholly without the city as it existed in Christ's time. It is now used as a Mohammedan burying ground, and has been so used for centuries. It is forty feet above the level of the country about it. Its top commands an extensive view every direction. There are many re sons which led me to think that this the site of Calvary:

"1. It is a sightly spot, which we a led to suppose was true of the place crucifixion.

"2. It was 'nigh to the city,' as required by the words of John (19: 20

"3. It was close to the military roa which led out of the Castle of Antoni

"4. It was necessary that the Cast of Antonia, the military road leadir to it, and the place for the executic of criminals should be in rather clos proximity to each other, and the hi in question meets these requirements.

"5. A city like Jerusalem would hav a definite place for the execution c criminals. . . . At the usual plac of execution, therefore, Christ, wh was put to death by Roman sanctio was crucified.

"6. The spot we are now speaking c was the traditional place of the stonin of St. Stephen. Being a matter c tradition, no special reliance could b placed on this fact, did it not harmoniz so well with all the other circun stances. . . . I have visited the spc with scores of intelligent persons, an gone over the arguments with then and so far as I know, every one ha been impressed with the strong an cumulative proof that this is the plac where Christ suffered on the cross."

We may add that this particula location is frequently called "Gordon' Calvary," because General C. G. Gor don, who died at Khartoum, thoroughl and scientifically examined the spot and pronounced it the true Calvary Dr. Merrill further says: "If this is th spot where his words were fulfilled 'If I be lifted up,' half of Jerusalen could from their housetops have wit nessed the scene, and likewise peopl from Olivet, Scopus, and much of th surrounding country beside."

The Mournful Journey

The start was made from the Præ torium, Pilate's judgment hall. (Doré' picture, "Christ's Descent from th Prætorium," is a wonderful represen tation of this scene.) In the lead o the procession as it moved out o Pilate's castle was a soldier bearing a board on which was written in three languages: Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews, the accusation of Christ. This was afterwards nailed or the cross above the head of Jesus. Next followed the centurion who had been given charge of the execution, then four soldiers guarding Jesus, who bore his own cross, as was the custom. Then came the two thieves, who were to be crucified at the same time, bearing their crosses, each guarded by four soldiers; then the multitude thronging after, among whom were the weeping women (Matt. 27: 55). It is hardly probable that the high priests and Sanhedrists were in the throng at first, but that they joined it after learning of the inscription which Pilate had placed upon the board. They felt it incumbent upon themselves to counteract by jeers any anti-Jewish feeling that might be excited by the thrust of Pilate. The way the procession moved was through the street Via Dolorosa—the Sorrowful Way—to the Damascus Gate. Passing through this, they met Simon of Cyrene, and as Jesus was sinking beneath the burden of his cross, they took it from him and laid it upon Simon. It has been suggested that Simon did not bear the whole cross, but only that part which dragged on the ground (Luke 23: 26). Passing eastward from the Damascus Gate, along the north wall, they came to Calvary, which was only about three-quarters of a mile from where they had started.

Golgotha as it is sometimes called, meaning the place of the skull, not because there were any skulls lying about, but because of the peculiar appearance of the front of the hill, which even to-day looks like a skull with eye sockets, nose and mouth) some benevolent persons offered Jesus wine mingled with myrrh, as the custom was to do for those about to be executed, in order to dull their sensibilities—a sort of anæsthetic. It was provided by a company of kind-hearted women in Jerusalem. But Jesus, when he had tasted it, would not drink of it. He had no desire to escape anything. At every point in his arrest, and accusation, and condemnation he might have escaped by using his miraculous powers. Why did he not thus escape? There is no reasonable explanation except that which he gives and his apostles repeat: "He suffered the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God" (I. Peter 3: 18).

Jesus Crucified

There on Calvary they crucified him! He was nailed to the cross as it lay upon the ground, and was then slowly raised to an upright position. Then followed the crucifixion of the two thieves, one on his right hand and the other on his left; and thus "he was numbered with transgressors" as the prophet said he would be (Isa. 53: 12). The four soldiers who had guarded Jesus took his garments as their perquisites, and cast lots how they should be divided among them; the headgear, the outer cloaklike garment, and the sandals. Besides these was the inner gament, or seamless robe. For this they cast lots because it could not be divided.

The Voice from the Cross

1. "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." A prayer instead of condemnation for those who had nailed him there.

2. "To-day shalt thou be with me in Paradise"—words spoken to the penitent thief, when he had asked Jesus to remember him when he should come into his kingdom, while the other thief continued to rail at Jesus, joining with the chief priests and scribes and elders who mocked Jesus, saying: "He saved others; himself he can not save. He is the King of Israel, let him come down from the cross and we will believe on him. He trusted in God; let him deliever him now." At first both thieves had joined in the accusations.

3. "Woman, behold thy son." "Behold thy mother." Why did the heart of the mother Mary not break as she witnessed the dying agony of her Son? Special grace from God must have been given her to bear it. And too, she would not add to his agony by dying there, and so for his sake she bore up. The undying love of her Son showed itself in his solicitude for her. He would give her another son, even John the beloved disciple (the only disciple near enough to witness the last scenes upon the cross). And John who loved him so needed a mother to comfort him. There was already a tie between Mary and John, for she was the sister of his mother, Salome, the wife of Zebedee, his father. It is recorded that from that hour John took Mary to his own home. He was indeed a son to her.

4. "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" We can not fathom the depths of that cry. It is useless to try. If Jesus had not been "tempted in all points like as we are," he probably would not have uttered that cry. So by it, he comes into closer sympathy with us, for even the best of men have had the discord of despair sweep over their souls.

5. "I thirst." It is the only expression of bodily suffering which Jesus made while on the cross.

6. "It is finished." Not his life, but that for which he came into the world—to save others. "The great transaction's done." Death was no thwarting of Christ's plan, but its crowning touch. From the beginning he had looked forward to "his decease which he should accomplish at Jerusalem."

Some there are who object to making much of the "blood." Let them note that Christ when he chose an act of his to be often repeated "in remembrance" of him, chose not some scene that would recall his work as a teacher but his atoning death.

7. "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit." And then he died.

It was the hour of high noon, but darkness was over the face of the earth for three hours. Just at the lightest part of the day it was darkest. And earth trembled in agony, for there was an earthquake; the rocks burst, and the tombs were opened, and there was a resurrection of the dead, for those who were in their tombs came out alive. And over there in the Temple the Jewish hierarchy was done away with, for the veil which divided the Holy Place from the Most Holy Place was rent in twain. There was no longer any need of intercession by the man-priest, for now we have a "great High Priest who hath passed through the heavens, even Jesus the Son of God" (Heb. 4: 14).

A Word of Praise

WE recently called attention to the very honorable dealing of one of our advertisers, who had refunded quite a large sum of money to one of our subscribers, who had several years previously taken up with a financial proposition offered by the advertiser. In this particular case the advertiser was in no way obligated, as the subscriber had received full value for his money, and there was not the slightest suggestion of fraud. In fact, the subscriber was willing to abide by any decision made by the advertiser; but the latter, believing in the theory of "the customer be pleased," decided to refund the full amount received by him.

This is not the only case of this kind, as we constantly receive letters from subscribers commending the good treatment accorded them by our advertisers. For instance, we have just received the following from a subscriber who had previously written us:

"DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD: I sent you an inquiry last week as to the reliability of the ——— Co. They have since made good with a garment of such value that I am glad I saw their advertisement in your paper.

"Very truly yours,
"H. L. K."

It is a great satisfaction to us to receive letters of this kind. It shows that not only do our subscribers feel protected by our guarantee, but that our advertisers live up to the spirit of it.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement.

"THE purpose of Pearson's Magazine is to present information and entertainment---information on subjects which lie close to the heart of the average man, subjects which have to do with his daily expenses, his government, his health, his general welfare. Once in a while a foreign subject will be discussed, but only in its relation to the average American---or as entertainment."

Such was the statement made recently in response to numerous requests by Arthur W. Little, the head of Pearson's Magazine.

Mr. Little enjoyed the intimate friendship of that splendid man, Louis Klopsch, and frankly attributes much of his spirit of humanism and championship of the cause of the plain people of the country to the inspiration of the late lamented proprietor of The Christian Herald.

If you are going to take any magazine in addition to The Christian Herald, Pearson's should be your first choice.

To Endow the Red Cross

PRESIDENT TAFT, as the head of the American National Red Cross, has written a letter to the New York members of the Red Cross Endowment Fund Committee in which he sets forth the general purpose of the endowment scheme. The President's letter says:

"The time has come when the American Red Cross should be placed on a permanent and efficient basis by an endowment fund whose income will enable it to be prepared at all times to carry out the purposes for which it has been created. The funds for relief work received by the American Red Cross within the last five years amount to nearly $5,000,000 and prove the confidence the public places in the society. Public confidence is most important, but it is of equal importance that the society should be able to maintain an organization which is capable of administering such large funds to the greatest advantage. The experience in relief matters gained by a permanent organization is beyond question and insures a far abler and wiser expenditure of relief funds than can be secured by temporary and suddenly created committees. The accounts of the Red Cross are required by law to be audited by the War Department. The officers of the society, with the exception of the national director and secretary, serve without compensation, some of them devoting the greater part of their time to its work. By its methods, the co-operation of such organizations as can be utilized for active relief work is being secured, thus assuring trained service without the necessity of maintaining a corps of its own workers.

"Experience has shown that in cases of great disasters, such as occurred at San Francisco and in Italy, large contributions are received by the Red Cross; but in the constantly recurring disasters where smaller communities are stricken, and should receive a certain assistance, the contributions are far too small to meet the need. Moreover, in the case of great disasters, the Red Cross should have such a balance in hand as to enable it to take immediate action, without being forced to wait until contributions are received. To provide this first prompt assistance at times of disasters of great magnitude, and to render the necessary aid in cases of calamities to smaller communities without too frequent public appeals, the American Red Cross should be assured of an adequate income. By enabling the society to continue and extend its system of first aid instruction under the First Aid Department, and its courses in simple home nursing of the sick for women under its Nursing Department, a personnel valuable in time of disaster will not only be secured, but instruction of constant and continuing usefulness will be provided.

"Though willing to contribute generously for relief after great disasters, it is difficult to obtain in this country a large membership contributing small annual dues. The American Red Cross received last year from the 50 per cent. of annual dues paid into the national treasury less than $4,000. The Japanese Red Cross in 1908 received from the annual dues of its 1,440,000 members over $1,000,000. The brief statement in regard to the endowment fund of the American Red Cross compared with those of the societies of several other nations shows how far this country is behind in this respect. An endowment fund for the Central Office of the Red Cross, far from becoming a stagnating influence, as in cases where endowments are for local purposes, will provide the means of continued stimulation to the State Boards and Chapters scattered over the United States and its dependent possessions.

"The standing of this remarkable organization throughout the world, its importance to our own country, and its beneficent influence for peace and good will in international relief work, commend it to the public-spirited men and women of the United States. I believe you cannot appeal to them in vain to aid in providing the American Red Cross with an endowment fund of $2,000,000, less than the funds of the societies of the other first Powers, so that our National Society may take its proper place in this great international institution."

The statement appended, to which the President's letter refers, shows these instructive comparisons between the American Red Cross and the Red Cross Societies of other countries:

	Funds.	Property, buildings and supplies.	Total.
Austria	$1,732,628	$741,949	$2,474,577
Hungary	412,512	555,880	968,392
France	3,547,361	724,115	4,471,476
Italy	970,069	577.479	1,547,548
Prussia	2,889,948	2,000,000	4,889,948
Other German States	.....	.....	2,548,265
Japan	7,011,992	1,068,013	8,080,005

American membership dues, interest and contributions, $100,553.

This statement does not include the $424,500 promised or contributed to the New York Endowment Fund Committee to November 1, 1910.

The British Red Cross, in a printed statement, says that the income from its capital is sufficient to maintain the organization and administration of the society in time of peace without demands upon the public, the use of annual dues or any other donations.

This appeal from so high a source should stimulate the patriotism and humanity of Americans to make the American Red Cross self-sustaining by a substantial endowment. The National Treasurer of the Society is Charles D. Norton, 341 State, War and Navy Building, Washington, D. C.

Ever since this theatre meeting, the melodies sung that day have been popular behind the stage curtains. Dr. Chapman was equally wise and masterful in his sermon, and gave no approval to the theatre as an institution nor to theatre-going as a practice.

This evangelistic campaign is the most extensive ever undertaken in Chicago. There have been over eighty evangelists, singers and special workers engaged in carrying on the meetings and allied lines of activity. Every class has been ministered unto—the men, the women, children and young people, shop and factory workmen, police and firemen, attendants and actors at the theatre, dwellers in the slums and in vicious resorts and people to whom Testaments have been given. Even the Chinese have had the Gospel preached to them in their own tongue, Mr. George T. B. Davis speaking to them through an interpreter. Group meetings have been held in the suburbs and in the wealthiest neighborhoods, as well as in the districts populated by the poorest and most ignorant foreigners.

One factor of present and future value, in which the laymen's evangelistic council have co-operated with the International Sunday School Association, was the home visitation movement, by which a canvass was made of Chicago and suburbs and the record secured of church attendance and church preference. This was Chicago's first experience in such an undertaking and the result has been astonishing. Five hundred and sixty thousand families were visited and the record made of 2,040,000 individuals. Of this number 40,200 people stated that they were members of some church, but were not identified with any church in Chicago or suburbs. The hunting up of these lapsed or indifferent Christians is one of the essential features of this evangelistic campaign. Many churches already report large accessions to their membership.

As the campaign draws to a close, the efforts of the workers are being redoubled. The north side tabernacle, known in Chicago as the Wilson Avenue Tabernacle, has been open two Saturday evenings as well as on the third Sunday afternoon. The West Side or Austin Tabernacle also opened Sunday afternoon with an extra service at which Rev. W. R. Lane of London was the speaker, the Chapman-Alexander contingent coming on at night. Commander Eva Booth of the Salvation Army was the speaker at the Wilson Avenue Tabernacle the second Saturday evening. Weather conditions have been well nigh perfect, no rains, no snow, but for the most part clear, crisp fall weather.

A Delighted Iowa Reader

The beautiful book, Hero Tales from American Life, was received with surprise and delight, for I had not expected such a finely bound book. It was a great deal nicer and better than the description. I think every American home ought to have this book, for it is so instructive and is told so interestingly. I don't see how you can give such nice premiums when THE HERALD itself is so good.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD should be established in every home.

Here's Robert W. Chambers' greatest story and all the good reading of the Cosmopolitan for a whole year for $1.00

Here's the biggest dollar's worth of good reading ever offered. A whole year of the Cosmopolitan including Robert W. Chambers' great, new novel, "The Common Law," illustrated by many full page pictures by Charles Dana Gibson.

Nothing that Mr. Chambers has written, and his recent stories have sold over the two million mark, equals his latest production, "The Common Law." The theme of the story is one of great heart interest, dealing with a vital problem of our complex modern civilization. And it is illustrated as Mr. Gibson, the great master of pen-and-ink alone could illustrate it. For a two-cent stamp we will send you a free booklet containing the first chapters of the story and two pictures.

But big as this Chambers story is, it does not overshadow our other offerings, for the "Cosmopolitan" is a magazine that does things—big things in a big way.

The "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" stories, by George Randolph Chester, will appear exclusively in the "Cosmopolitan." And you'll like this new series better than any that have preceded it, for he has a richer invention and plays the game of making "easy money" with a keener zest and a livelier spirit.

VALERIE WEST

the heroine of Robert W. Chambers' story, "The Common Law," as pictured by Charles Dana Gibson

This is the story of a young and beautiful woman who has many interesting experiences in the artistic world of New York. Famous artists and wealthy members of the social aristocracy of the metropolis are prominent in the action of the story which hinges chiefly on the struggle between snobbery and true affection. It's a story that will appeal to feminine readers especially, who will find the social experience of Valerie of absorbing interest.

General Nelson A. Miles tells the story of his life to "Cosmopolitan" readers.

Charles Edward Russell continues his articles, "What Are You Going To Do About It."

And more stories by Sir Gilbert Parker, Rex Beach, Bruno Lessing, Arthur Stringer and many others.

You get all this in the

Make Your Own Table Syrup With

MAPLEINE

Granulated Sugar and Water.

Here is the recipe:

Two cups of boiling water, four cups of granulated sugar and one heaping teaspoonful of Mapleine. Thoroughly dissolve the sugar in the water, stir in the Mapleine and strain through a damp cloth. This makes one quart of delicious table syrup, which is ready for use as soon as cold.

It is difficult perhaps for some to see how any manufactured product can possess superior qualities to the natural product with which it is compared. To say that Mapleine is better than maple would not, perhaps, carry conviction to all readers of a magazine like the CHRISTIAN HERALD. Therefore a demonstration is required.

Therefore we ask you to be the judge—obtain a bottle from your grocer and remember that we sell Mapleine on the complete understanding that if it is not perfectly satisfactory, or better still, completely to your liking, if made according to directions, it can be returned at our expense, and your money will be refunded.

A 2-oz. bottle costs 35c and makes 2 gallons of syrup. If your grocer can't supply you, write to CRESCENT MFG. CO., Sole Mfrs., 317 to 321 Occidental Avenue, Seattle, U.S.A.

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LAMP

Once filled with kerosene it will burn for 40 hours and is absolutely odorless. Ornamental, too, because handsomely constructed of brass, nickel-plated, and each lamp is provided with enough wick to last several years. The lamp can be used in entries, hallways, closets, and is invaluable for Nursery and Sickroom

Young People's Societies

Christian Characteristics*

ALL of us of the modern world aim to resemble each other. Even the cut and fashion of clothing are becoming alike all the world over at any given time.

It is said that the peasants of every country are gradually giving up their distinctive and often picturesque costumes. A dull monotony of array is invading the whole earth. Only in the Far East, where the turban and the flowing robe have reigned since the earliest ages, does any whole people still retain its original, characteristic dress.

As with our outer raiment, so with our inner selves. In the olden days, travelers talked with each other as they rode along. Now it is the rarest thing in the world for strangers to address each other without an introduction.

Our fellow-travelers may speculate to any extent regarding our identity, our business, our domestic relations; but we generally keep them to ourselves. By no look or stray word do we usually reveal ourselves. Unless we are at a convention or a special meeting, we do not wear badge or ribbon.

Even the ardent appeals to members of great Christian brotherhoods and sisterhoods to display conspicuously, wherever they go, the emblems of their faith, fail to bring them forth.

The modern mind prefers anonymity. The "doorplate" has disappeared from the person just as it has disappeared from the house.

Under conditions like these how can we demonstrate to outsiders our Christian faith? Is it possible so to carry ourselves that we may proclaim our fealty to Christ wherever we go?

Even when we talk with others, even when we touch elbows with them in our daily business, we have usually little opportunity, unless we make it, for showing forth the faith that is in us, and far too little is done or said to make the opportunity.

Herein lies a wonderful testimony to the power of the Gospel. Such has been its penetrating quality and its attractiveness to the minds of men, that the Christian standards of pity, purity, altruism and forgiveness have become virtually the standards of every so-called Christian nation, though thousands there do not recognize the source of their virtues.

A long-time missionary to Japan recently declared that the number of acknowledged Christian converts conveyed no idea of the effect of Christianity upon the Japanese nation.

"It is in their ideals and their national customs," he said, "that the influence of Jesus is most plainly to be seen. The plural marriage, the ignorance and degradation of woman, the neglect of the feeble, all these and a score of other vicious features of Japanese life, are disappearing under the white light of Christianity."

The great outward differences that distinguish the Christian from the respectable non-Christian are these two:

The first is that the Christian attends regularly the services of his church, and strives by every means in his power to upbuild it.

The second is that he has a burning thirst for the conversion of souls. He seeks opportunities to talk alone with the unrepentant upon the subject of religion. He writes letters to them. He invites them to go with him to devotional meetings.

And it is the inner life of the Christian which gives him the power and the impetus to do all this. Light and strength come to him from the daily study of the Word; and through unceasing prayer, God grants the gift of his all-conquering Spirit.

December 11. TEXTS: Mal. 3: 1, 2; Matt. 3:

THE LITTLE STRIPED CAP

'TIS but a little striped cap,
All faded, mussed and torn;
It was the first my baby boy
With childlike pride had worn.

I see again his smiling face,
And hear his words of joy,
As when, with prattling voice, he said:
"I papa's great big boy.

"Jus' look at me, so big, so tall,
Almos' as big as you."
Then tipped his cap and made a bow
And said, "How do you do?

"I's going to be a preacher man,
And preach, and pray, and sing,
And tell all little boys and girls
That Jesus is our King.

"And when He sends for me to come
To visit Him some day,
I'll chase the little lambs about,
And make them skip and play."

Ah! little did I think that day,
As I sat there and smiled,
That death should come and take away
My precious darling child.

Before the roses bloomed again
We laid him 'neath the sod;
His spirit went to live with Christ
And be at home with God.

I'll hang this little cap in state,
Its value is untold:
It tells me I've a little "lamb"
Safe in the heavenly fold.

China's First Parliament

A SPECIAL correspondent of the New York Herald, writing from ekin, October 15, gives this interest- ng pen picture of the first National ssembly ever held in the Chinese mpire:

"For China the installation of the 'zu-cheng Yuan marks the beginning f a new era. For the world at large is an event of supreme importance, nce necessarily the world must be eeply concerned in any movement that ffects for good or for ill the welfare f a nation representing one-fourth of he human race.

"From the galleries of the large as- embly room of the old Law College, in hich the sessions of the Tzu-cheng uan are to be held until the new par- ament building is ready for occu- ancy, the scene is one not only inter- sting but impressive.

"The hall is extremely simple. There s nothing in it, or in the body itself, hat indicates the splendor or display ssociated in the minds of Western eople with everything Oriental. The wo hundred members sit behind smal! lesks arranged in tiers facing north. t is close sitting, for it has been a ight squeeze to find room for the vhole membership. Along the north vall on both sides of the platform are wo rows of seats slightly elevated. These are for representatives of the government departments assigned for luty with the Yuan, to reply on behalf f their respective departments to par- iamentary inquiries relating to their usiness. Elevated, but not to the level f the main stage, there is a rostrum rom which members having set peeches address the assembly. Below his, desks for four stenographers usily engaged in making record of the proceedings.

"In the centre of the platform is the lesk of the President, Prince Pu Lun; n his left sits the Vice-President, Shen Chiapan, a Chinese of distinc- ion; on the President's left Mr. Chin, Chief Secretary; flanking these, on oth sides, four assistant secretaries.

"None of the officials wears official obes, and there is no badge or insignia f office save the small medal worn by very member. This is of different olors to distinguish the appointed nembers from the elected members, ut the distinction ends with the badge, for here all members are on a plane of absolute equality.

"The front two tiers of desks are for mperial princes, Mongol princes and other government appointees. All are n long robes, jackets and official boots, and all quietly dressed.

"The business proceeds in perfect order. One after another speaker calls his number, obtains recognition, makes his speech. If it is a long one he walks to the rostrum, makes his bow to the Assembly—none to the President—and says his say; if it is short, he makes it standing at his desk.

"It is a notable fact that the men who have, even at this early day, forged to the front in the councils of the Yuan are those who have proven themselves men of sense and ability. A few of these have come out of the government seats, but the majority are men of the people."

Answered Prayers

Mrs. J. H. S., Somerset, Pa. "In answer to my prayer my daughter was cured of illness."

M. H., Eeasthampton, Mass. "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to a prayer for restoration of health."

M. E. M., Rochester, N. Y. "I know God does answer prayer, for he has healed me of a disease in answer to my prayers."

W. H. K., Mansfield, Pa. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer, in which I was very greatly helped in time of illness."

L. C., College Place, Wash. "I promised Christ if he would answer my prayers in regard to a child I would publicly acknowledge it."

M. L., New York. "He has just answered me so plainly, I feel I must acknowledge here, trusting some weary one may be influenced."

C. H. H., Amenia, N. Y. "Through particular sorrow I prayed daily to our Father that he would give me greater strength than ever before."

S. A. M., Stanton, Va. "I promised my heavenly Father if he would answer my prayer for the restoration of a dear daughter I would acknowledge it."

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. O., Elmer, Mo. "We had a very sick child the doctor and neighbors had given up to die. We prayed the Lord to spare his life if it were his will. Our prayers were answered."

(Mrs.) L. A. S., Henderson, Tex. "I promised the Lord that if he would restore to health a sister who was very ill, I would acknowledge it to the world. She is now as well as she ever was."

E. and S. W., Cynthiana, O. "We wish to acknowledge in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that God has answered our prayers in returning to us our wandering boy. We asked God to protect him and bring him home to us. Our prayer was answered. The boy is at home."

Mrs. A. E. B., Eagle, Wis. "I wish to say to you that we were in great trouble. I knew not what to do, so I prayed promising God if he would deliver us from that trouble I would acknowledge it before men. That prayer has been answered, although it has been four years."

Mrs. R. E. H., Texas. "Nine years ago while reading answered prayers, I promised the Lord if he would save my husband I would acknowledge it to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. This summer God has granted that request. I don't get discouraged when the answers seem long delayed."

Mrs. D. G. T., Baxter, Ia. "I was sick with what the physicians called an incurable disease. I believed the Lord could heal me and prayed, putting my whole trust in him, and promised if he would help me that I would acknowledge him for it to the world. I am restored to my usual health."

Mrs. F. H. F., Williamsburg, Mass. "I prayed for loved ones that were very ill, one being my own dear son, and promised before my Lord that if he would restore to health and spare their lives, I would tell it to the world. He heard and answered my prayer. God also gave me the desire of my heart, when on a recent Sabbath several members of my Sunday School class united with the church on profession of their faith in Christ."

Prizes Paper and Premiums

I cannot tell you how much I enjoy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I have taken it for twenty years. I do not want to do without it. It is a treasure, and the premiums are just grand. I have many of them and prize them highly and the calendars are beautiful. Dr. Klopsch helped so many to help others who would not have had the opportunity if it had not been through his instrumentality through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. MRS. M. A. MOFFETT.

MOTHERS

For Your Children's Sake

READ THIS IMPORTANT MESSAGE

To you! Mothers of Today! and Mothers of Tomorrow! For the sake of the babies of our land; for the sake of thousands yet unborn; for the sake of anguished mothers and heart-broken fathers!

"A MOTHER'S grief for her dead child is tragic, yet we know that the kindly alchemy of Time will transmute that pain into a sad memory. But what of the mother to whom every dawn brings a new anguish, a woe upon which Time has no compassion? What of the child left forever deformed and disabled by the scourge of infantile paralysis that is spreading with alarming rapidity over the United States? What of the misery of an expanding mind in a world for which the body is unfit?"—From December Hampton's Magazine.

Thus begins the most pathetic fact-story in our generation, "The Children's Plague," by Dr. Jacolyn Manning, in December Hampton's Magazine. This is only one of many reasons why you should read Hampton's Magazine. "Another Chance For The Bad Boy," in December, and "The Wayward Girl," in January, both by the popular woman writer, Rheta Childe Dorr, make a stirring appeal to every mother heart. A Christmas Gift that Lasts the Whole Year Round

Ordinarily the Christmas Gift is a thing of a day. Why not make it a thing of a year—a remembrance that renews itself every week for a whole year—a perennial delight to your friend, and a constant occasion for gratefulness to you? It is often hard to make the Christmas money meet every desire—there are so many to remember, and the heart during the Yuletide season is so full of kindness for all. In order to help you make a little money go a great way this Christmas, The Christian Herald makes this suggestion:

Why not give a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to one or several friends as Christmas Gifts?

Can you think of any other Gift of equal cost that would give as much pleasure?

It isn't a gift that will be forgotten with the passing of Christmas Day---it continues every week for a whole year ---it is really 52 presents. Each week the recipient will be reminded of your kindness.

To make the gift more attractive we have prepared a very dainty Christmas Card-Folder and Envelope which will be sent in time to reach the recipient on Christmas Day. This card will contain your name as the donor, together with an appropriate message conveying your best wishes for a Merry Christmas.

In sending in your order, please be sure to give your own name as well as the name of the person to whom you wish to have The Christian Herald sent as a Christmas Gift. We will mail the announcement card so as to reach its destination on Christmas Day.

The Christian Herald will make a most charming and correct gift --- a weekly reminder of your thoughtfulness. To friends who do not know our sterling weekly the magazine will come as a delightful surprise, bringing sunshine, and happiness, and inspiration into their lives; to shut-ins and invalids, and to those who could not afford to buy it for themselves, you will give a year of happiness and pleasure. The subscription rate is $1.50 for 52 issues.

Johnstone's Fatal Plunge

FLYING has been added to the world's list of sports and pastimes for a short time, but the death list of its devotees is already great. In proportion to the number engaged in it it makes football look as safe as a game of checkers. The most recent airman to take the fatal ride and plunge to death is Ralph Johnstone, who recently achieved fame by his ascents at Belmont Park, Long Island, where he soared over a mile high and managed his machine as easily as a man in an automobile, and gained the world's record for altitude.

Johnstone entered the meet at Denver. While 800 feet in the air, one of his planes broke. He had had trouble with it before during the day. He tried to right the machine even after he was thrown from his seat. Then the machine turned completely over and came down. A flash through the air, and the daring aviator lay crushed in the wreckage of his machine. Every bone in his body had been broken and death must have been almost instantaneous.

Johnstone was very popular and his untimely death caused much sorrow to a large circle of friends and admirers. He left a wife and two small children.

The "Harmony" in Danger

MISSIONARY Christian Schmitt of the Moravian Mission at Nain, Labrador, is now in Europe, enjoying the first furlough in ten years. He came from the Arctic on the little mission steamer Harmony, which narrowly escaped shipwreck on the previous voyage. He writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"Early in September and just before reaching Nain, the Harmony struck a submerged rock and damaged her bows to such an extent that the captain felt doubtful whether he could save her. Happily she was able to reach Nain harbor, where she was run ashore to prevent her from sinking in deep water." She was temporarily repaired and sailed for St. Johns, N. F., where she was dry-docked for a thorough overhauling.

A Word About the Calendar

SEVERAL of our friends who have seen the published advertisements of our Baby Calendar, have objected to it because the dear little baby was shown with a "pacifier" in its mouth. Some have declared that a pacifier is unsanitary and tends to mar the shape of a baby's mouth. On the other hand, we have received a great number of letters of commendation of the calendar, and some of them have commended the pacifier itself.

The two following letters are typical of the many received advocating both sides of the case:

"DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD: Do you really intend to send out calendars with the picture of the baby with that pacifier in its mouth? Don't you know that it is not only unsanitary, but it is apt to change the shape of the baby's mouth? I am sure you would not do so if you knew the real facts.

"Very truly yours,"
"MRS. H. K. H."

On the other hand, hear this mother, who is evidently thankful for having used a pacifier:

"DEAR CHRISTIAN HERALD: Be sure to send me one of your Baby Calendars. I think, from the advertisement, it must be very beautiful. It looks so much like my little grandchild.

"As to the pacifier, we found it very useful and necessary. My daughter, whose husband is a distinguished professional man, who has spent several years in European study, had a very delicate baby, who cried constantly. We were afraid the constant crying would result in a physical injury. Our doctor prescribed a pacifier in order to keep the baby from crying. The doctor said he had prescribed it in several similar cases with equally good results, and that many physicians were obliged to do so. It proved a comfort and a help to the child in regaining its strength. Yours respectfully,

"EXPERIENCE."

Now, it is far from our purpose to force a pacifier into the mouths of babes, even though it be only on a calendar.

No doubt those who object to the pacifier feel that they have good reason for doing so, in which event we feel that they would not care to accept the Baby Calendar as a premium. But they are entitled to a premium, and so we are going to allow them to make a choice in the matter as follows:

If any of our subscribers feel that they do not care to accept the Baby Calendar as a premium, they may have in its place our wonderful "Mona Lisa" picture, or a copy of our recent beautiful cover, "An Autumn Reverie."

By this arrangement we feel sure that every one will be pleased.

THE DELINEATOR

HAVE you read the Delineator lately? If you have, it is not necessary to tell you why it deserves its title "The Best Known Magazine in the World."

You have known the Delineator since you were a child, and your mother knew it before you, and, maybe, her mother knew it, too, for forty years of supremacy among magazines for women is a long time. It has always been the most practical, the most helpful, and the most widely read woman's magazine. You know that.

But of late years, a change has come over the Delineator, or rather a growth that has kept pace with the growth of women's interests. Are you aware of that change?

Do you know how different The Delineator, with all its fashion prestige retained, has become from the general run of magazines for women.

Do you know why The Delineator in this, its Fortieth Year, is deservedly the best known and the most loved magazine in the world?

If not, you owe it to yourself to find out.

The answer is in the Delineator for 1911.

FOR forty years, through all the changing cycles of fashions, The Delineator has stood undisputed as the leader.

In every part of the civilized globe it is now recognized as the Fashion Authority of the World.

Paris itself buys more copies of The Delineator than it does of any French publication of its kind!

Famous Fashion Authorities contribute regularly. Edouard LaFontaine writes authoritative letters from Paris each month.

Mrs. Simcox and Helen Berkeley-Lloyd describe the latest styles seen in the smart shops, restaurants, and opera houses in New York. Wherever styles originate, there The Delineator has its representatives.

And Mrs. Chalmers, in her series, "Dressmaking Made Easy," tells the woman who is clever with her hands how she may make luxurious and useful garments for herself.

One number of The Delineator is worth the price of a year's subscription in practical helpfulness to the woman who buys it

Sixty Hours In Every Day

Think what you can accomplish when every day contains sixty hours! You can make your day hold sixty hours, in effect, if you take advantage of the time-savers that modern science offers you. Hundreds in all walks of life are using Maxwell Runabouts to save time in their daily work. One would relieve you of as much work as would

An Assistant Pastor

You know how short the day is to crowd into it all the many duties that confront you. Think how easily you can travel long, time-consuming distances which you must cover in your daily work. Think how profitably you can employ those minutes saved and how pleasantly you can occupy the traveling time. Many are using our cars in ministerial work and tell us that they benefit in mind and body, besides multiplying their usefulness.

If the Cost Has Deterred You

we can prove to your satisfaction the economy of the Maxwell. We proved in a public trial recently that the automobile is cheaper to maintain than a horse and buggy.

The car used in the recent economy test was a larger, heavier car than the AB Runabout, and costs $300 more. This car costs even less to maintain than the test-car did. For your work it will probably serve you equally well.

President Porfirio Diaz

THE REVOLT IN MEXICO

THIS seems to be a year of revolutions and of civil war both in Europe and in America. That which changed the government of Portugal had long been expected by observers conversant with the trend of affairs political on the Iberian peninsula, but the one which has recently broken out in several of the most important States of Mexico came unexpectedly, and its sudden growth from a very small insurrection was a surprise to people on this side of the border. Diaz had ruled so long, bearing down all opposition to his autocratic will, that it was thought, in this country at least, that his own people had practically accepted his continuous tenure of office, and though a large number might object to him as President of Mexico, they would carefully hide the fact, and the change in the executive could only come by the natural death of the general-president or his voluntary resignation from his high office. In either case the political heir-apparent was Vice-President Corral, whom Diaz had selected to take up the reins of government when he himself should lay them down.

As one looks back at the opening events of the revolution he is forced to the conclusion that beneath the apparent calm in Mexico there was a widespread feeling of discontent with the situation—a feeling which pervaded all classes, from the highest to the lowest—and that many who accepted the situation with philosophic calm felt that at best the government was really a beneficent despotism, if the two words can be so coupled. Even the higher classes, who had the most to lose, in a worldly sense, from a revolution, seem to have felt that a change in presidents once in a while might not be out of place. Strong objection was made to some of Diaz's cabinet, and it was openly charged that high officials were corrupt, and enriching themselves in public office.

It takes but a small spark to set a conflagration going when the fuel is prepared, and in this case the political spark which started the revolt was the lynching of a Mexican named Rodriguez on American soil. When the news was telegraphed over Mexico there were many demonstrations against Americans, and in several places they were compelled to barricade themselves in their homes and places of business. The Mexican government, greatly to its credit, took measures to protect Americans, and the questions involved were taken up by the respective Departments of State in the usual diplomatic way. Matters, however, seemed to go from bad to worse. Armed bands assembled with the threat of invading Texas and other States, and the Americans flocked, rifles in hand, to protect the border. As the government tried to suppress the rioters it incurred their hatred.

Suddenly, those who opposed Diaz began to see that the agitation could be nursed into a very formidable insurrection. In fact, they may have fomented the disturbance in the first place. The bands which had gathered to threaten the peace of our borders at once seemed to find another objective, and reports came in of attacks on the Rurales, the famous Mexican police, and other troops. Francisco Madero was an opponent of Diaz in the recent election, and on the results being announced, found that the climate of the United States would be more healthful than that in which he had been reared. In other words, he fled to a place of safety. He had made his headquarters for some time at San Antonio, where a very active revolutionary junta was formed with branches in the United States and Mexico. One night he left in disguise, taking seven adherents with him, and was reported making for his plantation, about forty miles above the American town of Laredo, but on the Mexican side of the line. There his friends gathered to him from far and near, all armed for any attempt he might make against Diaz's government.

General Villar, of the Mexican regular army, was at once alarmed and sent scouts in every direction to prevent others from coming across the line, and asked the American commander at Fort McIntosh to guard against revolutionists escaping into American territory and also to prevent other bands from invading Mexico by way of Eagle Pass and other roads southward. Several regiments of American troops had already taken post along the border, to be ready for any overt act made on American soil by the Mexican revolutionists.

There was a sharp outbreak in Puebla and a number were killed. This bloodshed stirred up the slumbering fires of revolution in many places where outbreaks were not anticipated, and more men flocked to the rebel leaders, until some of them found they had several hundred men. The rebels had barricaded themselves. In Guairo there was a battle in the streets, but the loosely organized insurgents were no match for the disciplined regular troops. They were beaten back from the town and the place was declared to be under martial law.

Orizaba is a manufacturing centre noted for its print goods works, employing thousands of hands. Some of these workmen favored the revolutionary party and were mysteriously supplied with rifles, with which they attacked the Seventeenth regiment of infantry. Other regiments were called in to help the garrison, and for a time the city was in a state of turmoil, encounters being frequent, and the shooting so continuous that the majority of people sought safety within doors. Here also the government troops at last triumphed. The government now began to fear that the uprising might spread beyond its control and began to arrest leaders of the opposition and any one suspected of revolutionary sympathies. A great many suspects fled to the mountains, from which they waged a desultory warfare against the rurales who were sent in pursuit. The rebels

Love and Gifts: A Christmas Sermon

Written Specially for "The Christian Herald"

TEXT—Matthew 2:10, 11

By Dr. Charles Aubrey Eaton

Pastor Madison Avenue Baptist Church
New York City

THE language of felicity is unequal to the task of describing the circumstances which gather about the birth of Jesus. Angelic hosts filling the heavens with their songs of joy. Simple shepherds caught up from their humble surroundings into divinest vision. Wise men drawn by the resistless gravitation of yearning hope to follow His Star and joyfully offer gifts. Frigid literalists and formalists puzzled in the presence of Reality. The craft of wickedness falling into its own snare under the confusion of a new fear. The whole world, celestial and terrestrial, quivering with the stir of divine events. No other life ever began on earth as this life began.

These wise men from the East have fascinated the imagination of men from the beginning. Although almost nothing is known of them, they have been named and classified. Their life story has been invented, told and retold through the centuries. Indeed, their skulls have been rescued from the dust—if high ecclesiastical tradition may be believed—and given a proper resting place among the relics of superstition. With these myths and vagaries we need not concern ourselves, but they must not deprive us of the sweet lessons which the Gospel story addresses to believing hearts.

The Search of the Wise Men

These wise men are journeying to find the Gift of God, which is Jesus Christ our Lord. In this act they symbolize the race of men whose "hearts were made for God, and are restless until they find him." They saw his star in the East, but the impelling motive which sent them along the shining pathway of its radiance was something deeper than mere intellectual interest in stellar phenomena. Their souls were stirred by a sense of need—the same need which God, in infinite love, would supply through the gift of his Son.

And when at last the star had guided them to the Bethlehem manger, they rejoiced with exceeding joy, and offered with adoring love gifts of frankincense and gold and myrrh.

As in spirit at this Christmas time we stand with the wise men before the newborn Babe, are we not able to interpret feelings and thoughts which gave them joy, but which, as yet, they could only dimly discern and but partially understand? For long centuries that same Star has guided the weary feet of wise and unwise men to Bethlehem. We have been worshiping there with love and gifts. And as the generations pass, we have come to know what is the height and depth of our Father's love revealed in his unspeakable Gift.

The Mystery of Mysteries

God's gift to us has made possible our gifts to him. "The wages of sin is death." Under sin we serve as hirelings, with fear. The gift of God is eternal life. Under the new relationship of free grace we give as children give of our love and life.

O wise men of the modern world, gather now to the Bethlehem manger, and look upon the Child Christ. Lift from your spirits the pall of loveless intellectualism, the despair of loveless thought, and learn the lesson which God would teach. Here is the most marvelous of mysteries: God loves the world and in the person of his Son has come to make his abode with us. Love always gives, and the gift is ever of itself. Selfishness bargains and barters, Love sacrifices. Selfishness seeks what you have: Love seeks only you. Here, while wise men worship and shepherds wonder, and priests debate about the law, and kings plot, and angels hymn their hallelujah, behold the dawn of a new creation. The reign of sin and death is over; the age of holiness and life and love is born.

"Joy to the world! the Lord has come!
Let earth receive her King!"

The Wise Men and the Divine Child

The wise men saw the star; followed its guidance; found the Child; rejoiced with exceeding great joy; bowed their spirits before him; offered gifts, the best they had; returned whence they had come, and are lost in the silence. This once their lives touched his, as birds of passage rest for a moment upon the bosom of some secluded lake. They recognized and owned his kingship. What of his message they took with them, what of his after history they learned, we cannot say. Perhaps, in the evening of their life, they dreamed and talked together of the Bethlehem Babe and kindled their waning powers with the memory of what they had seen and felt. We do not know. But in this glad Christmas time we can gather at his feet and warm our chilled spirits by contemplation of his loveliness. Wherein those strange men from the far-away East were ignor[ant] we know, and in our knowledge the giving of gi[fts] takes on new meaning and glory. If our joy is [not] complete, it will be because we have withheld c[ertain] gifts.

A New Vision of God

No one can doubt to-day that he is worthy [of] human love and gifts; of angelic acclaim and stell[ar] splendors. For nearly two milleniums he has be[en] in the world. Wise men and shepherds have go[ne]. The priests are remembered only for their blindne[ss] and Herod for his wickedness. But Chr[ist] abideth, the same yesterday, to-day a[nd] forever. The Babe, grown to man's [es]tate, has hung upon the cross; gone do[wn] into the grave, and now, risen and glo[ri]fied, sits upon his eternal throne. Out [of] the infinite of his love he has poured fo[rth] an ever-deepening stream of richest gi[fts] upon mankind. Redemption from t[he] stain, the guilt, the power, the punis[h]ment of sin; a new vision of God [as] Father, a new thought of human broth[er]hood; a new standard of action; a n[ew] life eternal in the midst of time; a j[oy] unspeakable and full of glory; pea[ce] which passeth understanding; surcea[se] from sorrow; satisfaction for all hunge[r] of the heart and mind. He has creat[ed] new empires and societies upon new pr[in]ciples with new ideals for new ends. [He] has robbed death of power and broug[ht] life and universality to light through t[he] Gospel.

Out of the teeming fecundity of [his] mind vast liberalizing literatures, th[e]ologies, philosophies have been bo[rn]. He has redeemed art; furnished song w[ith] a sufficient theme, and called science fr[om] its ancient habitat of clay. Before t[he] glorious brightness of his appearin[g] despair, fear, hate, selfishness and all t[he] foul brood of haunting ills and evils ha[ve] taken flight. Because of what he is t[o] thrones of tyrannies and oppressions a[re] tottering to their fall. The spell of l[ife] Spirit is upon the world and God is nea[rer] than ever before.

The Gift that We May Bring

Come then before his presence at th[is] Christmas time to worship and to gi[ve]. Bring gold as the symbol of his lordsh[ip] over what thou hast; offer there t[he] frankincense and myrrh, fragrant sy[m]bols of his rightful lordship over wh[at] thou art. In the effulgence of l[ife]'s beauty, behold full pledge and proof th[at] God is love, and do thou rejoice with exceedi[ng] great joy.

This is our God's best gift to men. W[e] ship him by giving of thy best to men. Seek o[ut] the sad and lonely and bring them love and jo[y]. Learn of Christ to give where want is. Rememb[er] the poor. Give strength to the weak. Follow l[ike] star and it will lead thee into abodes of sorrow a[nd] failure and despair. Leave there thy gifts up[on] the altar of human need, for this is acceptable un[to] God.

"For God so loved the world that he gave his Son." And now, we of the world must so love God that [we] shall give ourselves.

he "Santa Claus" Mayor

ISS MATTIE PERRY, the founder of the wonderful orphanage work Elhanan, N. C.—an institution sup- ted solely by prayer and faith in l—sends this interesting account to E CHRISTIAN HERALD, telling how mayor of Marion became the Santa us of the Orphanage at Christmas e. She writes:

'Two years ago in December, when as in New York in THE CHRISTIAN RALD office, good Dr. Klopsch kindly e me a much appreciated check for to purchase a Christmas dinner our large family of about 150 or- ns. We were praying the loving ther to provide us with plenty for precious little ones, some of whom l never seen a Christmas tree, and graciously answered our prayers l met the need. We were supplied h cakes, fruits, nuts, dolls and toys various kinds just suited to the dif- ent cases. Then there were suits, s, shoes, hose, hats, dresses, pencils, lets, books, Testaments, etc., from ors representing fourteen States.

'Before I could get home to Elhanan a nine-hour-late snow-bound train h my much-prized dinner check, yor Wood had received offerings of ceries, etc., from Marion friends. came over with a two-horse wagon d on Christmas Eve and played nta Claus in a most substantial way. en I arrived at three A.M., next rning, I could not suggest anything sister needed for this dinner. enever I mentioned any article, she uld reply smiling, 'I have it,' or 'I n't need it.'

'Finally, I asked, 'What do you need, n, toward the dinner?' And she d, 'Nothing. Our kind Father has t it into the hearts of our friends to ply our needs.'

'I had been on my journey forty- hours; but when I arrived at three M. I found the stove hot, and faith- , loving hands cooking Christmas odies. They had not been to bed it night. Sister proceeded to show , in the pantry and store-room, what Lord had provided, because 'Faith- l is he that calleth you, who also ll do it.' I forgot to sleep for two urs, praising and thanking him for great goodness and mercy to us, in oviding so graciously for our pre- us, helpless charge of little ones.

"Finally, I slept two or three hours, d before leaving my room, the an- uncement was made that two women re on the porch with a tiny baby to ve to us. Our orphanage was al- ady so full that I felt we could not d another infant to the charge, we d so few helpers; but when I saw at beautiful, nameless babe, four eks of age, but sadly neglected and thout coat, cap or change of gar- nts, and wrapped only in a piece of inket, my heart relented. The wom- were extremely anxious to leave n. It was so hard to say 'no' to em that with a big 'yes' I accepted n and we named him 'Paul.'

"What an appropriate Christmas ft! How it spoke to us of the ther's loving Christmas Gift to the rld, centuries ago, that is just as l and effectual to-day.

"The mayor and the babe were at r Christmas tree and both took part the programme, but I believe the lpless white-robed infant made a re lasting impression and caused re emotion than all the speakers of e evening combined.

"Could our generous friends have en the line of fond baby 'moth- s,' as they marched into the dining om next morning, bearing their pre- us doll babies in arms, and heard e jubilee of whistles, horns, and erry laughing voices that filled the r as soon as the rule was suspended, am sure they would have felt amply paid and they would have thanked d for the privilege of blessing these lpless little ones, and of answering r prayers even in this humble little rk in the mountains of Western orth Carolina."

The Children's Pulpit

THE ADVENT CHILD

By Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D.*

MAMMA is very busy and we are all helping her. Sweeping, dusting and airing the spare room and making everything ready. Visitors are coming. We are so glad to have them come for they once helped us when we were very poor. Brother, who is just home from college, says: "We are expecting the advent of some friends." The dictionary says "advent" means arrival, visit, the coming of some one. We are all using the new word and talking about the advent of our friends.

Since the sixth century some of our churches have set apart four Sundays before Christmas and call them Advent Sundays. The 27th of November is the first Sunday in Advent. How busy we all should be! Getting the heart ready for Christmas. Heart cleaning; getting the best heart-room ready for the little guest. Everything ready to make Christ happy, whose coming made us all so happy. We are specially anxious to honor this guest, because he saved us from our sins when we were not able to save ourselves.

A CERTAIN business man has a curious little charm for his watch-chain. He wouldn't sell it for a thousand dollars; no, nor two, nor three. His little child gave it to him one day when, as he says, he was "down." "I had lost every cent I had in the world, and there at my desk, my head on my arms, I was thinking of a possible way to end it, when my little child came up to me and asked: 'What does "ruined" mean, papa?' And then I knew I had been groaning loud enough to be heard and understood. 'You said "ruined," papa. What does it mean?'

"It means I haven't any money, baby. Papa's a poor man." The little feet pattered away, then back again, and here on my watch-charm is what she gave me. Not a great fortune—no, but the foundation of one. Whatever I've got since came from it, for it gave me courage." Your pastor has a cross on his watch-chain. The gift of the Christ Child. The cross gives him courage.

JESUS has come, and Christmas is the anniversary of his advent. The Children's Pulpit believes that every little child can be an advent blessing. "How," you ask, "can a little child bring a blessing?" Listen, and I will tell you some of the ways, and you can guess more of them. I knew a little child that weighed thirty-five pounds who lifted a man who weighed one hundred and ninety-five pounds. The man was out of work and each day his pocketbook was getting thinner and thinner; so were the soles of his shoes. One morning the little child saw the father on his knees and heard his prayer. When he started out that morning to look for work he heard some one walking behind him. "Where are you going, my child?" "I am going with you to look for work." He lifted the child on his broad shoulders. You say that was one hundred and ninety-five pounds lifting thirty-five pounds. Was it? The first place he looked for work he was asked: "Is this your little child? Why do you not get her shoes?" Before papa could answer the little child said: "Papa will get me shoes if you will give him work." Papa got the work. Do you not see that on the heart of the little child father was carried? One of our church papers tells another true story:

GRANDMA WILKINS was sick. The doctor said she must be kept very quiet. Wilfred heard his mother say, "We must keep the doorbell from ringing if possible." "I can do something for grandma," thought the little boy. So he sat on the front step, and soon a woman with a book in her hand came to the door. "Grandma is very sick," said Wilfred; "nobody must ring the bell." The lady smiled, but went away. Soon a man with a satchel came. "Grandma is sick and mamma doesn't want anything at all," said the boy.

All day long the people came. It seemed to Wilfred that almost everybody had something to sell; but he kept guard and the bell was silent. Sister came to call him to lunch, but Wilfred would not leave his post. "Just bring me a sandwich or something, and I'll eat it here," he said. At last the doctor came again. He smiled down upon Wilfred and said: "Well, little picket guard, your grandma is going to get well, and you have helped to save her." Then his mother came out and took him in her arms and whispered: "I am quite proud of my grave, unselfish little son." When Wilfred went in on tiptoe his grandma thanked him with a kiss.

TELL you one more advent story? An Eastern legend says: In the country, near a great city, a golden ball was let down out of heaven every day at noontime and on it was written, "Whoever shall touch this ball will get some wonderful blessings." Many tried to reach it, but all failed. The tallest man in the country came, but could not reach it. Then they sent to other countries and brought all the giants, but not one of them could touch the ball. One day there was in the crowd, waiting for the descent of the ball, an old man with a young child. The old man was not tall, and all laughed at him when he said he would try to reach the ball. He lifted the little child on his shoulders and the child smiled as the ball came down. The golden ball settled into the tiny uplifted hands and rested there for a moment. Then came the blessing; not only to the child, but to every one standing in that crowd. Thank God for the advent of every little child.

Status of Woman Suffrage

By KATE UPSON CLARK

IN five States of the Union—Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and Washington—women to-day vote on an equality with men. The following table shows how several others stand on partial suffrage for women:

MUNICIPAL SUFFRAGE—Kansas.
SOME FORM OF SCHOOL SUFFRAGE—California, Arizona, Oregon, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Oklahoma, Kentucky, New Jersey, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut.
SCHOOL AND TAXPAYING SUFFRAGE—Montana, New York, Delaware.
TAXPAYING SUFFRAGE—Louisiana and Iowa.

It is a singular and interesting fact that in 1880 there was a strong movement throughout our whole country for woman suffrage. Why it came just then, no one knew. The "greenbackers" mustered a considerable party at about that time. They were radical and not afraid to espouse unpopular ideas. They put woman suffrage into their platform. From this may have sprung the wave which rolled over the land, only to subside shortly afterwards.

The power of the different States to change their constitutions varies greatly.

Thus, Kansas many years ago granted municipal suffrage to its women by legislative enactment; but when Michigan did the same thing some years later, her supreme court decided that her legislature had no authority to pass such a law.

There are two ways by which a State may give its women the suffrage. In certain States, the legislatures are able by their constitution to grant it. In others it can be done only by obtaining the vote of a constitutional convention for an amendment.

Ohio has such a convention this year. So has New York. At each one will appear delegations of women, urging a constitutional amendment permitting them to vote.

This year twenty States will be asked by the suffragists to submit the great question to their people.

All political parties in California have inserted in their platforms clauses advising the legislature to agree to submit a woman suffrage amendment to the people. Oklahoma did this in October, but it was voted down.

Oregon tried hard this fall to persuade its voters to include within their ranks all taxpaying women, but was not successful.

This winter New York's legislature will probably vote to lay the matter before its people. The suffragists are hopeful of the result, but the "antis" are equally so, and nobody can predict the actual outcome.

Florence Nightingale's death, followed so soon by that of Julia Ward Howe, took from the suffragists their two most famous advocates; but Amelia E. Barr, Jane Addams, Margaret Dreier Robins, Mary E. Woolley, Ellen Glasgow, Frances Hodgson Burnett, Mary Johnstone, Florence Kelley, Mrs. Nathan and many other noble and distinguished women, besides those who officer the great national and State societies, and have long been devoted workers solely in "the cause," are still faithfully endeavoring to make more strongly felt in our legislation the uplifting influence of the mothers, wives and daughters of the republic.

WHITE RIBBONERS' CONVENTION

Four Hundred Delegates of the W. C. T. U. Convention on the Steps of the Capitol, Washington, D. C.

THE Thirty-seventh Annual Convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Baltimore, Md., November 12 to 17. A forecast of the Convention has already been given in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The City of Baltimore showed much appreciation of the Convention from the beginning, addresses of welcome being given by the Mayor, by Rev. DeWitt Benham, D.D., as president of the Ministerial Association, representing three hundred churches, and by Dr. Eugene A. Noble, representing the schools and other educational institutions of Baltimore. Dr. Benham said that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was properly labeled "Christian," and he spoke of the workers as "lady apostles." He compared the Woman's Christian Temperance Union with the ancient Crusaders who bravely contended to rescue the tomb of Christ from the Saracens, and now the Woman's Christian Temperance Union is trying to keep pure the temple of the living God, which is the body. Responses were made by four ladies, introduced by the president, Mrs. Lilian M. N. Stevens.

On Sabbath morning, November 13, there were no services held in the Lyric—the Convention hall. Instead, many of the pulpits of the city were occupied by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union delegates; and as it was World's Temperance Sunday, addresses on temperance were made in a large number of the Baltimore Sunday Schools. On Sabbath afternoon a mass meeting was held in the Lyric, and the Convention sermon was preached by Mrs. Deborah Knox Livingston. She took no text, but instead, set forth the personality of Queen Esther, who proved to be the deliverer of her people Israel, and compared with her the White Ribbon women (the Woman's Christian Temperance Union) as having come to the kingdom for such a time as this to deliver their country from the great destroyer—the rum traffic.

At the crowded Sabbath evening meeting in the Lyric the speaker was Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson of Alabama (of Merrimac fame). His theme was "The Great Destroyer." He gave many figures to show that liquor, not war, is the great destroyer. His statistics were taken from governmental reports on the wars of the world and authoritative reports on alcohol and alcoholism, and by comparison it is shown that alcohol is 10,000 times more destructive of life than all war! Also that in one year alone five times more men were killed by alcohol than by war during the past 2,300 years. The wounded are not counted in this estimate. In the United States alone 28,000,000 persons are mortally wounded by alcohol; that is, there are both regular and so-called "temperate" drinkers, whose vital organs are fatally impaired, as clearly indicated by scientific temperance facts. Sooner or later they will die of Bright's disease, or cirrhosis of the liver, or dropsy, etc. Mr. Hobson also showed how alcohol is a great destroyer of a nation's money. He stated that where one dollar is received from tax on liquor, forty dollars are expended for the care of criminals, inebriates and the insane, and feeble-minded children that accrue from the drinking of liquor. He gave $16,500,000,000 as the amount thus wasted yearly in the United States. He declared it the duty of the State to put an end to such waste. Mr. Hobson spoke for two hours.

The day sessions of the Convention were largely given to reports of superintendents of departments, which make up the "world-wide-fight plan." The programmes for the evening meetings were of a popular nature: The first was "An Evening with the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union." Greetings were given from Syria, by Mrs. Layyah Barakat; from the Transvaal, by Miss Barbara Buchanan, of Johannesburg; from Mexico, by Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher; from Iceland, by Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts; from China, by Miss Hughes; from Japan, by Miss Strout; from all round the world, by Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, who has just completed a two-years' visitation of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Japan, China, Korea, Australia, New Zealand and India. The occasion was greatly brightened by the presence on the platform of a company of children dressed in the costumes of many nations, representing the Loyal Legion work.

The second popular programme was "Demonstration Night," when all of the different departme were represented by tableaux vivants.

"Platform Night" was devoted to the story of e struggle for State-wide prohibition in Oregon a Tennessee, the last of which won out, holding p hibition under fearful odds of a corrupt gover and supreme court, while Oregon acknowledged h self defeated, but not beaten, having given notice the liquor party that they would at once begin campaign for 1912. The last evening of the C vention was occupied by a jollification meeting, speakers being the presidents of the State organi tions.

The following officers were elected for the ensui year: President, Mrs. Lilian M. N. Stevens (1 twelfth re-election); Vice-President, Miss An Adam Gordon; Corresponding Secretary, M Frances P. Parks; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Eli beth Preston Anderson; Treasurer, Mrs. Elizab P. Hutchinson.

On the day following the Convention, more th four hundred delegates proceeded to Washington special train that they might hold a memorial s vice around the statue of Miss Frances Willard the Capitol. The service was presided over Mrs. Emma S. Shelton, the president of the Distr of Columbia Woman's Christian Temperance Uni After the service a group picture was taken of t delegates on the front steps of the Capitol.

What the Convention stood for may be stat briefly:

Total abstinence; State-wide prohibition; purity, consisti in a better protection of all womankind; censorship of mov picture and talking machines, excluding prize-fight pictu etc.; franchise for women; protest against militarism, a advocacy of arbitration; protest against the unrestricted s of liquor in the Panama Canal zone; approval of the "Mill Curtis Interstate Liquor Bill," which prohibits interstate co merce in intoxicating liquors; protest against the issuance government tax receipts in the State of Oklahoma, as contra to the Enabling Act; a law prohibiting the issuance of internal revenue tax receipt unless the applicant shows he h complied with the State law.

MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

TOPICS OF INTEREST THROUGHOUT THE WORLD

—NEW YORK State, according to the complete census returns, has a population of 9,113,279, being a gain of 25.4 per cent. since the last census.

—J. A. DREXEL made the highest recorded flight in an aeroplane with a 100-horse-power engine at Philadelphia, November 23, reaching an altitude of 9,970 feet, or 256 feet higher than Ralph Johnstone's famous flight some time ago. Mr. Drexel used a Bleriot monoplane. He reached a point where the atmosphere was so attenuated that his engine, though driven at full speed, could send the machine no higher.

—CALIFORNIA is making heroic efforts to have San Francisco chosen for the proposed Panama-Pacific International Exposition in 1915, to commemorate the completion of the Canal. $17,500,000 have already been guaranteed and it is announced that there will be no lack of funds to make the Fair a success, should the Golden Gate City be selected.

—IN MANY A HEART there has lurked a doubt whether we should ever be able by legal enactment or the strength of public opinion to weaken the dominion of the liquor traffic. The saloon has long been the foe of domestic peace; has absorbed the wages of the poor man and explained the desolati of his home; it has filled our prisons with criminals, ma women widows and children orphans. Still, only in so quarters has it received anything that could be called a re check. But now the fight is on. The bugles have be sounded that never call retreat. To-day, good men and tr are banding together against the saloon. Everywhere the is an effort on the part of good citizens to limit the power those who are ruining our young men and menacing our soci purity by their methods of making money.

HER CHRISTMAS MONEY

By MINNIE REID FRENCH

ARAH ELLEN looked forward to Christmas with that heartsickness which only a woman who ver has any money of her own can preciate. In her imagination, she ld see Hiram growing sourer and rer as the season approached, pping hints of "hard times," and ng "hard up"; then finally, after had put it off as long as she could, d all the Christmas things had been ked over, and the best bargains ne, she would timidly broach the oject of "Christmas money."

And then he would ask if she ught he was made of money? And at was all this foolishness about, yway? Why did she want to buy a of useless things to send to people o threw them into the trash basket, n had to go out and buy her some- ng which she threw into the trash sket!

'But the children——" Sarah Ellen uld falter, feeling her heart sinking wn to her toes.

Yes, the children! Filled with a lot sweet stuff till they had to d for the doctor, and the use so full of gimcracks u couldn't step! It was all nsense, and time to put a p to it. He did not intend throw away any more of his d-earned money in that thenish fashion. When he s a boy if he got a stick of iped candy in his sock he s thankful, but now his ldren thought they must ve the whole store.

"Well," Sarah Ellen would h, "I know I had very little en I was a child, and I was ntent; but things are differ- t now. We——"

"We are bigger fools now n we were then," he would ish for her. "But let me l you, it's time to go back the old way of living."

She knew that after a while would take out his big ck pocketbook that some- w bore a very prosperous k in spite of his repeated usions to "hard times," d would reluctantly peel off ill from the roll within.

"What is the very least you n make out with this year?" would ask with a martyr- e expression, and Sarah len would hesitate a mo- nt, then name a figure ch lower than the "must ve" point.

Hiram would grudgingly nd her the amount, then go t, slamming the door behind n, leaving her sitting there r a few minutes with the money ng in her lap, the Christmas joy all ne from her face, and its spirit from r heart.

Somehow, Sarah Ellen felt that she uld not endure it this year. She did t know why, but the thought of go- g through it again seemed an utter possibility.

Before she was married, she taught term of school, and how she enjoyed ending her own money in her own y! She really dressed better then, d gave more presents than she had ce she married Hiram, who owned ole blocks of real estate in the riving town in which they lived. e thought regretfully of those ristmases when she planned her ex- nditures joyfully, and bought things th genuine pleasure.

If she had some money of her very n, how she would enjoy giving iram, himself, a Christmas present! f course, she always bought some- ing for him; but it was his money at paid for it, and his air of receiv- g it implied as much. Why could e not earn her Christmas money? hat was the idea! Other women did Why not she?

Sarah Ellen's one extravagance was a magazine devoted to the home and to the interests of women generally. The brightest day of the whole month was that upon which the magazine arrived. On that day, she hurried through the dishes after the midday meal, spent only a short time in cleaning, then she bathed her face and hands, combed her hair neatly, and put on a fresh collar. She felt just as if she were preparing to receive company. She sat down luxuriously in a rocker and gazed upon the decorative cover with appreciative eyes, then opened the crisp pages, and turned through them leisurely, looking at the illustrations, reading the editor's page, the chats with mothers, studying the new fashions, and the new recipes for cooking. She was perfectly happy for two whole hours, and only came to a realization of her prosaic surroundings when the children trooped noisily in from school. Among the magazine's various departments, there was one devoted to money making for women, little ways and means by which the housewife could add to her income; and to this Sarah Ellen turned eagerly, hoping to solve her financial problem. It gave her very little encouragement, however, in her present dilemma; and she sighed as she turned the page. But the next moment, her heart gave a great leap as she saw a new announcement, "One Hundred Dollars for the Best Love Story."

Sarah Ellen had always enjoyed stories, and felt that she would love to write. In her schooldays, her compositions were the best, and she used to write the local items for the county paper. For a long time she had the magazine in her hand, staring at the alluring announcement; then she sat down at her old-fashioned desk, her cheeks glowing with excitement, and taking out paper and pencil, began to write. A love story! Then what should be more natural than to write the romance of her own courtship and marriage!

She began with her first meeting with Hiram (only she did not call him Hiram). It was at a school entertainment, and she was a girl of seventeen. How well she had read her essay, and how strange it should have been on the subject of "Love"! She told about the embarrassment of the blushing schoolgirl when the big stalwart young fellow asked for the pleasure of taking her home in his sleigh; how he begged her to give him the essay on "Love," and when she did so, how she thrilled as he put it in the pocket nearest his heart. As they flew over the snowy road which seemed a veritable path to paradise, the girl felt that this starlit night was to shine forever in her memory like a jewel.

As she wrote, Sarah Ellen's eyes grew moist. Where had he vanished, that handsome young fellow, with his winning smile, and his air of tender proprietorship? She told about the various experiences of their courtship, their one little quarrel; then came the night when Hiram walked home with her from singing school and asked her to marry him. Sarah Ellen closed her story with the happy wedding day when they stood before the dear old minister, and vowed to love and cherish one another till death should them part. She sighed as she wrote the closing lines; for she felt that their real romance had ended right there. Of course, Hiram loved her in his way, he would protect her and provide for her she knew; but if she could only catch a glimpse of the old tenderness that had illuminated the face of the young fellow who put that essay on "Love" next to his heart!

Having written the story, and afterward copied it in a fine, old-fashioned hand on paper that smelled of lavender, she placed the manuscript in an envelope, slipped down to the post office and mailed it herself.

The next two weeks dragged slowly by for Sarah Ellen; but with the beginning of the third week, she began to look forward eagerly to the arrival of the mail, and actually began to plan the expenditure of the money. Not once did she think of failure. To her, the story was so real, so true, she felt sure it must appeal to all who had ever loved. But after a month passed with no news from her literary venture, she began to grow uneasy, and to fear the manuscript had been lost.

Hiram noticed that she always looked up eagerly when he came in with the mail, and that her face invariably fell with disappointment. He observed another thing, too, and it was that Sarah Ellen had not asked him for any Christmas money, and the holidays were only a month distant. He began to drop little hints about Christmas, but to these she paid no attention, and his astonishment knew no bounds.

One day, however, the mystery was solved. In the mail Hiram found a bulky package addressed to his wife; but as only her initials were used, he thought there must be some mistake. Without thinking much about it, he opened the envelope and took out the closely written sheets. A faint odor of lavender assailed his nostrils, and in imagination he was carried back twenty years. The printed rejection slip told the whole story of the hundred-dollar prize competition, and he now understood Sarah Ellen's anxiety about the mail, and also the reason why she had not asked him for any money.

That night he sat down at his desk in his office, and began to read the simple little story. His eyes grew moist as he read the description of Sarah Ellen's hero. Had he looked like that? And that essay on Love! What had become of it? He remembered a passage from it:

"Love grows deeper as the years go by. And just as the rays of the sun grow softer and more beautiful as the day nears its close, so love, in the evening of life, fills our skies with a radiance indescribable."

After finishing the story, Hiram sat for a long time lost in thought. He now understood the important part which love plays in a woman's life, and he realized as never before how much Christmas meant to Sarah Ellen. He felt conscience-stricken and ashamed. As he thought of all this, he wondered how she could have loved him through all those years of toil and self-sacrifice. But did she love him? The thought chilled him for an instant. He felt that he could not rest until he had asked her the same old question that she had answered under the stars so long ago.

When he reached home, the children had all gone to bed, and the house was very quiet. What was Sarah Ellen doing? he wondered. How did she occupy her time, anyway, these long lonely evenings? Tiptoeing softly, he found her sitting in the firelight, her hands clasped, and lying idly in her lap, her eyes fixed upon the coals with the unseeing expression of one whose spirit has wandered back to other scenes and other days. She did not know that he was in the room until he called her name softly.

"Hiram!" she exclaimed, starting up. "Why, what is the matter? Is anything wrong? It—it is very early."

He sat down beside her, and took her hands in his own.

"My dear," he began, "I've got a business proposition to make to you."

Very slowly he took the manuscript from his pocket, and laid it in her lap.

"Oh!" exclaimed Sarah Ellen; then, womanlike, she burst into tears.

"I'd like to buy this story from you,"

Twelve Hundred in the Bread Line

THE Bowery Mission opened its doors for the beginning of the winter's work of the Bread Line on Thanksgiving morning. From an early hour in Wednesday evening the city's hungry and homeless men and lads began converging from different directions. By midnight, the block in which the Mission is situated was surrounded. When the Mission doors opened at 1 o'clock A.M. there were fully 1,200 men in the Bread Line. One by one they filed into the basement, where each received a steaming cup of fragrant coffee and a large fresh bread roll and in addition a cordial handshake from Superintendent Hallimond, and a cheery greeting for the festive day.

Thanksgiving at the Bowery Mission is one of the red-letter days of the year. For weeks beforehand the superintendent and his assistants are preparing for the day, so that they may be able to bring something of cheer into the sombre lives of the unfortunate. In addition to the 1,200 men who were fed at the early morning hour, one hundred and fifty baskets were distributed at nine o'clock to the poor families of the East Side. In that section, poverty ever sits upon the throne of suffering as winter opens.

It is at such a trying time that the Bowery Mission comes to the rescue. The good Samaritans go around, they investigate, and if the cause is found worthy, they pay the rent, supply food and fuel, and in many cases obtain some kind of employment for the head of the family.

In the baskets distributed on Thanksgiving morning were enough provisions to supply ten persons with a Thanksgiving dinner. Through this means fifteen hundred received a good, substantial meal. Each basket contained a good, dry-picked chicken, potatoes, tea, coffee, milk, sugar and other groceries, and in addition, a cake of soap and a new towel. A number of similar baskets were supplied by the Bowery Mission to the Bella Cooke Mission (which was founded in memory of the "Saint of Second Avenue") for distribution among poor families on the upper East Side.

As soon as the baskets were disposed of and the poor people went on their way rejoicing, preparations were immediately begun for the supplying of the regular Thanksgiving dinner to t unfortunate men of the Bowery. Wi ing hands were employed in filling t neat card-board boxes with good thin for the occasion. Two thousand box were used, oblong in shape, about eig inches by four inches and six inch deep, with closely fitting lids, each ha ing in artistic print the words, "Thanl giving Dinner. Compliments of t Bowery Mission." These were fill with turkey sandwiches and oth palatable edibles. The doors we thrown open at seven o'clock P.M., a again there was a ru of the hungry. A b was handed out to ea applicant accompanied kind words, words cheer and of hope. M of the men disposed the contents then a there, and stayed for t service about to be h in the main hall.

Mother Bird to charge of the meeti which fittingly broug the celebration of the d to a close. Hymns we sung by Mrs. Hallimo and Mr. Hunt, and t Rev. Dr. C. H. Me president of the Board Trustees, made a che ing, characteristic Gos address, having hope i the keynote, and telli the men to trust in G and look forward cc fidently to some bright day.

The Greatness and Influence of Tolstoy

HUGO'S pen was more powerful than Napoleon's sword. Tolstoy's pen was more potential than Russia's Czar, with his armies and navies, and the real ruler of the empire passed away when the great reformer went from the poor man's hut to the palace of his heavenly Father. Tolstoy was one of the ablest men of the centuries. He was eccentric; all geniuses are. In strength of intellect he was superior to any man in his nation, and his literary work revealed a strength and knowledge of human nature which put him in the class with Shakespeare. But that which made Tolstoy great was his singular purity of character and the breadth and depth of his affections. In this world of pride, ambition, jealousy, malice, avarice, injustice, oppression and conflict, he undertook to live a life of love, and to influence his fellow-men to do the same. Whatever crowns, cabinets and hierarchies may have thought of him, it is the verdict of the civilized world that he did live that life of love and taught others to do so as well as, or better than, almost any man of ancient or modern times. Royalty, nobility, the priesthood and others thought him a fool and had they represented truth, liberty and love, they would have been correct in their estimate of him; but because they championed oppression, selfishness and often corruption, in the life-long fight he made against them he was the wisest sage and truest prophet of his time. His passionate love for the peasantry; his loud call to the people to go back to the farm; his intense love for his fellow-men; his pre-eminent success, according to highest standards, and his universal fame, are all pictured in his book, Ivan, the Fool. Tolstoy himself, like Ivan the fool in the story, believed that character was the main thing; that a simple life of industry close to the earth, and a royal love for God and fellow-men were the most beautiful and potential things in the State—things that would grow taller than any king's palace.

Tolstoy, with his great intellect and spiritual vision, saw farthest into the souls of the people and the destiny of nations. His book, War and Peace, embodied his life-long hatred of war. He was an officer from the ranks of the nobility in the Crimean War—a superb specimen. It was in that war on the battlefield that he had a vision in which Christ asked him—by the light of a camp fire and with the dead and dying thick about him—what these men had killed each other for; and told him what a crime it was for kings to settle quarrels by setting brothers to murdering each other, for their royal benefit or glory, under the name of war. The Russo-Japanese War almost broke Tolstoy's heart, as did the bloodshed caused by the strikes in recent times in Moscow, St. Petersburg, and other cities.

The most able and consistent champion of individual, national and universal peace the world has known since the days of Christ passed from the stage when Tolstoy died. It was inevitable that he should quarrel with his national church, when he had so much of the "spirit which giveth life" and it so much of "the letter which killeth," and especially as he saw it the champion of absolutism, which brought oppression and misery to the common people. His conflict with the church reached its climax in his book called Resurrection, one chapter of whi describes the Easter Liturgy, where the orga choirs, chants, voices of the priests, ringing of t bells, all sound together while the clanking of t chains of the slaves is heard as a discord. All th are put out in such fearful contrast to the beau and glory of an Easter scene, that the mind is fill with horror. This was more than the church cou bear and he was excommunicated. The church a thorities came as near crucifying him as they cou Tolstoy's real greatness was in his character, his implicit obedience to the authority of a go conscience, in his experimental faith in the imm nence of the deity and in his devotion to Jes Christ as his own personal Saviour and Sovereig That he believed in the essentials of the Christi faith is unquestioned, though there are passages his writings that would not be accepted by the ortl dox. Despite the protests and hostility of absoluti in Church and State, and the jests and scorns of utilitarian age, Tolstoy, by his ability, purity character and unselfish devotion to the interests others—especially to the lowliest and most pressed—pushed his way into affections of his o nation and of the civilized world, and to an imm tality here and hereafter. That he was so we nigh universally loved and honored in his homela and among all nations, is evidence of the fact th righteousness, liberty, truth and love are the m beautiful and valuable things in the world. Socie is advancing, after all, to these highest standar when such a man as Tolstoy is enshrined in t hearts of the people of many lands. F. C. I.

Current Comments on Passing Events

—THE FRIGHTFUL aeroplane accident at Denver, Col... which resulted in the death of Ralph Johnstone, one of the most daring of the "birdmen," was of a character to discourage other acronauts from those "aerial stunts" which have been a thrilling feature of recent performances. Over-confidence has led to rashness which has already cost a number of valuable young lives.

—THE Orient, the new weekly published at the American Bible House, Constantinople, gives the population of Syria at 3,235,512, of whom 1,865,595 are Moslems, 978,988 Christians, 90,382 Jews, 308,740 Maronites, 151,837 Druzes, 304,140 Orthodox Greeks, the remainder being made up of Latins, United Syrians, Armenians, Chaldeans, Nestorians and foreigners. The population of Jerusalem (including the mutserrifiyet of El-Kuds and not the Holy City alone) is 341,438, of whom 39,866 are Jews, 241,332 Moslems, 24,793 Latins, 16,039 Orthodox Greeks, 44,389 Christians, the remainder representing half a dozen other classes of religionists.

—IT IS SOMETHING of a pleasant surprise to householders to find the price of meats, pork, poultry and foodstuffs generally from 10 to 15 per cent. lower than a month ago. They may go lower still. Overstocking by wholesalers may be one of the causes of the decline, but the likelihood is that the big corn crop of 3,000,000,000 bushels this season, much of which the farmers will feed to cattle and hogs, has more to do with it. After all, the ultimate ruler of the situation, as to our food products, is the agriculturist, for > "The farmer gives us bread and meat,

> The farmer feeds them all."

—SWITZERLAND'S proposal for a conference of nations at Berne to change the calendar by which the passage of time is now regulated throughout the civilized world will attract general interest. According to the cable, the idea seems to be to have every year divided into exactly 52 weeks or 364 days with New Year's counted as an "extra day" and Sunday bearing no date. Every leap year, too, would have one day that would not be dated nor counted, which would come in between June 31 and July 1. Undated Sundays and uncounted days may have their advantages, but it is difficult to determine what they are without further explanation. The world seems very well suited with the present calendar and we question whether any i provement can come of tinkering it on the lines indicated.

—ANOTHER NOTORIOUS "get-rich-quick" concern, with he quarters in New York, has come to grief. Its mail has b seized by the authorities and three partners in the conc are now in jail on the charge of fraudulent use of the ma The Burr Brothers, so the post office detectives allege, hav long and shady history. In five years they have wheedled n lions of dollars out of a credulous public, which avariciou bought stock in their oil, telephone and telegraph schemes. T United States government has a capacious prison at Atlan Ga., where it is gathering in this particular class of swindl at a lively rate. Up to date, some eighty concerns have b dealt with in different parts of the country and the net is all hauled in yet. It would help along the good work ma rially if newspapers generally, for their own reputation for the protection of the public, should agree to shut out promotion advertising except where satisfactory evidence genuineness and reliability could be produced. If this were rule, it would put an end to the "get-rich-quick" rascals, w live and thrive on printers' ink.

HIS FIRST CHRISTMAS

By GRACE BOTELER SANDERS

ROBERT GLEASON, frowning with perplexity, stood before the fire. His plump, white hands ıshed with diamonds. His smooth rehead, finely kept hair and elegant othing all spoke of wealth and the lvantages which only wealth can ve.

The room was luxuriously fitted up ith soft, crimson rugs, polished airs, upholstered divans, paintings, ulpture and bric-a-brac which had en gathered from every part of the obe. Crimson and gold predomiıted in hangings, upholstering and all-coverings. One experienced a nsation of warmth as soon as one ıtered the room.

If Robert Gleason had glanced in the irror, he would have seen a plump, hite face, clear blue eyes and the onine head of one of New York's ost successful business men—quite a fferent looking figure from the bare-ot boy who had arrived in the city ıst forty years before. But Robert leason's eyes did not look that way. e took no notice of the luxries which surrounded him.

Instead, he was staring rom the window at a landape which made even New ork look gray and grim ıd cold. It made him shuder to see the myriads of ıow-flakes tumbling over ıch other, obscuring the ıll buildings and wrapping very passer in a misty hite cloud. It made him ıudder again as he thought spending Christmas at ıe farm. He remembered ıe bare old house, so cold ıd uncomfortable even in ild weather. On his last sit, ten years ago, the ater in the bowl on the oldıshioned washstand had rozen and bulged up in the ıiddle. He had nearly rozen too, although his ıther had not seemed to ınd it. He remembered ıe vast, silent, snow-coved world, the unbroken aths, the tramps to the arn (he felt duty-bound to elp his father with the eeding) and the return, ıoes filled with snow, feet nd fingers aching from old.

The homeliness, the loneness of the life with no aily paper, no excitement, as too much for his luxuryoving soul. He forgot that e had been reared on a arm, forgot everything xcept the people and the laces in the city which were alling—always calling him, always.

Pleading business as an excuse, as oon as possible he took a train for ew York. And he had never reırned—not once in ten long years. nd he was their only child.

Somehow, standing here in the eauty and warmth, pictures from the nlovely, rigorous past would come. hey had been called into being by a tter which had been brought to him n a silver salver by a brown-skinned ervant who was attired in spotless hite. It was brought just as the late inner was finished, just when he was atisfied with dinner and cigar and imself and the whole wide world—is world—in general.

The effect of the few lines had been ıost disturbing. It had brought back hat shadowy past—had spoken of a ay of which he never allowed himself ven to dream.

His childhood had not been a happy ne like that of other boys he had nown. It had forced him to seek ifferent surroundings, better things. le had been but ten years old when he eft the farm, smarting from blows, njust blows, inflicted by his father in punishment of some childish fault. At the river, the boy had found a friend—a boat captain who had listened to his story and sympathized, because away back in his own boyhood a cruel stepmother had led him to leave home just as this boy was now doing.

Captain Armstrong took the little fugitive under his especial protection, fed him, cared for him, even gave him five silver dollars to fill his empty purse, when the two reached the great city. The memory of that bluff old captain had always been as sweet incense in the boy's nostrils.

Gleason, in quest of work, had gone at once to Wall Street—even in his country home he had heard of the bulls and bears who manipulated stocks with skilful hand. Day after day, until his money was almost gone, he haunted the halls and offices, always receiving the same reply—"No boy wanted." But one day his luck turned. Gleason rescued the hat of Winthrop Davis from beneath the feet of a frightened horse, thus attracting the attention of the wealthiest man on the Pit.

He began work at once as an office boy. Thirty years of faithful service had ended like this. The stocks, loans, properties belonging to Robert Gleason amounted to thousands. The immense lines of steamers that he owned and operated were worth their millions. He had not forgotten his friend, the Captain. One of his first thoughts when he equipped the fleet of vessels was to seek out Captain Armstrong and make him director-general. His parents had shared in his good fortune also.

Since the memorable visit ten years ago, he had sent them clothing, valuables, money — everything, except himself. They were not satisfied. Now they were demanding That.

Impatiently Gleason took up the coarse envelope and drew out the sheet of paper. The letter was from mother. Had the few lines been written by his father's hand, he would not have given them a second thought, but—mother had always been kind, always shielded him from punishment whenever she could, always sacrificed herself to secure for him little delicacies and things which children love. She had nursed him, all but given her life for his. Surely her wishes deserved some consideration.

Regretfully the son unfolded the sheet of paper. The cramped, uncertain characters had been written first with a pencil, outlined afterward with pen and ink.

"MY DEAR SON: Your father and I have been wishing that you would try to spend Christmas at the old place. You have been a good son to us"—Gleason winced at the sweet compliment, conscience gave the words the strength of blows—"you have provided us with comforts which we never expected to enjoy; you have made our old age an easy path to travel; but there is something else dearer to us than houses or gold, Robert—our boy. It has been ten long years since you were at home. We are getting old. We may not be here another Christmas, and I feel as if I must hold my boy in my arms once more before I die. I know you are busy, but you have made enough money, Robert; more than you can ever use. Lay business aside just for one day and give your company and your time to your loving mother. Spend Christmas on the farm for your mother's sake."

The tender appeal touched the son's heart. On this Christmas Eve the bachelor felt his aloneness. Last night he had walked the streets proudly, conscious of his wealth, of the cringing bows of the tradesmen, of the entreaties of his employees. Last night, the streets had been thronged with people. Wrapped round with furs, he had seen mothers bringing their petted darlings to the toy shops to gloat in the wonders which Santa Claus had provided for them. He had admired the windows, wreathed with holly, its scarlet berries gleaming among the waxy green leaves. A chic young schoolgirl who sometimes worked in his office flitted by wrapped warmly in a fur coat which made a perfect foil for her rosy cheeks and shining blue eyes. She wore a bright bit of red and green on the lapel of her coat, and as she passed him she flung at him a "Merry Christmas!" Her words set him to thinking. What would Christmas be for him?

A repetition of the Christmas days for the last twenty-five years. A late breakfast, a drive, dinner at the club, a theatre party at night and sleep again—blessed oblivion to all earth's troubles.

Robert Gleason's musings were interrupted by the appearance of another actor on the scene. Before the window, a plainly dressed couple, evidently a workingman and his pretty young wife, leading proudly between them their first-born, a boy of probably six years, stood looking with envious eyes at the gorgeous display of toys. "I've saved enough for a rocking-horse," Gleason heard the mother say. He heard, too, the husband's reply: "You'd strip yourself as bare as a bird for that youngster, Muriel." The expression of love which flitted over the girl-mother's face was almost holy as she tucked her hand beneath her husband's arm and snuggled closer. "So long as we have each other and our love, I'm satisfied," she whispered. They passed on, and for the first time in his life Robert Gleason's hungry heart realized that with all his wealth he could not buy what this shabby couple possessed—a happy home, the love of a true, pure heart and a little child's sweet affection. He had staked all for gold. Like King Midas, all he touched had turned to precious metal, but it had cost him his sweetheart, his happiness.

Back in the misty years of young manhood, when after an attack of fever Robert Gleason had gone to the farm to recuperate, he had known a Muriel too—Muriel Standish. She had been brown of eye and pink of cheek, just as was this child's mother; and she, too, had loved her knight with an idolatrous devotion, with a love which Gleason never understood.

"From the shadowy quiet of the old parlor, another figure . . ."

Then he had seen all the beauty of the farm, for the lilacs were in bloom and the fragrant countryside nodded and sang aloud because of the sweetness and loveliness of Nature. During those long, happy days the young man worked and sang in joyful anticipation of the evening time when he should see Her.

His face grew brown and his hands hard. He thought of giving up the place which he had won in the city, thought of staying on the farm with Her. But as much as Muriel Standish loved Gleason, she considered her duty to her father and mother her most important one; so she sent her lover away, promising to wait for him and to be true.

Robert Gleason angrily released her from the tender promise. That very night he left for New York. He never answered one of the tender letters which she wrote to him. He steeled his heart when he heard that her father and mother had died, leaving her free. He buried himself in business perplexities. He won every battle. He had never suspected until last

A Seasonable Notice

AT this season, many of our readers, whose subscriptions expire some time after the turn of the year, are writing us anxiously inquiring how they may take advantage, without loss to themselves, of our holiday Premium offers and Magazine Combinations.

To make it quite clear to these friends, and to all whose subscriptions expire after the Christmas holidays are over, that the privilege they desire is open to them without any added cost, we make this statement: You are entirely welcome to avail yourselves of any of our Premium and Magazine Combination offers, and you can do so at once, by sending in your renewal now instead of waiting until the date of expiry. Immediately on receipt, we will advance your subscription one whole year from date of expiry. You won't lose a single day, nor miss a single copy of the paper. What you will gain is a seasonable choice of our Book Premiums and Magazine Combinations at a time when you can use them to best advantage, either in your home, or as gifts to friends whom you wish to remember at Christmastime. Besides, you will receive our 1911 calendar and the fine, large life-like photogravure of the late Dr. Klopsch, both entirely free.

Of course, we keep in stock as far as possible the year round, a sufficient supply of Premiums to meet the needs of renewing subscribers; but we wish you to have the benefit of the Christmas Magazines and to make your choice of them and our Premium books now. You can do this absolutely without any extra outlay, and it will give us great pleasure to serve you. See the full announcement in our Colored Supplement of last week.

The Spirit of Christmas

THERE is hardly a festival in the calendar which has such a hold on the hearts of old and young alike as Christmas Day. It is prepared for through many weeks, and as the twenty-fifth of December draws nearer, the very air itself seems charged with pleasurable excitement and with good will. The ring of the car-bells and the voices upon the streets seem to take on a more cheery tone, and the spirit of the time seems to throw a glamour over places and things which ordinarily are devoid of all pretense to beauty, if they are not absolutely ugly.

As it is with places, so it is with people. They, too, not only seem to change, but the transformation does take place in millions of hearts to a greater or less degree. The spirit of Christmas even affects people who for the rest of the year are devoid of sentiment and of feeling for their fellows. The most interesting stories of Christmastide are those which will never appear in print—true stories of men and women whose thoughts had been only of their own selfish aims and pleasures, but have been wakened, if only for a day or two, from their usual self-complacency, moved by some force of which they were only half-conscious, to do some act of kindness to make the day happier for some one less fortunate than themselves in a worldly way. As the reader glances over the papers in Christmas week and catches sight of the reports of gifts made to needy institutions, of many acts of commendable charity, and realizes that these are but the white flecks of foam marking the course of a great wave of good deeds, it seems almost criminal to be pessimistic at such a time. Every reader knows that where one good deed gets into print a thousand have been done by people who felt that the greatest joy would come to their hearts if even their beneficiaries did not discover the source of the Christmas dinner, the rent money which was sent to the family whose wage earner had long been ill, and the doll sent to the little girl in the tenements, whose greatest treasure had been a rag tied around a painted stick.

Christmas is an excellent forerunner for New Year's. The hearts of men have been softened, and they see things in a new light. The determination to keep on doing good often follows, and is kept alive during the next twelve months. If the spirit of giving, which is the true spirit of the day—giving ourselves when needed to aid some good cause, thinking of the interests of the community and trying to make the world a better place to live in because of our influence, becomes part of our hearts and lives, we can look forward to the future with joyful assurance instead of dark forebodings, and the great Gift of the ages, which was given to us all when the silver stars looked down on the little town of Bethlehem, will have a fuller and richer meaning.

The Mexican Revolution

WHAT threatened at one time to become a very formidable revolt against the presidential dictatorship of Porfirio Diaz, chief executive of Mexico, now seems likely to fail through lack of a strong and capable leader. Francisco I. Madero, the chief political figure in the revolt, who lately proclaimed himself Provisional President, is reported to be wounded. General Reyes, who is probably one of the ablest soldiers in the republic and who was reported as disaffected, is not available for leadership, being out of the country. Diaz has a strong support among the influential classes and his military control is well-nigh absolute. Unless there is serious disaffection in the army, the government may succeed in temporarily checking the revolt. There is little doubt, however, that the present movement springs from deep-seated popular dissatisfaction with the Diaz régime. A very large element in Mexico seems to believe that the time has come for a change from the Diaz control, which has now held the reins of power for thirty-five years, preventing any real expression of the people's will. The administration has become a dictatorship, not only controlling the army and police, but abusing its power in many ways and enjoying unlimited opportunities for official "graft," which the people and the courts were impotent to check. Their opposition is leveled less against Diaz personally, than against the unrepublican and autocratic system he represents. Our own attitude toward the warring factions is distinctly neutral; but our military forces along the border have been strengthened with a view to possible emergencies which might demand the protection of American interests.

Millionaires' Children

MR. CARNEGIE, who is on record as having written that the time would come when it would be considered a disgrace for a man to die rich, at a recent public dinner made another very striking statement which follows the same line of reasoning. He said he "pitied the sons of millionaires." They began life handicapped. They had usually little or no incentive to the effort and struggle that make for the development of character, and which produce the finest type of strong, able, virile manhood. With rare exceptions, such lives accomplish little; while those who have come up through the valley of toil and poverty and whose education has been received in the College of Hard Knocks, make the best men, the finest type of citizens, the most representative Americans. A few years ago, the two sons of a Western millionaire were on the platform at a meeting of workingmen. One of them made an address in which he said substantially: "I envy you, men, the training and development that have come to you through your own efforts. My brother and I were provided for from our cradle up. We were not allowed to study as hard at school as other boys. We were kept from playing with other boys of our age. We could not go out without an attendant. Our parents, through mistaken kindness, made life meaningless and monotonous for us by depriving us of the joy of the struggle, the delight of achievement. All inducement to effort was taken from us. Now, as young men, we find ourselves without an aim in life. We have nothing to do, nothing to strive for, because everything has been done for us." It is true, the fault in this case was that of the parents. It might have been different, had wisdom directed the training of their children. But it conveys a warning to many who are disposed to do just what this father and mother did, who erred in trying to make life too easy for their sons, instead of teaching them how to fight the battle for themselves. We need more of the old Spartan idea in the training of our youth.

His Gift to the "Bread Line"

IT was a sack of coffee, and very good coffee, too. It was sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices in the Bible House just a few days before the opening of the Bowery Mission Bread Line. Look as we might, we could find no clue to the identity of the sender.

By dint of much inquiry, however, it was learned that the gift came from a certain business man. He was summoned on the telephone.

"What?" said he, in response to our interrogation—"that coffee? Oh, yes—well, just say it was from John Doe."

"But cannot we even mention your name in acknowledgment?"

"Well--no; I don't think so. You can just put it John Doe, or Smith, or anything, but not my name please. And remember, if your poor fellows on the Bread Line like that coffee, you can have more of it."

He certainly was determined to do his alms in secret, not letting his left hand know what the right hand did. Let us add that there are hundreds of our readers who follow this fine, old-fashioned Scriptural way of doing good by stealth. They find giving to the poor one of the best investments. The Lord always pays big interest on such loans.

That coffee? Well—some of it was served out on the opening night of the Bread Line at the Bowery Mission and the poor fellows went into rapture over it. If the giver could only have seen the effect of his donation, his heart would have throbbed with joy and pity the rest of the night. Never was such coffee served in the Bowery Mission—at least so some twelve hundred men declared who drank it.

Of course, it was an unusual gift—a large one for few can afford to donate a whole sack of coffee. We should hardly expect such gifts often. Now there are 1,200 to 1,500 men and boys in the Bread Line nightly (by Christmas Eve it will go as high as 2,000), and though few donors may give so much, it is easily within the reach of every reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to feed one poor fellow at least, since a large cup of coffee and a big bread roll cost us (buying all supplies at wholesale) only one and a half cents. It's not a bad meal either, as the men will tell you; besides, it isn't a restaurant, nor a hotel, but just the Bread Line for poor, famishing men and lads, who have no home, no work, no bed, and whose clothes are for the most part unfitted to keep out the weather. As to shoes and shirts, the less said the better. Truly, the Bread Line is not a place for elegant costumes.

"When thou makest a feast," said the Master, "bid the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind; and thou shalt be blessed." This is the season of feasting. Why not have as your guests, some of these poor fellows of the Bread Line, who, while enjoying your bounty at the midnight meal in the old Bowery Mission, eating your bread and drinking your coffee would not fail to remember the giver with grateful hearts and trembling lips, before they go out again into the winter night?

Send your gift for the Bread Line to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Tolstoy, the Uncrowned King

COUNT TOLSTOY died at the station master's hut in Astapova. The body was placed in a plain oak coffin, at the foot of which a few wreaths of fir, emblematic of immortality, had been laid. The platform of the railroad station was covered with boughs of fir spread by the peasants of the neighborhood, who passed in great numbers, single file, by the coffin to take the last look of their dead friend. The count was conveyed by special train to Yasnaya Poliana, the family estate in the government of Tula, where at his command the simplest burial services were held and his body put to rest under "Poverty Oak," the spot where he used to play in childhood and where he and his brother buried a green rocking horse, with the childish hope that at its resurrection a rule of happiness would begin. Premier Stolypin sent to the Russian Emperor a report of the death of Count Leo Tolstoy, on the margin of which the Czar wrote the following: "I heartily deplore the death of the great writer who embodied in the golden age of his talent creations of types of the fatherland characterizing one of the most glorious periods of Russian life. May he find in God a merciful Judge." The Duma adjourned the day's session out of respect for the memory of Count Tolstoy, the president in his eulogy characterizing Tolstoy as the pride of Russia and the glory of mankind. Count Tolstoy was one of the greatest writers the world has ever known, and was one of the purest and best men that ever lived. It was perfectly natural that a man of his genius and spirit should be at right angles to the absolute despotism under which he lived much of his life, and to the forms and hypocrisies which he found in the ministrations of the Greek Church. He believed in the royalty of the peasantry and in the priesthood of the people. Christ was his ideal, his example, his companion and inspiration, and his towering intellectual genius was crowned with the royalty of love. In the realm of thought, truth and affection, he was the uncrowned king, the real king of Russia. In all literature, we have not found anything superior to his love for Christ and his fellowmen shown in his little story, Where Love is There is God Also. And no Christmas story in any language, in our judgment, is superior to it. This is the story: Martuin Avdyeitch, an humble shoemaker, lived in a basement room with one window looking out on the street. One night he heard some one say, "I am coming." This he took to be the voice of Christ. The next day at his work he saw out of his window an old soldier shoveling snow. He was tired and half frozen. The man dropped his awl and needle, put porridge and tea on the table, tapped on the window, and asked the soldier in. "Come in; never mind the snow on your boots; come in, sit down by the fire, warm yourself, and have something to eat." As the shoemaker talked to the soldier about Christ and his love for the common people, the soldier cried like a child. The soldier left, and the shoemaker saw standing at his window in the fieree storm a woman clad in shabby summer clothes, trying with them wrapped about the baby in her arms to keep it from freezing to death. The child was erying hard, and Martuin could not stand it. He went out and invited her in, put some cabbage soup gruel and bread and tea on the table, and said, "Sit down and eat, and I will mind the baby. We had babies at our house; they all died, but I have not forgotten how to handle them." After the meal, he took one of his coats and said, "This may keep you and the baby from freezing to-night." She put on his coat and wrapped it about the child and went out into the storm, but as she went she said, "Christ sent me to your window and you to the window to find me." He dropped a piece of money in her hand and bade her redeem the shawl she had pawned. Next an apple woman stopped at his window and a street urchin stole one apple from a hole in the sack. The woman caught the boy by the hair and punished him terribly. The shoemaker ran out and spoke sweet words of Christ's forgiveness and love. The boy asked the woman's pardon, and then carried the heavy sack home for her. When the man came back into his shop he seemed to hear people talking about him, and a voice sounded, "Martuin, did you not recognize me?" "Who?" said Martuin. "It is I," and the old soldier he had helped stepped from the dark corner. He smiled and like a cloud faded away. "And this is I," said the apple woman and the boy, both smiling as they vanished. Avdyeitch's soul rejoiced and he felt that his dream had not deceived him; that the Saviour had really called on him that day and that he had received him. Then opening his Bible he read:

For I was a hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in. . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me. (Matt. 25:35, 40.)

A Strange Prisoner

A dapper-looking young man, wearing pink stockings, bright red necktie, a black frock coat and a straw hat, was put in the lockup at Greenwich, Conn., for an attempt at some kind of swindling. When the sheriff came to arrest him, almost the first question the young man asked was, "Are you a Christian, Mr. Slieriff?" The sheriff hesitating in his answer, the prisoner thrust a tract into the officer's hand and earnestly pleaded with him to repent of his sins and come to Christ. It could be wished that an investigation of the facts would prove that this young man was crazy. It could hardly be thought that one in his right mind could so boldly play the hypocrite, and yet there are multitudes of professed Christians who have almost no compunctions of conscienee with reference to their own personal conduct, and are very bitter in their judgment of the sins of their fellow men. It is the duty of the follower of Christ to convert as many people as he can by personal plea, by tract, or other method, but it is his first duty to practise what he preaches. There is no mockery greater than the exhortations of hypocrisy to the discharge of duty. Christ's most blistering words of condemnation were poured out upon those hypocrites who made the long prayers and stole from the widows. This young man with the hand of law on his shoulder on the charge of theft, exhorting the sheriff to piety, reminds us of those ancient hypocrites.

Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretense make long prayer: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation. (Matt. 23:14.)

Nation's Lowest Death Rate

From the census report it is learned that the death rate in the United States has been reduced to 15 to the thousand, which it is believed is the lowest in the history of the nation. In 1908 the death rate in the census bureau registration area was 15.4 per thousand, and in the bureau's annual report for that year, issued last spring, it was stated that an era of low mortality had begun. The death rate for 1909 is lower than that for any previous year of registration, and the lowest that has ever occurred in the history of the United States. There are vast districts of the country where they have no registered vital statistics. But from the cities and States that do keep an accurate record of such statistics it is learned that the death rate is decreasing and is at the present time at the lowest point in our national history, which is a matter of congratulation and should be a eause of profound gratitude to Almighty God. This longevity can be attributed to good stock, a care for the cradle, obedience to the laws of hygiene, increased scientific medical discovery, careful moral habits and a merciful Divine Providence. There is still room for improvement, and an increasing obedience to the laws of God and man will result in a longer, wider, deeper, happier human life. The Psalmist records the promise of the Lord of long earthly life to those who should live near to him and be obedient to his commands.

With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation. (Ps. 91:16.)

Dioxydiamidoarsenobenzol

Three Baltimore physicians, Dr. Llewellyn F. Barker of Johns Hopkins University, Dr. W. B. Wolf of the Baltimore Medical College and Dr. Charles E. Simon of Madison Avenue, Baltimore, will soon receive for experimental purposes from Dr. Paul Ehrlich, director of the Royal Institute for experimental therapeutics at Frankfort-on-Main, a supply of dioxydiamidoarsenobenzol. The medieal profession at large knows very little about this new discovery, which it is claimed is a specific for a widespread blood disease of great antiquity which has been counted for centuries well-nigh incurable. Dr. Ehrlich says he will not give the remedy out to the profession at large until he shall have had a successful test in three thousandeases. He says he will then reveal the chemical elements which enter into the compound of the remedy. It seems to us that a shorter word than almost the longest one in the world might have been selected to name this new remedy which is intended to have such widespread application. There is a universal spiritual malady incurable by earthly remedies. The names given in the Bible to the cure are short and simple. Theological terms are sometimes long and difficult to translate, but the Bible words for the remedy are unmistakable. They are love, Christ, blood, salvation. What could be more simple and comprehensive than this description of the remedy of the disease of sin?

The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. (I. John 1:7.)

Another Hero Policeman

Policeman Joseph Mangan died the other day in Seney Hospital, Brooklyn, as the result of injuries received in a fire in which he rescued several persons from the building. He lost his life in saving Edward and Dorothy Schnitzel, five and three years old respectively. Mr. and Mrs. Schnitzel were helped down a fire escape, and when they reached the ground they supposed that the firemen had the children, but saw they did not. Mrs. Schnitzel cried out, and Mangan dashed back into the smoke-filled house and carried the boy down the fire escape, and in spite of the warnings of his comrades he insisted on going back for Dorothy. He got the child in his arms and made for the fire escape, but the flames were curling out of all the windows, and he had to seek safety by means of the stairs. He plunged over the banister with the little girl in his arms, but he so held her that his body shielded her, and she was unhurt, but his skull was fractured. The brave man lay unconscious with the little ehild hugged to his breast. One of the last things he said before he died was to make inquiry about the little boy and girl whom he had given his life to save. Mangan had been eighteen years on the New York police force, but twenty years' service is required to secure a pension. A public subscription is being taken up for his family, which already amounts to between $1,000 and $2,000. Against the dark background of selfishness which is so common there are beautiful examples of heroism like this of the policeman who gave his life for the little child. All these instances remind us of the ideal One, the hero of all heroes, who gave his life that men might live. The apostle uses the fact of this sacrifice as a reason for our undying devotion to His service.

And that he died for all, that they which lived should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. (II. Cor. 5:15.)

Death the Reminder of Life

By Pastor Charles M. Sheldon

DEATH is a wonderful reminder of Life. He reminds us at once of Life's uncertainty and also of its sure and abiding realities. He reminds us of Life's great things by comparing the unimportant with the essential, for many a thing in Life that seemed very large when your friend was living seems very small when Death puts its measuring rod on him. Death reminds us of the friendships of Life which we had forgotten and even despised until Death made us stop and know how much we loved and were loved. Death reminds us of Life's real values. We had thought they were money and fame and power and happiness, but Death shows us that life is really love and friendship, and kindness and service, and doing the next right thing, and brotherhood, and God.

Death reminds us of Life's opportunities, of its daily doors of helpfulness. He goes so far in his eagerness to teach us that we feel remorse or regret in Death's presence that we were careless of the living, so negligent of the glory of heaven possible for us all between daylight and dark. Death reminds us of what we might have done and of what we yet may do. He holds up Life's great image and we never see life so vividly or so truly as when Death reminds us of the true things. Death pulls off the mask of human sham, tears down the veil of hypocrisy, rubs out shallow pretense, laughs at social frivolities and puts the mark of truth on what is true and the brand of falsehood on what is false. He is not afraid to tell us in plain language what life actually is. And in his presence the mean things, and the surface things, and the foolish things, and the useless things, and the unnecessary things of life are all held up for us to despise and abhor, and the virtues of Life, the kindness, the loves, the self-abnegations, the satisfying things are held up alongside the others for us to admire and imitate.

Does any friend we know on earth remind us more of Life than Death does? Indeed, Death is of little consequence except to remind us of life. Out of the cross on which the Prince of Glory died has flowed a well-spring of healing life for the world. Calvary is not gloomy with the death of the world; it is regnant with the life of the world.

Let us not fear Death. He cannot harm us. Life is the only thing to fear. Life is what does things. Death does nothing except emphasize Life. What a friend this is to humanity! Some of us would live for years without a sober or happy thought of God if Death did not now and then beckon some one we know out of our presence into his. Then, as this acquaintance, this friend of ours, that baby, that child, that life companion goes in through that glory gate, we look, and God is there, and we have to think of him for a while. The money-making, the pleasure-seeking, the power-craving drop their clutches off of us for another brief moment and God has a chance at us again. Death has reminded us of him.

Yes, Death is a potent Life-revealer. He makes us see things as they are. He makes us stamp them for what they are worth. He gives us the truth. He does more than jog our memory. He is the constant re-

2 It tells how the earth was dreaming,
And all the waters slept,
While stars in their orbits moving
A silent vigil kept;
When lo! on the brow of midnight
A sudden lustre shone:
The sky was arrayed in glory
From God's eternal throne.

3 O night of celestial brightness!
O songs that rend the air!
O Babe in a manger lying,
With form so still and fair!
The years, while they bear us onward
Along the sea of time,
Are chanting the same old choral
In hallowed tones sublime.

LEND A HAND

"BEAR ye one another's burdens,"
Help the toiler on his way.
See! a heavy weight is pressing;
Give him succor while you may.
Lend a hand—his load will lighten,
Show him kindness—skies will brighten.

When the clouds of sorrow thicken,
When the way is dark and drear,
Just a word, a look, a favor,
Serves despondent hearts to cheer.
Showing sympathy in sorrow
Nerves the heart for its to-morrow.

"Bear ye one another's burdens,"
Take your fallen brother's hand.
Lead him to the source of blessing,
Help him on the Rock to stand.
When he makes his great decision,
Morning breaks upon his vision.

"Bear ye one another's burdens,"
So the law of Christ fulfil.
Love bestowed upon the needy
Showeth best the Father's will.
Just a cup of water given
Marks the way from earth to heaven.

Death the Reminder of Life

minder of life as it ought to be. Death cannot change character. He has no power to transform the soul. His great office is to reveal, to remind the race of its great heritage of life and to use its gift as to beautify and strengthen and adorn every deed, every word, every thought. Is Death trying to teach us these things to-day? Let us be good pupils of his. For if we will only learn of him, he will make us all better men and women, and, may we hope, lead some of us to the foot of the Cross, where for the first time in our lives we shall learn what Life truly is.

A Plea for the Homeless Boys

By Mrs. Sarah J. Bird

EVERY mother who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is interested in the homeless boy at the Bowery Mission. As the cold nights have come, it reminds us of the terrible sight of hundreds of friendless boys turned out into the freezing darkness for they have no money for a bed in a decent lodging house. They are compelled to meet with terrible temptations. Many a "mother's boy" enters the gates of hell to keep from freezing as he has no money to buy a lodging-house bed ticket. When they have no work and are out of money their overcoat is probably in the pawn shop.

I shall never forget walking up the Bowery at midnight in an icy snowstorm after closing my meeting. One of our bad boys with a big kind heart came into the Mission and said, "Mother Bird, you can't go home to-night. It is an awful storm outside. I have been to the stable to try and get a hack for you, but they are all out. If you will trust Big Tom, the prison bird, to take you home, I'll take care of you." We soon started together up the Bowery and "Big Tom," who had spent fifteen of his years in prison, almost carried me over the drifts of frozen snow. In the face of that storm no living creature was to be seen on the lower Bowery, except the poor and homeless. The only light to cheer us, on that dreadful night, came from saloons filled to overflowing with standing homeless men.

After I reached my home safely, I could not sleep, as I thought of our rich Christian city, with no place of shelter for these midnight wanderers but the saloon, which is the open door to destruction. If every mother would send ten cents or more to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every homeless boy in the great city would get a ticket to a decent lodging house on a cold, stormy night.

Reach from Earth to Heaven

MAY I say just a word for the sermon each week in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—the one that is written to children? I must say these sermons, though short, are long enough in truth to reach from earth to heaven! The writer certainly knows how to entertain children, and even children in middle life, and older. They have done me lots of good.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is growing more into its natural spirit of cheerfulness since the loss of our dear Brother Klopsch. We are so glad to see this. May it continue. It has done a great work. There is more still to be done. RODERICK E. RICHARDS.

Old-Time Christmas Days

The Diary of an American Woman Tells of Them Fifty Years Ago

By KATE UPSON CLARK

IN the diary of Mrs. E. C. Clarke, kept carefully from 1852 to 1872, in Canandaigua, N. Y., are interesting pictures of the Christmas days of fifty and sixty years ago. Mrs. Clarke, then Caroline Cowles Richards, was only ten years old when she began this instructive and very amusing chronicle; but she had already outgrown many of the sweet illusions of childhood. She says:

"I love the story of Cinderella and the poem, ''Twas the night before Christmas,' and I am sorry that there are no fairies and no Santa Claus,"—a sorrow which is shared by countless thousands of her fellow beings to this day.

In 1857, though the excellent grandparents with whom she lived did not "keep" the great annual festival, she and her younger sister Anna had a good time. She says: "Grandfather and grandmother do not care much about making Christmas presents. They say when they were young no one observed Christmas or New Year's, but they always kept Thanksgiving Day. Our cousins, the Fields and Carrs, gave us several presents, and Uncle Edward sent us a basketful from New York by express. Aunt Ann gave me one of the Lucy books and a Franconia story book, and to Anna, The Child's Book on Repentance. When Anna saw the title, she whispered to me that if she had done anything she was sorry for, she was willing to be forgiven. I am afraid she will never read hers, but I will lend her mine."

This "Anna" was a wit, and was singularly lacking in reverence, for one brought up in such a godly household. Caroline adds to her Christmas entry: "Anna and I were chattering like two magpies to-day, and a man came in to see grandfather. He told us in an undertone that children should be seen and not heard. After he had gone, I saw Anna watching him a long time till he was only a speck in the distance, and I asked her what she was doing. She said she was watching him out of sight because it was a sign if you watched persons out of sight, you would never see them again." Let us hope that her "sign" "came true."

In 1869 a Christmas tree "with many other attractions" was provided in the chapel of Caroline's school (the Ontario Female Seminary). A post office was carried on in connection with it, and Caroline received many letters from her friends. Among these was a "ficticious" one, from a gentleman who dated it ten years in advance, and pretended to be writing from the North Pole—a forerunner of two distinguished explorers, one of whom has now vanished into profound obscurity. It is rather remarkable that this gentleman also hoisted the Stars and Stripes there immediately upon his arrival. He "thought he should freeze," and the pole was "so slippery" that he came down uncomfortably fast after flinging his pennant to the breeze. He adds:

"Although this pole has been used for more than 6,000 years, it is still as good as new."

He sends to Caroline "by Esquimaux express," a tame polar bear as a present.

In 1860, she ate Christmas dinner at an aunt's, and in the evening the whole family visited the insane asylum, where an entertainment was given. One of the patients threw them all into fits of laughter by inquiring in a loud tone after each number, "What next?"

The war came on, and the diary is filled with soldiers, battles, prison escapes, great fairs for the army and navy, and weddings which were almost as sad as funerals. One Christmas Eve, 1863, one of Caroline's intimate friends was married to a major in the army. "It was a beautiful wedding."

She herself was married to a soldier during the summer of 1866, and, like most of the brides of those days, went to Saratoga on her wedding trip. There she heard Dr. Cuyler preach; and a little later she saw President Johnson, General Grant and Admiral Farragut, and heard them speak. In those who were alive during those stirring times, this unassuming narrative awakens thrilling memories. As it was printed and not published, comparatively few have had access to it. Its simple pictures of the everyday life of a young girl in those far-off years are all as true and amusing as the brief Christmas glimpses which have been quoted here.

CHRISTMAS

By Joel Benton

ALONG the slopes of Olivet
A hush and halo linger yet;
A whispered homage stirs the trees—
Vocal through twenty centuries.

The stable where the oxen stood
Left us Life's best beatitude,
Where, in a manger, it gave breath
To Him of lowly Nazareth.

And still Wise Men come from afar,
To seek there that strange, unmapped Star;
To Bethany wend, and Galilee,
Some traceries of His steps to see.

His Life is now a diadem
For quiet, nestled Bethlehem;
Though crushed on cruel Calvary,
What greater on this earth can be?

Hallowed is Kedron's pensive stream;
No room remains for doubt or dream,
Since the World's Hope, dear and divine
Gilds thus—forever—Palestine.

Under its far-off, pale blue sky,
Bringing us Immortality,
The King of Life came, humbly born,
Upon this gracious Christmas Morn!

The National "Land Show" in Chicago

WHEN Secretary Wilson opened the Chicago "Land Show" on November 19, there was spread out before him a panorama showing in miniature all parts of the West and South, where attractive opportunities are offered to settlers. There were displays from a large number of States and, in addition, the entire balcony of the Coliseum was filled with exhibits sent by the government. These exhibits represented the departments of the Interior, Treasury, Post Office, Agriculture and Navy.

In the exhibits are to be found grains, fruits, vegetables, nuts and other products from every agricultural section, all being arranged in an attractive, compact manner. In addition there are special features, such as dances by Hopi Indians from New Mexico and Arizona. A troupe of native singers has been sent by the Hawaiian government.

The display of apples is one of the noticeable features of the Land Show. The apples shown are from all the noted orchard districts of the Northwest—Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Colorado and Montana—as well as from localities not usually considered as centres for the apple-raising industry, such as California, New Mexico, Texas and Louisiana. Michigan has one of the largest displays of apples on the main floor.

The South is in greater prominence than was the case at the first Land Show, one year ago. The general agitation throughout the Southern States for the purpose of encouraging immigration and increasing knowledge of the principles of scientific agriculture, has caused the South to make a strong bid for the settlers who have been streaming into the West. A little more than a year ago, there was practically no mention in Chicago regarding agricultural opportunities south of Mason and Dixon's line, but now the air is full of talk of farms where three crops can be raised every year, and where cattle do not need to be fed through a long winter.

California and Louisiana have taken advantage of the Land Show to boom the advantages of San Francisco and New Orleans as sites for the proposed exposition in 1915. The California promoters intend to give away a farm, as well as a carload of fruit, prunes, raisins and raisin bread. Louisiana is likely to give away a farm in the reclaimed swamp district and another in the high cut-over pine lands near Alexandria.

Arkansas has one of the biggest single exhibits in the Land Show. A farm in Arkansas will be given away prior to December 4, the closing day. There is great activity around the booths in which all parts of the State are represented, Little Rock and Fort Smith being in the lead.

The Coliseum has an annex with two floors. Each of these floors is being used for lectures. The lecturers are showing motion pictures and colored views and are talking daily to thousands who seem as interested as though they were attending an illustrated travel talk. The crowds at the lectures and in the main part of the Coliseum have been enormous, as the land hunger of the public is keen in the vicinity of Chicago. During the closing week it is expected that the crowds will be even larger, as the International Live Stock Show will be running at the same time.

The interior of the building, with its picturesque decorations and the well-filled booths, presents a brilliant picture. At the ends are two immense paintings, each more than forty feet in height. One of these represents the Yosemite Valley, and the other the canyon of the Yellowstone. The ceiling is draped with blue bunting, suggesting the open sky. The booths are covered with pergolas festooned with rose branches and are especially attractive.

On the opening day, luncheon was given at the Blackstone Hotel in honor of Secretary Wilson. More than three hundred and fifty well-known Chicagoans and visiting representatives of various States were in attendance. In the afternoon there was a reception to Mr. Wilson at the Coliseum, when he officially opened the exhibition.

New Mexico has sent a display which has numerous unique features. It is in charge of the State Commissioner of Immigration. The new State needs settlers and is making a strong bid for them in Chicago. Colorado also has an exhibit in charge of the State Commissioner of Immigration. The Centennial State occupies twenty booths which are decorated with views of attractive scenery and the various products that will thrive at the altitude of Denver. The apple displays are especially notable.

The Pecos Valley of Texas is one of the newer localities that is making known its need for colonists. Other parts of the State, too, are on hand with their products. The "Panhandle" is represented at one booth and the lower Rio Grande Valley at another.

The attractions of the Gulf Coast, from the Rio Grande all the way around to Florida, are set forth in various booths. This part of the country has come to the front much stronger than at the first Land Show, whereas the Northwest is not as strongly represented. This is taken as one indication of a growing tendency of immigration to turn South rather than West.

Questions and Answers

In forwarding MSS. to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, enclose stamped envelopes for return, if unavailable.

M. DeN., DesMoines, Ia. How do the corn, oats, wheat and barley crops of this season compare with those of last year? Can you give the official figures?

The Bureau of Statistics, Washington, D. C., gives them as follows: Corn (bushels), 3,121,381,000 this year, 2,772,376,000 last year; wheat, 691,769,000, 737,189,000; oats, 1,096,396,000, 1,007,353,000; barley, 158,138,000, 170,284,000.

G. W. H., Holland, Mich. In your issue of November 29, it was asked: "Did not the children of Israel have live stock with them in the wilderness? If they did have live stock, what need of 'manna'?" Your answer was that they had live stock. Where did the live stock get their feed in the wilderness?

The Scripture itself tells us that they took cattle with them out of Egypt. It is not a matter of conjecture. See Ex. 12: 38. Their live stock was probably consumed to feed the multitude in the wilderness. See Ex. 16: 3-8. This is assumed by the commentators, one of whom writes that on reaching the desert "their stock was exhausted."

S. B. G., Los Angeles, Calif. What is the religious brotherhood known as the Brotherhood of the Red Diamond?

It is an organization for boys in the churches. It is interdenominational. It is for boys of from twelve to fifteen. Write to William A. Whitney, General Superintendent, 150 East Twenty-third Street, New York, for full information.

M. V. B., Weedsport, N. Y. 1. How many States and Territories are there at present? 2. What were the last four Territories made States? 3. What are the names of the Territories at present?

1. There are forty-six States and five Territories at present. 2. The last four Territories made States in order of admission were Idaho, 1890; Wwoming, 1890; Utah, 1896 and Oklahoma, 1907. 3. The Territories at present are New Mexico, Arizona, District of Columbia, Alaska and Hawaii. New Mexico and Arizona are forming their constitutions and will soon be full-fledged States.

I. U. T., Harpers Ferry, Va. 1. How many members have the Hindu, Buddhist and Mohammedan faiths? 2. How many people are there in the Armenian Church?

1. M. Fournier de Flaix gives the following estimates: Hinduism, 190,000,000; Buddhism, 147,900,000; Mohammedanism, 176,834,372. 2. There are said to be 1,690,000 in the Armenian Church.

L. H., Flushing, Long Island. 1. Who was the first governor of New York in colonial days? 2. Who was the first governor of New York after it became a State?

1. Adrian Joris was the first colonial governor. He served in 1623 and 1624. 2. George Clinton was the first governor after independence was declared. He served from 1777 to 1795.

M. B., Harrisburg, Pa. Give the status of the automobile industry for the last year; kinds of cars constructed and value.

In 1909, 80,000 power driven cars were built, including those for business use as well as pleasure. Seventy-three thousand were propelled by gasoline and the remainder by electricity and steam. The total value of these cars was $135,000,000. Three hundred firms are engaged in manufacturing automobiles, and they have 125,000 employees.

W. H. S., Romine, Ky. 1. When and why was Thanksgiving Day first observed? 2. When, by what church and to what country was the first foreign missionary sent from the United States? 3. Does the Southern Methodist Church have a course of Home Mission study that can be taken in the home?

1. Thanksgiving Day was first kept by the Pilgrim Fathers in November, 1621, as a proper recognition of God's goodness for giving them a bountiful harvest. 2. The first American missionaries sailed for India two years after the organization of the A. B. C. F. M. (June 29, 1810), and under its auspices. It was composed of Congregationalists, Presbyterians and Dutch Reformed members, with a few Baptists. The five who first sailed (February, 1812) were Adoniram Judson, Samuel Newell, Gordon Hall, L. Rice and Samuel Nott. They went to India. 3. Write for full information to the Methodist Church, South, 310 Broadway, Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. T. E. Q., Bryant, Va. Please explain Matt. 21: 42, 43, 44.

Our Lord (in v. 42) had reference to a Messianic prophecy which appears in various forms (see Isa. 28: 16, etc.) and which Peter made use of before the Sanhedrin (Acts 4: 11). The vineyard is the type of the Kingdom, of which they had made an evil use. It would be taken from the Jewish nation and given to the community of the faithful (chiefly Gentiles). In v. 44 the Kingdom is a Temple, a certain stone of which, though rejected by the builders, is accepted by the Lord and made the keystone of the whole. What shall befall those who oppose it is described and may be interpreted both in a physical sense as foreshadowing the destruction of Jerusalem, and also spiritually, as relating to the punishment of unbelievers.

H. A. H., Chicago, Ill. Some time ago, the inquiry was made in THE MAIL-BAG if a druggist could be a Christian. I have been in the drug business over twenty years, and would say that no Christian young man should ever choose that business as a calling for several considerations. First: He is deprived of church life. Many druggists can not get away to attend church even once on Sunday. He is also deprived of home life. He seldom eats his meals undisturbed, and while others are spending the evenings with their families, or in social or intellectual pleasures, the man of drugs is selling tobacco, chewing gum and candy to pay expenses. Very few see their way clear to limit their Sundays to drugs and other necessary goods. Most of us are living in hopes that some day conditions in pharmacy will be better.

There are other callings besides that of a druggist which have similar drawbacks; yet we should hesitate to pronounce it a business incompatible with Christian character. We ourselves have known druggists who are most exemplary men, and we have no doubt there are many such.

W. S., Newark, O. 1. Is the Lincoln penny to take the place entirely of the Indian penny? 2. Do some of the Lincoln pennies have more value than others? 3. How many stories did Mary J. Holmes write? 4. Was John Q. Adams a grandson of John Adams? 5. Was Daniel Webster a son of Noah Webster?

1. Yes; the Lincoln cent is the only one made at present. 2. All Lincoln cents are of the same value. The first ones had the initial of the designer and it may be that in a hundred years or so they will be of value to collectors; at present there is no difference in their value to any one. 3. Mary J. Holmes wrote about thirty novels. Their aggregate circulation has been more than two million copies. 4. John Quincy Adams, sixth President of the United States, was the eldest son of John Adams, who was President from 1797 to 1801. 5. No; Daniel Webster was born in 1782 in Salisbury, N. H., the son of an officer in the American War for Independence. Noah Webster was born in 1752, and there was no near relationship.

H. P., Melrose, Mass. What amounts are allowed to army officers who are incapacitated from active service by reason of wounds or illness? What do the privates get?

The allowances for the various grades are: Lieutenant-colonel and officers of higher rank, $30 a month; major, surgeon and paymaster, $25; captain and chaplain, $20; first lieutenant and assistant-surgeon, $17; second lieutenant, $15; the enlisted men get an allowance of $8.

E. A. S., Provincetown, Mass. 1. Does John 8: 24 apply to those who do not believe that Christ is the only begotten Son of God, and that he was simply a good man, divine only because they believe every one is divine? 2. Does Matt. 15: 9 apply to modern theology as taught in the colleges?

1. In this passage, Jesus contrasts himself not with "earth-born messengers of God, good, sincere men, but with men sprung from an element wholly opposed to himself" and breathing opposition and hatred, so that it was impossible that he and they should have any fellowship, present or future. They belonged to the sinful world, which was enmity toward God; he to the heavenly world. As long as they were in such allegiance, they put themselves beyond forgiveness. 2. No. He rebuked them because they put the commandments of men on a level with those of God, thus making their whole worship vain. Traditions, observances, religious customs, omens, and their whole mass of ceremony, he brushed aside, pointing them to the divine law instead.

B. K., Santa Rosa, Calif. What is the John Salter fund used for? I believe it was established about twenty years ago.

John F. Salter, of Connecticut, in 1882 gave $1,000,000 to a board of trustees to be used for "uplifting the lately emancipated population of the Southern States and their posterity." It is used to educate negroes in practical industries, and also helps bright colored pupils to become teachers among the people of their race. Full information may be obtained from G. S. Dickerman, 2 Rector Street, New York City.

N. F., Alstead, N. H. In what year was the first Indian head penny coined?

In 1864, when the bronze cent superseded the nickel one.

P. P., Minneapolis, Minn. What were the German States that were joined in the "North German Confederation" before the present German Empire was established? Also when was it formed?

1. It was formed by Prussia, Saxe-Weimar, Oldenburg, Anhalt, Brunswick, Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, Saxe-Allenburg-Waldeck, Hamburg, Bremen, Lubeck, the younger Reuss, the two Lippes, and the two Schwarzburgs, later the two Mecklenbergs joined as did Hesse, Elder Reuss, Saxe-Meiningen, and Saxony. It was in process of formation from 1866 to 1867. See Lewis' History of Germany for a good account.

President Taft Inspecting the Panama Canal

PRESIDENT TAFT is just back from his flying trip to the Panama Canal Zone to see with his own eyes just how the great ditch is getting on. Colonel Goethals reported that the Canal would be open in 1914, one year before the time set by the most optimistic prophets heretofore. Mr. Taft went over to the Capital of Panama to dine with its President and talk over questions of mutual concern. The warships which escorted him home from Panama had an opportunity to show the chief executive some fine points in war practice at sea, which he greatly enjoyed. The fleet ran into the tail of a storm and the ships were tossed about for a while, but Mr. Taft showed himself a good sailor, and kept up while some others of longer experience aboard ship were forced to retire temporarily.

R. McK., Chatham, Ont., writes: "Referring to your reply in THE MAIL-BAG of the 16th inst. to F. H., Phœnix, Ariz., regarding electric cars, the writer remembers well when the electric cars (Vanderpool System) were running in St. Catharines, Ont., in 1886, also in Scranton, Pa. About the same time Mr. Vanderpool constructed a short line which carried passengers from the Canadian Exposition grounds, West Toronto, to the city. They ran several years. I have been a subscriber for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a number of years."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD receives many letters from its readers containing accounts of prayers that have been wonderfully answered. Here is one from J. W. S., a reader in Irwin, Pa., which may prove helpful and encouraging to those in trouble: "I have been a Christian for twenty-five years, and during that time have had various troubles and sicknesses in my family, in some of which the patient had only one chance in a thousand to get well, while in others no hope whatever was given. Yet God, in answer to prayer, restored them. Of course, we must meet all conditions required by him, or we cannot expect him to answer our prayers, neither can we have the confidence we should have. But by so doing we get to know God the One in whom we believe."

BY THE GLOW OF THE FIRELIGHT

Two Letters

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

EMILY ROGERS stood before her mirror putting the last touches to her dress before going to the Christian Endeavor Social. The dress was very simple and had been worn many times, but Emily had an air which made even a half-worn dress in the style of several years ago as becoming as if it had been a fresh importation from Paris. Many women depend upon dress to make them beautiful. Emily had a beauty and distinction in her own person that made her dress, whatever it was, a setting for herself. She was employed in the suit department of a large dry good house, and people who came to purchase were often attracted to her by the queenly carriage of her head and the grace of her figure, as well as by a certain winsome charm that belonged to her manner. Her work was not easy, and although she was in receipt of a fairly good salary she had little money to spend on her own pleasures; still less on her own adornment. In the little home in Vermont from which she had come her father and mother were growing old and there was a younger sister who had always been fragile, and for whom there was at this time the need of special nursing and costly medical attendance.

As Emily turned from the mirror and put out the gas she took from the bureau a letter which the postman had left that day. She had read it twice and knew its contents by heart, yet she lingered a few moments in the boarding house parlor to read it for the third time. The letter contained in a few brief lines an offer of marriage. The writer was a man whom Emily had known ever since, four years ago, she had come to the city. His daughters, nearly her own age, were in the Bible class which she attended, and whenever there was a social function in the congregation, they were present. The church was one in which, although the pastor, elders and deacons and others in authority did their best to ignore it, there was a deeply marked dividing line of caste. A number of highly refined and fastidious people belonged to its membership, and another larger number of people who worked hard for daily bread attended its services and hung upon the voice of its beloved minister. Emily was by birth and education the equal of any one in the church, but she was aware of condescension and patronage, even in the kindness with which she was often addressed and in the attentions which were paid her. The daughters of Mr. Wentworth Lisle were among those who had gently held her aloof and looked upon her as somehow beneath them, although they would have repudiated such an assertion had it been made in their hearing. Emily would not have been human if she had not felt a little elation as she read the letter from their father couched in respectful and admiring terms in which he asked her to become his wife. The letter was not wholly a surprise. Mr. Lisle had for some months been trying to show every decorous and polite attention he could to Emily Rogers. He had come as a boy from her State and her county. He knew all about her and about her people, and he thought that she would not only make him a wife of whom he could be proud, but that his children would learn to love her and that she would be happy in such a position as he could place her in.

He was many years her senior. He was rich and she was poor, but as he sealed and sent his letter, he had felt that he must be prepared for rejection, not on account of anything in the difference of age or circumstances, but because he felt almost sure that another had stepped in before him. He had seen in Emily's eyes the look of one who could not be tempted by motives of convenience, and it had been borne in upon him, he knew not whence or why, that she had already pledged her troth to some one else. Nevertheless he wrote, and stayed at home from the social that evening lest his presence there might embarrass her.

The Christian Endeavor Social was as usual diversified with music, conversation and refreshments. The two or three young women who had called for Emily accompanied her home. As she left them at the door she saw on the table in the hall a large square envelope addressed to herself in a bold familiar hand. It bore a country post-mark, and she took it to her room, lit the gas and read it with a beating heart. It began, "My dearest, I have to-day received the first intimation I have had since our engagement that I may dare ask you to fix a date for our wedding. I have accepted a call to a church in a little town only ten miles from your old home. The salary is small, but there will be a parsonage free of rent, and I think you and I, with faith in God, can manage to live there. I shall be installed a month from now. Can you not be ready for our marriage a month after that? I want to introduce my bride as soon as I can to my parish."

There was more in the letter, more that was sacred and intimate. Emily sat down and laid the letters side by side. "Was it possible," she asked herself, "that she could for an instant waver in her loyalty to one who had her promise and whom she had loved since her childhood?" Jack Hazard and she had gone to school together, they had been chums, they were of the same age, of congenial tastes, they had united with the church on the same day, and they had waited each for the other for several years. Yes, she could only be Jack's wife. She knew that. But if she could bring herself to break Jack's heart and ruin his life by marrying Wentworth Lisle, then she could give her little sister everything that it was in the power of wealth to confer. Edith might even walk once more. For her sake ought she not to accept Mr. Lisle? She did not love him, and she should despise herself, for it would be a mere matter of bargain and sale; but she was tempted. Her cheek crimsoned as she sat alone and her heart beat like a trip-hammer. Even as she hesitated there came a knock at her door. It was only ten o'clock, but it seemed late for any one to call. It proved not to be a caller, but a little package brought by express. Opening it, the fragrance of trailing arbutus filled the room with its clean sweet perfume and in the box among the beautiful pink flowers shyly peeping from their leaves, was a single phrase, "My darling: Write that you will come when I want you. JACK."

The next morning early, before she went to the store, a messenger from the florist brought Emily a superb bunch of roses with Mr. Lisle's card. The roses on one side, the trailing arbutus on the other, she made her decision. It had been made the night before. She wrote a courteous refusal to Mr. Lisle, expressing her regard for him and her appreciation of the honor he paid her. Then she sent her little note to Jack, making him supremely happy.

In the years that followed, Emily Rogers never had cause to regret her choice. The little sister came often to stay with her, and in time grew well and strong. A day probably came when the preacher's talents as a leader in the church militant were widely recognized, and Emily had scope to exert such an influence as few women possess.

FEEDING THE CHICKENS

The chickens like their daily meal,
But scarcely more enjoyment feel
Than father, mother, children all,
When the delicious morsels fall.

Even the baby laughs with glee
The chickens' happiness to see;
But out beneath the sky so blue,
I'd like it better—wouldn't you?

WE GIVE GOD PRAISE

FOR all true words that have been spoken,
For all brave deeds that have been done,
For every loaf in kindness broken,
For every race in valor run,
For martyr lips which have not failed
To give God praise and smile to rest,
For knightly souls which have not quailed
At stubborn strife or lonesome quest;
Lord unto whom we stand in thrall,
We give Thee thanks for all, for all.

For each fair field where fading stubble
Hath followed wealth of waving grain;
For every passing wind of trouble
Which bends Thy grass that lifts again;
For gold in mine that men must seek,
For work which bows the sullen knee;
For strength, swift sent to aid the weak,
For love by which we climb to Thee;
Thy freemen, Lord, yet each Thy thrall,
We give Thee praise for all, for all.

Synopsis of Previous Chapters

Little Jimmy Preston, aged six, gets a letter at the post office for his sister Barbara. On the way home it is lost. Barbara Preston has been trying to keep the farm, the last of her father's estate, for Jimmy, but it is mortgaged to Hoporable Stephen Jarvis, who is comparatively young. He threatens to foreclose. Peg Morrison, the old farm hand, is as greatly concerned over the loss of the letter as is Barbara. She goes to Mr. Jarvis to ask for more time on the mortgage. He tells her that he is disposed to do it, and also that he is tired of his present housekeeper and would like her to fill the place. She leaves without a word. The old housekeeper at once becomes her enemy. Stephen Jarvis comes to see Barbara. He asks her to marry him and he will give her the place. She refuses. She thinks of her old lover who went away and whose fate she did not know. Jarvis drives up and insists she ride with him. He rebukes her for not asking his aid to obtain a school position he heard that she had applied for, and she tells him that she asked his aid once and was refused. He says that he had offered her another place. He renews his proposals and says her brother could live with them. He tells her that he has never loved any one else in his life. He leaves her at her own gate, where little Jimmy meets her and says Peg has found the letter. All she can make out is the post-mark. The handwriting is that of David Whitcomb, her old lover, whom she thought dead. Barbara writes to the address, Tombstone, Ariz. Jarvis meets her once more and walks with her, as she will not enter the carriage; and he tells her that he cannot give her up. He grasps her arm, but with the declaration that she is "free," she wrenches away. Peg proposes to see Jarvis to tell him of a crop that will save the farm if they have more time, but Barbara forbids his going.

VIII—Continued

"I WANT you to harness the buggy for me after breakfast, Peg," Barbara said soberly. "I'm going —somewhere on business, and I want to start early."

"Blest be-he th' tie-hi which bi-inds," warbled Peg unmelodiously, as he stooped to apply his wet sponge to the rear springs.

"Did you hear me, Peg?" demanded Barbara.

The old man gazed reproachfully at the girl through the spokes of the wheel.

"W'y, I'm goin' to use the horses fer plowin' this mornin', Miss Barb'ry," he said soothingly. "An' they'll be all tuckered out b' night."

"But there's no use of doing any more plowing. I told you that last week. Unless I can manage somehow to—to raise the money, the farm——"

"Don't say it!" interrupted Peg. "I don't b'lieve in namin' troubles. It helps 'em to ketch a body, someway, to notice 'em too much. I b'lieve in actin' 's if the' wa'nt anythin' th' matter 's long 's ye kin."

"Yes, and while you're doing it the mortgage will foreclose itself," Barbara said, recalling Stephen Jarvis' curt phrase with a thrill of anger. "You hitch up Billy for me and bring him around at seven o'clock. Will you do it, please, Peg?"

"The fe-hell-o-shi-hip of k-hind-dred mi-hinds!" chanted Mr. Morrison with entire irrelevance.

"Very well, if you won't, I'll walk. It's ten miles there and back, but you won't care, as long as you have your own way."

"When was you thinkin' of goin', Miss Barb'ry?" demanded Peg cautiously. "Ye know I ain't set on anythin' that ain't fer your good—yours an' the Cap'n's."

But Barbara had already disappeared in a flutter of angry haste.

"Now I s'pose," soliloquized Mr. Morrison, "that I'll actually hev to give up plowin' the hill lot this mornin', an' all 'long o' that young female." He shook his head solemnly.

The washing of the buggy was then happily completed, the worn cushions dusted and the horses fed and watered by the time the sun peeped over the fringes of dark woods. At seven o'clock, as he was tying the wall-eyed bay to the hitching-post in the side yard, Barbara appeared in the open door, a brown loaf in her hand.

"Here's some fresh bread for your breakfast, Peg," she said. She glanced at the horse. "I shan't be gone very long. You can plow when I come back, if you want to. It won't hurt the ground to plow it."

"The mare's kind o' skittish this mornin'," replied Peg, accepting the addition to his meagre bill of fare with an appreciative grin. "Mebbe I'd better go 'long an' drive." He glanced anxiously at the girl. "I wouldn't do nothin' rash ef I was you, Miss Barbara; like—like gettin' engaged to be married, or anythin' like that."

"Don't worry, Peg," Barbara said soberly; "that's precisely what I don't mean to do."

She felt entirely sure of herself now, even while her cheeks burned hotly at the remembrance of Jarvis' look when he said, "I am your master."

"I'll scrub floors for a living," she promised herself, "before I yield to him."

All the pride of a strong nature shone in her eyes as she stooped over Jimmy, sitting at the table, his short legs dangling, his slate pencil squeakily setting down queer crooked figures in straggling rows.

"I'm ahead in my 'rithmetic," the little boy announced triumphantly. "I'm doin' reg'lar 'zamples. I like 'zamples. An' bimeby I'll be all growed up, an' nen I'll take care of you, Barb'ra."

She kissed him underneath the short yellow curls in the back of his neck.

"Oh, Jimmy," she sighed, "I wish you were grown up now!"

The child straightened himself anxiously.

"My head's way above your belt when I stand up," he said, "'n' I ate lots of brown bread an' milk for breakfast. I'm growin' jus' as fast 's I can!"

Barbara hugged him remorsefully.

"You're just big enough—for six," she assured him. "And—and we'll come out all right, somehow. We just will, precious!"

"Course we will," echoed the child. He slipped from his chair and eyed his sister wth a searching gaze.

"If you're scared of anybody, Barb'ra," he said valiantly, "I'll take a big stick, 'n'—'n'—I'll—I'll won't let anybody hurt you, Barb'ra!"

The girl laughed rather unsteadily as she hurried him into his coat and cap. "Learn a lot at school, dear," she murmured, "and you'll have the best kind of a big stick."

The remembrance of his warm little arms about her neck comforted her as she drove the wall-eyed mare along the road. She was going to do a very strange thing. Something she had never heard of any woman doing before. Just how the idea had taken form and substance in her mind she did not know. She appeared to herself to have awakened with the resolve fully formed, distinctly outlined, even to the small details, which she busily reviewed while she was tying the horse before the house of Thomas Bellows, auctioneer. There was a shop in the lower front story of the house, which had once been a piazza but now protruded with two bulging front windows to the edge of the sidewalk. The windows disclosed a variety of objects in the line of household appurtenances, clocks, flatirons, a pile of tinware, likewise a yellow placard read "Auction to-day," surmounted by a professional flag of faded red color.

Mr. Bellows himself in blue overalls and a pink shirt was occupied in wiping off an exceedingly dusty and ancient sewing machine with an oily rag. He looked up sharply as the discordant jangle of the bell announced the opening of his shop door.

"Good mornin', miss," he said as Barbara entered. "If you don't mind shuttin' that door behind you. It beats all how cold the wind stays, don't it? You want to look over some of these goods—eh? Household effects of the Widow Small down to the Corners. Died las' week, an' her daughter don't want to keep none o' her things. They'll be sold at two sharp. "Now this 'ere machine——"

"I don't want to buy anything," stammered Barbara, "I want you to sell something for me."

"Yas," assented Mr. Bellows explosively, standing up and resting a grimy hand on either hip, the while he surveyed Barbara's slim figure attentively. "Ju' so! Well?" he added tentatively. "Sellin' things fer folks is my business. What d'ye offer? household goods, stock or real estate? It's all the same to me."

"It — it isn't — Could you sell my work for me? I mean——"

The man stared hard at the girl, his squinting eyes puckered, his mouth drawn close at the corners.

"I'm a gen'ral auctioneer," he announced conclusively. It's m' business to sell household effects, stock or real estate, on commission."

"I want some money—a good deal of money," Barbara went on, "and I want it right away."

"I've seen folks in your fix before," commented the auctioneer drily, as he again applied himself to the sewing machine. "I gen'rally make out t' sell what's offered. But I can't guarantee prices."

"You sell horses; don't you?" demanded Barbara.

"Horses? Sure!"

"And—and oxen? They're meant to work, and people buy them to work. That's what I want to do. I want to work for three or four years, if I must, and I want the money all at once—in advance."

"I don't know as I ketch your idee," said Mr. Bellows. "You want money, an' you want it right away, an' you want me to sell——"

"I want you to sell my work—honest work, housework, any kind of work that I can do, for—for a term of years."

Mr. Bellows abandoned further efforts at bettering the condition of the late Widow Small's sewing machine. He stood up and scowled meditatively at Barbara.

"Seems t' me I've seen you b'fore, somewhere's; haven't I?"

"My name is Barbara Preston," the girl said haughtily.

"An' you want I should——"

"When people buy a horse they really buy and pay for the labor of that horse in advance," Barbara said composedly. "I am more valuable than a horse. I have skill, intelligence; I wish to sell my skill, my intelligence, to the highest bidder."

"Wall, I swan!" exclaimed Mr. Bellows. Then he fell to laughing noisily, his wizened countenance drawn into curious folds and puckers of mirth.

Barbara waited unsmilingly.

"Say! d'you know I've been asked to sell mos' everything you ever heard of," said Mr. Bellows, getting the better of his hilarity, "but I never was asked to sell a girl. A good-lookin', smart, likely girl. I guess you're jokin', miss. It wouldn't do, you know."

"Why wouldn't it?" urged Barbara.

"Well, it wouldn't; that's all. I've got m' reputation as an auctioneer to think about; an'—le' me see; your folks is all dead, ain't they?"

THE COZY CORNER

A Mother Goose Christmas Party

Boys and Girls, Come Out to Play

CHRISTMAS is the party-time of all the year. Everybody, big and little, should, during the holidays, either give a Christmas party or help to make some one's else Christmas party gay and lovely.

A Mother Goose frolic is the dearest party of all, I believe, and the biggest, merriest one I ever saw was last year in London.

The invitations read:

Boys and Girls, come out to play;
The moon is shining bright as day;
Come with a whoop and come with a call,
Come with a good will, or come not at all.

On December 28, at four o'clock, Mother Goose invites you to come to our house. Please come as a Nursery Rhyme. MRS. D. M.
R.S.V.P. For her little girls and boys.

THE rambling old-fashioned house was bright with Christmas greens and candle-light. Floors and tables were covered with white; pier stands and mantel shelves were banked with cotton, and over everything, plenty of fine diamond-dust glistened like new fallen snow.

Mother Goose (Mrs. D. M., herself), in quilted petticoat, fluffy white bodice, buckled slippers and a red peaked cap, tucked a large cotton goose under her arm and gayly welcomed her boys and girls to the party, as only a proper Mother Goose could.

Promptly at four, the large parlors began to fill with the dearest, quaintest company in all merrie England, I do believe. Upwards of fifty laughing little Nursery Rhymes bobbed about and danced before your very eyes.

There were Hey-Diddle-Diddles with toy cats and fiddles, Handy-Spandys, Jack o' Dandys, Marys Contrary, Pipers, Boys Blue, Humpty Dumptys, Jack Horners and Simple Simons galore. Nan Netticoat stole in with a tiny wax lighted candle. Elizabeth, Elspeth, Betsy and Bess had only a bird's nest with five candy eggs in it, but Mother Goose guessed her in a minute. One wistful Bo Peep, with a striped sugar cane hung with wooly tails, was especially lovely. A little old woman who lived in a shoe trotted about with a party slipper bubbling over with tiny china dolls. One Miss Muffett had a large wooden bowl and spoon and might have been taken for S stands for Sarah talking to cook, but for a black spider she had made of cotton and fastened onto her skirt.

A LITTLE lady of ten had quite simply and charmingly sewed long curling pine shavings around a pretty cap that her mother had made of turkey red—"Curly Locks, Curly Locks, will you be mine?" Mother Goose called out as she danced into the room with a tiny Jack be nimble Jack be quick. The children all gathered around her and laughed and laughed and loved her, she was so pretty and happy with her bobbing shaving curls. A fat boy of twelve brought a large toy Frog that would a-wooing go, "Heigh Ho," says Rowley, and when a demure little mousikin, brimful of the spirit of the party, squeaked out as he passed by "I'll sing you a song, Mr. Frog, Mr. Frog, with a rowley powley gammon and spinach. I made it myself, Mr. Frog," everybody danced around her and laughed and chuckled, it was so funny and nice.

MOTHER GOOSE, quick as wink, arranged tableaux and characters until everybody had arrived. Then suddenly, like the wise old fairy that Mother Goose seems always to be, she marched the children around the big room, made a circle of them, stepped into the middle of it and for an hour and a half or more, kept those glad boys and girls in an enchanted fairy-ring of old-fashioned games.

Barley Break, London Bridge, Crambo, Menagerie, Stage Coach, Still Pond, Jack be Nimble, How Many Miles to Babylon, Tip Tap Toe, Tucker, Musical Chairs, Follow the Leader, are some of the games they played, and finished up with a rousing bout of Blind Man's Buff. Not a game lasted over ten minutes. The merry, mad tumble, the general hearty good-time spirit that never for a moment flagged, was the Mother Goose secret of the great success of her party.

For refreshment there was an abundance of plain Mother Goose victuals and drink.

Oh, boys and girls, do get up a Mother Goose Christmas party. Ask your mother to help you. I am sure she will. A little party with only a few to make merry is better, much better than no party at all.

The costumes which those little English children wore were made of calico and paper muslin, the toys were odds and ends out of their own nurseries. Nothing was elaborate, nothing expensive, yet I assure you, it was one of the frolics that every one who was there, will remember from Christmas to Christmas for many years.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS AND PRIZES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: We have determined right here in the Cozy Corner to take a big part in old Kris Kringle's Christmas fun. We are going to help him distribute gifts to boys and girls everywhere, and we are all very happy in the thought of it.

Tables, chairs, desks, all around us are heaped with Christmas treasures—toys, books, and a thousand pretty things that you are all to win, between now and Christmas night.

For Boys and Girls Over Twelve

There is a splendid first prize, the very latest and best aeroplane, tested and guaranteed. The beautiful little machine, with its bright colored planes and wings, is as lovely as a jewel, and light and airy as a bird. Any up-to-date clever boy can adjust it, and it will fly from 50 to 300 feet.

The Girl's first prize is a beautiful little guaranteed gun-metal watch (not a toy), and there are twenty supplementary prizes besides for descriptions, in less than 300 words, of SOMETHING I HAVE MADE MYSELF. Description must include photograph, drawing or diagram.

Do not fail to enter this contest. All good work will be awarded a special prize.

For best stories (in less than 300 words). Subjects: Playing Alone, I Wish, The Snow Fairy. There is a First-class Brownie Kodak, A No. 1, with finder and film ready to take pictures, Caldwell's Boys and Girls At Home, one of the big plump Christmas books of the year, and ten supplementary prizes.

For best drawings or photographs. Subjects: The Pet of the Family, Chums, A Good Game. There will be twenty prizes of games, books, toys and many beautiful pictures. All good work will win a special Christmas prize.

For Boys and Girls Under Twelve

For best stories, verses, photographs, and drawings done by boys or girls under twelve, there are bisque dolls, lead soldiers and Christmas novelties.

All work in this SPECIAL PRIZE CONTEST must be in by December 21.

Please send pictures flat, and write only on one side of the paper.

Put your name, age, and address on all manuscripts, pictures, etc., and send to Miss Porter, 19 Bible House, New York.

Next week we will tell you something about the wonderful Christmas books of 1910.

Our Good-Night Verse

The good-night verse for this week is: "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep; for thou, Lord, only makest me to dwell in safety." It is the end of the fourth Psalm.

With loving thoughts of you all, my dear boys and girls, in the homes where THE CHRISTIAN HERALD comes, believe me, lovingly and faithfully always, Your Aunt in the Cozy Corner,

A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of Spinal Curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. Eminent physicians are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure of the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebrae is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. Each appliance is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction and let you use it 30 days. Write for our new book, giving full information and references.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

"No," said Barbara. "I have a brother six years old."

Her dry tongue refused to add to this statement. She was conscious of an inward tremor of fear lest he should refuse.

"What ever put such a curious notion into your head?" Mr. Bellows wanted to know.

"I may as well tell you," the girl said bitterly. "You'll be asked to sell me out soon. We're going to lose everything we've got—Jimmy and I; the farm, the — furniture — everything."

"You don't say!" Mr. Bellows commented doubtfully. "Well, that had ought to net you something—eh?"

"We shan't have anything; everything will be gone," the girl said coldly.

"Sho! that's too bad," Mr. Bellows said goodnaturedly. He stuck his thumbs into the arm-holes of his vest, and scowled absent-mindedly into space. Then he looked at Barbara again. "Mortgage—eh?" he suggested. "Coverin' pretty much everythin' —eh?"

Everything," repeated Barbara in a dull tone.

"Everythin'—save an' exceptin' one smart, willin' young woman — eh? You'd ought to bring a purty good figger—in the right market."

Mr. Bellows paused to give way to mirth once more.

"The matrimonial market's the one partic'lar field I ain't had much 'xperience in," he concluded. "An' auctionin' off goods of the sort you mention ain't 'xactly in my line, an' that's a fac', miss. So I guess——"

"You don't understand," Barbara interrupted quickly. "Let me explain. When I found that everything was lost"—her voice trembled in spite of herself—"I thought at first I would teach school—let the farm go and teach——"

"Wall, why don't you do that?" Mr. Bellows inquired. He was a kind-hearted man, with sympathies somewhat blunted by his professional zeal in a calling which for most part concerned itself with clearing away the wreckage of human hopes.

"You'd make a right smart schoolma'am, I should say."

"I' m not a normal school graduate," Barbara told him. "Besides, they have no vacancies. Then I tried to get sewing to do. I can sew neatly. But I could easily starve on what I could earn with my needle. A woman told me she knew of some one who wanted —a—servant." Barbara's voice shook, but she went on bravely. "She said that people sometimes paid as much as twenty-five dollars a month for such work, and that it wasn't easy to find women who could do that kind of work well. I—I am willing to do it, if I can sell my work for twelve hundred dollars."

"Whew!" ejaculated Mr. Bellows.

"It sounds like a lot of money, I know," Barbara went on; "but it is four years' service at twenty-five dollars a month. I want it all at once. Then I can pay the mortgage on our farm, and keep it."

"Huh!" commented Mr. Bellows explosively.

"I could lease the farm while I was working, and it would bring in enough money to take care of Jimmy."

Her face clouded swiftly at the thought of the possible separation.

"Wall, I don't know of anybody who'd be willin' to pay down any twelve hundred dollars spot cash for a girl," objected Mr. Bellows. "Y' couldn't get nobody to bid on a proposition like that. Y' might"—the man hesitated; then went on harshly, "Y' might up an' die, or——"

"A man on the farm next to ours paid three hundred for a horse, and it died the next week," Barbara said quietly. "Then he bought another. H had to have a horse."

"Wall; he owned it for good an' al an' you——"

"I'll work four years—or five—fo the money," said Barbara steadily "And I shall be worth far more tha an ordinary servant."

Mr. Bellows wagged his head argu mentatively. "I'd hev to charge yo five per cent.," he warned her. "Ar you couldn't get any bidders, anyhow.

"That," said Barbara, "would b my affair. What I want to know is will you sell me?"

The blood hammered in her temples her hands and feet were icy cold; bu she eyed the man steadily.

Mr. Bellows had been making rapid mental calculation.

"W'y, I don' know," he said scratch ing his head reflectively. "I don' want to go int' no fool job fer nothin M' time's valu'ble."

"I'll pay you—ten dollars, if—if n one buys me," said Barbara faintly.

Mr. Bellows bit his thumb-na thoughtfully.

"All right!" he burst out at length "You name the day, git th' bidder t'gether an' I'll auction ye off!"

IX

It was still early in May whe Jarvis drove over to inspect a wood pulp factory in the neighborhood o Greenfield Centre. Its proprietor ha borrowed capital heavily within th past year, and Jarvis had been nar rowly watching the gradual ebb of th factory's output. It was the old story of misapplied energy, paralyzed int inaction by impending failure. Jarvi scored the luckless proprietor merci lessly during their brief interview later he sought the services of Thoma Bellows, the auctioneer.

"You may sell him out, plant, ma chinery and all; reserve nothing," Jar vis ordered; and, referring to his bool of memoranda, added the date.

Another entry that he saw there me his sombre eyes. He stared at it frown ingly.

"Anythin' more in my line in th near future?" Mr. Bellows wanted t know.

He rubbed his hands as he asked th question. The Honorable Stepher Jarvis was, as he put it, "a stiddy cus tomer and a good one," being con stantly in need of Mr. Bellows' profes sional services.

"Yes," said Jarvis, a dull red flush rising in his sallow face. "The con tents of the Preston house, the stock and implements, must be sold on June first."

Mr. Bellows struck one hairy fis into the other by way of preface to his words. He was not afraid of Stepher Jarvis, being sufficiently well provided with worldly goods, albeit these were for the most part second-hand, and in the nature of left-overs from many auctions.

"It seems a pity," quoth Bellows, "to sell her out. Couldn't you wait til fall, say, and give the little Preston girl a chance? I ain't what you might call soft m'self; but I couldn't help feelin' sorry for the girl when she come 'n here one day last week t' engage my professional services."

"What is Miss Barbara proposing to sell?" demanded Jarvis. Something in his voice gave Mr. Bellows a curious sensation. He gave Jarvis a sharp look as he answered.

"Nothin' that belongs to you, I reckon."

"Tell me what it is," repeated Jarvis. "I'll be the best judge of that." His voice shook, and also the hand which held the leather book of fateful dates and occasions.

"I'm sorry; but I guess I can't 'commodate you," responded the other. "Perfessional etiquette, you know; in is 'ere case binding," he added.

"You have no right to refuse," said arvis, and something of the real na- ire of his secret thoughts flared up in is eyes. "Everything that concerns iss Preston concerns me."
Mr. Bellows was puzzled.
"Meanin', of course, that you hold ie lien on her prop'ty," he hazarded. But you don't"—and he paused to uckle to himself—"hold a lien on hat she's proposin' to sell to the high- t bidder."
"What do you mean?" demanded arvis.
His tone was menacing, and he fixed agry eyes red from sleeplessness on ie old auctioneer.
"You'll either explain yourself," he id, "or—you'll get no more business om me to-day or any other day."
Mr. Bellows expectorated violently the general direction of the opposite all.
"I ain't," he declared valiantly, afeard of no threats, nor yet of no- ody. But I'm goin' to tell you, 'cause 's you that's drove her to it, an' you'd ght to know what sort of a girl she . I had three-quarters of a notion tell you, anyhow, an' I tol' m' wife , when I found it was you that held he lien on her house an' furniture. usiness is business with me as well s any other man; but I'd be ashamed drive a woman to the point of sellin' erself."
"Selling herself!" echoed Jarvis.
The observant eyes of Mr. Bellows ere upon him, as he fell back a pace two and strove to steady himself.
"That's what I said. Yes, sir; she sked me right here in this shop to sell er at public auction. 'I've lost every- in',' she says; 'but I've got myself, n' I'll sell that, an' pay what I owe.'"
"Heavens!" breathed Jarvis. "I— rove her to it!"
"You're right you did," agreed Mr. ellows.
"You can't do it, man. I forbid it!"
"Oh, y' do, do ye? Wall, I don't e how you're going to make out to revent it. The girl's got a right to erself, and I've got a right to——"
"I shall prevent it," Jarvis inter- upted fiercely. "Its inhuman—uncivized, monstrous!"
"Well, that's the way it struck me— t first," acquiesced Mr. Bellows; "but ie way she put it up t' me kind of on me over. She's a takin' sort of irl, kind o' good-lookin', an' inner- nt. W'y, Lord bless you, she's no ore idee of the way a man like you, or instance—might look at it than a hild. She wants to work out—for a atter o' four or five years, she says; n' she thinks she c'n get some fool oman to bid twelve hundred dollars ot cash fer bein' sure of a hired girl ll that time. 'W'y,' I says to her, 'you ight up an' die.' 'Yes,' she says, 'so ight a horse; but folks hev to hev orses.' I tell you she's cute an' right, an' I'm goin' to sell her to the ighest bidder, same's I agreed to."
Jarvis was silent for a long minute, is eyes fixed unseeingly on the mis- ellaneous collection of shabby and roken furniture in the rear of the op.
"Is it to be a public sale?" he asked olly.
"Well, as t' that, I can't rightly tell ou. I left the advertisin' of the goods, n' the date of sale to the young lady. reely hope you will call it off. I pose you c'n easy fix things up so't he——"
"Did she ask you to tell me this?" emanded Jarvis suddenly. "Tell me ie facts."
"Did she ask me — to tell you?" choed Mr. Bellows wonderingly. "You et she didn't! You wasn't named etwixt us. I asked her who held the en on her prop'ty, an' she didn't an- wer. Thought it was none o' my business, likely. I suspicioned it was you, though. You get most of 'em around these parts."
Jarvis made no reply. He closed the red leather book, slipped it into an inside pocket, then deliberately drew on his driving gloves.
"Can you tell me the date of this— this sale?" he asked.
"What you want t' know for? Thinkin' of puttin' in a bid?" chuckled Mr. Bellows.
Jarvis gave him a terrible look.
"I'd advise you to keep still about this. Don't attempt to interest any one else in Miss Preston's affairs. Do you hear?"
"I ain't deef," responded Mr. Bellows in an aggrieved voice. "'N' I don't know's I see what business 'tis of yours, anyhow. Mebbe she'll get the money an' pay you; 't wouldn't surprise me if she did. She's bound she will, an' where there's a will there's a way, I've heard tell."
"The date, man! give me the date!"
"Seein' I've told you so much, I s'pose you might as well know; the sale's set for the eighteenth."
"Where?"
"At her house."
"And you're actually going to—No; she'll never do it. She won't be able to bring herself to it."
"Wall, I'll bet you ten dollars she will; d'ye take me?"
Jarvis turned without another word and left the place. He suddenly felt the need of the outdoor air. Barbara's desperate expedient convinced him as no words of hers could have done of the hopelessness of his case. 'She hates me,' he told himself; and for the first time he looked within for a reason for her aversion.
He drove slowly, his thoughts a mad whirl of fury and despair. For the first time he saw himself as he fancied he must look to her, a man past his first youth, cold, forbidding, harsh, unlovely. He perceived with a flash of prescience that she cared nothing for money, save as it signified the thing she held most dear; nothing for the position, power and luxury for which he had sold his honor and his manhood. Stripped of these things, what must he appear in her eyes? A monster of selfishness and greed, no less; to be feared, detested, escaped by any means, even to the sacrifice of brain and body. He groaned aloud in the scorching flame of his humiliation.
He told himself that he would go to her, beg her forgiveness, offer her all that she had asked for, and more. He would give her the farm free of all indebtedness. Then he realized, with sickening certainty, that she would not accept anything from him. He had told her that he was her master. To escape this slavery she was about to sell herself to another. The thought was insupportable. Even while he perceived her perfect ingenuousness and the practical realization of her own worth which lay beneath this fantastic and seemingly impossible plan of hers, he sensed its frightful danger. In order to attract bidders she would be forced to advertise her plans. Who would respond? Who would buy, and for what purpose?
He whipped his horse to a furious speed and soon reached his house. The newspapers unread for days were piled on a table near his desk. He seized one, turned to its advertising columns and rapidly reviewed their contents, then another, and another in rapid succession. At last his devouring eyes lighted and fastened upon a single paragraph, hidden among the miscellaneous advertisements where a puzzled printer had doubtless placed it.

The Howard Watch

Mother and the girls ought to know that a HOWARD Watch means more to a man than any other Christmas gift they could choose for him.

Every man knows the HOWARD Watch — its history and traditions — the names of the leading Americans who have carried the HOWARD and made it their own.

He is pleased with their recognition of him as the kind of man who ought to own a HOWARD —the finest practical timepiece in the world.

The HOWARD Watch is a source of pride to any man among his friends — not alone in its accuracy and reliability, but because of its distinctive position among timepieces.

It is the last word in a fine watch, and no other gift, however high in cost, could more surely reflect the the idea of quality.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it. The price of each watch — from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Boss or Crescent gold-filled case at $40 to the 23-jewel in a 14-k. solid-gold case at $150— is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD Watch. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Drop us a postal card, Dept. K, and we will send you "The Story of Edward Howard and the first American Watch"—an inspiring chapter of history that every man and boy should read.

For a Man's Christmas

Is there anything that so delights a man's heart as a fine watch—one that permits him to speak the time with authority? It is refined and beautiful, as a gift should be, and besides is his most personal and useful possession. For years he carries it wherever he goes.

But his satisfaction depends upon its being an exact timer. Among watches there is one, though moderately priced, which has come to be conspicuous for its close timing—accurate as only high-priced watches have been.

A Superior Watch

Ingersoll-Trenton

7 and 15 Jewel Models

$5 to $15

No handsomer watch has ever been made. It will keep time for a generation. Your home jeweler can sell you an Ingersoll-Trenton and he will stand behind it. It is sold at our advertised prices by all who handle it and our price ticket is on each watch.

The I-T is sold exclusively by responsible retail jewelers, because fine watches should not be bought by mail nor from those who do not understand them and their adjustments. Over 9,000 good jewelers now handle it.

Go to your own jeweler's and examine it before buying any watch. If, by chance he hasn't the I-T, we will gladly send the name of one nearby who has. Our booklet, "How to Judge a Watch," is the best explanation of a watch ever written, and is free on request. The $5 Ingersoll-Trenton has 7 genuine jewels and is in a solid nickel case. The $15 Ingersoll-Trenton has 15 jewels and is in an I-T 25-year guaranteed gold-filled case of the highest quality.

Equally accurate models in a variety of I-T cases at $7, $8, $9, $10 and $12.

Remington

The Remington Column Selector is the greatest of all recent typewriter improvements. It enables the operator instantly to place the carriage where she wills, skipping as many columns as she wills. By eliminating the hand spacing of the carriage it saves from ten to twenty per cent. of labor according to the work to be done.

And this is only one of a score of notable improvements on the model 10 Remington.

"HERE ARE THE FIVE COLUMN SELECTOR KEYS"

How a Gift Was Multiplied

ON Saturday, November 12, a new building was added to the group constituting the Jennie Clarkson Home for Children at Valhalla, N. Y. The dedication services of this administration building consisted of prayer by Rev. Ezra T. Sanford of the North Baptist Church in New York and a historical address by Hon. L. V. F. Randolph, a friend of William R. Clarkson, who gave the bulk of his estate to endow this institution in memory of his daughter, whose name it bears. Dr. T. J. Harris of the building committee made a brief address when he turned over the keys of the new building to Mr. E. McK. Whiting, president of the board of directors. There was an address by Clarence Stonaker, the superintendent; songs by fifty children cared for, and closing exercises by Rev. K. C. MacArthur. This opened the way to an inspection of the new building by the visitors.

The hand of Providence can be recognized in the history and growth of this Home. In 1872 William M. Glover, now of South Orange, N. J., who had been an orphan in England, was led to believe that there should be a Baptist Orphan's Home in America, and was encouraged by his pastor, Rev. John J. Brouner, of the North Baptist Church in New York, and the family of Rev. W. R. Williams, who offered a site. The idea advanced slowly till about 1878, when Mr. Glover offered all his savings, $300, to be applied toward securing the establishment of a Baptist Orphans' Home for Children. When asked where he got the money, Mr. Glover replied, "I have saved it since I was converted, for an orphans' home."

Rev. Dr. F. R. Morse, of Calvary Baptist Church, New York, assisted procuring a charter for a Bapt Home for Children. After the de of his cousin, Jennie Clarkson, who been a member of Calvary Church, Morse, at a time of great anxiety the officers under the charter, said would urge her father, Mr. Wm. Clarkson, to help the Home. Mr. Cla son consented to help the project.

Children of any religion are recei and cared for till they are eight years old. The Home has about c hundred thousand dollars' worth real estate and three hundred thousa dollars in endowment. It can care about fifty children with its prese contributing constituency and endo ment. President Whiting is anxi to fill the buildings to their capacity sixty by securing more contributio The outlook from the Home at V halla overlooks the beautiful Kens reservoir of the city. The stone bui ings are fireproof and serve well t purposes of an orphans' home. T superintendent has had large expe ence in charitable work. A brig outlook for the Home seems now sured.

A PRAYER

O LITTLE bird that knows no strife,
Teach me to live a peaceful life,
In work, in play, in leisure hours
Your song is heard in leafy bowers.
O little bird, teach me to sing,
Forgetting what the day may bring.
Help me to live, and love, and be Calm, hopeful through adversity.

A One-Minute Sermon

HERE is a one-minute sermon, given in Chicago during the Chapman-Alexander meetings by Rev. Dr. Henry Ostrom, the noted evangelist, at the noon hour service:

"Calvary! We must deal with Calvary! It is historic. We must answer it. Jesus' suffering for us was premeditated. He fully expected it and said beforehand that it would come. Jesus' suffering for us was prearranged. He said, 'I lay down my life of myself.' The trains are not dispatched from the great depots of our cities with more definite plan. Jesus' suffering for us is sufficient. All other ways are a-hunger; Jesus is the bread. All other ways try; Jesus saves. Jesus suffers for us because he loves us. 'Herein is love,' it is love poured out. Jesus' suffering for us is resolute. When he says 'Arise, let us go hence,' he is making his way straight to Calvary. He is determined if possible to get us. Now love expressing itself in law should win my obedience. Love expressing itself against sin should awaken my concern. But love poured out in sacrifice to the death breaks my hard heart." M. A. M.

Profit in Bees

THE production of honey is ranked by our statisticians as a "minor industry," but that it is not an insignificant one is evidenced by the fact that during the past three years there has been an annual output of honey and bees' wax of about twenty-five millions of dollars. This represents only that part of the supply of which the Department of Agriculture in Washington has been able to get a record. It is safe to say that half as much more has been produced by small aspirants who have made no report of their products.

Since it has been discovered that bees can be kept with safety to neighbors and with much pleasure and some profit to the amateur, in small gardens, and even on the roofs of town houses, interest in this subject is no longer confined to country residents favored by the proximity of abundant blooms.

Let Santa bring You a

Santo Vacuum Cleaner

IT'S a Gift that gives the whole family the good cheer and happiness that go with true household cleanliness. It's a gift that lasts a lifetime. Think of the blessing it confers in overcoming the drudgery of cleaning! Think of the security it gives from contagious diseases by removing ALL of the germ-laden dust and dirt.

The Santo makes your home life dustless. It is the greatest life insurance in the world.

Sold on Convenient Monthly Payments

No need to strain your holiday appropriation—a modest payment puts the Santo into your home in time for Christmas. You can pay the balance in convenient monthly payments no larger than your present expense of cleaning. It saves its cost twenty times.

The Santo is the original portable Vacuum cleaner, licensed under the Kenney Patents and protected by our own basic patents fully covering its construction. Many imitations are offered under names suggesting the vacuum principle, but the Santo still stands alone—a real vacuum cleaner.

Its positive vacuum pump automatically regulates the vacuum and the volume of air according to the tool in use. This insures the high velocity of air necessary for thorough cleaning without injury to furnishings.

Santo efficiency can not he equalled in any other portable cleaner. Anything short of this efficiency gives merely surface cleaning. This is a scientific fact, established by modern engineering practice.

Anybody can use the Santo with ease. Only the light aluminum nozzles weighing but a few ounces are moved over the furnishings. Complete with tools for 20 different purposes and adapted for use in home, church, store—anywhere.

The "Santo" Guaranty Bond is perpetual, protecting the user against defects at any time. No other cleaner is guaranteed in writing for more than one year.

Sold by dealers and agents everywhere and in our own stores in Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, Boston, Atlantic City and Lincoln, Neb.

THEY GROW

Good Humor and Cheerfulness from Right Food and Drink.

Anything that interferes with good health is apt to keep cheerfulness and good humor in the background. A Washington lady found that letting coffee alone made things bright for her. She writes:

"Four years ago I was practically given up by my doctor and was not expected to live long. My nervous system was in a bad condition.

"But I was young and did not want to die so I began to look about for the cause of my chronic trouble. I used to have nervous spells which would exhaust me and after each spell it would take me days before I could sit up in a chair.

"I became convinced my trouble was caused by coffee. I decided to stop it and bought some Postum.

"The first cup, which I made according to directions, had a soothing effect on my nerves and I liked the taste. For a time I nearly lived on Postum and ate little food besides. I am to-day a healthy woman.

"My family and relatives wonder if I am the same person I was four years ago, when I could do no work on account of nervousness. Now I am doing my own housework, take care of two babies—one twenty the other two months old. I am so busy that I hardly get time to write a letter, yet I do it all with the cheerfulness and good humor that comes from enjoying good health.

"I tell my friends it is to Postum I owe my life to-day."

Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SAVE SMALL SUMS

You could accumulate more cash capital in a very few years by saving up comparatively small sums of money—your dividends and interest income, for instance.

You probably never seriously considered such a thing, because the amounts looked so small and no opportunity has ever before offered itself to you to save and invest only $25.00 at 6 per cent interest.

There is no need for you to wait until you have saved up $2000, $500, or even $200 with which to buy one of our mortgages in order to secure a 6 per cent investment with us. Our Certificates of Deposit yield 6 per cent, payable semi-annually—the same as our mortgages—and are withdrawable after one year, on 30 days' notice. Send $25 to-day. Please ask for Loan List 726.

SPECULATION

MARK TWAIN, in his time, said many wise things, but never anything wiser than this: "There are two kinds of men who should not speculate, namely, the men who can't afford it, and the men who can." As this classification includes about all men, and if we acknowledge the wisdom of the advice, it follows that no man should speculate.

There are many kinds of speculation, but we are here considering the commercial variety, which may be defined as follows: "The act or practice of buying real or personal property, in expectation of a rise of price, and of selling it at an advance, as distinguished from a regular trade, in which the profit expected is the difference between the retail and wholesale prices, or the difference of price in the place where the goods are purchased and the place to which they are to be carried for market."

In what may be called regular business, the margin of profit is fixed by prices, which, in the main, must not vary greatly from those of competitors in the same line of trade. In such a case the margin of profit is entirely dependent on the amount of sales, and an increase from an unexpected rise in retail prices need not be looked for. Business like this is not only legitimate, but on its fair and unvarying conditions depend the economic trade balances and the wholesome growth of our prosperity.

Inside Information

While speculation may be as legitimate as regular trade, it is a notable fact that it is not looked on with favor in either the business or the scientific world. The tendency is to regard the one kind of speculator as a dreamer and the other as a gambler. However, we should not be in haste to condemn the man who, by reason of his superior knowledge and advantageous position, is enabled to buy at a very low price to-day what he knows will sell at a very high price to-morrow. If the increase in price has not been induced by the chicanery of those artificial securities known as "corners," such a man as we have imagined may be entirely honest, but he certainly could not be regarded as entirely wise if he took the whole world into his confidence.

Something for Nothing

The life blood, the spirit of those wholesome business conditions for which it is our duty as honest men and good citizens to strive, is the equitable exchange of equivalents. The purchaser at a country store must have sense enough to understand that he is paying more for the goods than the wholesale cost to the merchant; but he does not feel that he is being defrauded, for he recognizes that there must be a reasonable margin of profit to meet interest on investment, clerk hire, rent, insurance and the hundred and one expenses necessary to bring the goods within the consumer's reach. But if there were only one merchant in the community, and the next nearest practically out of reach, the purchaser might well regard as dishonest, the man who took advantage of his position to run up prices beyond the legitimate margin of profit. Wherever this is done, the merchant is getting something for nothing, and so becomes what Mr. Roosevelt calls "an undesirable citizen."

Wholesale Plunder

These thoughts are borne in on us by the continued exposure of what have come to be known as "Get-Rich-Quick" concerns. A misanthropic philosopher has said: "A sucker is born every minute." While we do not claim to be particularly well versed in slang, we understand the word "sucker" to mean a person who is credulous and easily duped. This definition might apply to most of us, particularly where we enter into schemes of whose inner workings we have no knowledge and of whose managers we know nothing, except through the self-revelations given in the prospectus of the enterprises they are exploiting, and these cannot be regarded as reliable.

The average man—and this also applies to the average woman—who has laid by a few hundred or a few thousand dollars, can account for every cent of it. It represents the toil, the sweat, and the self-denial of years of effort in a familiar calling. If the possessor of these savings is wise, he will add to them by investing them in some safe security, or depositing them in some savings bank, where the interest, if not large, is certain, and where the chances from loss are practically nil. But, unfortunately, all thrifty men are not wise ones. They are not content to make haste slowly. They want to "get rich quick." They are caught by the letters, advertisements, and prospectuses of strangers, men of whom they know absolutely nothing, and with whom they would not associate if they did know them; and in the hope of greatly increasing their incomes by an immensely larger interest, they dump their savings into schemes of which they have not one iota of reliable information.

The number and the credulity of these toilers was recently shown in New York City, through the exposure of a "get-rich-quick concern." Three men with bad records, three men who knew nothing of the science of finance, three men who had never earned an honest dollar in their lives, inaugurated and exploited a venture that soon placed at their disposal an amount of hard cash greater than that controlled by a majority of our reliable banks.

An Amazing Credulity

This trio of plunderers and home-wreckers began their work with just enough money to open offices in that part of the city where there were many factories and thrifty wage-earners.

The trio got out prospectuses and scattered them broadcast in the path of the thrifty wage-earner, who read with avidity and felt assured of their truth, because the concern that issued them was just around the corner.

Soon the stream of investors began to pour in. It never occurred to these credulous people to take a look at the property that was soon to be covered with the magnificent villas pictured in that literature they had been devouring as children devour fairy tales. Of course, they never dreamed of investigating titles, and, equally of course, they never stopped to ask why the owners of this bonanza did not keep it for themselves, instead of inviting the poor and the lowly into partnership. No, they thought of nothing but getting rich quick.

By hundreds these people sold the little five per cent. mortgages they held, and by thousands they drew out their savings from the banks that paid only four per cent.; then, in mad haste and in great crowds, they literally dumped their savings into the offices of the trio. Why, so eager were these frenzied people that they literally threw their money over the heads of other investors, nor waited for a receipt.

For some time the trio paid their clients at the rate of thirty per cent. a month. But instead of keeping these dividends, the clients reinvested them, as the trio expected; and then other thousands heard of it, and the flood was swelled till it overflowed the receptacles of the schemers.

Of course, the inevitable day came; but how much does it compensate the plundered people to know that their despoilers are in the penitentiary?

We are not through with this phase of "frenzied finance."

"I SERVE"

O man in the city of Boston is better known to the poor and the needy than the Rev. D. W. Waldron. No man is better beloved. No man has known more fully in his own experience the meaning of the words "I serve." The seventieth birthday of Mr. Waldron was celebrated on the 11th of November, and the years of his service to his kind were summed up in the engraving on a beautiful silver loving cup given to him by his friends. This inscription read as follows:

"Thirty-two years chaplain of the House of Representatives. Thirty-eight years missionary to the poor. Forty years a preacher of the Gospel."

He has been in his thirty-eight years of missionary service to the poor that Mr. Waldron has come into direct contact with thousands of the needy and has been helpful to them. He has been in hundreds of homes and has responded by night and by day to the appeals of the poor. For many years one of the special features of the work of this consecrated man has been the carrying of flowers to all of the hospitals in the city and the holding of a brief service on Easter Sunday. Beginning early in the morning of that day, Mr. Waldron and his helpers go to every hospital and to many other institutions, such as homes for the aged, with their pictures and flowers and songs. The associates of Mr. Waldron in the City Mission of Boston remembered his birthday with a "bag of gold" offering, and there was rejoicing because of the fact that although he has reached the allotted span of life, Mr. Waldron appears to have some years of active service before him still.

The Child is King

G. Ernest Smith

FROM the far towers of Winter's radiant night,
Whose star-lit splendors bide in sweet repose
Above the earth, bathed in their crystal light,
That o'er the scene a weird enchantment throws,

Are Christmas chimes, low ringing, sweet and clear,
Their good will to the world. Their silver streams
Of melody now flood the far and near,
And rouse the world from its discordant dreams.

The frosted pines, responsive, laugh and sing.
The sparkling snows, that lie so fair and still,
Break into song, and their glad tribute bring.
The vibrant air in tuneful cadence thrills.

The desert vast, the rich and fruitful plain,
The winds and storms from far their clarions ring.
The mountains and the radiant seas acclaim
The Bethlehem song of old, "The Child is King."

The Child is King; with His mild sceptre sways
The powers and kingdoms of this world, and all
The unrest of our fevered life allays;
Rules o'er our hearts, where fear did once enthrall.

He waves aloft His magic wand of love;
Hate is dethroned, well may the angels sing;
Joy, regnant at the last, chimes from above
The radiant note, "The Child—the Child is King."

With hearts grown warm and enmities forgot,
What we hear ringing there is man's new birth.
Gladness and joy are now our human lot;
God's in His world, and heaven is near to earth.

Young People's Societies

If We Love Jesus*

THE great lesson to be derived from the week's daily readings, is that if we love Jesus we shall follow him.

No one can plead that he does not know just what to do in order to follow Christ. It is all in the Gospels and the Epistles.

Great commentators have again and again emphasized the wonderful fact that one of the chief proofs of Christ's divinity, is the way in which his directions have fitted human needs through all the ages, and must fit them always. If you sincerely wish to follow your Lord, read his Word. There is no emergency of your life for which you cannot find there the preparation.

Loving Jesus means, especially to us of the new century, loving our fellowmen.

"Organized society is asking the question to-day, 'What must I do to be saved,'" says Dr. Strong, "and the answer comes from the great Teacher, 'Love thy neighbor as thyself.' If God is to be loved as a father, men must be loved as brothers. The love of our neighbor was intended to be not simply a kindly sentiment nor a beautiful ideal, but a practical working principle, intended to control the organization of human society."

Herbert Spencer, one of the greatest of sociologists, toiled for many years to find a rule of life, and arrived, after all his thought and study, at the very law laid down by our Saviour two thousand years ago.

The great Gladstone also said that there was but one method of regulating human relations—the method of universal love and brotherhood.

We are too apt to associate the love of Jesus with what we may call the "softer" virtues — gentleness, meekness, long suffering. We forget that the great distinguishing virtue of our Lord was his courage.

During the Boxer rebellion, a merchant came to one of the missionaries and asked to be baptized and received into the church.

"Had you not better wait until the war is over?" asked the missionary. "You may be killed, if it is known that you have joined the Christians."

"No," replied the man sturdily, "I know that Christians can bear persecution. I have seen them. I want to learn how to bear it as they do, and so I have become a Christian, and am not afraid to confess it."

The virility and valor which true religion imparts are invincible.

Mr. Harold Bell Wright has written a poetic allegory in which a Pilgrim sets forth for the Temple of Truth, on the Outer-Edge-of-Things, and close beside the Beautiful Sea.

The Keeper of the Temple challenges him before he may enter:

"What law have you fulfilled? What price have you paid?"

The Pilgrim replies: "I have accomplished the long journey through the Desert of Facts. Alone I have endured the days under the sky of brass; alone I have borne the awful solitude of the nights. I was not drawn aside by the lovely scenes which tempted me. I was not turned back by the dreadful shapes that theatened me."

"And the Price?"

"I left behind all things dearest to the heart of man: Long-Time Traditions, Holy Prejudices, Favors and Honors of the World. I saw the desert white with bones. I found the way set among many graves."

Then the Keeper let him in.

Following Jesus may not always be so hard; but he warns us that we must, like him, bear the cross. Still he so orders the lives of those who love him that the yoke is easy and the burden is light.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 18. TEXT: John 14 : 15-24.

From the Watch-Tower*

"OUR plans are adequate," says Miss Osborn of Foochow, "but plans will not save souls. The section which I represent may serve as a type for many another field in the Middle Kingdom. At Foochow, we have a girl's college and intermediate school, with one foreign worker in charge of both—doing the work of two missionaries.

"There is no evangelist to go into the homes represented by the pupils, no one to carry the leaven into the houses of the Chinese city, crowding to the compound gates.

"A woman's hospital is there, but no foreign doctor or trained nurse; a woman's training school, but no teacher to take charge of it."

Thus Miss Osborn goes on, reciting the pitiful needs of her district. When we consider that during the Chinese-Japanese war, it was computed that at least a fourth of China was so distant from the scene of conflict that its inhabitants did not know, and do not now know, that such a war was taking place, we get some idea of the needs of that immense empire. Our missionaries have not begun to meet more than a small fraction of them.

Mrs. Springer of Rhodesia, Africa, tells of the wonderful physical progress there. Eighteen thousand miles of railway are completed and thousands more are sure to be laid soon. Its great mines are pouring forth their wealth upon an eager world.

With these improvements have come a grave danger. Crowds of dissolute white men follow in their wake, and they find an easy prey in the credulous natives. "Oh, for more missionaries to fight this growing evil!"

The lot of the native African women is "unwritable and unspeakable"; and yet that of the Mohammedan woman is described as even worse. The pagan women are bought and sold like so many cattle. A special plea comes to the young women of America to go to this benighted land and save these degraded and abused girls and women.

From India comes a mighty cry for help.

"The present missionary equipment," writes Bishop Robinson of Bombay, "is utterly inadequate and out of all proportion to the magnitude of our task."

The strained political situation in India, with its consequent unrest and the sobering which has come with political responsibility, has opened a new office for the missionary.

"We tell these people," says Bishop Robinson, "that we are in deepest sympathy with their aspirations for a broader administration of their affairs, and for better moral training to fill the positions of trust that are being thrown open to them. We are here expressly to extend that sympathy and give that instruction."

Educational conditions in India call for increased evangelical effort. The college students are rapidly drifting toward skepticism. A widespread evangelical campaign among the educated classes is urgently demanded there—but where are the men to prosecute it?

In India, as in every other country, the condition of the women is pitiable. There is no hope for any land until its women are respected and educated.

The sainted Munson and Lyman lost their lives among the cannibals of Sumatra. Twenty-five years passed before another missionary dared to enter that dangerous country. Then, in 1861, the Rhenish Missionary Society began work there. Now there are 89,000 Batak Christians. The history of this mission is most thrilling.

But everywhere are needed men, women and money, say the watchmen. Out of our abundance in this great rich land let us give freely.

Plans to Change the Calendar

MOVEMENT is on foot to reform . the Gregorian calendar, which has ved us so long and so well. The iss Federal Council has announced purpose of inviting all the civilized ions to a conference at Berne with iew to adopting an arrangement by ch every year will be divided into ctly 52 weeks, or 364 days.

Under the proposed arrangement, w Year's Day would be an extra day Sunday would bear no date. The r quarters of the year would be ctly of the same length—the months 30 and 31 days successively. Acding to this plan, the thirty-first of March, June, September and ember would always fall on a Sund and every leap year would have off-day which would neither be nted nor dated, this day being ined between June 31 and July 1.

"rom a very remote period, men e given their attention to the passi flight of time, and early tried to ise systems by which they could sure the duration of the days and tell the coming of the seasons. The k-bearded men of the Semitic race the Eastern hills watched the sun ng above the horizon to herald the h of day; with wondering eyes, y followed him in his course ough the firmament until his beams ted into the shadows of the west disappeared. Then they gazed at stars coming out one by one in the k vault of night, some uniting in ters, others far apart, some apently remaining stationary in the vens, others wandering all over the expanse of sky. They looked and wondered; but as they became e familiar with the phenomena of universe they began to note that e was arrangement and order in all observed; that the sun had a time rising and setting; that the stars a fixed course in the heavens; that, r a certain time had elapsed, sun stars would return to rise and set exactly the same place and comce again their round of the vens. Thus these men of the ant world noted the passage of the s and the years, the two natural isions of time, though they had no ge to register their passing. The arent daily revolution of the sun t the earth occasioned the divisinto days. The changes of the n, which were observed to occur y 29 or 30 days, suggested the ision into months. The time red by the sun to revolve round the h was called the solar year. It is known exactly that this time is days, 5 hours, 48 minutes and 46 nds; but as it has been reckoned rently at different times, there been various changes of calendar hat account.

he ancient Egyptians based their on the changes of the seasons e, without reference to the lunar th. It contained 365 days, which divided into 12 months of 30 days a, with five supplementary days at end of each year.

he Jewish year consisted of lunar ths, of which they reckoned 12 in year, intercalating a thirteenth n necessary to maintain the correidence of the particular months the regular recurrence of the sea-

he Greeks also in the early time oned by lunar and intercalary ths. In the time of Solon, they a year of 12 months alternately of and 30 days, the total number of being 354, but soon they began to rcalate a 30-day month every other in order to reconcile their year the time of the sun's movement. , however, was found too much, so 30-day month was intercalated only in four years, and even then they d themselves a good way off in reckoning. The intercalary month used both Jews and Greeks.

t first the Romans divided their year into ten months; but they soon adopted the Greek method of lunar and intercalary months, making the lunar year consist of 354 and afterward of 355 days, leaving 10 or 11 days and a fraction to be supplied by the intercalary division. To the Romans we are indebted for the name calendar. It was the custom of the Pontifex Maximus, on the first day of the month, which began with the new moon, to proclaim (calare) the month, with the festivals occurring in it. Hence the first of the month was called Calendae, from which is derived calendar. Julius Cæsar abolished the lunar year, reconstructed the months, giving thirty-one days each to the first, third, fifth, seventh, ninth and eleventh, and thirty days each to the rest, except February, which had ordinarily twenty-nine only, but every fourth year thirty. The Julian year consisted of 365¼ days and exceeded by 11 minutes 13.95 seconds the solar year of 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 seconds. In consequence of this, the equinox in the course of a few centuries fell back considerably. In the time of Julius Cæsar, it corresponded to March 25, and by the sixteenth century it had retrograded to March 11. It was at this time that a physician of Verona named Ghiraldi proposed a plan for amending the calendar. He died before he had opportunity to carry it forward, but his brother presented it to Pope Gregory XIII., who assembled a number of learned men to discuss it. It was passed upon favorably and adopted, and thus was given to the world what has since been known as the Gregorian Calendar. In 1582 Gregory issued a brief, abolishing the Julian Calendar in all Catholic countries, and introducing the reformed one.

The reform of the Gregorian or new on the Julian or old consisted in dropping ten days after October 4, 1582, so that the 15th was reckoned immediately after the 4th. Every one hundredth year, which by the old style was a leap year, was to be a common year, the fourth century, divisible by four, excepted; that is: 1600 was to remain a leap year, but 1700, 1800, 1900 were not to be reckoned as such, while 2000 is to be so reckoned. In this calendar, the length of the solar year is taken to be 365 days, 5 hours, 49 minutes and 12 seconds, the difference between which and the true length is immaterial.

Some of the Protestant countries, such as Germany and Denmark, held out for a long time against the Gregorian calendar, while Russia and all lands in the communion of the Greek Church still hold out against it and continue to measure time by the Julian calendar. The consequence is that there is a difference of thirteen days at the present time between Russia and the Western world.

The festivals of the Christian Church were determined by the Julian calendar. With regard to Easter, it was necessary to have reference to the course of the moon. The Jews celebrated Easter (that is, the Passover) on the 14th of the month Nisan (March), the Christians in the same month, but always on a Sunday. Now, as the Easter of the Christians sometimes coincided with the Passover of the Jews, and it was deemed unchristian to celebrate so important a festival at the same time as the Jews did, it was resolved at the Council of Nice (325 A.D.) that from that time Easter should be solemnized on the Sunday following the first full moon after the vernal equinox, which then was supposed to take place on March 21.

VICTORY OVER DEATH*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

CLOSE beside Golgotha was a new tomb in the garden, wherein man had never yet been laid. It belonged to Joseph of Arimathea. He had been a secret friend of Jesus, because he feared the Jews. Nicodemus also had been a secret friend of Jesus, also fearing the Jews, and coming by night to talk with him. How passing strange that these two secret friends were bolder than any others when Jesus had been crucified! Joseph went boldly unto Pilate, and begged his body, and took it down from the cross, and Nicodemus brought a hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes, and Joseph procured a linen cloth to wrap around the body of Jesus, and together they placed it in Joseph's new tomb in the garden. Possibly there were other friends of Jesus to help in the interment, but the secret friends had become the bravest of all—braver even than the apostles. They lovingly and tenderly laid away their beloved Teacher and Master, thinking that the last rites had been performed. The tomb would have been left alone; but by instigation of the Jewish leaders, who went to Pilate, a Roman guard was set to watch it, because the Jews told Pilate that Jesus in his lifetime had said that in three days he should rise again. "Some one will come and steal his body, and say that he has risen again," they told Pilate. So Pilate sent and had the grave sealed with his own seal, and set a guard of sixteen Roman soldiers. There were four watches of four soldiers each. Their watch probably began at six o'clock Friday night, which was the first day, and continued through Saturday, which was the second day, and until the early dawn of the Sabbath, which was the third day.

Jesus Leaves the Tomb

Suddenly, the four Roman soldiers on duty became as dead men from fright. Why? Because there was a great earthquake, and they saw an angel descend from heaven, and roll the stone away from the door of the tomb. After the soldiers had recovered from their fright they came into Jerusalem, and told the chief priests what they had seen. And they gave the soldiers bribes, much money, in order to have the soldiers say that some one had come and stolen the body of Jesus away while they slept. But it was death for a Roman soldier to sleep while on duty. The chief priests promised to go to the governor and rid the soldiers of their death penalty.

As Mary wept, she stooped a looked into the tomb, but the pl where Jesus had lain was empty, a two angels were there. The ang said, "Woman, why weepest thou And Mary answered, "Because th have taken away my Lord, and I kn not where they have laid him." Th she heard some one walking in garden. Another voice asked h "Woman, why weepest thou?" thought it was the gardener, and answered: "If thou hast borne l hence, tell me where you have l him, and I will take him away." then she turned around to see w the gardener would say, and behold was Jesus himself! And he called by name, "Mary." "Teacher!" s Mary, and she knelt to clasp his f or wash them with her tears, but Je said, "Touch me not." There wa sacredness about his person that th had not been before, since he passed the portals of the tomb. then Jesus spoke again, "Go unto brethren, and say to them, I asc unto my Father and your Father, my God and your God." Then M Magdalene left the garden and fo the disciples, and told them that had seen Jesus, and what he had s

The Garden Tomb

How sweet that garden tomb as saw it on Easter morning, in 19 while it was yet hardly light! It so quiet and sweet, with little flow blooming around. We, too, ente the tomb, and found it empty! could have placed our hands in niche where the form of Jesus once rested, but we would not; seemed to hear the voice of Jesus s ing, "Touch me not." A friend af ward said to us: "I have no sympa with your visit to Palestine. went to find Christ, but you fo only an empty tomb." It was not "empty tomb," it was a tomb filled w sacred memories. We trust him beca he rose and left the tomb. Later, on Easter day, we visited the shrine the Church of the Holy Sepulc which has been claimed since the t of Queen Helena to be the tomb Christ. We found it in the centre the church in a sacred enclosure marble and gilding, and lighted w innumerable lamps. Weeping pilgr were struggling to gain admittance it, and to lay on it long pieces of wh cotton cloth on which were prin scenes from the crucifixion of Chr these were to be used as their c winding sheets when they should (They were for sale just outside of church, so that those who desired th might purchase them before enterin What a contrast was all of this to quiet surroundings of the gar tomb! In referring to this, Bis John H. Vincent quoted an art which appeared in the Biblical Wo as follows: "While I was in Pales George Muller, the patriarch of fa was led to excavate and discover immortal tomb. Since then, its id tity having been considered establish an English association, headed by Archbishop of Canterbury and the other bishops, secured the garden w the interior sepulchre for $15,0 There is a general consensus of agr ment that this is the true Calvar When the Sunday School Pilgrims ited Jerusalem in 1904, there was wi spread alarm among the Romani

Sunday School Lesson

because it was reported that we had come for the express purpose of removing the tomb of Christ from the Church of the Holy Sepulchre to the garden tomb! In this connection, Sunday School teachers and older scholars are advised to read the story of the Crusades, the series of wars carried on between 1096 A.D. and 1271 A.D. to obtain possession of the Holy Sepulchre, then held by the Saracens. During all of that bloody and bitter time, the true sepulchre was lying in the fallow garden!

Jesus' Second Appearance

Then came a company of women, among whom are mentioned Mary, the mother of James the Less, and Salome, the mother of John. They did not expect to see a risen Christ, although it was the "third day," for they brought spices to embalm a dead Christ. They found an empty tomb, and an angel who told them that Christ had risen and gone away. They were so frightened that they fled from the tomb (Mark 16: 8). They met Jesus himself by the way. He saluted them: "All hail! Fear not!" and gave them a message to give to his disciples: that he would soon meet them in Galilee. And ever since that glad day women have been taking messages from Jesus to deliver in their homes, in the schools where they teach, in missionary lands and everywhere. Women were the first heralds of a risen Christ!

"Christ Is Risen"

A young Greek some years ago, whose name was Paniotes, was servant to a Turkish nobleman named Osman Effendi. He came with his master to Jerusalem, and when Osman Effendi went to worship in the Mosque of Omar, the young Greek accompanied him.

Soon after, Osman Effendi undertook a journey to Damascus, intending to return to Jerusalem, and left Paniotes to await him. Paniotes was accused to the Pasha of having profaned the Mosque of Omar, for only a Mohammedan might enter it. He was summoned before the Pasha, and questioned as to why he did so. He answered that he had followed his master, as it was his duty to do. The penalty was death, or to turn Mohammedan, which was much pressed upon him. Paniotes exclaimed, "Christ is risen; I fear nothing!" The Pasha replied, "Say, 'God is God, and Mohammed, the prophet of God,' and I adopt you as my son." Paniotes exclaimed again, "Christ is risen; I fear nothing!" They led him out before the Castle of David, and drew up the soldiers around him, with their swords drawn, but Paniotes exclaimed: "I am a Christian! Christ is risen; I fear nothing!" He knelt down and prayed to Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and exclaimed: "Christ is risen; I fear nothing!" The executioner struck him several times with the sword, so as to draw blood, in the hope that he might relent; but Paniotes continued: "Christ is risen; I fear nothing!" and thus exclaiming he was decapitated.

Since Jesus rose and left the tomb, death is not dying to the Christian. "The last enemy that shall be abolished (destroyed) is death" (I. Cor. 15: 26). Nay, it was destroyed when Christ arose from the tomb. He had before given his promise, "Because I live, ye shall live also" (John 14: 19). We do not think it is strange then that Paniotes could say in the face of death, "Christ is risen; I fear nothing!"

When Bishop Beveridge was about to die, some one asked him if he knew those about his bed. He replied, "No." His wife bowed over his pillow, and asked, "Do you know me?" "No." Another asked, "Do you know Jesus Christ?" The dying man folded his hands and said, "I have known him for forty years. He is my best friend."

When Jonathan Edwards was dying, after he had dismissed all his family, he gathered his limbs up in bed, and said: "Where is now my friend Jesus?"

If what we call "death" really is dying, how could men utter as their last words such sentences as the following:

"They praise him, they praise him. What glory! the angels are waiting for me!"

"Oh, the greatness of the glory that is revealed to me!"

"Do you hear the sweet music with which holy men invite me, that I may henceforth be a partaker of their happiness? Delightful it is to be in the society of blessed spirits! Let us go! We must go! Let me go!"

"I breathe the air of heaven."

"Christ, angels, beautiful, delightful!"

"Oh, I see Jesus and the angels!"

"I see things that are unutterable."

"I not only feel the climate, but I breathe the ambrosial air of heaven."

"Do I want anything? All I want is Christ, and him I have."

Ancient Sermons

A STORY is told by Booker Washington concerning a dispute in a little Baptist church in Alabama. Trouble had arisen over the payment of the colored minister's stipend, the majority of the congregation having got to the point that they would not pay the man's salary. "By request," said Mr. Washington, "I visited the chapel, and did what I could to persuade the congregation that it was their duty to pay their pastor. Upon one old fellow, sitting at the back of the building, my remarks had no impression, and finally, when asked why they should not pay their minister, he muttered, 'Because we paid for them sermons last year.'"

Why We Talk About Advertising

IT may occur to you that we devote considerable space to the question of our advertising department, but there is a very good reason for our doing so. The more advertising we publish the more money we can spend in improving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. That is why we are trying so hard to have you give some thought to the advertisers who are patronizing the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

There is hardly a wish you can express, but you will find it talked about in the advertising columns of the modern magazine, and you will never make a mistake by patronizing wide-awake business men who appreciate the value of advertising.

Should you ever find anything wrong with an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, we want to know about it. Help us in this work by writing to our advertisers, and buying from them whenever you can. Say you saw their advertisement in this paper, and let us know if you do not get a square deal every time.

Easiest READING BIBLE

The Bible has never been published in any form in which the reading of it has been made so attractive to both old and young as in the "International."

Christian Workers' BIBLE

By an entirely new plan, a thread of red ink, running from Genesis to Revelation, binds in one harmonious whole each leading topic. All the precious truths which lie hidden under the mass of unconnected matter and escape the mere reader are brought to light and tied together.

The Rev. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, D. D., the popular authority in Bible themes, has arranged on this plan Three Thousand Selected Texts.

Prominent People's Opinions

John Wanamaker: International Christian Worker's Bible is an advance on anything hitherto attempted in making the Bible usable.

Lyman Abbott: Valuable to Christian Workers in their endeavor to get at the teaching of the Bible directly and immediately, and not through the medium of commentaries.

Bound in Fine Morocco, divinity circuit, with overlapping covers (like illustration), round corners, gold edges, red underneath. Size of page 8½ x 5¼ inches, beautifully printed in large clear type on extra fine paper.

THE FOUNDATION AND THE HOUSE

*A Layman's Sermon, by John C. Havemeyer

I WAS born with defective eyesight, which it has been my constant effort to correct. At an early age I began to visit an optician and to select from his stock glasses which seemed to be helpful, and this process was continued until I nearly reached middle life. Then an oculist whom I consulted assured me that my eyes differed and required new glasses or lenses and he gave me a prescription. When I put on the new glasses I seemed ushered into another world. I found that all my life my vision had been indistinct. For the first time I discovered that the moon was a globe and not a flat surface and that I could see partly around it, and the stars had a brilliance and twinkling beauty I had not known. I saw also other objects around me as they had never appeared before.

I am here this morning to remind you and myself that we need help, or spiritual glasses, in order to know the things of God. Sin has obscured our vision. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned and we need divine help to see them. To the natural man they are foolishness because they are spiritually discerned. Shall we join in the effort this morning to secure this spiritual discernment, or, as the Bible calls it, a knowledge of God?

We have all probably been more or less impressed with the fact that the letters of the apostles to the churches employ very positive language, in which there is no element of doubt or uncertainty. In our text, Paul does not give us his opinion, but states as a positive fact that other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. If we refer to Peter's letters, although he was once so wavering a disciple, we have the same illustration. Take, for example, I. Peter 1: 23—"Being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." Or, in John's Epistle, where there is such teaching as this: "We know that we are of God and that the whole world lieth in wickedness." These men all give testimony of a personal experience and revelation of the wonderful spiritual truths concerning which they wrote. Let us then be fully assured that Paul had a positive revelation concerning the truth we are considering.

Paul certainly tells us that we are all building a house, whether we do it willingly or unwillingly. In Matt. 7: 24, Christ says that the world is divided into two classes. One class heareth his words and doeth them, and these he calls wise; and the other class heareth his words and doeth them not, and this class he calls foolish. The first class built their house upon a rock, and the house endured. The other class built their houses upon the sand, and when the rain descended and the floods came and the winds blew and beat upon that house it fell, and great was the fall thereof. Paul assures us in our text that no man can lay any other foundation. He declares that this is a positive limitation and it applies to every man in the world then living, or who may live hereafter. He does not leave his audience in doubt, but declares that this foundation is Jesus Christ, and elsewhere he speaks of Christ as the rock, Christ Jesus.

How is it true of us that we are truly a house? The house we are building is whatever makes up our life. Every form of activity shows what our character is. Every part of our body—eyes, tongue, ears, hands, feet—ought to be fulfilling the mission for which God made it and aid in building a house upon the ro Christ Jesus. Paul's description Christ as a foundation is a very bea tiful and instructive figure. When man builds a house, the first step is t foundation. To be strong and perm nent, every part of that house mu have a direct or indirect connecti with it. If the foundation is of t right sort, the wind will not blow t house away, and the floods will not a fect it so long as the foundation stan firm, because every part of the buildi shares its strength and solidity.

But Paul tells us that we must n build upon the foundation wood, ha stubble, but gold, silver and precio stones, for each man's work shall made manifest. Some one may ask hc it is that we are to use gold, silver a precious stones. These materials a mentioned because they will resist fi and typify spiritual beauty and pe fection. The material used in t building must be of a sort that adapted to the structure upon which rests. Each of us should have t spirit of Christ, and this ought to manifest in every part of the house, our life. But what is the spirit Christ? Christ said, "It is my meat do the will of him that sent me and accomplish his work." He said, "I a meek and lowly of heart." "If thi enemy hunger, feed him, and if thirst, give him drink." He hates s and came to be a Saviour from sin. the Old Testament gold, silver a precious stones were used in the co struction of the temple and upon t garments of the priests, and a hi value was placed upon them. In t new dispensation established by Chris the whole thought and aim of our li should be to please and honor Go Christ taught this when he said, "M meat is to do the will of him that se me and to accomplish his work." W are clearly taught that there is dang in the possession of beautiful thing lest they draw our attention from G and spiritual things. The truth whi Christ revealed to us regarding God that we are to seek first the kingdo of God.

If we want silver and gold simp to remind us of his power and love, a to give pleasure to our fellow-men, I not understand that the Bible forbi them. But, as a matter of fact, mo of us would use them to attract atte tion to ourselves and to foster our ow conceit and pride. I expect it is f this reason that Paul cautions wome to adorn themselves in modest appar —not with braided hair and gold, pearls or costly array—but whi becometh women professing godline with good works. Our stronge desire and effort should be to secu the favor of God. Christians are hei of God and joint heirs with Jes Christ. They are accumulating trea ures that will increase through ete nity, and that will bring a joy whi Paul declares "eye hath not seen n ear heard, neither have entered in the heart of man, the things which G hath prepared for them that love him. If Christians would only believe thi and if it became the atmosphere their homes, how the houses built upo the foundation of Christ Jesus woul multiply and God would be glorifie Throughout the world, the testimon would be given which came from Paul lips: "For me to live is Christ." The what a different standard there woul be in our lives! Mere earthly plea ures, that appeal to the flesh, would n attract us. Human ambitions, whi are limited to this world, would b ignored. We would consider it n sacrifice, but a glorious privilege, t seek to be perfect, "even as God is pe fect."

The Love of Oatmeal

What It Signifies

The growing child craves oatmeal and delights in it. The normal adult—working with muscle or brain—always retains a marked fondness for oats. That craving—that liking—is the call of Nature for this food of all foods—for the elements we most require.

Note the facts that follow. Note why Oatmeal—beyond anything else—feeds bodies and brains and nerves. Is it any wonder, think you, that within us all some instinct calls for Oats?

Oats Give Stature

Archdeacon Sinclair, in an address in London to working lads said: "I had four brothers, all six feet tall. My father had fourteen brothers and sisters ranging from six feet to six feet eight inches. And all were brought up on oatmeal."

In Scotland oatmeal is the national dish. In China and Japan it is little consumed. Note that these are the two extremes of the races as regards average height.

Oats Build Brains

Oats contain more organic phosphorus than any other cereal food. And phosphorus is the brain's main constituent.

Among college professors, who work with brains alone, our inquiries show that 96 per cent regularly eat oatmeal.

Among college fraternities and eating clubs we find oatmeal to be the regular dish with 90 per cent of the members. That's a natural result of the brain's call for phosphorus.

Nerves Demand Oats

Oats are rich in lecithin—far richer than any other grain. Lecithin is the main element needed in building up nerves and nerve centers. It is a notable fact that nervous people are particularly fond of oatmeal.

The most valuable nerve tonic of vegetable origin is a product called Avenin—derived from oats. Physicians prescribe it almost universally for building up overworked nerves.

Oats Supply Energy

Oats contain more protein than any other cereal—2½ times as much as corn. Protein is the body-builder, the energy-giving food. The average man at the average work uses up 3½ ounces of protein per day.

That is why horses, which work with muscle alone, thrive best on oats. And that is why active boys crave oats.

Human Statistics

Here are some facts which we have learned by a personal canvass conducted in forty states. They are cited as confirming scientific opinion regarding the worth of oatmeal.

In the tenement districts, where the average child is nervous, wan and undeveloped, not one home in twelve serves oats. The children are blighted, the best authorities say, by the lack of well-balanced food.

Among the highly intelligent, where our best types are bred, seven out of eight are oatmeal homes.

We consulted 12,000 physicians and found that four out of five serve their children oatmeal.

We find that four-fifths of all college students come from these oatmeal homes. So do the great majority of the successful in every walk of life.

But a canvass of 61 poorhouses shows that 93 per cent of the inmates were not brought up on oatmeal.

In four state penitentiaries, only two per cent of the prisoners were fed on oatmeal in their youth.

Among the wayward boys in prison schools, two-thirds had never tasted oatmeal at home.

And the oatmeal-bred person is the rarest exception among workers in the lowliest vocations.

Quaker Oats

The Richest, Most Luscious One-Third of Prime Oats

Quaker Oats is the utmost one can get in oatmeal. To make it we take the finest oats grown and put them through 62 siftings.

Thus we pick out just the rich, plump grains. We get only ten pounds of Quaker Oats from a bushel.

These selected oats, prepared by our process, form the richest, most delicious oat food in existence. They are so incomparable—so much superior to common oatmeal—that Quaker Oats now command the largest sale in the world.

We export this food to nearly every spot of the earth.

Yet Quaker Oats—with all its richness—costs but one-half cent per dish.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SPAVIN CURE.

REG. TRADE MARK

E. C. MESSIER, Civil Engineer, Real Estate and Insurance, 1008 Elm St.
MANCHESTER, N.H., Oct. 22, 1910.

Troy Chemical Co., Binghamton, N.Y. I saw your advertisement and sent $5 for a bottle of "Save-The-Horse" to cure a bone spavin. At the time he was not worth $1; before he had the spavin I was offered $600. Four veterinarians told me that he was incurable, so I felt blue, as you might believe. Since two weeks after treating him with "Save-The-Horse" he has not taken a lame step and I have driven him every day, and even thirty miles the same day. "Save-The-Horse" has done more than four doctors in a year. Now it seems exaggerated, but any one in doubt can call at the neighbors to prove what I say, and furthermore, the horse can give them a ride, and probably one of the best in their lifetime. I cannot say enough to praise your remedy. I will not be without it. Truly yours, E. C. MESSIER.

$5.00 a bottle, with legal written guarantee or contract. Send for copy, booklet and letters from business men and trainers on every kind of case. Permanently cures Spavin, Thoroughpin, Ringbone (except low), Curb, Splint, Capped Hock, Windpuff, Shoe Boil, Injured Tendons and all Lameness. No scar or loss of hair. Horse works as usual. Dealers or Express Paid.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Just Across the River*

THE land that holds our treasures,
Where sin nor death can mar,
The land of lasting pleasures,
Is not so very far;
'Tis only so in seeming,
And in our human fear,
For often in our dreaming
That land is very near—
The land where friends ne'er sever,
'Tis just across the River.

'Tis but a moment's journey,
A closing of the eye,
A fluttering breath, a turning
From earth all wearily;
A flight through regions airy,
Swift as a flashing beam—
A sail with boatmen wary,
Over a narrow stream.
Bright land of the forever!
'Tis just across the River.

And when Faith's sunlight lingers
Upon the mystic tide,
Clouds, touched by angel fingers,
No more its glories hide.
Lost kindred, loved and loving,
So near us seem to stand,
That while mid earth scenes moving
We clasp them hand to hand.
Fair land where love dies never!
'Tis just across the River.

Then wherefore this repining
For dear ones gone before,
Since Faith reveals them shining
Safe on the other shore?
Though lost to mortal vision,
They're never far away;
And soon to their Elysian
Our weary feet may stray.
Home of the soul forever!
'Tis just across the River.

A Book by a Child

Jingles, a book by a little girl author, some written when she was only four years old. She is now seven. Her name is Winifred Sackville Stoner. She tells her secret in the following way:

When I was one year old,
So often I've been told,
Dear Ma-Mie sang to me
This cunning poetry:
"Mousie, pousie, wousie,
In the Boush Street housie";
And always from that time
I've loved to make a rhyme.
So if it be my fate
To write a poem great,
Then dearest, sweet Ma-Mie,
The praise belongs to thee.

There are many choice little jingles in the book, and who knows so well as a child what will please other children? Some of the jingles are in Esperanto, for little Miss Stone is an Esperantist of much fame, having been granted a diploma by the Master Zamenhof. The book is quaintly illustrated by Karl Kae Knecht. Smith & Butterfield, publishers, Evansville, Ind.

The Doors of Life

Or, Little Studies in Self-Healing. By Walter de Voe, author of Healing Currents, Mystic Words, etc. Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York. $1. In this little book we are bidden to avoid monotony; to keep the mind active; to live with nature; to concentrate our thoughts upon our weaknesses, with a view to gaining strength; to rely on exercise rather than on medicine; and are given many other directions for improving our bodies, with the ultimate aim of elevating our minds and souls.

The Problems of Youth

A series of Discourses for Young People on Themes from the Book of Proverbs. By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D., pastor of Trinity M. E. Church, Denver, Colo. Author of Hero Tales from Sacred Story, My Young Man, Sermon Stories for Boys and Girls, The Christian Gentleman, etc. $1.30. Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York, 1909. These sermons, like all of Dr. Banks', read well. Their style is clear and easy; their ideals are sound, and nearly every position taken is fitly illustrated by some striking instance from real life or from some great work of fiction. It is a good book for the Sunday School library, as well as for that of the preacher.

*From Jesus of Nazareth Passeth By. A collection of poems by Emma F. R. Campbell. Pp. 130. Price $1.25. M. E. Munson, 77 Bible House, New York, publisher.

Books Received

The Elder Brother; A Dawn Thought Sketch. By C. L. Brewer. To-morrow Publishing Company, Chicago. Cloth, 50 cents; paper, 25 cents. A hodge-podge of socialism, poetical quotations, current slang phrases, and here and there a touch of fine realistic description.

Lilies of Eternal Peace. By Lilian Whiting. Pp. 41. In cloth covers, price 75 cents; in leather covers, $1.50. Our Rich Inheritance. By James Freeman Jenness. Cloth covers. Pp. 36. Price 30 cents. The above two books are published by Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.

Standard Songs and Choruses. An excellent collection for the use of high schools, etc., but one that should prove generally acceptable to a large class of music lovers. Pp. 256. Cloth covers. Price 75 cents. American Book Company, New York, Chicago and Cincinnati, publishers.

I Believe in the Holy Ghost. A study of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit in the light of modern thought. By J. Howard B. Masterman, M.A., Warden of Queen's College, Birmingham; Professor of History in the University of Birmingham, etc. London; Wells, Gardner, Darton & Co. Imported by Thomas Whittaker, New York. Price 75 cents; postage, 7 cents.

Number Primer. By Bailey and Germann. Cloth binding. Pp. 176. Price 30 cents. American Book Company, New York, publishers.

How to Invest Money. By George Garr Henry. "The aim of this book is to present in clear form the simple principles of investment." Cloth covers. Pp. 121. Price 75 cents. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York and London, publishers.

A Child's Guide to American History. By Henry William Elson, author of A History of the United States, Side-Lights on American History, School History of the United States, etc. New York: The Baker & Taylor Company. $1.25. Mr. Elson has managed to crowd into this volume, though it is not large, the main events of United States history, and to present them in language sure to interest the average child. This is a good book to read aloud in the family circle, as well as to study in school.

The Foundation and the House

Then our children would be inspired with this glorious ambition. If they did wrong, we would remind them that they were disobeying and dishonoring God. Respect and obedience for parents would be enforced by the reminder that the offense was against God and his commandments, and incurred his displeasure, and we would seek to restrain from wrongdoing or sensual pleasure by quoting Christ's specific teaching, and impressing the privilege of loving and obeying him who has loved them.

Now, how do you and I stand? We fulfilled our destiny yesterday of building a house. Was it one that will endure? In the other world will the Master say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant"? Is our path shining more and more unto the perfect day? Are we following the Shepherd who leads to green pastures? If not, shall not every one of us begin now to change our lives? Shall not every timber or brick that goes into our house to-day and in our future life, be such as will endure?

Let us cease to sow to the flesh and be satisfied with corruption, but sow to the Spirit and reap, instead of corruption, everlasting life. John tells us in his First Epistle that "We know not what we shall be, but when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." We shall be one with God in Christ, and our home will be "a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

A Christmas Gift that Lasts the Whole Year Round

Ordinarily the Christmas Gift is a thing of a day. Why not make it a thing of a year—a remembrance that renews itself every week for a whole year—a perennial delight to your friend, and a constant occasion for gratefulness to you? It is often hard to make the Christmas money meet every desire—there are so many to remember, and the heart during the Yuletide season is so full of kindness for all. In order to help you make a little money go a great way this Christmas, The Christian Herald makes this suggestion:

Why not give a year's subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to one or several friends as Christmas Gifts?

Can you think of any other Gift of equal cost that would give as much pleasure?

It isn't a gift that will be forgotten with the passing of Christmas Day---it continues every week for a whole year ---it is really 52 presents. Each week the recipient will be reminded of your kindness.

To make the gift more attractive we have prepared a very dainty Christmas Card-Folder and Envelope which will be sent in time to reach the recipient on Christmas Day. This card will contain your name as the donor, together with an appropriate message conveying your best wishes for a Merry Christmas.

In sending in your order, please be sure to give your own name as well as the name of the person to whom you wish to have The Christian Herald sent as a Christmas Gift. We will mail the announcement card so as to reach its destination on Christmas Day.

The Christian Herald will make a most charming and correct gift --- a weekly reminder of your thoughtfulness. To friends who do not know our sterling weekly the magazine will come as a delightful surprise, bringing sunshine, and happiness, and inspiration into their lives; to shut-ins and invalids, and to those who could not afford to buy it for themselves, you will give a year of happiness and pleasure. The subscription rate is $1.50 for 52 issues.

CHRISTIAN PROGRESS IN ARMENIA

IT has been truly written that the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. Not long ago, the province of Aleppo in Asia Minor was the scene of massacres that recalled, while they lasted, those terrible days fourteen years ago when Armenia was deluged in blood and thousands of its

Active Members of the Akyol Christian Association

Christian people slain by fanatical Kurds and Moslem soldiery. Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will remember the persecutions and murders at Adana and other places in the province, and how the relief fund they contributed was welcomed by the survivors. Now, fortunately, the situation is wholly changed. Dr. Stephen Trowbridge, missionary of the American Board at Aintab, writes us as follows:

"In spite of the discouraging times which have followed the Adana massacres, this religious movement has gone forward and has upheld the Cross of Christ in daily life. The members of the society lately begun here are chiefly from the tradesman class, but there are several well-educated young men as leaders, and there are also those of the laboring class. It is a cause for thanks that in Christ all these young men may come into their true brotherhood."

The Trowbridge letter goes on to state that Akyol is in the western part of the city of Aintab, and has been built up chiefly during the last fifteen to twenty years. The inhabitants are mostly poor workingmen. Many of the poor tenants formerly living in the main part of the city, unable to pay their annual house rent and annoyed by the trouble of frequent moving, resolved to have their own dwellings. With little sums made up of niggardly savings they bought lots in a part of the city which was regarded as of little value. All the members of a family would partake in the building process. Many of their houses have no outer court walls. One hut contains one room which is at once bedroom, dining-room, sitting-room and parlor. Oftentimes wife and husband work in the same room. In this quarter, Christians and Moslems live together. They are all poor and in need, morally and mentally. The older people do not frequent the churches. For some of them Sunday is simply as a working day. In short, all of them, young and old, are exposed to many undesirable, bad influences.

Some years ago, he explains, several Christian young men of the Akyol quarter began to wonder if they could not do something to amend these miserable conditions. After many struggles, they organized a Christian Society. A building was bought and a school opened. The real work of the association dates from March, 1906. After a little while the movement began to spread among the young women and girls, the purpose of both sections being the same. Their motto is condensed in the following sentence taken out of their constitution, viz., "To improve and elevate, religiously, morally, mentally, socially and physically, the young men and the young women and children of Akyol quarter, without distinction, and to serve and promote their growth in Christian life and character." Protestants and Gregorians as well as Turks, Jews and Catholics are admitted to membership. Services for young men are held every Sunday at 1.30 P.M., and for young women, every Sunday at noon. Women's prayer or singing meetings are also held, where pleasant and interesting stories or sermons, chiefly explaining the calling of women, are read.

There is still much to be desired before the institution is complete. There is a small indebtedness and funds are also needed for a library and reading room, an organ, benches, desks, etc. The missionaries hope to interest friends in the work, who will help them in bringing it to a state of greater efficiency and usefulness.

Answered Prayers

L. F. T., Turlock, Calif. "God has answered my prayers many times."

J. C. O., Berwick, Pa. "God has answered our prayer in restoring our baby girl to health and strength."

P. S. "I promised that if He answered my prayer in restoring me to my former health from a severe affliction, I would acknowledge it through your paper. He did so, also several other prayers, for which I praise his name."

C. St., Liverpool, England. "I wish to publicly acknowledge to the whole world God's answer to prayers of mine. The answers have been so wonderfully direct that I want everybody to know that God will give them anything asked for, provided the requests are made in the right spirit and it is for their own good."

CURTISS POULTRY BOOK

which tells how Roy Curtiss, a New York farmer's boy, starting about twenty years ago, with a few neglected hens, has built up at NIAGARA FARM the LARGEST PRACTICAL POULTRY PLANT IN THE WORLD, with sales of

Over $100,000 A YEAR

Roy agreed that if his father (a grain merchant and farmer) would furnish the feed he (Roy) would take all care of the flock and supply eggs and chickens for the farm table, and all that were left over were to belong to him. In two years Roy was using so much feed that his father had to cry quits, but the boy kept right on. He would start at two o'clock A.M. for Niagara Falls, 13 miles away, with poultry and eggs to sell. His brother joined him, and the business grew and grew. They took the farm and paid off the mortgage. They built and added to their plant, learning slowly how to avoid losses and make the greatest profits.

But they had no guidance, and had to learn by their own mistakes. If they had had such a guide as the CURTISS POULTRY BOOK, it would have saved them thousands of dollars and years of lost time.

This capital book was written right at Niagara Farm by the veteran poultryman, MICHAEL K. BOYER. Mr. Boyer had the Curtiss brothers right at his elbow with their records and data. He says he never saw a general poultry plant so well managed at every point. No "putting on style," no fancy buildings, no ornaments, but straight solid business. Everything is planned for months ahead. Every day shipments go off, every day money comes in. You could hardly believe how little they lose. Their percentage of fertile eggs, of live strong chickens hatched, of day-old chicks shipped, without loss, to Kansas or Florida, is really wonderful.

And this book gives all their methods of managing incubators, handling eggs, feeding chickens and ducks, killing, dressing, packing, and marketing, their formulas for mixing feed at different ages. And all these have been tested and improved by years of experience, resulting in the most profitable general poultry plant in the world. Whether you raise chickens, ducks, or eggs, whether you keep forty fowls or forty thousand, you will find here help that you can get in no other way.

Profusely illustrated, with many fine engravings, from actual photographs taken from life.
Have you use for such a book? Then read the offer below.

The CURTISS POULTRY BOOK is sold in combination with the Farm Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

The FARM JOURNAL is the standard paper for everyone who lives in or near the country, or ever has, or ever expects to. A particularly fine poultry department, more valuable than most poultry papers. 33 years old, 750,000 subscribers and more. Goes everywhere. Clean, clever, cheerful, amusing, intensely practical. Cut to fit everybody, young or old, village, suburbs, or rural routes. Unlike any other paper and always has been.

AMERICAN POULTRY ADVOCATE, the great New York State paper published at Syracuse, and full of good reading matter, is always welcomed by the subscriber. Now in its 18th year. It is conceded to be one of the best poultry papers published in the United States. Well edited by recognized authorities on the subject of practical poultry raising. Has a circulation of 45,000 copies per month.

Our 1911 Calendar with Every Order

The Calendar has been exquisitely finished by an absolutely new photogravure process, and it is one of the first color paintings ever reproduced in this manner. The colors are rich and perfectly blended. The baby is pictured against a background of a soft, shimmering orange; the beautiful pale-blue bows give a delightful contrast that produces a perfect composition; and the radiance of a rose-like complexion, a charming pink and white combination so typical of health and happiness, have been so faithfully retained that they melt and shade one into another in absolute harmony. The miniature half-tone shown here is incapable, of course, of conveying any adequate idea of the Calendar itself, which is 14 x 18 inches in size, printed on heavy de luxe stock, a dream of artistic perfection. Think of the good old memories this little baby would awaken in your home—memories of the time when those near and dear to you were chubby little ones. The Calendar will be prized by the whole family. It is free with each new and renewal subscription.

were for a time successful in the vicinity of Santa Cruz, and Mexican cavalry, artillery and infantry were hurried to the city. The rebels had started to burn the railway bridges, but they were driven off before they could accomplish their purpose and the troops reached their destination with comparatively small loss.

In the City of Mexico there was no outbreak, but the foreign residents were in a state of great anxiety. Order was maintained by a strong military force.

It had been hoped by the insurgents that General Reyes, one of the most noted leaders in Mexico, would come to the aid of the troops fighting against Diaz and combine them into an army capable of taking the open field aggressively. Reyes, however, did not take an active interest in the movement. A rumor that he was coming served to swell the number of insurgent bands. Torreon and Gomez Palacio were attacked and for a short time were held by the rebels.

If the revolutionists had been well led and had been united they would have taken a number of important places, for success several times was almost in their grasp; as it was, they made attacks in several different States, widely separated, and not following any well ordered plan, they were foredoomed to failure. At least five small battles occurred on the same afternoon in as many different places.

General Reyes wrote to his friends refusing to take part in the insurrection, and the spirits of the insurgents began to droop, though they continued bandit tactics, and annoyed government garrisons by their unexpected raids from the mountains. Madero resolved on a bold stroke and declared himself president of Mexico. He had hardly enjoyed his self-made title for more than twenty-four hours before he got in the way of a government bullet during a skirmish and was quite badly wounded. The government regained confidence, loyal regiments were sent to threatened points and the insurrection seemed to break up as quickly as it had started.

In Mexico City the foes of Diaz couple him with the Americans, whom they dislike intensely, and placards bearing the inscription "Kill Diaz and his Yankee Friends" were displayed only to be torn down by the police. Anti-American sentiment has thus been made to serve the purpose of the political agitator once more, but yet unsuccessfully. It strikes the average American oddly that this dislike exists at all, as it has but little reason back of it, and also that it should be made into a party cry in Mexico.

Brazil's Odd Mutiny

RIO DE JANEIRO has been in a state of panic for several days, and every householder had visions of solid shot plowing its way across his parlor floor, for the fleet in the harbor was in the hands of mutineers. The sudden uprising of the sailors was much like that at Lisbon, where they began the revolution by bombarding the city. It is probable that the Brazilian jack tars thought they would try the same methods in compelling the Chamber of Deputies to agree to certain demands in regard to their pay and the regulations. They demand that corporal punishment be abolished, and that the number of men in the crews be increased. They took possession of four powerful battleships and trained the guns on the city. They demanded that the Chamber grant their terms at once and also that they be given full pardon for their revolt. They got tired of waiting and put to sea. The Chamber then granted their demands in full and Deputy Corvalho went under a flag of truce to Sao Paulo to confer with the mutineers. The seamen were satisfied with the result of their "strike" and Rio de Janeiro resumed its usual calm.

HIS FIRST CHRISTMAS

ght that he had been a fool. When s soliloquy was ended, Gleason ouched the bell. When his valet apeared he gave orders for the packing his portmanteau. That done, he onned his great fur coat and hurried it into the street.

The snow was still falling, but it id not driven pedestrians in doors. efore the windows of The Fair, an p-to-date toy store, he saw a line of agged, little red-nosed newsboys hunrily eyeing the toys and calling out hich belonged to each one, the only ay they ever expected to own the lded baubles.

Acting on a sudden impulse, Gleason ollared a kicking, protesting half ozen who fancied "the cop" had them ire, and dragged them into the store. half hour later they emerged, their ms heavily laden, their faces reathed with smiles. And Robert leason passed on, smiling too. He as just beginning to learn the meanig of Christmas Day.

On his way to his office—there were me matters which must be attended before he left town—he took a short it through the alley and discovered a oman, with three little dirty youngers following her, all wailing miserably. They were evidently trying escape from a loud-voiced man, who emed to be literally driving them om the tottering tenement. It was ie work of a moment to learn the use of the woman's distress. The d story—eviction for non-payment of ie rent—was tremblingly told. A few oments later Robert Gleason was rrying on, and the woman, murmurg her thanks, was gathering up her anty belongings. For she held a rse with a sum of money sufficient r her needs, and on the folded paper rn from a memorandum was an or- signed by the millionaire himself, ving her permission to enter Gleason lats and make it her home, rent free, r one year.

Robert Gleason had lived in the idst of suffering and sorrow for venty-five years. He had only just gun to open his eyes. It was rearkable how much was accomplished those fleeting hours by the man and is millions.

Into alleys and offices and tenents Robert Gleason hurried that hristmas Eve. Clad in his great fur at covered with snow flakes which id not melt in the cold little rooms hich he entered, laden with toys and ders for substantials, the children ho had never seen a Santa Claus rieked and laughed and danced with elight whenever they saw the tall rm coming. Stories of this New anta Claus had preceded him. The rchins of all the East Side waited ntil long in the night to see the atron saint.

The Christmas bells were chiming eir "Peace on earth"; bells for early eetings were making musical the air hen Robert Gleason sought his room. e had been out all night, but, rangely enough, he was not tired. e had been buoyed up, carried as it ere, on the wings of the grateful others' prayers. He had been enlded in a robe of love which the chilen's little hearts had woven. He ould feel in fancy their kisses upon is hands and hear their blessings nging in his ears. For the first time, is whole being responded in spirit to ie cries of "Merry Christmas!"

In the early dawn of the cold clear orn, with his valises in the carriage eside him, Robert Gleason was driven rough the deserted streets. At the ity Mission he heard a woman's oice singing, probably in the sunrise rayer-meeting. The strains were so eautiful, so unearthly, so in keeping ith his own thoughts that he bade is coachman pause that they might sten. He almost felt like obeying the commands of the ringing voice which was singing:

Fall on your knees! Oh hear the angel voices.
This is the morn of the dear Saviour's birth.
Long lay the world in sin and error pining,
Till He appeared and the earth felt his worth.
A glow of joy the weary world rejoiceth,
For yonder shines a sweet, a glorious morn—

As the echoes died away the carriage passed on. Memories, sweet memories crowded in to deepen the smile upon the millionaire's face.

At home, the white-haired mother, with the stamp of heaven on her face, greeted him lovingly and thanked him—her son—for coming. Robert Gleason murmured a prayer for pardon of his neglect. The trembling father clasped his son's hands in his hard ones and begged forgiveness for the faults and injustices of the past, and then—from the shadowy quiet of the old parlor another figure, slight and graceful as that of a girl, glided over to the wanderer, begging forgiveness too.

Muriel Standish's cheeks were just as rosy, her eyes as beautifully brown as when she promised to be true on that Christmas so long ago. The man's heart bounded with passionate love as joyously as when she had promised to he his wife, twenty years before. Thankfully he gathered her into his arms.

He had traveled far a lonely road full of suffering and unrequited longings. The follies of the world, riches and honor had failed to satisfy. Here in the home of his childhood he had found his reward. On his first Christmas he found love and home and Muriel waiting for him.

An Expensive Sport

WHILE fox-hunting has not had the popularity in this country that it has in England, yet it comes as a surprise to most to find out that there are over fifty hunt clubs in America where Reynard is given a few uncomfortable hours if the hounds find him. The colonists in the New England States and in Virginia were fond of the chase, and in the fall the woods and hills echoed to the call of the hunting horns and the land made gay with the flash of the scarlet coats; but these were neighborhood hunts and few clubs were formed. There are, however, one or two clubs which have had a continuous existence since Revolutionary days. At present it is a pastime only of those who are rich, and the cost makes even those who are reckless of their expenditures think more than once before they join the ranks of its devotees. At present there are about three thousand fox-hunters who chase Reynard in the Colonial and English style and about 1,000 registered foxhounds. The cost for any one who indulges in it amounts to several hundred a year after he has paid probably several thousand for a horse that will not be certain to land him on his head at the first fence or deposit him in the first pool, where his ardor for the chase might cool suddenly and remain chilled for all time.

The Automobile on the Ranch

Mr. A. H. Henry, of Ola, S. D., a ranchman twenty-four years old, had never ridden in a railroad train or even seen an automobile until a few days ago. The sight of the first auto was too much for him. He rode twenty miles in the machine to the nearest railroad station, took a train to Minneapolis and purchased a motor car. He is a prosperous rancher in the Indian Reservation, where he applies himself so closely to his work that he never traveled more than fifteen miles from his home. Mr. Henry is so enthusiastic over the new method of travel that he is relegating his horses to the farm and employs the machine daily for his own use.

HERE'S the place where two egg-raisers make $12,000 a year

A glimpse of the three great laying houses, with 4,500 pullets always at work

READER, if you want to know how two city people, in poor health and without experience, have in a few years built up an egg business that clears over $12,000 a year, subscribe now for the FARM JOURNAL, and get with it the

which tells all the secrets of their success, and describes the methods by which they obtained a profit of $6.41 a year per hen. (See offer below.)

Talk about "best selling novels"! Why, nearly 100,000 copies of this book sold in less than six months! You see, these men discarded old methods, and in spite of many failures, stuck at it until they learned the secret of making hens lay the most eggs in winter. That discovery marked a new era in poultry raising, and thousands are eagerly studying how they do it.

Their success opens up a new money-making business of unlimited possibilities. With this book for a guide, men or women living in or near cities can raise eggs the year round, and sell them at high prices, or eat them and save the high prices. The demand for fresh eggs, especially in winter, is never satisfied. Learn how to supply well-to-do customers regularly, and they will take all you can raise, at high prices. Egg-raising is much simpler than poultry raising. The hard work of killing, dressing, and marketing fowls is left out. The rest can be done by men in poor health, women, school-boys, girls, and others not qualified for regular business.

The publishers of the Farm Journal saw the immense value of a book that should describe the proved and tested methods of the Cornings. So, after careful investigation, they decided to publish the Corning Egg-Book, and offer it to all who subscribe for the Farm Journal on the offer below, to make the paper better known to all people, in city or country, who are interested in growing things.

The FARM JOURNAL is made for every one who raises or wants to raise poultry, eggs, fruit, vegetables, milk, butter, honey, etc., as well as grain and cattle. It has the LARGEST CIRCULATION OF ANY FARM PAPER IN THE WORLD—over 750,000. It has departments devoted to housekeeping, dressmaking, recipes, and bright, fresh reading for boys and girls. It is brief, crisp, condensed and PRACTICAL. No long-winded essays. "Cream, not skim-milk," is its motto. It is now running a series called "Back to the Soil," true stories of city people who have changed to country life, intensely interesting. It never prints a medical or trashy advertisement, and its columns are an absolutely reliable guide in buying. Most of its subscribers pay FIVE to TEN YEARS AHEAD. It is a special favorite with women. Every one who has a garden, yard, flower-bed, or even a kitchen, ought to have this bright, cheery, useful home paper. Those who merely exist in cities ought by all means to get it, for it brings a whiff of outdoor life into their homes, and may help them to escape to the country and really LIVE.

SPECIAL OFFER: We will send, postpaid, the Farm Journal for FOUR FULL YEARS, with the Corning Egg-Book,

Some Truths About Alcohol

A BUFFALO brewery, when public attention was centred on a proposed union railroad station, advertised that "Union station matters are quiet, but not so with our outfits. Business rushing in ales and beers for Buffalo homes."

It is well known that matters are not quiet when business is rushing in ales and beers. Assistant Attorney-General C. W. Tricket said concerning the closing of the joints of Kansas City: "For the first time in twenty-five years the court of common pleas of this county opened its term of court the first Monday in May without a criminal case. The city courts, created for the express purpose of trying petty suits for the collection of rents and grocery bills, which formerly were crowded with a black docket every day, have practically no business now, for the reason that people are paying their bills instead of being sued for them. The Juvenile Court, which has the care of dependent children, had but two applications in the past eight months, while prior to the closing of the joints, from eight to eighty-eight children required some assistance and aid each month. Prior to the closing of the joints, we sent from fifteen to twenty-five young men to the reformatory every year. In the twelve months since the closing of the saloons, we have sent but two. The expenses of prosecuting criminals have been reduced $25,000 per annum. The expense for the police force has been reduced as much more. A year ago the city was trying to devise ways and means to spare the money to build additions to our city jails. To-day, the doors of the city jails swing idly upon their hinges, and we have no use for what we have." So you see the way for a community to enjoy peace and quiet is to stop "rushing in ales and beers."

Another brewery advertised its product as "Also being of value to wives and children. As a preventive of disease it adds tone to the system and thus many forms of ailments are happily overcome." The Twentieth Century Quarterly for March, 1909, contains an article contributed by the Scientific Temperance Federation of Boston, Mass., which says, in part: "Professor F. Martins, director of the Rostock Medical Clinic, said, at the Congress of Internal Medicine, 1905, in an address on 'Predisposition and Heredity,' that alcohol causes a certain receptivity for other diseases, and that it affects the generative as well as other organs of the body, and that t is the main factor in degeneracy. Professor C. F. Hodge of Clark U versity found that only 17.4 per ce of the progeny of his alcoholized d were able to live, while 90.2 per ce of the progeny of the non-alcoholi dogs were normal. Professor Dem of Berne found almost the same p portion of normal and abnormal spring in the descendants of ten al holic families (17 per cent.), and temperate families (88.5 per cen whose histories he followed. Dr. T. MacNicoll of New York found that the 3,711 school children whom studied, over 70 per cent. of th whose parents or grandparents h been drinkers, were dullards. Of children with abstaining parents a grandparents, only four per cent. w dullards. Professor G. von Bunge Basle found from an extensive inve gation that a very large proportion the women who were not able to nu their children were the daughters drinking fathers; that, in fact, proportion of women unable to nu increased with the degree of the al holization of their fathers. That inability in question was accompan with other indications of degener was shown by a greater prevalence tuberculosis, and a greater proporti of bad teeth in the descendants drinkers."

It is well known that the injuric effects of alcohol are especially mark in the growing child. But what do t brewers care, if only they can fost the habit which will fatten th purses? We remember reading of officer of the Ohio Liquor League w at one of its meetings, boldly made t diabolical suggestion: "The success our business is dependent largely up the creation of appetite for drink. M who drink liquor, like others, will d and if there is no new appetite creat our counters will be empty as well our coffers. After men are gro and their habits are formed, th rarely ever change in this regard. will be needful, therefore, that m sionary work be done among the boy and I make the suggestion, gentlem that nickels expended in treats to t boys now will return in dollars to yo tills after the appetite is formed. Abo all things, create appetite."

And this fiendish advice sugges another liquor advertisement: "Gold Grain Whisky tastes like more." Ala how true that the first glass leads the second, and so on until the vict is a slave to appetite. "Avoid it; pa not by it; turn from it and pass away Yes, it "tastes like more," but "at t last it biteth like a serpent and stin eth like an adder." H. H. CULVER.

A LIVING FROM POULTRY

$1,500.00 from 60 hens in ten months on a city lot forty ft. square.

To the average poultryman that would seem impossible, and when we tell you that we have actually done a $1,500 poultry business with 60 hens on a corner in the city garden, 40 feet wide by 40 feet long, we are simply stating facts. It would not be possible to get such returns by any one of the systems of poultry keeping recommended and practiced by the American people, still it can be accomplished by

The Philo System is Unlike All Other Ways of Keeping Poultry
and in many respects just the reverse, accomplishing things in poultry work that have always been considered impossible, and getting unheard-of results that are hard to believe without seeing.

The New System Covers All Branches of the Work Necessary for Success
from selecting the breeders to marketing the product. It tells how to get eggs that will hatch, how to hatch nearly every egg and how to raise nearly all the chicks hatched. It gives complete plans in detail how to make everything necessary to run the business and at less than half the cost required to handle the poultry business in any other manner.

Two-Pound Broilers in Eight Weeks
are raised in a space of less than a square foot to the broiler, and the broilers are of the very best quality bringing here, 5 cents a pound above the highest market price.

Our Six-months-old Pullets Are Laying at the Rate of 24 Eggs Each per Month
in a space of two square feet for each bird. No green cut bone of any description is fed, and the food used is inexpensive as compared with food others are using

Our new book, THE PHILO SYSTEM OF POULTRY KEEPING, gives full particulars regarding these wonderful discoveries, with simple, easy-to-understand directions that are right to the point, and 15 pages of illustrations showing all branches of the work from start to finish.

Don't Let the Chicks Die in the Shell
One of the secrets of success is to save all the chickens that are fully developed at hatching time, whether they can crack the shell or not. It is a simple trick and believed to be the secret of the ancient Egyptians and Chinese which enabled them to sell the chicks at 10 cents a dozen.

Chicken Feed at 15 Cents a Bushel
Our book tells how to make the best green food with but little trouble and have a good supply any day in the year, winter or summer. It is just as impossible to get a large egg yield without green food as it is to keep a cow without hay or fodder.

Our New Brooder Saves Two Cents on Each Chicken
No lamps required. No danger of chilling, over-heating or burning up the chickens as with brooders using lamps or any kind of fire. They also keep all the lice off the chickens automatically or kill any that may be on them when placed in the brooder. Our book gives full plans and the right to make and use them. One can easily be made in an hour at a cost of 25 to 50 cents.

said Hiram. "It's worth a hundr dollars to me. What do you say?"

"Oh, Hiram!" she cried. "You not mean it. I thought——"

"Yes, little woman," he interrupte stroking her hair, and smoothing around her ear, just like he used to in the days of their courtship, "I kn what you thought; but I want to ke this story, just to read occasionall and to think about. I'm glad th didn't publish it, for it is too swe and sacred for any one but us to ev read. Here's a hundred dollars in th envelope. Is it a bargain?"

"Oh, you are too good, Hiram!" s cried, happily. "But never mind, I'll gi you the nicest Christmas present——

"No, indeed!" declared Hiram, hol ing her close, and looking down up her with eyes that were tender wi the old boyish affection. "You ju spend that money for paper cutte and pen wipers, and powder puffs, a so on. What I want, if you will fi it for me, is that little essay which y read a long time ago when you we seventeen and I was twenty; that ess on 'Love.'"

A Modern Captain of Philanthropy

LOUIS KLOPSCH, whom the whole world loved, left to every man and woman a rich legacy. He bequeathed to them the secret of his splendidly successful career. How he found the Master-key which opened doors that led to honorable service, and how he used it; how it enabled him to carry out to complete triumph his wonderful work in almost every country on the globe, put great resources at his disposal, brought powerful people to his side and gave him as voluntary allies kings, premiers, potentates, cabinets, to further his world-wide enterprises —all of this is disclosed in Mr. Pepper's book. In the Life-Work of Louis Klopsch we trace, step by step, the gradual development of the immigrant boy. We travel with Dr. Klopsch through the Western States in that terrible winter of 1892-93, when he succored our starving farmers. Then we go with him over sea to Russia, on his famous "mission of bread." We journey with him to Cuba, where he set food trains flying to save the starving. Now we spin along with him in a dog-sled over the frozen meres of Finland in mid-winter. We wander at his side among the fever camps of stricken India.

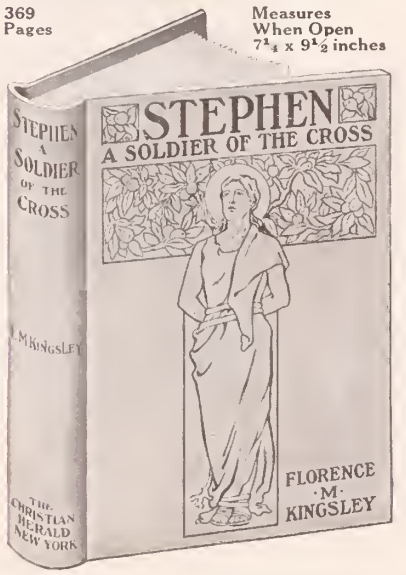
Tender, Dramatic, and Full of Charm

STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, is an intensely dramatic story of a lovable character whose life is little known. Beginning with the adventures of two little children, a blind girl and an active, sweet-minded boy, both forlorn, homeless and friendless, she takes us with them to Jerusalem in search of Jesus, who the blind little girl believes can restore the sunshine to her clouded eyes. Thrown in the midst of many exciting and thrilling climaxes, we reach Jerusalem with our little wanderers, only to find that Jesus Christ has been crucified. But an accident brings them in contact with Stephen, who is said to possess the power of healing, and who really restores the little girl's sight.

369 Pages

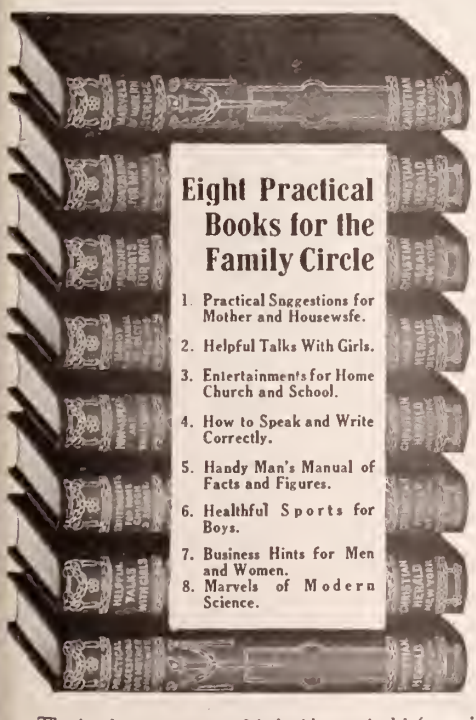
Measures When Open 7¼ x 9½ inches



To follow Stephen as he goes on his way preaching to the poor, ministering with deeds of kindness and commiseration to the needy, healing the sick, comforting the friendless, and making all lives brighter and sweeter because he lives among them, is to be charmed and enchanted in a most delightful way. The story of "Stephen" is beautifully told. Mrs. Kingsley has gathered the dust of this vanished life, and built from it an image of its forgotten beauty. It throbs and thrills with emotion and tender pathos. From the quiet, peaceful scenes with the loving apostles, to the stirring and dramatic climaxes, is only a step here and there. You will marvel at the wonderful and realistic descriptions. The vivid and glowing imagination of the writer, and above all her absolute sincerity, will completely captivate you. A special limited edition of STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, has been printed for CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. It is a splendidly made book, nicely bound in illuminated cloth covers, printed on desirable stock, clear type, the lines set well apart, making the reading easy and well suited to almost all kinds of eyes. There are 369 pages in the book and a colored frontispiece. STEPHEN, A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS, will be sent prepaid with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for ONE YEAR and a copy of Our Beautiful 1911 CALENDAR, together with a photogravure of Dr. Klopsch. All four for only $1.85

The Christian Herald Home Library

THE idea in compiling this set of books has been to make them of real practical value and helpfulness to each and every member of the family. We have endeavored to seek out those things which every member of every home needs to know and wants to know. We believe we have succeeded in producing a set of books that will appeal to every member of the family, and particularly to all classes of people who read, or think, or work; for women as well as men—for girls as well as boys. They are written in a plain, everyday style appealing to all.



Eight Practical Books for the Family Circle
1. Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife.
2. Helpful Talks With Girls.
3. Entertainments for Home Church and School.
4. How to Speak and Write Correctly.
5. Handy Man's Manual of Facts and Figures.
6. Healthful Sports for Boys.
7. Business Hints for Men and Women.
8. Marvels of Modern Science.

If there is a boy in your home—a boy rapidly approaching manhood—much concern should be felt for his physical as well as his mental development. The book, "Healthful Sports for Boys," contains the key to all clean sports that go to make sturdy, well-balanced men. He'll like to read this book, too, because it is written in a way that is easily understood, and about all of the things that boys delight in.

"Helpful Talks with Girls" is a "different" kind of "Girl's Book." It gives advice to the girl about ways of increasing her popularity and prosperity. Girls always look forward to their career with live interest, and this book is offered as a helpmate. The ideas and suggestions are invaluable to any girl.

The average woman or housewife wants to make the pocketbook go as far as possible, and so we have filled the woman's book with practical recipes for cooking and matters of a general household character. The task of providing amusement in the home for the children or guests, in church for the social betterment of the congregation, and in school again for the children, always falls to the lot of the woman, and so we have also provided amusements that will fit any possible occasion for any number of people. You need this book—every woman does.

The books for men are filled with practical information that every man needs to know, from the latest achievements in science, to the methods used in conducting various kinds of commercial business, How to Make a Will, Run an Automobile, Endorse a Note, Make an Investment, Build a House, etc.

Keep in Touch With

Roosevelt

All of his Editorials and Articles on National Issues during the coming year will appear in The Outlook—and nowhere else. The Christian Herald, the Illustrated News Weekly for the Home, is enabled to make you this offer:

104 Magazines For Only $3.00

The Christian Herald 52 Issues
The Outlook 52 Issues, including 12 Double Numbers
} $3.00

SUBSCRIPTION VALUE OF THE ABOVE IS $4.50

Of course you will disagree with Roosevelt in some things—possibly in many things, for it's the privilege of every American to have his own opinion on everything that relates to the national welfare or national politics. Our readers know that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is and always has been thoroughly independent, reflecting all shades of opinion and giving impartial presentation to both sides of every public question. There are multitudes of good Americans who regard Theodore Roosevelt as "our foremost living citizen," though others may differ, and it is for the edification of those who so regard him, as well as for those who don't, that we have made this special arrangement. CHRISTIAN HERALD readers of both classes, his friends and his opponents, are thus offered an opportunity to know just what this many-sided, strenuous American is doing and saying, for no matter how you may look at him he is a big newsmaker, and his terse, direct way of doing and saying things—of recklessly poking the truth at you, whether you like it or not—commands respect. It is the duty of every intelligent up-to-date American to keep posted on national events, and no one can do this unless he knows just what is happening in the immediate vicinity of Roosevelt.

All of The Outlook's Coming 1910 Issues Free

If you renew your subscription to The Christian Herald by accepting the above offer, we will send you Free, all the remaining issues of The Outlook for 1910 which means that your subscription to that magazine begins at once and extends to January 1, 1912. As this offer is a special one, it is, of course, subject to withdrawal at any time. We, therefore, urge you to take advantage of it at once. Our 1911 Calendar and an excellent photogravure of Dr. Klopsch will be given free with each order. This special arrangement offer can be had only from

The EDISON PHONOGRAPH

Make it an EDISON because—

1st—The Edison Phonograph has just the right volume of sound for the home. It is not loud enough to be heard next door nor loud enough to echo to the farthest corner of the dealer's salesroom, but in your home its sweet, modulated tones will entertain you and your family in a way that never grows tiresome.

2d—The Edison Phonograph has a Sapphire Reproducing Point that does not scratch, does not wear out and never needs changing, and which travels in the grooves of the sensitive Edison cylinder Records, bringing out the sweet tone for which the Edison is famous.

3d—The Edison is the instrument that plays Amberol Records—records playing twice as long as ordinray records and giving you all of all the world's best music.

4th—The Edison Phonograph permits of home rec[ord] making—a most fascinating form of entertainme[nt] It will record what you or your friends say, sing [or] play and then instantly reproduce it as clearly a[nd] accurately as it reproduces the Records of Edison arti[sts].

These are a few of the Edison advantages. You want them in [the] instrument you buy. So go to a dealer's—there are Edison dea[lers] everywhere—and insist on hearing an Edison—the instrum[ent] that has been perfected and is manufactured by Thomas A. Edis[on].

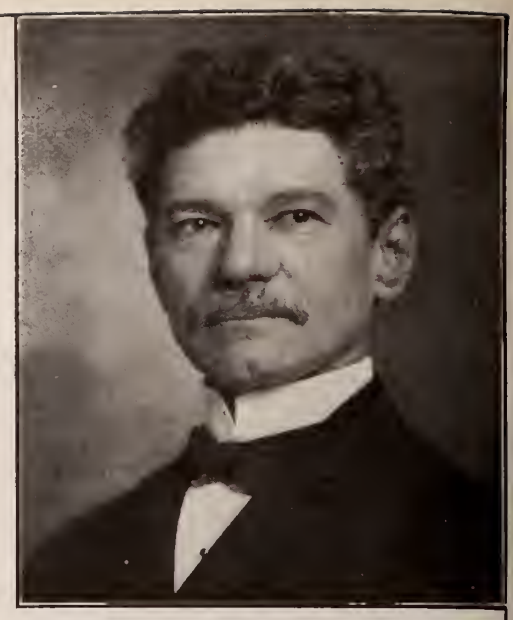
The Man and His Book



IT is the life story of a poor German immigrant boy, who came to this land of opportunity and achieved a career that reads like a romance. His wonderful progress is traced, step by step, upward through poverty and struggle, until he became the owner and editor of the greatest of all religious journals, a power in the community, a founder of great charities, and the benefactor of millions of poor and afflicted throughout the world.

A Wonderful Life Story

NO biography issued in recent years has so suddenly leaped into popularity as The Life-Work of Louis Klopsch, which is now being placed in the hands of thousands of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers all over the country.

Those who have been among the first to receive and read it unite in pronouncing it "a great book." "An epic of Christian helpfulness and inspiration"; "It teaches more than a thousand sermons"; such are some of the comments made by delighted readers.

"Going ahead on faith" was one of Dr. Klopsch's familiar sayings, and his whole career, as Mr. Pepper has graphically pictured it in this splendid volume, illustrated its meaning and application and demonstrated the tremendous results that flow from the sincere efforts of one earnest man—plus faith in God. "Ah," Dr. Klopsch would say to some doubting friend, "one with God is a majority, no matter how many are on the other side."

A Belief in God Means Victory

LOUIS KLOPSCH had many of the characteristics of George Muller, of Bristol, England; of Dr. Cullis, of Boston, of Spurgeon and Moody.

"If I seek God's glory and not my own," he would say, "nothing can defeat what is planned; while if I do it with selfish ends in view, nothing can make it successful. The whole universe is keyed against it." And so, acting on this principle, and taking as his motto

"Do all the good you can
To all the people you can,"

he became in these twenty years during which he controlled THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the channel through which over $3,000,000 flowed in a series of charities and benevolences that are probably without a parallel.

Always Working for Others

MR. PEPPER, the author of The Life-Work, tells a number of delightful anecdotes, illustrating the many-sided personality of Dr. Klopsch.

In the chapter headed, "A Faithful Stewardship," Mr. Pepper gives a wonderful array of the long line of charities which Dr. Klopsch conducted during his busy life. Concerning these charities the author writes: "Louis Klopsch did nothing by halves. He believed with all the strength of his forceful nature, that the Lord prospers every really good work that is undertaken for his sake, and with no purpose of personal gain. And so, staking everything upon the issue—his time, his talent, and his means—he resolved that throughout his whole life thereafter, he would 'Trust in God and take courage.' He simply took the Lord at his word and went ahead, to the utmost extent of his ability."

Meeting the Kings and Queens

He tells of the meetings Dr. Klopsch had with royalty, but we quote merely a single instance. He had called by invitation at the Royal Palace in Rome, and was soon in the presence of King Victor Emmanuel. After talking over various topics of international interest the conversation took this turn:

"'You have met many crowned heads?' queried the king.

"In reply I mentioned a number, among them the Queen of England and the Dowager Empress of Russia.

"'I am to meet them both to-morrow at Naples,' was his response with a smile.

"'You have also met the Emperor of Russia?'

"'I have,' I answered; 'I fear that he is not very happy.'

"'There you are mistaken; the Emperor of Russia is very happy and contented, and one must not believe half 'the papers say,' he said.

Dr. Klopsch Surprises the King

"'How many copies does THE CHRISTIAN HERALD circulate?' the King inquired.

"'Two hundred and forty-six thousand a week.'

"'Two hundred and forty-six thousand!' repeated he. 'That is a large number. You must reach over two million people a week. You must be very proud.'

Tells About Mont-Lawn

"We talked over several of the more important charitable enterprises which our subscribers had enabled us to engage in, and particularly of our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn, at which over twenty-five hundred Italian boys and girls and twenty-five hundred others are entertained every summer. 'That charity is beautiful,' said the King."

Dr. Klopsch's Charity Work

The review of Dr. Klopsch's charities as given by Mr. Pepper occupies about ten pages, and fittingly concludes with the certificate and seal of the public accountants, showing that they have thoroughly investigated the late philanthropist's many charities, and certifying that "all the contributions received were properly disbursed as shown by the exhibits of all the disbursements, and by properly endorsed checks and invoices."

"Life Work of Louis Klopsch"

The Bread Line—A Heart-Broken Father—A Helpful Friend

MR. PEPPER tells this incident of an experience of Dr. Klopsch with the famous Bread Line: "On one cold wintry morning, Dr Klopsch visited the Bread Line. The poor, shivering, ill-clad men were trooping in for their hot coffee and rolls. A respectable looking but sad-faced old man stood just within the door, peering eagerly into the face of each man as he crossed the threshold and stepped into the light. Dr. Klopsch spoke kindly to him, and found that he was a father in search of his prodigal son. For over seven years the boy had been a wanderer from home. News had come that he was in New York City, and penniless. The man had read of the Bread Line at the Mission, and had said: "If my boy is destitute that's a very likely place to find him at"—so he came.

Cheering Words—Comforting Promises

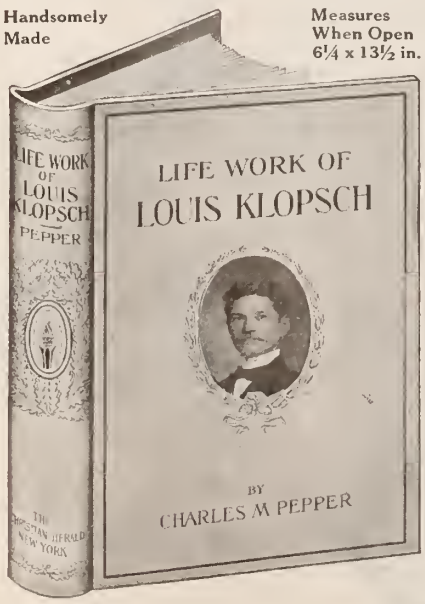
"Dr. Klopsch stood at the old man's side during the whole of the breakfast, and when the line had passed in grim review before them, and the boy was not there, it was he who spoke comforting words to the disappointed parent. By that time it was after two o'clock in the morning, but in his characteristically energetic manner, he set machinery at work for a thorough inquiry amongst the lodging houses of the Bowery. Within a few hours the search was successful. The lost was found. The father's heart was gladdened, and an early Sunday morning train took him and the recovered prodigal back to their home in New England."

Struggling Forever for the Poor and Needy, Dr. Klopsch Never Faltered

IF all the instances cited by Mr. Pepper where Dr. Klopsch enjoyed the friendship and the cordial support of great men, both in the home land and abroad, could be presented here, they would make a delightful anecdotal budget, but space does not permit. Yet he had more joy in the companionship of the poor and the simple than in that of the great. Especially was he a lover of children, who seemed to be drawn to him naturally. Mr. Pepper, in The Life-Work, tells how he gave pleasure to all who came in contact with him. Like Abou ben Adhem, Louis Klopsch craved no honor or reward, but simply desired to be written down as "one who loved his fellowmen." This is the world's verdict. He deserved the splendid eulogy which was pronounced by one of the speakers at his memorial service, who said: "If every man, woman and child whom Louis Klopsch has helped were to place a single flower on his grave, these flowers would make a monument as tall as the highest pyramid."

Handsomely Made

Measures When Open 6¼ x 13½ in.



Beautifully Bound! Splendidly Printed!

WE are proud of the mechanical work done on this book. It is the best made book from cover to cover that we have ever published. It is bound in a fine dark green cloth that is as attractive as it is durable. The title is stamped on the back in gold with a center-peice design also in gold. On the cover page there is a half-tone picture of Dr. Klopsch, framed in a laurel wreath stamped in gold. The book measures 6¼ x 9⅛ inches closed—13½ inches when open. The paper is an extra heavy quality, the type is large and clear, the margins wide and even on every page. The illustrations, of which there are forty all told, are printed on calendered paper, thus obtaining clean and perfect pictures. The illustrations, beginning with a frontispeice of Dr. Klopsch, are exceptionally interesting, as they take the reader clear round the world, concluding with portraits of Dr. Klopsch's associates, and a fac-simile reproduction of the accountant's certificate, showing Dr. Klopsch's disposition of charity funds placed in his hands. There are 413 pages in the book, gilt top. It weighs over 33 ounces. The book is finely bound, securely set in the covers and strongly reinforced. This book is a fine example of beautiful and skilled workmanship, and all Christian Herald readers are sure to be pleased with its richness and simplicity.

HOW TO SECURE THE BOOK WITH YOUR SUBSCRIPTION

REFORM OF THE INCORRIGIBLES

WHILE it would be premature to say that the day of the "bad boy" in New York City is over, a movement lately begun under municipal auspices is certainly a long step in that direction. What is known as the New York Parental School, situated at Flushing, just within the boundary line of the greater city, is the agency through which this great juvenile reformation seems likely to be accomplished.

The Parental School may be said to have only begun its great work of rescuing the "bad boy" from the evil of his way. The school is only about a year in existence and only one-fifth of the proposed buildings have as yet been erected, but the results of its methods of juvenile reform have already been so marked and emphatic as to demonstrate that, when in full working equipment, it will exert a great influence for good in the juvenile community.

Reform the boy and you will have little need to reform the man—as the twig is bent so the tree is inclined. This boy problem is intensified in the congested sections of all our great cities, and notably in New York, where the population is heterogeneous—made up of all nationalities, classes and kinds. The flotsam and jetsam of the whole world are gathered into these crowded districts and tenements, and it is not surprising that from such an admixture there should emerge criminals and degenerates.

It is hard to counteract these evils, unless they are checked very early. It is only when the clay is plastic that it can be moulded into the desired form and shape. It is only by taking the "bad boy" in time that hope may be entertained of transforming him into a good man and a useful, law-abiding member of society.

New York's city authorities realize this and are giving their attention to the reformation of the boy whose childhood has been passed among evil surroundings, or who has already gone beyond the control of his parents or relatives.

Truant schools anticipate the reform institutions by taking the boy before he has had a chance to commit a serious crime, before his future career and character are blasted by the stigma of a prison sentence. In other words, they stand for prevention rather than cure. In the past they have done a good work, though at times they may have been rather severe in their methods. Two of these are still in operation in New York, but only as "feeders" for the new institution, and as soon as it is wholly completed these truant schools will be abolished.

The Flushing Parental School will supersede all others of the kind. As its name implies, its aim is to combine both school and home and to reform the incorrigible boy by firmness tempered with kindness, rather than by harshness mixed with severity or cruelty. The school has been projected to keep pace with the advance of population. The appropriation was $700,000, and when the buildings are completed 1,000 boys can be accommodated. At present only the administrative building, three cottages and the power house have been finished.

The administrative building is a well-proportioned, white stone, four-story structure, with red tile roof, and commands a fine view of the wooded country between Flushing and Jamaica. Each of the three double cottages has accommodation for sixty boys. Seven more will be built, and these, with the main building, will be in the form of a large cross, which will cover an area of several acres. The grounds take in about 150 acres, sixteen of which are under cultivation by the boys, and supply not only the institution itself with cereals, fruits and vegetables, but leave a surplus sufficient for the other two truant schools of Manhattan and Brooklyn. None of the produce is sold or given away. Five experienced men are constantly employed in farm work, there are six horses and a full supply of agricultural machines and implements.

At the present time, there are 192 boys in the school, ranging in age from eight to sixteen. Italians are in the majority; but there are many colored boys and a few Hebrews. The boys are sent to the school for two years, but for good conduct and progress, the most of them are paroled after six months and kept under surveillance for the remainder of the time. It costs the city about $1.75 per boy for the six months. Most people will consider this well-spent money not only on account of the change

Bishop H. W. Warren*

Power for Mind and Heart

TEXT—Rom. 1:16

"I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ."

DEFINITION is difficult. This country produced in its first century but one man eminent for clear, accurate, concise definition of words. And in this respect our country was more fortunate than any other. The wise men of France sought to publish a clear, accurate, concise encyclopedia of all knowledge. They submitted their definitions to experts in various departments. They submitted to the eminent naturalist Cuvier this definition of the crab: "A small red fish that walks backward." "Very good, very good, with slight exceptions," said Cuvier; "the crab is not small, is not red except when boiled, is not a fish at all, and never walks backwards."

The more large, far reaching and enduring a subject, the more difficult its definition. It has so many phases that it can not be defined in few words. Christ's coming touched the world at so many points, had to do with so many interests of men, that no one expression could convey all its meaning. Hence we find him giving several statements, not contradictory but complementary, of the purpose of his coming. Speaking to a dying world with more diseases than can be written on the surface of the human body, and with the average of life run clear down to twenty years, he said, "I am come that they might have life and have it in prodigal overflow." Speaking to a world with false instincts and objects, not knowing truth from error, deceiving and being deceived, he said, "To this end was I born and for this came I into the world, to bear witness to the truth." To a world full of slaves and where all men were anxious to be served he said, "I came not to be ministered to but to minister." To a world defiant of the will of God he said, "Lo, I come to do thy will, O God." So large a life must have many definitions.

The Largest Thing in the World

So of the Gospel, the largest thing in the world. No short definition can cover the case. Even Christ did not attempt to define the Gospel. There was in the mind of man no capacity to apprehend the vastness of the subject. So Christ contented himself with illustration, with telling men what the kingdom of heaven was like. It is like good seed. To be more specific, it is like a grain of mustard seed; it is like leaven. All these figures are illustrations of power. The good seed is a handful, a bagful, but by its own inherent power it fills a field with waving grain. It is the smallest of seeds, but it masters the power of gravitation and chemical affinity and appropriate earth and air till it is a tree, with far-flung fragrance and branches full of singing birds. It is like leaven, but beyond all conservation of forces it is an indefinite multiplication of forces, till the whole is leavened. Each illustration teems and outbreaks with continuous increasing unmeasured multiplication of inherent power. They fling that maxim of philosophers about the conservation of energy to the winds. They are examples of self-multiplication of energy, unwasting and increasing as it spreads. Paul having been trained to an understanding of these figures of speech by a personal experience of their vital meaning leaps to the amazing generalization and gives the definition in the text—the Gospel is the power of God. Pause to note the force of the article the. It is the teaching of the Bible and of science that all power is of God. But Paul emphasizes this one as par excellence the power of God. All powers are serviceable, welcome, but this one specially so. If we have this power of God we may do without most of all the others.

Paul's Definition of the Gospel

Now, a definition to have any value must be in terms understandable by those to whom it comes. The definition of evolution by its greatest exponent, in terms of homogeneity, heterogeneity, differentiation, etc., is not understandable by one in a million of earth's inhabitants. Wiser is Paul. He defines the Gospel by the one thing with which we are most familiar. He had taken lessons of the Master, who set lilies and clouds, shepherding, sweeping, prodigal sons, seed-sowing, every event of lowly and lofty life, to be his Bible and preach his word. Hence, Paul takes power, the most familiar and significant thing in the universe, to define and explain his Gospel. We are surrounded on every side, domed over and girt under with all sorts of powers—gravitation that holds the world and worlds together, chemical affinity that binds two airs into water, so closely that nothing short of a stream of lightning can separate them, the enormous power of vegetable growth that lifts the sequoia gigantea of California over 300 feet in air. We have the power of steam that does more work in this country every day than every man, woman and child from the first effort to rise from their beds till they lie down to rest at night. We have the greater power of electricity that promises to supplant that of steam, and many finer powers that we have not yet learned to recognize, much less to handle.

In the Realm of Power

What I mean to teach and have you realize is this: That there is a realm of power for mind and heart, a realm as real, powerful, legitimate, and a realm for appropriate experiment, giving larger and larger possession, as really as there is a realm of power for matter, real, powerful, legitimate, and field for appropriate experiment. Since then this realm is a part of God's universal realm of powers it will probably have the same general characteristics as other general realms.

What are some of the characteristics of these general realms of power? First. It is a characteristic of all great powers that they are everywhere present. Everywhere in the world and out of the world is gravitation present and at work. The sailor in Arctic and Antarctic seas finds the ocean of magnetic force everywhere present. Since the mist first went up from the ground to water the Garden of Eden every drop of water has been full of the power of steam. We can rake up enough electricity anywhere on land or sea to light a city or make it thrill with power. The comet gone from its controlling sun a thousand years, so far away that a human eye could not distinguish that sun from any other star, gone into cold 400 degrees below zero, finds gravitation everywhere in its far flight, gravitation that swings it round its cold and dark aphelion and brings it back to perihelion again.

The Wondrous Power of the Gospel

So is the power of the Gospel omnipresent. There never went up a cry for help from Greenland's icy mountains or from India's coral strand but it went up into a present power to save. I have been where I have needed over thirty languages to do my work, and I find that the power of the Gospel brings into the glories of heaven on earth men out of every nation and kindred and tribe and tongue under the whole heaven. There have been national and racial religions that would not bear transplanting from their native soil. At length one comes out of the infinite everywhere present and efficient heaven with power not dependent on the earth. Christ commanded us to preach this Gospel to the whole creation.

The second general characteristic is that all the forces of nature are ready to serve men. Away back in the beginnings of time, the measureless might of all these forces has been waiting to serve man. Niagara has thundered through the ages. Gravitation has kept its ceaseless tension. Lightning has burst out with dazzling flashes and thunder trying to tell men of its waiting power. There is no other sufficient end of their being. Their power, their swiftness, their omnipresence have no other reason for existence but to serve man. So has every supernal energy of the Gospel been ready to save. Salvation was provided before sin. The Lamb was slain from the foundation of the world.

Third. All these forces are always ready to serve any man. There is no caste in nature's forces. They seem so anxious to serve that they will seize occasion to serve anybody. The power that holds the world together and swings the limitless suns to the music of the spheres, will carry a savage on his log down the river as readily as it will turn the wheels of great mills, creating wealth for the already rich. Electricity lights the miner at his hard labor in the dark caves of the earth as readily as it flashes on coronets and pleasures in the palaces of kings. S the Gospel comforts the slave, strengthens the ma tyr, cheers the dying, as readily as it ennobles tl great and crowns the learned. The poor slave wl murmurs from his bed of rags "I's going home to m Fadder" has the same support as he who cries fro the cross, "Father, into thy hands I commit m spirit."

Fourth. The forces of nature are limitless in the own realms. Not only are there forces of mai kinds, but there is plenty of each. If we were substitute steel wires for the force that binds tl world to the sun we should have to put them all ov the side next the sun, on sea and land from side side and pole to pole so thickly that a mouse cou not run round among them. No sun millions upo millions of times greater than our world is too gre for gravitation to handle. Heap half a continei upon imprisoned steam. Alps and Andes rise f thousands of miles, but the power of steam is n overtasked. So the power of the Gospel. One ma exceeding mad against the Church, haling men a women to prison; when they were tried for the lives giving his voice against them, persecuting tl Church and persecuting the ascended Head of tl Church, finds mercy. No man's sin is too great f God's salvation. It snatches a brand from tl burning and quenches the flames in living blood. saves a thief on the cross within a minute of h death. It saves to the uttermost.

The Transmission of Power

Fifth. I notice but one more general characteri tic of powers. They are all transferable or con municable, from place to place, from mind to min from heart to heart. I once approached a high blu in Montana. There stood a great factory, but r sign of power. No tall smokestack with its blac plume signifying steam; no wheels uplifted to tl journeying wind. But on approaching the bank gazed far down on the great falls where more pow runs to waste than at Niagara. Down there gra itation was at work and up on the bluff was tl transmitted power. Niagara works in Albany, 3(miles away, as readily as at the Falls themselve I speak here, and the mobile air transmits m thought to you yonder. Emotions are as transmi sible as mechanical powers or thoughts. One bra officer imparts his dauntless courage to all his me till they rush into the imminent deadly breach recl less of life.

Some years ago, there was a fire in Canal Stree New York. Suddenly a young girl appeared at tl third-story window and shrieked for help. Tl long ladder was quickly heaved aloft and up ran courageous heart for rescue. But when he reache the second story, a great belch of fire and smok burst out of the window and poured through tl ladder. The brave fireman cowered under tha canopy of death and seemed about to come dow But the captain cried out to the crowd, "Lift hir boys, lift him!" and a great cheer broke out of thou sands of hearts that lifted the man above his fea and through the belching fire. The stream of wate was turned on the window and the man soon brougl the girl safely down.

Love, the Greatest Power of All

No David ever met Jonathan in the wilderne without having his hands strengthened in God. S this power for mind and heart, greatest of all pow ers, is communicable.

It is God's nature to manifest itself. In the b ginning God said, "Let there be light," let there b land and seas and grass and animal life and ma Having gone so far there was no reason to sto Let him perfect and glorify the creation he ha made. Hence love bursts forth, the most tran missible of all powers. Love flows forth by ever faculty. Your speech is confined to the tongu recognition of color and form to the eye. Power for Mind and Heart prayer to the throne of God he sends his love and courage to the Ephesian Church. If man's love is so communicable, much more God's. It not only makes his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth the rain on the just and unjust, and makes every blessing of life an expression and medium of his love, but he sends its precious joy and mighty power directly from his heart to man's heart.

This is a most prominent doctrine of the Scriptures and a most precious conclusion of experience. "If any man love me he will keep my words and my Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." "He that loveth me shall be loved of my Father and I will love him and will manifest myself to him." And Paul voices the experience of the Christian world and says, "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me." He who can give eyesight to the blind, strength leaping in gladness to the poor cripple at the Beautiful Gate, and life to the dead Lazarus, can give love more strong, more full of life to the heart. The mighty emotions received at Pentecost were not self-evolved but poured out by the Holy Ghost. Thus we find that the Gospel is a verbal expression of a power for mind and heart, as really as gravitation is for matter. It bears all the tests of other powers and carries all their characteristics.

What has this power done? Think of its beginning. What forces it had to oppose? It set itself against the universal idolatry of the world. This was intrenched in politics, in social customs, in the interests of art, in the life of business men, whose craft was in danger, and in the superstitions of humanity. Christianity was driven out of the common speech of men. To speak the name of Christ with reverence was to raise the cry "to the lions." So they were obliged to invent a new language unknown to their foes. They took the initials of the Greek words Jesus Christ, Son of God, Saviour, and found that they spelled the Greek word for fish. Then a man could ask a fellow if he caught any fish to-day, not meaning luring any of the finny tribes from the Tiber's depths, but had he been a fisher of men. He could ask a fellow if he had partaken of fish to-day, meaning had he fed upon the living bread that came from heaven. Thus he avoided betraying the cause.

But in spite of all opposition, social, civil, military, superstitional, all combined in deadly hate and murderous execution, the new religion spread. How could it spread in the face of such opposition? Because it was the power of God and was only opposed by the combined powers of men.

Recall a few practical applications. "He giveth power to the faint, and to him that hath no might he increaseth strength." "Wait on the Lord and renew your strength." "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and I will rest you" (the Greek). We as well as Israel may sing the Song of Ascents: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the mountains. From whence cometh my help? My help cometh from the Lord who made such heavens and earth." We as well as Paul may say, "Having obtained the help that is from God, I stand unto this day." We may ask the Holy Spirit to lead us into all sorts of truth. We may realize that the Lord bindeth up the broken-hearted. He forgiveth iniquity, transgression and sins and wants us to know it as clearly as when he said to the sick of the palsy or the sinful woman at his feet, "Thy sins are forgiven thee." We as well as Paul may say, "The love of God hath been poured out throughout our hearts by the Holy Spirit, which was given unto us." There is power for mind and heart as really as there is power for realms of matter—everywhere present, sufficient, accessible, transmissible.

PEACE SUNDAY

By Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D.*

IN a charmed sleep on the Isle of Avalon, resting until the morning. You want to know who was asleep? In your history you will learn that more than 1,500 years ago the English conquered the Britons. The Britons taught their children to believe that the great King Arthur was not really dead, but slept a charmed sleep on the Isle of Avalon, and that he would some day awake and lead them to victory. More than 800 years before our first Christmas one of the prophets looked into the future and wrote: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." Some one greater than King Arthur coming to give us peace.

SOME people thought that this was only a fable, but it proved to be a fact. The little Prince of Peace did come, and shortly we shall celebrate the 1910th anniversary of his birth. God knew best how to send peace to the world. Man would have sent a great warrior with a big sword, who would have thrashed the next biggest giant, and, with one foot on the conquered giant, would lift his sword into the air and bellow like the Bull of Bashan, "Let us have Peace." But God sent a little child and not a great giant with peace for the world. Sunday, December 18, is "Peace Sunday," and all clergymen are expected to preach about peace. I am going to talk about this little child who came to bring the blessings of peace for little children! Here are facts that may interest you. Without peace we must have great battleships. If we could have peace and sell one battleship the money would build and furnish fifty Manual Training Schools, where 75,000 children could each get a good education and be taught a trade. The cost of one battleship would build two libraries like the great Congressional Library at Washington, which is the finest building in the world. The cost of books and libraries would be less than the cost of keeping the battleship. One of our largest battleships costs $12,000,000 and requires $800,000 a year to keep it.

Now, what could we do for children if we had peace and could use this battleship money for them? We could furnish 1,400 churches that would cost $20,000 each. Just think of 1,400 Junior Congregations! Then we could give 7,000 farms, costing $4,000 apiece, to parents of little children who did not have a home. And we would have enough of money left to send 14,000 boys and girls to college and give them $500 a year for their expenses. Surely all children will work for peace.

THE little Prince of Peace came to the world, and gradually but surely peace is coming. Some of you are old enough to remember about the war between Russia and Japan. Our ex-President, Colonel Roosevelt, made peace between these two great countries. He did not roar like the Bull of Bashan, but history says that a story he told about a bull decided these nations to make peace. Here is the story: "I was riding across the plains in a railway train when a powerful bull placed himself squarely between the rails and defied the oncoming locomotive. Now, the engineer could have accepted the challenge and with his great engine could have killed the angry bull. But he did not. No, he stopped the train, and with the aid of the train crew drove the animal off the track. Why? Because of the possible damage which might have been done to the train had he run over the bull. It might have derailed the locomotive." When they thought about this story, neither of the nations wanted to be the bull and both decided to get off the track of war and have peace.

WHEN peace comes permanently to the world it will be Christian peace. If the boys and girls become good Christians they can, when men and women, bring peace to the world. A story will show you how this can be done: A missionary from Madagascar writes: The Kora tribe had been converted from heathenism to the worship of the true God. The neighboring Sakalava people began to fight them. It was the first time the Koras had gone to war since their conversion to Christianity, and their prime minister reminded them that it must be carried on in a Christian manner. There must be no needless bloodshed, no carrying off of slaves, no stealing or like wrong things that are usually the rule in war. A fund of money was raised that the soldiers might honestly buy from the enemy whatever they might need. Children held prayer-meetings and prayed for the speedy end of the war.

THE Sakalava villagers were astonished at such queer warriors. "What strange enemies are these?" they asked; "they will not take even an egg without paying for it." When the two armies faced each other, the Kora commander asked for parley. He explained to the opposing chief why he wished to avoid bloodshed, if possible. The heathen chief sneered openly, accusing him of being afraid to fight. In reply the commander said, "What is your price for yonder bullock?" The amount was paid, and the general aimed his gun at the animal. "You can't kill it at that distance," sneered the other. The shot rang out and the bullock fell dead. "Now," said the Kora chief, "all of my soldiers can shoot as well as I. What would be your chance in a battle against us?"

"We should all be dead men," was the frank reply. The parley was followed by an agreement for peace. The heathen chief asked: "Cannot some of your men stay and teach us the religion that makes enemies into friends?"

A Labor of Love

THE Rev. N. S. Becker, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Circleville, Orange County, N. Y., did the Bowery Mission a great service at the recent Thanksgiving festivity. Having ascertained from the superintendent that such a course would be acceptable, he spoke to his own congregation about providing something towards the Thanksgiving dinners. The suggestion was taken hold of with great avidity, and quickly brought out into a town affair. Dr. Becker placed a large notice in the post office, asking the assistance of his fellow townsmen, and as a result on the day before Thanksgiving, several barrels containing chickens and vegetables of all kinds arrived at the Mission. This not only contributed to the happiness of the men of the Bowery Mission, but to many of the poor families of the city, who came for their baskets on Thanksgiving morning.

The following letter was received from Dr. Becker in connection with this beautiful little incident:

"NOVEMBER 15, 1910.

"MY DEAR BROTHER HALLIMOND: I am glad for the opportunity to be of some little service to my fellow-men. My heart goes out to the down-and-out. I feel for every one of them. I've been in the work a little and know. While I am daily struggling against various discouragements, I am still able to realize that I have a roof over my head, and that God still keeps me. Would I were in a position to do more for the more unfortunate. I've gone about some to enlist the aid of the country-folk. I have heard only words of sympathy for the homeless.

"Trusting and praying that the good Father of all is blessing your every effort in so great a work, and that some hearts may receive an added joy, because they 'did it unto one of the least of these,' I remain, sincerely yours,

"N. S. BECKER."

The example that Dr. Becker and his friends in the country have set will, we hope, during this winter time be kept up by many of the other sympathetic friends. Any gifts of provisions or men's cast-off clothing will be gladly received, as the demands upon us this year are heavier than ever before.

Never in the history of the Mission have such large crowds attended its meetings. Some hundreds are turned away every night. The membership of the Brotherhood is now so large that it threatens to occupy every seat at the nightly meetings, and arrangements are being contemplated for holding overflow meetings. The expense of getting these men ready for the positions which the Labor Bureau is finding for them is very heavy, and any contributions sent to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, will be most cordially received.

J. G. HALLIMOND, Superintendent.

A PIONEER IN WEST AFRICA

By Raymond P. Dougherty, Former U. S. Vice-Consul at Sierra Leone

IN reviewing the causes which have contributed to the extension of missions throughout the world, due credit should be given to Christian explorers and statesmen. Not only have they been pioneers in penetrating and pacifying the unknown portions of the earth, but they have also removed mighty barriers to the progress of Christ's kingdom.

A worthy representative of these forerunners of enlightenment is Mr. T. J. Alldridge, an Englishman, fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and member of the Imperial Service Order, whose life for nearly forty years has been interwoven with the history of Sierra Leone, West Africa. He went to Sierra Leone in 1871, at a time when British dominion was exercised by a single governor over a vast undeveloped territory, called "The West Africa Settlements," which included Gambia, Sierra Leone and the Gold Coast down to Lagos. Gradually these settlements were divided into distinct crown colonies of Great Britain.

To Mr. Alldridge, as Traveling Commissioner, belongs in large measure the credit of having opened up and mapped out the remotest parts of the Hinterland of Sierra Leone. He went from town to town, making treaties with important native chiefs. For some years, he was the only white man in what is known as the Upper Mendi country, and to-day he is the only European official intimately acquainted with conditions in Sierra Leone, past and present.

Mr. Alldridge has recorded his experiences and observations in two excellent books, entitled The Sherbro and Its Hinterland and A Transformed Colony. These volumes present an interesting and graphic story of those events which led to the transformation of the Hinterland of Sierra Leone from a war-devastated and slavery-infested territory to a well-regulated and rapidly developing protectorate. Mr. Alldridge followed the principles of Christianity and humanity in his great work; so it is entirely fitting to regard him as a faithful ally of the forces of Christianity in the development of this portion of Africa.

In their primitive state, the tribes of Sierra Leone dwelt in the forests and jungles, without much friendly intercommunication. Their towns of squalid, mud-walled huts were surrounded by strong war-fences or stockades. The roads running from town to town were usually narrow and badly kept. Crooked and meandering paths passed through the dense forests and thick bushes. Fallen trees often blocked the way. There were poor bridges, or none at all, over swamps and streams. Tribes viewed one another with deadly distrust and suspicion. Wars were constantly occurring, the main cause being the desire for slaves. The slightest pretext was sufficient for burning up a town and carrying off the people.

These tribal wars produced very disastrous results. Towns were destroyed, the inhabitants killed or enslaved, and the cultivation of the soil neglected. Famine and pestilence often followed. Mission work was well nigh impossible under such conditions. It required a man of exceptional qualities and heroic mould to push his way into this uncivilized district and induce barbaric and warlike chiefs to take the first step towards enlightenment. Strange and untried roads had to be traveled, and dangers from armed warriors and fatal diseases had to be encountered.

It would be interesting, indeed, if a realistic picture could be presented of some of the numerous meetings with Sierra Leone chiefs held by Mr. T. J. Alldridge. Meetings of short duration generally convened in the barri, or central building of the town. Long conferences were oftentimes held in a specially constructed shed, where the principal chiefs reclined in hammocks, attended by some of their wives and servants. A chief seldom opened the meeting himself, but entrusted that duty to his well-informed "prime minister." Extreme caution and impressive dignity were manifested by all who took part. Mr. Alldridge describes the close of a treaty as follows: "At such meetings as these no immediate answer is ever given. Consultation must take place between the paramount chief and sub-chiefs. The chiefs therefore retired, but shortly returned to the barri and put further questions, showing how thoroughly they understood what they were about, and again retired. At length the chiefs all returned, when the paramount chief came forward and stated that, having consulted his sub-chiefs, he should have much pleasure in entering into the friendly treaty proposed. The entire treaty was then read aloud for every one to hear, I reading it in English, the interpreter following in the Mendi language. After this I signed the treaty and the chief made his mark, and so did the sub-chiefs, the whole being witnessed by some of the police, who were able to write. Proceedings then terminated, and festivities, to which the town was at once given over, were carried on until late at night."

Commissioner Alldridge and His Traveling Party

Mr. Alldridge mentions holding a meeting once with a hostile chief, who had previously threatened to make a drinking cup of his skull. However, the result of a visit by Mr. Alldridge was that the chief became friendly and made presents of rice and sheep. The most important meeting Mr. Alldridge ever convened was one in which a hundred chiefs took part, some in person and others through their representatives. With much difficulty, the chiefs were gathered and conducted to Bandasuma, to confer with Governor Sir Francis Fleming. The meeting was entirely successful and the people were brought into friendly relations with one another and with the government.

Mr. Alldridge has always favored missions and regards the work of Christianization as fundamental in the uplift of the people. To-day, Sierra Leone is truly a transformed land. A railway runs 227 miles through the country. The main roads are kept in a good condition. The most important towns are connected by telegraph. The postal service ramifies throughout the whole interior. The jurisdiction of English courts has been introduced. Above all, Christian missions have made great progress through the establishment of churches, schools, hospitals and industrial farms.

Of special interest are Mr. Alldridge's words concerning the work of American missionaries in Sierra Leone, where the Church of the United Brethren in Christ is carrying on mission work. Especially in the vast and needy interior has this denomination been taking the lead in religious efforts, and lately a growing church and an advanced training institution have been established in Freetown. Rev. J. R. King, D.D., is the aggressive superintendent of the mission. In a letter to a United Brethren missionary, Mr. Alldridge says:

"I certainly give great credit to your people for the great exertions they have for so many years been making and are still persistently making to push on into the distant parts of the Hinterland. It has to be done, and now is the time to put forth every possible exertion. The mission must keep pace with the government advance, which is enormous. The railway is doing wonders in opening up the parts through which it passes and the adjoining localities, and the people ought to have the missionary influences brought to them without delay. Inlying places should be visited by itinerating teachers speaking the Mendi language, and this should be done to counteract the Mohammedan influences which are surprisingly in evidence. Your mission has a gigantic field, if it can only obtain the means to open out new centres. My interests naturally tend towards your mission, as the 'Mendi Mission' has, from my earliest connection with the Sherbro, been before me, and I have admired its work, spiritual and temporal, and its methods. Much remains to be done, but I do think the times for pushing onward are more favorable to-day than I have ever known them."

This is both a commendation and a clarion call to great efforts in the future. It is safe to say that an unparalleled opportunity is before the Church to-day in view of the favorable conditions which exist in all non-Christian lands, due to those marvelous transformations of which Sierra Leone is an example. May the response be adequate to the accomplishment of the task!

REFORM OF THE INCORRIGIBLES

wrought, but also because of the saving of policemen's and truant officers' time and the time also of the Children's Court, besides the good done to the public schools by removing from the midst of the other boys the mischievous juveniles who might and probably would contaminate many others.

The most unruly boys are the ones most welcome at the Parental School. The superintendent takes pleasure in bringing the boys under subjection. However, he uses no severity and seldom has any trouble. Mr. Hobart H. Todd is a man who has been used to boys all his life; he thoroughly understands them and knows how to deal with their peculiarities of character. He had quite a good experience with juvenile irregularities while he was assistant superintendent at the House of Correction on Randall's Island. He is a big good-natured man, who rules not with the rod of iron but the wand of kindness. Work is the keynote of his gamut with the boys. He believes work is the panacea for all evils, the counteractive for all bad tendencies. He never allows the boys to be a moment idle, from the time the big bell tolls the hour of rising at 6 o'clock until curfew rings at 8 o'clock P.M. They are either in the classrooms or the trade-shops, in the fields or doing some useful work around the buildings, as scrubbing floors or polishing windows, and all the time under the eyes of a master. Of course, they have a regular time for recreation; but in this respect also, work is combined with pleasure. They have regular military drills, the "flag drill" being particularly impressive.

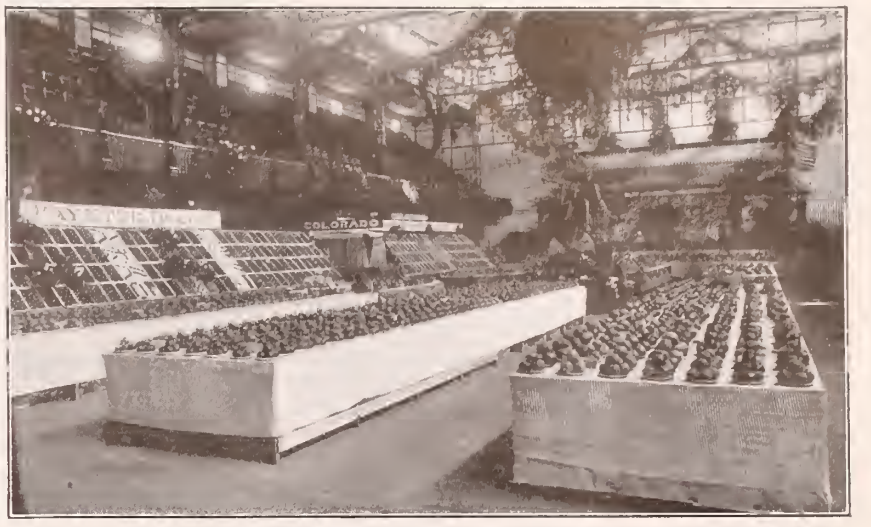
While there is not much time in which to learn a trade, a good beginning is made in several branches. There are five workshops, devoted to painting, tailoring, carpentry work, plumbing and baking. Despite the short time, many of the boys show proficiency in the mechanical arts. In the tailor shop they can make their own uniforms and caps—heavy dark blue for the winter and khaki for the summer. A great deal of the carpentry about the place is done by the boys. In the print shop all the printing is done for the three schools, and it is expected that soon the entire work of the Board of Education will be in the hands of these boys.

In the bake-shop adjacent to the kitchen, 7,000 loaves are baked every month, enough to supply the Manhattan and Brooklyn institutions as well as the regular consumption of the Parental School. The boys do all the work—mix the dough in a big electric mixer, knead it, shape it and attend to the ovens. When they leave the school, they are qualified as bakers, provided they get their "working papers." In fact, the boy who works in any department is sure of a job when he leaves, for though he may not be a competent tradesman, he has learned enough to make himself useful or at least give him the preference to others who have had no experience.

The Parental School is moulding boys who in all probability would have turned out criminals, into youths of honesty and integrity, who will ripen into a strong manhood.

Thirty States in a Fruit Show

An Interesting Section for the Gardener and Orchardist



The Apple Display at the Fruit Show

MORE than a thing of beauty and commercial exploitation is the National Fruit and Corn Show, opened November 10 by Governor Carroll in the city of Council Bluffs, Ia., midway between the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards. Its educational value has been highly praised by competent authorities, and its effects will be enduring beyond a day or a year.

The size and beauty of the apple display which first greets the eye upon entering the main exhibition hall, proves the apple to be king of all tree-fruits in our latitudes; and one is at first inclined to call it an apple show. But closer inspection will show that all other products of the soil are there—the semi-tropical productions, the vegetables, the nuts, the grain and fodder plants of all sections of our land—over thirty States being represented by exhibits, each one worthy of careful study.

While it seems to be granted that the far Western portions of our country are leading in new and advanced methods of producing and marketing fruit crops, the older States give evidence of their latent possibilities. The spray-pump, the smudge-pot, the apple-box, the small fruit farm, the fruit associations of the small growers, the appointment of professors of scientific horticulture to advise and supervise, according to strict rules, the growing of apples, peaches, apricots, etc., from the seedling to mature bearing trees are creations of the West waiting to be adopted advantageously and with similar glorious results in other sections. Here labor—manual labor—is considered an honorable occupation, and in many parts is furnished exclusively by white men and women of fine intelligence, who find it agreeable and remunerative at the same time. Among these are university graduates, doctors, ministers, journalists, who follow horticulture as their only pursuit. The value of applied intelligence over against haphazard and easy-going methods is exemplified by striking facts. How otherwise is it to be accounted for that out of a restricted area in one State, roughly fifteen miles by fifteen miles, there is shipped and commercially disposed of more fine peach fruit than from twenty millions of peach trees in another State of no mean proportions, and more apples from the same section than from three other apple-growing States?

The value of such exhibits is evidenced by the fact that a State exhibit from an old historical section in the East has made a supreme and successful attempt to capture the prize for the most complete and varied exhibit on the ground.

To make two blades grow where but one grew before—in other words, to increase the yield of corn per acre enormously—is the object of the endeavors of practical professional men, and the results of their labors are seen in the Corn Show. But it is more than an assumption that the exact methods followed by irrigation farmers so successfully have stimulated if not induced the efforts of Eastern pioneers in scientific farming. These efforts include the study of the chemical composition of soils, their classification and proper recommendations for their utilization, upon which the national government has entered. It will be completed when the farmer takes down from his cupboard a given volume telling him about the original ingredients of the soil in his neighborhood for his guidance in caring for it against depletion or bringing it back to a healthy and normal condition. A soil map of Iowa of generous dimensions (ten by twelve feet) in the corn section of this Exposition, shows the beginning of the work. Another factor in securing larger returns from the soil is the systematic breeding of corn varieties for greater productiveness.

One almost hestitates to repeat the authentic stories of stupendous yields of bushels of corn under forced and scientific cultivation—there are farms where from 240 to 300 bushels an acre are raised. But when they are told upon the occasion of a banquet to a former president and referred to by a governor in a public address and vouched for in the other instance by a reputable professor, they cannot be set aside. They also serve a laudable purpose. The imagination of youth is fired by such extreme results as by nothing else. It so happened that a farmer boy of eighteen came to the show, bringing his corn ears along in a suit case, and took prizes right and left for the most perfect ear of corn of a certain variety, for the best ten ears, and other prizes outdistancing old and tried competitors. It was the result of intelligent corn breeding for a period of several years to bring it to such a state of perfection.

Heating an Apple Orchard During a Frost

The reduced average yield of old corn and grain growing areas need just such a stimulus to counteract further deterioration, to ward off resulting scarcity of food products and consequent high prices. Is there anything more important in earthly affairs than the right treatment of the only inexhaustible natural resources, the soils, and the preservation of this heritage for coming generations? Can anything be done to awaken the intelligent enterprise of larger numbers of dwellers in city and country even in those parts which lack the same intelligent interest in this matter until now? Can some of the methods of proved value be taken up in semi-depopulated regions of the older communities? Perhaps it could be shown that it might be attempted along simple lines without abrupt and violent innovations.

Colorado has an exhibit which shows that it is fast becoming one of the leading fruit States of the country. The principal fruit growing sections of Colorado are located in the fertile valleys of the western slope of the Rockies. Grand Junction is the metropolis of this district. It is located on the D. & R. G. R. R., midway between Denver and Salt Lake City. The population is about 10,000. Grand Junction lies in the centre of what is known as the "Grand Valley," the most extensive fruit section of Colorado. The Grand Valley is the land of the five and ten-acre orchard tracts where yields per acre have reached startling figures.

From the Grand Valley last year, 1909, there were shipped over three thousand car loads of fruit, more than the combined output of Oregon, Washington and Idaho. This immense output was harvested from a strip of valley land not more than twenty-five miles in length and only about eight or ten miles wide. This valley is favored by a climate most delightful. Many winters the temperatures do not descend to the zero point. The length of the growing season is longer than any other fruit growing section in the West, exclusive of Arizona and California, and there is an average of one hundred and ninety-six days between frosts. All the varieties of California and European grapes flourish in this valley and yield not uncommonly from $100 to $200 per acre.

The yields per acre of apples amount to $1,000. Rev. J. A. Becker, of Grand Junction, sold from his orchard of Jonathans $1,900 worth of fruit from a single acre.

The fruit growers are given every assistance by the State and county. A county horticulturist is employed to spend his entire time with the growers to assist them in problems of planting, pruning, spraying, cultivating, thinning and harvesting the fruits. This year Mr. E. P. Taylor, former professor in State of Missouri Agriculture Department, the county horticulturist, and entomologist, will inspect over 5,000 acres of the 30,000 acres of the Grand Valley. During the winter horticultural meetings will be held, bringing together thousands of these progressive fruit growers.

Dr. Klopsch's Vision

IT was the ambition of Dr. Klopsch to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD not merely the most widely circulated of religious journals, but the greatest power for good in the whole world. To this end he labored incessantly. His constant prayer was that the paper might yet become the medium through which the people of all lands should be drawn together in mutual sympathy and helpfulness; that it might be widely used of God in the spread of practical Christianity, and especially that its readers might be made instrumental in the alleviation of human suffering and the advancement of the Cross of Christ.

In the years of his activity, his efforts were crowned with remarkable success. Under his leadership THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family became a tremendous power for good. Especially did he love to think of the Old Guard—those who had been with him in many worthy enterprises, and whose prayers and co-operation have been the means of doing great deeds for Christ and humanity at home and in distant lands, in missionary effort, in philanthropy, and many other ways that proved their consecration. To us, who write these words and who served all through the years with him in intimate and sympathetic fellowship, it is an inspiration and a pleasure to know that we still have around us the same loyal legions of the Old Guard. Their zeal for service is undiminished and they know that the journal they love so well is true to the principles for which it has always stood.

There was one ambition—a most laudable one—which Dr. Klopsch cherished and which was still unfulfilled when he died. Year after year, he had watched the circulation thermometer steadily rising. He knew that every increase meant enlarged opportunities for service, and the conviction grew upon him that he should not cease his efforts until the million mark was reached. A million praying, working, earnest Christians, like one great spiritual family, united for a common purpose—what could not such an organization accomplish! With almost prophetic vision, he foresaw the far-reaching influence on the world's destinies of such a mighty army of godly men and women working in unison. What part might not such a force, under divine direction, play in the great drama of human regeneration!

This was his dream: To have THE CHRISTIAN HERALD read in a million American homes, every member of which should be a sharer in its work, its humane enterprises, its labors for world-evangelization, world-peace, world-uplift, and the increase of human happiness. Speaking on this theme not long before he died, he said that if his desire could be realized and the million mark reached, "nothing could prevent THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from becoming the greatest single agency of righteousness and truth on the earth."

We believe that Dr. Klopsch's vision of the million mark can be brought within a measurable distance of realization. If every reader of this journal, and especially the Old Guard, who have done such signal service in many fields under his leadership, were to bring in ONE NEW SUBSCRIBER WITH THEIR OWN RENEWAL NOW, the goal would be clearly in sight. It is the greatest opportunity we know of for the best kind of missionary service. Why not all try it?

We are the more encouraged to urge this because renewals and new subscriptions are now pouring in upon us in a rising flood, eclipsing all previous records at this season. A united effort NOW would effectually show that Dr. Klopsch was not a dreamer when he expressed the conviction that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would yet become "the greatest single agency of righteousness and truth on earth." He himself would have desired no better or more fitting memorial than this and you can make it come to pass. Put forth the effort NOW, pray for its success, and God's added blessing will complete the work.

The Nation's Drink Increase

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the announcement that our total population in the home-land and its colonies has passed the 100,000,000 mark, comes another official announcement which causes a thrill of a different character. According to the figures of the Internal Revenue Bureau, the fiscal year lately ended has been marked by the largest consumption of liquors ever known in this country. Of distilled spirits 165,000,000 gallons have been consumed, being 30,000,000 more than last year. During the same time, 59,485,117 barrels of fermented liquor have been consumed, being an increase of 3,000,000 barrels. For many years, we have been gathering to ourselves a vast foreign population. For the last half decade, our annual immigration has averaged three-quarters of a million at the port of New York alone. This big army of newcomers has brought with it the drinking customs of the old world, and it will not be until the second generation that they can be hopefully converted to the modern scientific temperance view. Another cause of the increase is that our government still allows liquor to be carried into and through "dry" States, regardless of the will of the people, thus spreading the evil of intemperance.

These figures, startling though they are, need give no cause for discouragement. The increase, as we have shown, is more apparent than real. The fact remains, and should not be forgotten, that nearly 40,000,000 of our population are living under temperance laws of their own voluntary enactment—a larger number than ever before. Thus, though the evil itself grows, the remedy grows at a still more rapid rate. Scientific education in our schools concerning the nature and effects of alcohol must be pushed vigorously in all the States. Our churches and temperance organizations must get together and work harmoniously for this common end.

A Sound Basis

SOME clever but unscrupulous individuals perpetrated a hoax on the business community lately, which, had it not been promptly exposed, might have produced serious results. What purported to be an interview with Mr. James J. Hill, the well-known railroad builder and financier, was published, in which he was represented as predicting that the coming year would be one of great business depression; that capitalists were apprehensive and indisposed to undertake anything involving large outlays; that there would be strikes, failures, and business trouble generally throughout the country. Within twenty-four hours after the publication, a dispatch was received from Mr. Hill at St. Paul, stating that the interview did not occur, and adding, "I see no present cause for alarm. The outlay for new enterprises does not indicate great activity, but the general conditions of business are on the whole sound." The bogus interview was unquestionably the work of some one who wished to affect the stock market. Its circulation, however, has been the means of giving publicity to the views of leaders in business throughout the country, and all unite in pronouncing conditions good and the general outlook entirely satisfactory. There ought to be some means to reach and properly punish the disseminators of fraudulent news.

Living by the Day

SIDNEY SMITH used to counsel people to take short views. The wisdom for us, if we knew it, is to live by the day. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof" is the saying of our Lord, and he has bidden us to "take no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself." Perhaps it is too much to hope that we may ever arrive at a place in life where we can be entirely free from anxiety. The child is not worried about its daily bread. Father and mother are sure to provide it. Only as the child emerges into the grown-up world, does the wonder enter where the shoes are to come from, who is to supply the food and raiment and everything else that belongs to the daily demand. Why may we not remain all our lives in the happy state of those children who continue to trust confidently in parental love and care all through the passing years? We read from time to time of singular occurrences, in which a need has been met in answer to prayer, and we are contented to think that these sweet experiences of Providential provision were merely incidental, and were not sent straight from heaven as gifts from the Father's hand. Our lives would be far happier if we could but live always in the larger hope and the fuller trust which God promises us, because we are his children. Why should it not be our rule in everything, the little as in the great things, with prayer and supplication, to make our requests known unto God? Let us live by the day, secure in our Father's never-sleeping care.

Science and the Soul

THE American people have a high respect for the men foremost in science. During the long inventive career of Thomas Alva Edison, he has gradually attained to a reputation in this country which is second to none in his own particular field of investigation. But Mr. Edison recently made a sad blunder in venturing to step out of the domain of practical science and into that of speculative philosophy. He attempted, in a published interview, to prove that because science, as he knew it, could not demonstrate the existence of the soul, therefore it was non-existent and immortality was a dream. His philosophic lucubrations have been promptly punctured by Dr. William Hanna Thomson, who shows that Mr. Edison, in dealing with the brain, is both unscientific and superficial. "The fact that he is prominent in one branch of science," writes Dr. Thomson, "does not entitle him to pass upon other branches of science." He remarks that Mr. Edison doesn't seem to know that the brain has two lobes or hemispheres, nor how these hemispheres are governed. "The belief in personal immortality," Dr. Thomson continues, "is generic. I believe that people who do not believe in immortality are abnormal." Sir Oliver Lodge, one of the most famous living scientists, and one who holds a very reverent attitude toward the revealed Word, in a recent address stated as the ultimate conclusion of philosophy: "The death of the body does not convey any assurance of the soul's death. Death is a change indeed—a sort of emigration, a wrenching away of the old familiar scenes, a solemn, portentous fact; but it is not annihilation."

Mr. Edison's interview has been much discussed in the pulpits and by the press, and the general conclusion is that he has made a great mistake in endeavoring to demonstrate through scientific process the things that are wholly unapproachable by such methods. No amount of loose thinking and loose speaking will avail in the spiritual domain. Those who have already entered on the spiritual life can best understand the supreme folly of attempting to gauge the problems of that life with material instruments and by mathematical calculations.

Horrible Factory Fire

MORE than thirty persons, mostly women and girls, perished in a factory fire in Newark, N. J., the other day. The building was an ld firetrap. It was the selfsame one that was ccupied by Ericsson while designing the Monitor, nd there it was that he experimented with his hot-ir furnace. The first two floors of the building ere occupied by the Drake-Morrison Paper Box ompany and the Newark Paper Box Company, the ird by the Aetna Electric Company and the nchor Lamp Company, and the fourth or top floor y the Wolf Muslin Undergarment Company, which nployed a hundred or more women and girls. The re began in the Anchor Lamp Company, where liss Sadie Henderson, who died from her injuries, as cleaning a carbon for an incandescent lamp by ouring gasoline into the apparatus she was oper-ting. Instantly there was a flash of fire that linded the girl, who ran screaming, and the fire ommunicated itself to the inflammable material of ne room. The means of egress were only two little re escapes and one narrow stairway. Panic-tricken, the people in the building ran screaming nd fighting to the windows for air and escape. he fire escapes were soon red hot and many of the oor creatures leaped out of the windows to their eath. One woman impaled erself upon the picket of a ence which pierced her brain, nd three young girls with ands clasped undertook to ap into the life-net which the olicemen held, but they all fell hrough it and were killed on he pavement underneath. A avage dog in a narrow alley ut off the escape of a number y biting viciously and danger-usly all who tried to get past im, and between the dog and ne chance of escaping another ay five or six of the girls, see-ng others bitten so badly, un-ertook another route of escape nd perished. It is a shame hat, with all the boasts of life-rotection in our modern times nd by our advanced civiliza-ion, this old death-trap, built t least two generations ago, hould have been allowed to be ccupied when it was nothing nore than a box of kindling ood well saturated with oil, ith scarcely a ghost of a hance for escape for the occu-ants of the two upper stories. here is every presumption hat a great and swiftly grow-ng city like Newark has or-inances that should have rotected these defenseless omen and prevented this mas-acre, which is a disgrace to our Christian civiliza-ion. There are perils enough in our life of complex ndustries when there is the utmost prudence, and t is a shame when these perils are multiplied by uman greed or by the neglect of proper official nspection. The tragedy has grieved the heart of he nation, and its prayers go up for Divine sym-athy for the survivors. There are spiritual perils, ut there is no need that any one should perish, as od has made a way of escape from them all. hrist is the sure means of safety from every piritual conflagration. The exhortation given to ot to escape the fires that burned Sodom can be sed to those who are in spiritual peril now to mpel them to fly immediately to a place of safety.

Escape for thy life, look not behind thee, neither stay thou in ll the plain; escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Gen. 19:17.)

illions in Savings Banks

The calamity howlers would do well to examine he report of the savings bank deposits for the past ear. The deposits in the 1,759 savings banks dur-ng the year increased to more than four billions. he average depositor's account was $445.22, $24.77 bove the average of the year before. There are 00,000 more depositors in the savings banks than here were a year ago, and the total of the deposits as increased $354,000,000 during the year. There s a material basis for all earthly enterprises. Money s necessary for food, clothing, shelter, school, hurch, and about everything else, and one of the evidences of a high type of civilization is the provision which is made for the future. The reasonable preparation for a rainy day is not only wise, but a religious duty. Our savings banks are a great blessing to all classes, and especially the common people, who lay up steadily small amounts from their meagre incomes. In harmony with the benevolent spirit and life these weekly and monthly deposits of small denominations make quite a showing at the end of a year or years, and help in the foundation of a home or in any emergency that may arise. Christ taught the lesson of saving in little things when he said to his disciples:

Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost. (John 6:12.)

Bronx Zoo Lion Escapes

Emperor Leo, the great Numidian lion of the Bronx Zoo, New York City, escaped from his cage the other evening and badly frightened the keepers and people in the neighborhood. Armed with pitchforks they beat the underbrush over a wide area of the park, until after about an hour's fruitless search they heard Leo's terrible roar in the direction of the bear den. They found him standing on his hind legs and wrenching with his forepaws and grinding with his fearful jaws at the iron bars of the cage containing Silver King, the beautiful polar bear. It was a happy thought that led one of the keepers to open the door between the cage occupied by Silver King and the one adjoining it, and after the bear had passed through it the door was locked, and then the door near the lion into the cage Silver King had occupied was opened and Leo crept in quickly, making sure that he would have a rich feast of bear meat. The lion thus made prisoner had chloroform by the gallon on a strong pole administered to him, and after he had fallen asleep as harmless as a lamb they tied his legs and muzzled him and carried him back to his own cage. It was a fortunate thing that the lion did not make a wider range and kill some of the people in that neighborhood. The lion is sometimes used in the Scriptures to express the fierceness and destruction brought upon God's children by their enemies. The psalmist offers prayer for protection against such.

Keep me as the apple of the eye; hide me under the shadow of thy wings, from the wicked that oppress me, from my deadly enemies, who compass me about, . . . like as a lion that is greedy of his prey. (Ps. 17:8, 9, 12.)

The Divorce Peril

The Rev. Dr. Frederick Lynch, of the Pilgrim Congregational Church of New York City, preached a sermon the other Sunday against the divorce evil which was timely, just and powerful. He said that the rapid increase of divorce and the perfect ease with which it could be obtained reminded him of the corrupt times in ancient Rome. He referred to Mæcenas, who changed his wife every year, and to a woman Martial speaks of who had had her tenth husband, and to the woman mentioned by St. Jerome who was married to her twenty-third husband, she herself being the twenty-first wife. He said that there were some New York people who were trying very hard to imitate these examples, and that they were not all actors and actresses. The pastor thought that the most serious thing about the matter is that such outrageous conduct should be attended with so little shame upon the part of the so-called highest society, as well as by the participants themselves. He said in closing the sermon: "Divorce at present is increasing two and a half times as fast as our population. One can see the incredible increase in twenty years when he remembers that in 1880 the percentage was only 38 per 100,000 population, whereas in 1900 it was 73."

Wherefore they are no more twain, but one flesh. What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder. (Matt. 19:6.)

Dead Man Sang at Funeral

We hear now and then of a man reading his own obituary in the papers, but it is a rare thing for a dead man to sing at his own funeral. Pietro Ficeo, a shoemaker and amateur musician, had a very great fondness for the phonograph. He purchased a good many records and occasionally sang into his own phonograph and kept records of the songs. He was taken seriously ill. He realized that he could not recover, and being a poor man and unable to get up much of a funeral he requested that they use his phonograph to furnish the music for the funeral services. He picked out the Angel's Serenade and Gounod's Ave Maria, sung by himself, and these were used, and thus the dead man took an important part at his own funeral service. He instructed that his phonograph and seventy-two records, a number of them his own, should be sent to his mother in Italy. That memory is short and heart shallow that will not recall the voices and melodies of loved ones after their earthly forms have vanished from us. The sound of father's voice and mother's saintly music, the accents of love of husband or wife, the shouts of son or daughter at play, or the sweet cadences in prayer, and the cooing of the cherub in the cradle, make lovely melody and heavenly companionship for the jaded, lonesome spirit here. The earthly immortality of voice and faith is mentioned by the apostle in his reference to Abel.

And by it he being dead yet speaketh. (Heb. 11:4.)

Kaiser Advises Total Abstinence

In the last twelve months the Emperor of Germany has furnished the temperance people the heaviest club with which to strike the liquor traffic of the world. On three or four public occasions the Kaiser has taken great pains to express his disapproval of the drink habit of the Germans and to warn individuals and the nation against the damage of alcohol as a beverage. At the opening of the new naval academy at Muerwick, November 21, Emperor William read an order in council laying stress upon qualifications necessary to naval officers, and later speaking extemporaneously, insisted on temperance on the part of the cadets. He said: "Character is the first essential, and character is founded upon strong moral and religious convictions. Drink undermines the nerves, and the strenuous naval service of to-day needs strong nerves." He counseled total abstinence, and advised the young men to join the Good Templars, and added that "the nation which in the future uses the smallest amount of alcohol will march at the head of the column on the fields of art and war." In this race-wide war on the liquor traffic, the appearance of the Kaiser as the new champion of temperance is as great a surprise to the world as it is a source of congratulation to the enemies of the drink traffic. By the time America shall have driven the liquor business out with economical and religious weapons, it is possible that Germany will have eliminated it from the Fatherland by the scientific and economic argument. The advice of the Kaiser recalls the story of a family that totally abstained from drink.

The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment. (Jer. 35:14.)

The Sweet Charm of Palestine

THERE is an indefinable charm about the Holy Land. For many ages travelers have been lured thither by the fascination of its shrines and temples, and by the places that are made memorable by sacred and historical associations.

One of the most delightful books of the present season is The Holy Land, by Robert Hichens, issued by the Century Company, New York. It is a noble volume, beautifully illustrated with drawings by Jules Guérin, reproduced in colors, and also with photographs. Mr. Hichens' story is the record of a tour from Baalbec to Jerusalem, taking in Damascus, Nazareth, Jericho and Bethlehem—all of them rich in sacred memories. In literary treatment, no less than in its art, the volume is fascinating. One of the most effective passages is where the writer describes the country around about the Sea of Galilee. He says:

"This was the country of Jesus; and for me, at that moment, all the old gods were dead. The calm of Galilee, on a perfect morning of spring, is like no other calm I have ever known. It is gentler, sweeter than the wonderful calm of the desert. There you seem to be coming into the very presence of God the Father. As you draw near to Galilee, it is as if, with the handful of humble fishermen, you drew near to God the Son. Galilee takes your hand as a friend, and draws you to it. It seems to breathe upon you and give you peace. . . . Everywhere there is beauty: in the oval sea, with its deep-green, dreaming waters; in the dreaming, flowery shores, where the pink blossoms of the oleanders lean toward Jordan's entering wave; in the long, green lawns, with wine-colored patches that slope gently away behind the three snowy cupolas, and the cypress trees that mark the probable site of Capernaum; in the steep slopes of Gadara, gashed with livid yellow and white; in the low line of the shore, like a line of paint in a tender picture, where once dwelt a woman who was forgiven, Mary Magdalene. Often my eyes turned to where Mary Magdalene had lived. And all these coasts and all these motionless waters seemed waters and coasts of forgiveness. And from every hill surely there floated the words, 'Blessed are the peacemakers; for they shall be called the children of God.'"

The Church of the Nativity

Here is a delicate, yet vivid, pen picture of Nazareth, "where He was brought up."

"And this was Nazareth! How un-Oriental, how almost German-Swiss, it seemed to me at that moment! I rode down into it. My first impression remained. We camped on a bit of waste ground that looked suburban, close to the Russian monastery, and at once I set out to see the famous Mary's well, which was scarcely a stone's throw away. There is very little doubt that this is the actual source from which the Virgin Mother drew water for the household purposes, and that our Lord must often have stood there. These facts must forever make it a place of pilgrimage; but it has little picturesque charm. The site is not pretty; indeed, it is almost squalid. It is in the town, and in a rather dingy, unattractive quarter, low down, without brightness, yet without any compensating remoteness or atmosphere of antiquity. About it, however, gather the very handsome women of Nazareth, tall, regular of feature, graceful, and wearing their long and simple garments of white and colored cotton with an air of almost delicate aristocracy. Coming and going upon the stone pavement before the well they are full of vivacity, and are surely supreme as retailers of humble gossip."

The journey from Jericho to Bethlehem was full of reminiscences. He visited Bethany on the way, and found it a small village of gray houses, spread out on a slope of the Mount of Olives.

The "little town of Bethlehem," he writes, "lies on a limestone hill, in which are cut terraces planted with splendid olive trees, fig and other fruit trees and vines. From a distance the gray town looks important and prosperous. It has a background of bare hills. It lies in a stony country. From it can be seen far away the mountains of Moab. On the highroad between it and Jerusalem, at Easter time there is an ever-flowing stream of pilgrims, and the narrow streets near the famous old church founded by Constantine the Great's mother, the Empress Helena, are thronged by Russians and travelers of all nations. As I joined this crowd and threaded my way between the houses strongly built of stone, with thick walls and ample doorways, and the dome-shaped roofs of stone for the construction of which the builders of Bethlehem are famous all over Palestine, I looked with interest at the natives of our Lord's birthplace.

"In the Holy Land one passes from one little world to another with a swiftness that is almost bewildering. At one moment the world is Circassian, at another Jewish, at another Italian or German, Mohammedan or Druse. And even the native populations of the different towns in which Christianity prevails differ markedly from one another. The people of Bethlehem are distinguished by ability, energy, enterprise, and adaptability, and, I thought, looked a powerful and vigorous lot, fearless and self-reliant and perhaps almost too independent. Many of them emigrate, for they have no fear of travel and make excellent colonists. It is possible to come upon men of Bethlehem in Eastern Africa and even in Haiti. Now for the first time I saw the remarkable head-dresses for which the married women of Bethlehem are famous. They are large and entirely conceal the hair. I was told that the foundation is a fez, stiffened and covered with cotton. Chains of silver on which are strung rows of silver coins ornament the front, and a great white veil made of cotton gives the finishing touch. Strongly built and active, the matrons of Bethlehem look very imposing as they go about their affairs, and I should scarcely think they live in great subjection to their husbands. That they make alarming mothers-in-law I can well believe. There is a proverb in Palestine, 'Were the mother-in-law to love her daughter-in-law, dogs would go into paradise.'

"The Church of the Holy Nativity is entered through a doorway so small that I had to bend my head in order to pass through it. It is roofed with wood cut from the cedars of Lebanon, has double rows of yellow pillars, and is very large and very simple, and fine in its simplicity. Here and there I came upon a Turkish soldier standing patiently, gun in hand, to keep Christian dogs in order. For in this church, built on the spot where tradition places the birth of Christ, there is often brawling and fighting, as in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. Joint ownership is here, as in Jerusalem, the main cause of all the trouble. The church with its holy place belongs to the Latins, the Greeks, and the Armenians, and the three religions, needless to say, c not dwell together in peace. When I was in Betl lehem I saw evidence of the rights of the Armenian for when I made my way to the cavern in which is believed that our Saviour was born, I found occupied by Armenian priests, who were holding a elaborate service.

"To reach this sacred cavern, round and ove which the great church has been built, you pas through a screen into a rather gorgeous chapel b longing to the Greeks, gay with sacred pictures, an glittering with gold and silver and hanging lamp roofed with cedar, and paved with marble, and com to two flights of marble steps forming a half-moo These steps are rather narrow and lead down int the cavern, which is in the living rock. When reached them, I heard a sound of chanting in man's deep voice. I paused, and below me, in dimness revealed by the lighted candles held b Russian pilgrims standing or sitting upon the step I saw two Armenian priests, dressed in pink, whit red, and gold vestments, with long hair and heav beards. They also held candles and books, and wer loudly worshiping before a silver star. Beside ther impassive, handsome, gun in hand, fez on hea stood an immensely tall Turkish soldier, with hal shut eyes, weary no doubt with the long sentry dut which in Palestine is tl Turkish soldier's l during Holy Week ar at Easter. The lou voices of the pries ceased, and I heard boy singing. Then again th priests raised their son bre chants, one answe ing the other. I descend ed softly between th Russians, who, absorbe as they always are, di not glance at me, an I, too, stood before th star. It is inlaid i marble, is of silver, an is bordered by the so emn inscription, 'Hic a Virgine Maria Jesu Christus natus est' (Here Jesus Christ wa born of the Virgi Mary.) The place whe it lies is called th Recess of the Nativity and the small space b fore it, where peopl were kneeling, is calle the Chapel of the Mar ger.

"The whole caver is named the Chapel o the Nativity. Here it i believed that the Mag came with their offer ings, and their altar i here. Lamps belongin to the Latins, Greeks and Armenians bur here night and day a year follows after year. The low roof is draped and parts of the walls are draped in blue and silver and there is a casing of marble brought from Italy The service was long and monotonous, but I did no regret it. The priests' and the boys' voices sounde strange and almost unearthly in the heart of thi rock consecrated by the simple faith of thousands Under the gold and silver lamps the barbaric vest ments shone and gleamed as the priests moved to an fro, bowed and kneeled, or stood upright. The Turk ish soldier, who was on a tiny platform of wood stared with his heavy eyes at the star. Crouched o the rows of steps, lit by their flickering candles, th Russian pilgrims wept, crossed themselves, move their old lips in the prayers of their church, an perhaps also in prayers that were spontaneously born at this supreme moment in their peasant lives in their own hearts. And the legend by the sta held the eyes and the soul. Faith and worship have made the Chapel of the Nativity in Bethlehem for ever sacred. For there thousands have seen the sta in the East, and having seen, have gone to their own homes, carrying with them a belief made suddenly more vital, more serene, made bright as the lamps that ceaselessly burn above those solemn words in the marble beneath the impending rock."

Mr. Hichens has made his book a most interesting one, and its 302 pages will doubtless be read and pondered by many who, although they may never hope to visit the Holy Land in person, will yet experience delight in perusing this account of the impressions of an observant and talented traveler who treats his subject with the true reverence of an artist.

Chicago's Great Revival Ended

THE Chapman-Alexander evangelistic campaign in Chicago finished its six weeks of continuous meetings on Sunday evening, November 27, with an overwhelming attendance and a shout of victory over the most successful period of soul-winning Chicago has ever seen. For six weeks the Chicago Opera House has been filled each noon chiefly with men, and the interest, as the meetings drew near the close, increased in intensity. It was a notable illustration of the drawing power of the old Gospel as a means of appealing to the hearts of men. At every service, scores and hundreds asked for prayer, and some notable conversions took place. The great tabernacle, which seats between 5,000 and 6,000, was filled at each of the services. Hundreds were turned away on Friday night, and on Sunday night, although it rained, the Tabernacle was crowded.

One of the final efforts of the evangelists to reach all classes in the city was their invasion of the "Red Light District," where they co-operated with the Midnight Mission in presenting the Gospel, both of condemnation and of hope, to the young men thronging the streets and to the women as well. These meetings were held at the close of the evening tabernacle service, which from 1,000 to 2,000 young people attended by special invitation, with their parents and Sunday School teachers, when many gave themselves to God, either in solemn renewal of their Christian vows, or for the first time. The contrast of going from this Christian company into a section of the city given over to sin, was a startling one.

Three open-air meetings were held in front of the most noted resorts. Mr. Harkness presided at the organ, while Mr. Alexander led the singing in which all of the company joined. Dr. Chapman then preached a short sermon from the two texts, "The wages of sin is death" and "God so loved the world." The Gospel of John, in the small edition provided by the Pocket Testament League, was distributed to the crowd of on-lookers. Dr. Chapman, Mr. Alexander, Mrs. Asher and a small company of their fellow-workers entered the largest and most richly furnished of the resorts and were permitted to meet the inmates face to face in a service in which the same Gospel was preached and sung that had been everywhere so potent. It is too early to estimate the results of this remarkable evangelistic work.

No more remarkable or impressive meeting was held during the campaign than the meeting of church officers held in the Wilson Avenue Tabernacle. Dr. Smith, one of the pastors of Dayton, O., related the effect on his own church, when his church officers, after the Chapman-Alexander campaign in Dayton, followed out the instructions given by Dr. Chapman in the same address he had just delivered, and then how he had come to Chicago to engage in the campaign because of the prayers and encouragements of his church. Following the addresses by Dr. Smith and Dr. Chapman, the church officers pushed forward until all the space in front of the platform and all of the aisles were crowded with men and women pledging loyalty to the pastors in the work of soul-winning and in building up all of the interests of the church. The meeting was typical of the campaign. Never have the churches been so united as now. Never have so many Christians been alive to the claims upon them for service. This has been manifested among churches which have only partially co-operated in the campaign. The regular church audiences have been decidedly increased. Several churches engaged in successful evangelistic meetings on their own account. The majority, however, put all of their strength in the specified group meetings or in the main services in the tabernacles, where Chapman and Alexander were the leaders.

The ministry has been aroused as never before. The Monday noon meetings at the Chicago Opera House which have immediately followed the regular weekly ministerial meetings have been of a special character calculated to interest and arouse the ministers. On one Monday noon, seventeen evangelists answered, in one-minute addresses, the question, "Why I am a Christian." On the following noon, a similar number answered the question, "Why I believe that the Bible is the Word of God." More ministers have been enlisted in evangelistic work than ever before in the history of Chicago.

Meetings for children and young people have been held by Mr. J. J. Lowe. Mrs. C. M. Alexander has gathered the young girls by themselves in a wonderful series of fruitful, heart-to-heart talks. Mr. Alexander has with special tact and sympathy enlisted them in the service whenever they have appeared at the great tabernacle meetings. The religious canvass of Chicago and Cook County by the International Sunday School Association was a most complete one. Marion Laurence, General Secretary of the International Sunday School Association, entered zealously into the plans for allying Sunday Schools with the evangelistic campaign, with most gratifying results.

A Remarkable Audience, Made Up Entirely of Church Officers and Their Wives

Some noted characters are among the converts. A gambler, known as a leader in the sporting fraternity, was won so effectually that he appeared on the platform at one of the men's meetings, and told of his wonderful redemption. One of the drunkards, whose reformation seems most complete, had been for nine years a bar-tender in a Chicago saloon.

The leadership in the campaign has been as nearly ideal as it is possible. Dr. Chapman, Mr. Alexander, Mr. Naftzger and Mr. Harkness all did their work most zealously and effectively and proved themselves specially fitted for their respective forms of evangelistic ministry. Dr. Chapman, in his closing address, stated that he had preached during the campaign ninety times, and that Mr. Alexander had led in the singing of 5,000 hymns and songs. In going to and from the various meeting places they had traveled by automobile eight hundred miles. They have been prodigious workers, for not only have they led in meetings, but they have held innumerable private interviews, and Dr. Chapman has sent columns of messages to the daily newspapers. By a careful estimate 881,000 people have listened to the evangelistic message in either the group or the central meetings.

TWO SOUL-WINNERS CALLED HOME

TWO noted servants of Christ passed away recently. In Rochester, N. Y., the Rev. John Everett Clough, for many years a missionary in India and known as the "Apostle of the Telugus," died in a hospital, where he had been under treatment for an ailment contracted during his long career in the arduous climate of India. Dr. Clough will be remembered by many readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as one who took a prominent part in the missionary relief work conducted by this journal during the great India famine. He served on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Interdenominational Relief Committee and contributed largely to its success in the wonderful results accomplished.

Dr. Clough's Mission Station was one day the scene of a wonderful baptism. Two thousand native converts were baptized in the River Gundiacoma on that occasion, and during the next twelve months, over 10,000 others followed their example, a great wave of revival having swept over the district. Dr. Clough was a worker of great energy, and will long be remembered as one of the most successful missionaries in India. Of five children who survive him, two are missionaries in the field.

Few names have been better known than that of Rev. Frederick H. Jacobs, the leader of the Fulton Street Noonday Mission, who ended his earthly career last week in New York, after a brief illness. Mr. Jacobs had a remarkable history. Born in Germany in 1855, he was brought to this country at the age of seven years. His father, who fought for the Union in the Civil War, died many years ago. Young Jacobs had few educational opportunities, and until he was sixteen, he did not know what it meant to be a Christian. After his conversion, he decided to become an evangelist, and he soon perceived that it would be necessary for him to be educated. With great resolution, he worked his way through high school and went to Cornell University, where he was graduated with honors. He then went into practical Young Men's Christian Association work, first in Illinois and afterwards in Missouri.

John Everett Clough

In 1892 Mr. Jacobs met the late Dwight L. Moody, who was struck with the force and vigor of his manner on the platform, no less than with his singing, for he had a rich, sympathetic voice of considerable compass, and had already become an experienced organizer and choir leader. It was in this capacity that Evangelist Moody desired his services, and an engagement was made with him for eight years of evangelistic work. After leaving Mr. Moody, Mr. Jacobs accepted a pastoral charge in Philadelphia, and afterwards became assistant to Rev. A. C. Dixon of Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, where he remained four years. Then he made an evangelistic tour of the world, singing and preaching the Gospel of Jesus Christ in many lands.

For the last eight years, Mr. Jacobs was connected with the Fulton Street Noonday Mission, where his effective ministrations and beautiful singing will long be remembered.

Questions and Answers

The beautiful covers which have appeared recently in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have attracted much attention, but some of our friends have complained that they have been received in a soiled condition through the mail. To prevent this, we are installing a new mailing system, whereby each copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be enclosed in its own wrapper, thus insuring the delivery of the paper in the best possible condition.

The circulation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is so great that the changes cannot be made all in one week. Some of our friends may be favored with new wrappers sooner than others; but after a few weeks the entire list will reap the benefit of the new system.

M. B. S., Hoboken, N. J. Is it wrong to have entertainments in the church, or for the benefit of the church? Hasn't it the same effect upon our brethren as going to the theatre?

Purely secular entertainments, such as tableaux, fairs, auctions, suppers, etc., are out of place in a building dedicated to the worship of God. They lower the spirituality of a congregation. If held at all, they should be in another building. There are many so-called entertainments that are altogether inappropriate and should be ruled out firmly. On the other hand, there can be no reasonable objection to a good lecture or an evening of sacred song.

Mrs. H. P., Shreveport, La. 1. What holidays are legal holidays in all the States? 2. Is Christmas kept as a holiday everywhere in the United States?

1. Washington's Birthday, Independence Day, Labor Day. 2. Christmas Day is a legal holiday in every State except Kansas, and a legal holiday in all the territories and the District of Columbia.

T. G., Denver, Colo. 1. What was the fastest trip made across the Atlantic by one of the great liners? 2. From what points are the Atlantic sailing distances measured? 3. What is the fastest day's trip of any vessel?

1. On the trip from September 26 to 30, the Mauretania of the Cunard Line came across from Queenstown to New York in four days, ten hours and fifty-one minutes. She still holds the record as the fastest ship. 2. The speed is measured over a course from Roche's Point, off Queenstown, to Sandy Hook Lightship, off the entrance to New York Harbor, a distance of 2,800 miles. 3. The Mauretania holds the record also for the greatest distance covered in one day. June, 1909, she went 673 knots in twenty-four hours, an average of 26.55 knots per hour.

R. P., Morristown, N. J. Will you kindly give me the translation of "In God We Trust" in Latin? A friend of mine says "E Pluribus Unum" is or means "In God We Trust."

Fidem in Domino habemus. The word Domino, Master or Lord, conveys the meaning better than the ablative form of Deus, usually used for God. E Pluribus Unum is the Latin for "one from among many," referring to the fact that we had set up a government different from those then in existence, starting on a separate career with different ideas, one nation from among many nations.

W. E. E., Saginaw, Mich. I have been reading about the steamer Olympic. How does it compare with Noah's Ark?

The Olympic of the Cunard Line, which has just been launched at Belfast, Ireland, is 882 feet in length, 92 feet broad. It will carry 5,600 people, including officers and crew. It will steam at the rate of twenty-one knots an hour. This is not so fast as the Mauretania or Lusitania; carrying capacity rather than speed was sought in her construction. The Ark was not built even for slow sailing, but constructed to float on the water with no other motion than it received from the waves themselves. Dr. Rohinson describes it not as a ship but rather a floating "building in the form of a parallelogram, three hundred cubits long, fifty cubits broad, and thirty cubits high. The length of the cubit, in the great variety of measures that have borne this name, it is impossible to ascertain. It had a flat or slightly inclined roof. It had three stories and a door in the side. The windows Noah was commanded to make a cubit in size (Gen. 6: 16) may have been either on the side or the roof. Some commentators take the latter view, although nothing can be asserted positively on the subject.

Richard M., Davenport, Ia. What was the highest number of immigrants reaching New York in a single year?

In 1907, the total was over 1,200,000. The average in recent years has been about 750,000.

J. F. F., Evington, Va. Has God at the birth of each individual made out his programme for life? If so, can this programme be changed?

This is the doctrine of predestination or fatalism, which is not accordant with Christian belief. The view of the Christian Church is that, while God rules over all, he has given to man the power to know and the privilege to choose between right and wrong, good and evil. The question whether predestination was absolute or conditional (limited) has been discussed for centuries, and the general conclusion is that predestination is conditioned by free-will, as, in the absence of such freedom, there could be neither reward nor punishment, and the divine invitations in the Old Testament and in the Gospels would be meaningless.

I. J. G., Lawrence, Kan. Give the comparative cost of maintenance of the armies and navies of England, Germany, France, Japan, and the United States.

In 1908-09 the British army, including its operations, cost, it is estimated, $137,295,000; the amount put in the German army for 1909-10, $224,500,000; France had an estimated expenditure of $28,000,000 for the metropolitan army; $7,160,000 for its colonial troops, and $13,250,000 for "new construction." Japan is reported to spend yearly between $35,000,000 and $40,000,000 on her army, for she is constantly increasing her forces. The United States army budget for 1908-1909 was $95,935,862. Although our army is small, the amount is larger as our men are much better paid than those of other countries. The estimates were reported as follows: Great Britain for 1910, $100,117,517; Germany for 1909-10, $88,000,000; France, estimate for 1909, $66,580,000; Japan, estimate for 1909-10, $37,450,000; the United States, estimate for 1908-09, was $124,794,798. Of course it must be remembered that we may not always get the exact figures from foreign powers, as it is often a secret of the government alone as to the way certain amounts are spent.

L. L., Victor, Ia. What is the meaning of Ex. 4: 24?

This is a somewhat obscure passage. Commentators interpret it as meaning that Moses was either overwhelmed with mental distress or overtaken with some sudden and dangerous malady. He had failed to perform a duty which was regarded among Hebrews as of prime importance and was so deeply stricken with remorse that he had a narrow escape from collapse.

D. C. F., New Lexington, O. 1. For what purpose was the leaning tower of Pisa erected? 2. What shall determine as to getting religion, as for instance, at the "anxious seat" or the "mourners' bench"?

1. The leaning tower of Pisa, Italy, was built as a bell tower. It is of marble and was started in 1174 and completed in 1350. In the church architecture of that day it was customary to have the campanile or bell tower stand separate and away from the church or cathedral. It is thought that the tower was started straight, but that its great weight caused it to sink on one side. They kept on building, however, trying by various architectural devices to keep the weight as much as possible from the side to which the tower inclined. It has caused much discussion among builders of many ages and nations. 2. Conversion is defined as "that change in the thoughts, desires, dispositions and life of a sinner which is brought about when the Holy Ghost enters the heart as the result of a saving faith in the atonement by which the sinner is justified." The process is: Conviction of sin by the Holy Spirit; the awakening of faith in Christ as Saviour; justification, and the shedding abroad of the love of God in the heart which makes a complete transformation of the life. It may more briefly be described as the voluntary acceptance of Christ as Saviour and the surrender of the heart to him, whether it takes place on the anxious seat or anywhere else.

G. W. M., Claiborne, O. Explain why the Jewish year begins or ends in September when we read in Ex. 12: 2, that the beginning of the year is the spring, at which time they still hold their Passover?

The Hebrews had really two calendars, one for the sacred year and one for the civil year. The sacred year begins in the spring, while the civil year commences in October, not in September. The first month of the sacred year generally answers to the seventh of the civil and comes during the moon of the month of March or April, and the Passover came on the fifteenth day of this first sacred month. This month was called Abib or Nisan. The civil year as at present calculated begins October 1.

F. G., Atlantic Highlands, N. J. Where is the People's Palace, and for what purposes is it used.

The People's Palace is in the Mile End section of the city of London. In 1882 Sir Walter Besant wrote a story, entitled, All Sorts and Conditions of Men. In it he described a palace for the people. The idea was taken up, and the building opened by Queen Victoria in 1887. It provides educational and social advantages to the poor. Besant was connected with it until his death. In America a smaller People's Palace was founded in Jersey City, and the idea, in a less degree, has been carried out by various social settlements.

Look at Your Little Yellow Tab

THERE is a small yellow tab on which your name and address are printed, on the paper that comes to each subscriber. This tab tells you when your subscription expires. Now, we have been so greatly pleased and helped by the co-operation of our readers during these very busy holiday times, that we are encouraged to ask them to do one more favor, and it relates to the little yellow tab. It will be solely to their advantage, and in the line of facilitating business.

A number of subscriptions expire during this month. We would urge these December Subscribers to send in their Renewals NOW, that we may be enabled to send them their choice of Premium Books and Magazine Combinations in time for Christmas

Those whose subscriptions expire after the Holiday Season, should also take advantage of this opportunity to secure their Premiums AT ONCE, without waiting. If they will send us their remittances within THE NEXT FEW DAYS, we will be able to ship their Premiums in ample time for the Holidays.

Remember, you lose nothing by adopting this plan. The little yellow tab tells the story. You get your premiums NOW, and your subscription is advanced ONE YEAR from date of expiry, not missing a single number of the paper. Look on your little yellow tab on your copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and you will find the date on which your subscription expires. When you forward your renewal, the date on the tab will be changed within two weeks to precisely one year from the date it now bears.

As a single day means much to us at this rush season, we would strongly urge you to RENEW AT ONCE—TO-DAY if you can, and thus help us to serve you to your satisfaction and our own. You will find all our Premium Offers set forth in our issue of November 30, and also in this number.

Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy Dead

MRS. MARY BAKER EDDY founder of the Christian Science Church, died late in the evening of December 4, at her residence at Chestnut Hill, Brookline, Mass. Mrs. Eddy had been ill for about a week, apparently with pneumonia, but the fact was kept secret and no physician was called until the medical examiner, Dr. West was notified of her death. The announcement that the Christian Science leader had passed from earth was first made to the members of the "Mother Church" in Boston. The usual service was carried through until just before the time for the benediction, when the reader changed the programme and read a letter written a number of years ago by Mrs. Eddy in which she urged her followers to carry on the cause regardless of the fact that she might not be present to direct them. Then the leader announced that "their teacher and guide had passed from sight."

Mrs. Eddy was born in Bow, N. H. on July 16, 1821, and was in her ninetieth year. Several years ago she gave up the active leadership of the Christian Science Church and left it in the hands of several prominent officials of that body. Nevertheless she continued to be consulted on very important matters, and her mind, it is said, was clear until shortly before her death. She left a son, George W. Glover, of Lead, S. D., and a foster son, Dr. E. J. Foster, of Waterbury, Vt.

At this writing it has not yet been announced on whom the duties of leader will fall. A full account of the life and work of Mrs. Eddy will appear in the next issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

LOOKING TOWARDS CHRISTMAS*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

JESUS lived in heaven before the world was made. "All things were made through him, and without him was not anything made that hath been made" (John 1: 3). He was the joy of heaven. "I was daily his delight" (Prov. 8: 30). The angels of heaven worshiped him (Heb. 1: 6).

Of the four Gospel writers John is the only one who begins the story of Jesus with his life in heaven (read John 1: 1-5). And then, to learn what came next in the life of Jesus, we must turn back to the book of Genesis and read how he came to earth for a little while and talked with Adam (Gen. 3: 8). And when he came again and talked to Enoch (Gen. 5: 24); and to Abraham (Gen. 18: 1); and to Jacob (Gen. 32: 30); and to Moses (Ex. 3: 2); and to Joshua (Josh. 1: 5-10; 5: 13-15), and to Gideon (Judges 6: 11); and to others to make them brave for the right. These wondrous brief visits of Jesus to this world before he came as the Babe of Bethlehem are sometimes called "theopanies," and some Bible students claim that there are about thirty. It is profitable for us to study and think about them, because we get a truer view of the great sacrifice Jesus made for us, when he condescended to come again as a helpless babe, and to grow as children grow, and to be obedient to his mother and to live as a man, and then to die as a malefactor. Though he was the millionaire of stars, "though he was rich, yet for your sakes he became poor." The Infinite condescended to be wrapped in the swaddling bands of the infant!

"Where Is the King?"

"Where is he that is born King?" It was the question which the wise men asked when they came from the far East to Jerusalem, seeking him, for said they, "We are come to worship him." And they did bow down before him, and they paid tribute to him of gold and precious perfumes. But those who do not now think of Christ as reigning in heaven before his earthly life began at Bethlehem, will hardly think of him as having been born a King. If children are not instructed in this matter, Jesus' birth at Bethlehem will be like the birth of any child, just "the dear little baby Jesus," and it will be very difficult afterward to get the idea of his Kingship into their minds. At one of the best Chautauquas, children were questioned on this point, and not one of them was aware that Jesus had ever lived anywhere before he came to Bethlehem! What wonder that there is skepticism in later years in regard to Christ as the living Lord of the world?

The brief visits of Christ to men in Old Testament times, the theophanies, prepared the Jews, as the study of them prepares them and others today, to welcome the Incarnation, his longer visit to the world. A converted, Christian Jew of high standing delivered a lecture on Christ in a college in London. He said: "Perhaps none of you know from experience what it is to live without the knowledge of the Incarnation—what it is to endeavor to realize the incomprehensible, infinite God, without the light and comfort of the Mediator, and how joyous and self-evidencing is the peaceful brightness when Jesus is revealed as the Son of God declaring the Father. I was brought up in my childhood in the synagogue, and was taught that there was one God, infinite, incomprehensible, holy, the Spirit high above us and omnipresent. Much stress was laid on the unity of God. But this vague, bare and abstract monotheism leaves the mind in utter darkness, while the heart is chilly and desolate. There was another current which then influenced me: it was the national history as recorded in the books of Moses, the Psalms and the Prophets, and commemorated in the festivals. There I was met by no abstract idea of unity, but by a loving God, who appeared unto Abraham, and spoke to him; who led Israel through the wilderness, and dwelt among them. And often when I thought of the friendly, kind, concrete and human way in which the Lord God then appeared to his people, and dealt with them, I wondered why he was not with us now, known, loved and followed. One day I was looking at some books in a book-store, and the title of one arrested my eye: 'God becoming Man.' The thought went through my mind like a flash of lightning. It filled my soul with a most joyous solemnity. I said to myself, 'This would be most beautiful, if God would come and visit us.' Not many years after, I heard about Jesus, and read the Gospels. I felt here the same presence, the same loving, condescending, redeeming and sanctifying God that appeared unto the fathers. I felt that here was Jehovah; only that all darkness had disappeared, and that the grand inconceivable glory here shone upon us in the perfect, peaceful and holy countenance of the man Christ Jesus."

"A little child shall lead them"

Oh, who can look on the sun
In the glory of his noon?
And who can look on the God of lights
In the ineffable, fathomless heights
Of the Absolute One?

But the sun comes down to the earth,
And meets it in the west;
And God in a human birth
Touches the human breast.
The light that we could not look upon
In the dazzle of its gold
We may see in the sunset crimson,
Cast in an earthly mould.
And the glory of God, the eternal One,
We behold in the face of His human Son.

—CHARLOTTE BURGIS DEFOREST.

Jesus in Prophecy

After we have read about some, if not all, of the visits of Jesus to this world before he was born in Bethlehem, it would be well for us to read what the prophets were given to tell mankind concerning his coming to earth as the Redeemer of man. They told that his mother should be a virgin (Isa. 7: 14); that his name should be given from heaven (Isa. 62: 2); that he should be born in Bethlehem (Micah 5: 2); at a certain time (Dan. 9: 25); with a star over his cradle (Num. 24: 17) which wise men and kings would follow from far-off lands, to bring him presents and worship him (Ps. 72: 11-15). All of these things and many more the prophets told concerning his ministry, his death and resurrection.

Jesus in the Gospels

It now remains for us to read the story of his birth, and compare it with the prophecies. We will open the Bible at Luke's Gospel, or, if we are fond of genealogy, we can read the first chapter of Matthew's Gospel. If we read in Luke, begin with the twenty-sixth verse of the first chapter, and read about the message which the angel Gabriel brought from heaven to the virgin Mary. In verse 31 read about the name given from heaven, and then the beautiful song which Mary sang, which is now called the Magnificat, because she rejoiced that she was to become the mother of the Son of God. Then read on in the second chapter of Luke how the child Jesus was born in a manger and wrapped in swaddling clothes, in the little town of Bethlehem, as the prophet had foretold. Then read on in the second chapter of Luke how when the shepherds were keeping watch over their flocks by night the light shined out of heaven, and the sweet songs of angels sounded forth, announcing the birth of Jesus, and angels themselves came down to assure the frightened shepherds, and to tell them where they should find the young child and his mother. And then we will read on in the same chapter how they sought and found them. And they were the first men—the shepherds of Bethlehem—to gaze upon the face and form of the divine Child. How wonderful it all seemed to them, and how glad they were to tell about it to all they met as they were returning to the flocks!

And still let us read on in the second chapter of Luke, clear through what happened on his "name-day," when he made his first journey to Jerusalem, eight days after his birth. It was not a long journey, only seven miles. Then he entered the temple for the first time, undoubtedly carried in the loving arms of his mother Mary. And let us read about the two old people, Simeon and Anna, who were in the temple to praise God for the coming of the Christ-child, and to look with wonder upon his lovely little face.

The Quest of the Star

Now we will turn back to Matthew's Gospel, to the second chapter, and read about the wise men from the far-away East, who came to Jerusalem inquiring, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" They rode upon camels and were laden with rich gifts to lay at the feet of the new-born King. Let us read how strangely ignorant were the people and King Herod about the great event. And how remarkable it was that the priests and Scribes turned to examine the very prophets we have been reading to find out about the new-born King, so that they could answer the question of the wise men. Let us read how the wise men then turned their camels toward Jerusalem, and how a wonderful guide from heaven went before them to show them the way, even the star, the Jesus star, whose shining had brought them from their far-away home in Persia. We will surely not close our Bibles until we have read the whole story of the visit of the wise men to the new-born King, and then their return to their own land, not by the way of Jerusalem as they had come, for a good reason given them by God himself. And now the Christmas story is done; but let us read on a little farther in Matthew's Gospel about how the little Christ-child was saved from the ruthless King Herod, who had murder in his heart, and sent soldiers to kill all of the little children in Bethlehem, two years old and under, expecting thus to catch the child Jesus in his bloody net. Let us read about the message which God sent to the foster father Joseph, which saved the divine Child from such disaster. But, alas! many little ones did perish, although the divine One escaped. Sweet and holy is the little chapel dedicated to those little ones, which we visited in Bethlehem in 1904.

Do you notice that we have not been reading at all in Mark's Gospel? for the reason that he does not give the Christmas story, but begins with the baptism of Jesus by John. Do you notice also that we have not been reading in John's Gospel since we read about the life of Jesus before the world was made? Neither does John tell the Christmas story, but quickly leads into the witnessing of John to Jesus as the Light of the world.

A Suggestion for 1911

SUPPOSE we think little about number one.
Suppose we all help some one else to have fun.
Suppose we ne'er speak of the faults of a friend,
Suppose we are ready our own to amend,
Suppose we laugh with, and not at, other folk,
And never hurt any one "just for the joke,"
Suppose we hide trouble and show only cheer,
'Tis likely we'll have a happy New Year.

BY THE GLOW OF THE FIRELIGHT

Relations-in-Law

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

NAOMI stands on the sacred page as the immortal portrait of the perfect mother-in-law, while Ruth equally fills one's ideal of the matchless daughter-in-law. In Oriental life and story the mother-in-law is the queen of the home, the sons bringing their wives into the household where the wives at once take a secondary place. This patriarchal fashion of living was no doubt appropriate in antiquity, and still obtains in what we used to call the changeless East. The East, however, is rapidly becoming modified and a century from now it may be altogether different even in its family life from that which has ruled it through the passing ages. In the West we have never had anything that approaches the seclusion of women under the traditional régime of China and India. Practically, the mother-in-law is dearly loved and greatly honored in many a home. Theoretically, relations-in-law are not invariably friendly, and are supposed to maintain a sort of truce as enemies do when they meet under the protection of a white flag. The suggestion for this particular topic came to me in reading a peculiarly bright and clever little book which is warranted to make the dullest hour pass by in an enchanted progress. The Professional Aunt is the production of an English writer whose name is Mary C. E. Wemyss, and the publishers are Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

The story is told in the first person singular, and the aunt, who is a young woman living by herself in her own house with her old nurse as a chaperone, is supposed to be sufficiently detached from duties of her own to be at the call of her sisters-in-law whenever it suits their convenience to have her pay them a visit. Zerlina, the wife of one brother, is thoughtless, inconsiderate and selfish and has no hesitation in imposing all sorts of tasks on the children's aunt. She always speaks as if she were conferring a great favor when she permits the children to accompany their aunt to the Zoo or any other place of amusement, and if they go to the seaside she takes the opportunity of paying visits herself while the aunt is expected to supervise the children, see that they get into no danger and assume the responsibility of the absent mother.

This is quite in keeping with the role that maiden aunts were formerly expected to fill on every occasion, and it is little wonder that this young woman has her intervals of rebellion. Diana, the other sister-in-law, is of an opposite type. She lives in the old homestead and she never imposes on Beth, treating her at all times as the dearest of guests, and never making a convenience of her. In consequence, the experiences of the aunt in Diana's home are in agreeable contrast with those she chronicles concerning the home of Zerlina. There is a pretty little love story in the background which is hardly suspected until the conclusion of the book has been reached. The book sparkles with humor and is altogether charming. One of its peculiar characteristics is its dainty refinement. It ought to be a great favorite in the coming summer.

Of course it is a far cry from such a little book as this to the beautiful old idyl of Ruth and Naomi, a story that takes rank with enduring literature and that gleams like a diamond on the sacred page. One never tires of reading about the three women all widowed, one of them old, the others still very young, starting from Moab, where Naomi had known nothing but trouble, where she had lost her husband and both sons, and going back to the home of her youth and happiness. In Moab she had the heart of an exile. She longed to see once more the fields of Bethlehem and to hear the voices of her kindred. Both Ruth and Orpah loyally set out with her, but Orpah went back at her gentle persuasion to abide with her own people, while Ruth clung to Naomi as if indeed she had been the mother who bore her. The beauty of Ruth's form and face have been extolled by poet and painter, and the exquisite pathos of her devotion thrills us as often as we read it. "Entreat me not to leave thee, nor to return from following after thee, for whither thou goest I will go, where thou lodgest I will lodge, where thou diest I will die, and there will I be buried."

Naomi must have been a woman to be deeply loved, else she would not have so won the affection of this maiden of Moab. It is the more interesting to us that in the entrance of Ruth upon the Scripture narrative at this time, we find in her the ancestress of our Lord, the one who brings in to the Hebrew line the Gentile element, so that when Jesus is born of Mary the strains of Jew and Gentile meet in him.

Reading for the Blind

"I wish to suggest a resource for one of your correspondents, an elderly man, deaf and with impaired sight. There are books embossed in Moon type for the blind. The older "point" systems are too difficult for any but young pupils, as they require very sensitive touch; but Dr. Moon invented this type for the use of those who become blind in adult years. It is very simple, and may be learned without a teacher. A teacher, however, will be sent if the pupil lives within easy reach of the library. My mother learned to read it when eighty. She is now eighty-nine, and has found constant pleasure in reading these last nine years. Books in this type will be sent free by mail. Uncle Sam carries reading for the blind free. Application to the Public Library Department for the Blind will bring full particulars. Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Washington furnish these books.

Children's Carnival at Celerina

EVERY year, the children in the village of Celerina, in the upper Engadine, hold a coasting carnival, when they dress up in fantastic costumes, and led by a band of music and singing their own songs, they parade through the village streets. The boys drag the little girls on their sleds. After the carnival parade the children are treated to chocolate and cakes. They then proceed with their coasting down the long hill.

—"I HAVE been a widow for two years. On my visiting cards should I use my husband's name as in his lifetime, or insert my Christian name instead of his? R. P."

Present usage makes it good form for a widow to use her husband's name upon her card. She is Mrs. John Jones, rather than Mrs. Mary Jones. One is at liberty, however, to act according to her discretion.

The Contrasts of the Passing Show

THE passing show like a panorama is displaye every day in the columns of the newspape Here we behold in sharp relief one against th other the extremes of poverty and of wealth. Fo example, we may be told on the same day of a railwa train which is a succession of splendidly equippe and luxurious palaces, fitted out with a view in th minutest detail to be the temporary home of a grou of American millionaires. Nothing is wanting th can minister to the pleasure en route from one er of the continent to the other, of these worthy fo with whose names we are familiar and some whom we dearly love. Many a little woman doir her own work in the simplest of small household enjoys hearing that there are women and men this great land of ours whose every journey is lik a royal progress. When the people who posse wealth are by way of distributing it with rare ge erosity no one envies them its possession.

The other side of the social fabric, however, unfortunately so rough and seamy, so blurred wi tears, so hopeless of relief that there is a temptatio to doubt whether the republic is not false to its ear promise, and to marvel how it is that it does nc as once it did, extend a helping hand to the ignorar the immigrant and the poor. Th question arises in view of the ama ing contrasts evident betwe wealth and poverty whether we a really rising to our great opport nity, or are making mistakes th we may one day deplore. Sure there must be somewhere a solutic of this problem.

Closer Union of Home and School

"Ought not v mothers to do ot best to brir about closer u derstanding between home a school? Our temptation is, wh the children come home with co plaints, at once to take their view the matter without investigation. have two little lads in school, one them eleven and the other twel years of age. The older boy is favorite with his teacher, has go monthly reports and never gets in trouble. His brother is usually feud with his teacher, does not shi in tests, and is altogether a puzz although he behaves well at hom I am at present at my wit's end, a I ask other mothers to tell me wh to do with Jimmie. Your plan of becoming well a quainted with the teacher is a go one. The home and the school should be broug into harmonious and sympathetic relations.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

Synopsis of Previous Chapters

Little Jimmy Preston, aged six, gets a letter at the post office for his sister Barbara. On the way home it is lost. Barbara Preston has been trying to keep the farm, the last of her father's estate, for Jimmy, but it is mortgaged to Honorable Stephen Jarvis, who is comparatively young. He threatens to foreclose. Peg Morrison, the old farm hand, is as greatly concerned over the loss of the letter as is Barbara. She goes to Mr. Jarvis to ask for more time on the mortgage. He tells her that he is disposed to do it, and also that he is tired of his present housekeeper and would like her to fill the place. She leaves without a word. The old housekeeper at once becomes her enemy. Stephen Jarvis comes to see Barbara. He asks her to marry him and he will give her the place. She refuses. She thinks of her old lover who went away and whose fate she did not know. Jarvis drives up and insists she ride with him. He rebukes her for not asking his aid to obtain a school position he heard that she had applied for, and she tells him that she asked his aid once and was refused. He says that he had offered her another place. He renews his proposals and says her brother could live with them. He tells her that he has never loved any one else in his life. He leaves her at her own gate, where little Jimmy meets her and says Peg has found the letter. All she can make out is the post-mark. The handwriting is that of David Whitcomb, her old lover, whom she thought dead. Barbara writes to the address, Tombstone, Ariz. Jarvis meets her once more and walks with her, as she will not enter the carriage; and he tells her that he cannot give her up. He grasps her arm, but with the declaration that she is "free," she wrenches away. She makes a desperate resolution. Going to Mr. Bellows, the auctioneer, she tells him that she wishes to sell her skill and intelligence "to the highest bidder." She says a mortage on the place covers everything, and that she must sell her work for a term of years for $1,200. Against his will, he consents to auction her off. Jarvis is astonished when he finds Barbara is to sell her services.

X

"FOR Sale at Auction," Jarvis read. "A young woman in good health, able and willing to do housework and plain sewing, or could teach a little child and care for it; would like to secure a position with a respectable family for a term of years. Her services will be disposed of at private auction to the highest bidder, for a term of three, four or five years. Please communicate with B., Telegram."

Jarvis crushed the paper in his hands savagely, as though he would destroy the strange little appeal to an unfriendly world. Then he sought for and read it again, his eyes fixed and frowning.

Four men and ten women, to be exact, of those who chanced to notice Barbara's somewhat absurd little advertisement, cut it out of the doomed sheet, and placed it in securer quarters, for further consideration. Of the women four wrote to Barbara asking for references; of the men, one conceived it to be a business opportunity; one was a widower blessed with three small unruly children and little appetite for further matrimonial experience; another a rich, crabbed old miser, bent on escaping designing relatives, and the fourth an enterprising young mining engineer, very deeply in love with a pretty girl and anxious to marry her and take her with him to a region remote from civilization.

These persons, therefore, or their representatives, foregathered at the Preston farm on the morning of the eighteenth of May. With them also appeared a half dozen or so of neighbors, curious and prying, and the usual complement of shabby individuals, mysteriously aware of the unusual, and always to be seen at village weddings, funerals and public auctions.

Thomas Bellows, alert, business-like, came early in the morning.

"Say, if you want to back out, even now," he said to Barbara, "I c'n tell th' folks th' auction's off. I guess you're feelin' kind of frightened, an' sorry you was so brash; ain't you?"

"No," said Barbara composedly. "I am not—frightened or sorry." But her face was unnaturally white, and her eyes deeply circled with shadowy blue belied the statement. "Must I stand up and be—sold, like—like——"

"No, ma'am!" exclaimed Mr. Bellows decidedly. "Not by a jugful! You've heard from some of the folks interested, you said?"

"Yes," said Barbara, "I've had a number of letters. Two women are looking for a girl to do all their housework; one needs a nursery governess—she is going with her family to South America to stay five years; another requires a reliable person to look after an imbecile child."

"Huh!" exploded Mr. Bellows; "that all?"

By way of answer Barbara produced the letter of the elderly man who required a competent housekeeper, that of the widower, and that of the engineer.

"Huh!" commented Mr. Bellows, after a deliberate perusal of these epistles. "Did you tell 'em all to show up to-day?"

He looked sharply at the girl, as he tapped the rustling sheets with a blunt, tobacco-stained forefinger. "The sale 'll have to be made conditional on satisfactory evidence that the highest bidder is an honest, respectable sort of person. The's folks," he added darkly, "'at I wouldn't sell a cat to—if I cared shucks 'bout the cat."

"I'm not afraid," said Barbara, "to do any sort of work."

"Mebbe not," Mr. Bellows acquiesced dryly. "Wall, guess I'll wait till I git a good look int' their faces. I'll bet," he added, "'at I c'n size 'em up all right. An' I'll see t' it 'at the right bidder gits the goods. An' now I'll tell you what to do. You set here inside the parlor same's if you was the corpse, we'll say, at a funeral, an' I'll let the bidders come in one b' one an' kind of size you up. 'Course they've got to know the gen'ral specifications, an' mebbe they'll want to ask a few questions. But you'd best let me talk up the article like I know how. That's m' business; an' I won't make no fool mistakes."

Barbara drew a deep breath.

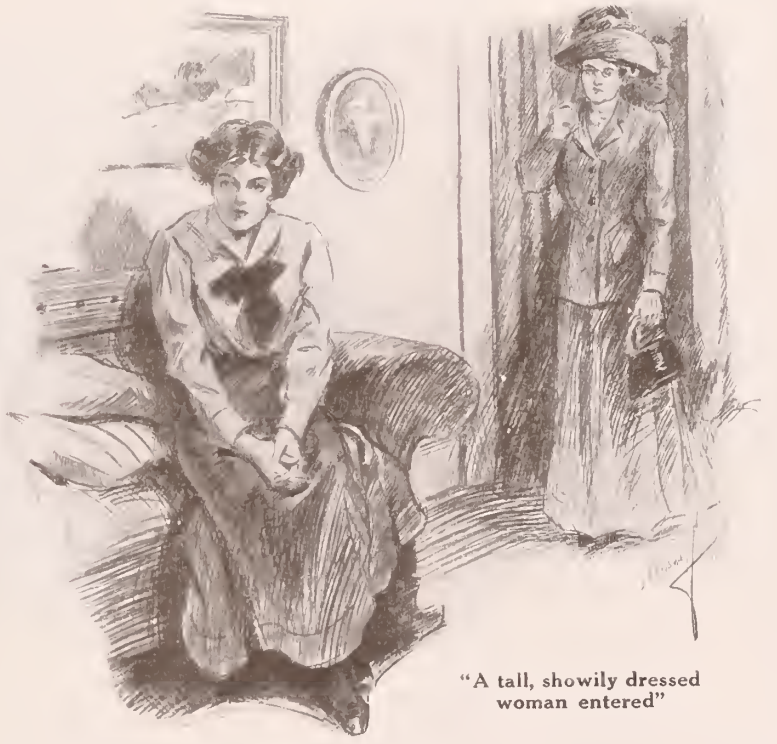
"What," she faltered, "are you going to say?"

"Oh, you don't have to worry none 'bout what I say. I'll crack you up sky high same's I would a first-class horse. All you've got to do is to set right still an' let me do th' auctioneerin'. I'll run you up to fifteen hundred, if I kin."

"Tell them I—I'll work—hard and faithfully," faltered Barbara.

She choked a little over the last word, her eyes bright with unshed tears.

"If I was you, ma'am, I'd put on a red ribbon or—or something cheerful lookin'," advised Mr. Bellows, with awkward sympathy. "I like a good bright red m'self. An' say, don't you worry none. You ain't 'bliged to accept anybody's bid, unless you feel like it. I'm goin' t' bid ye in m'self, if things don't go right. Where's the little boy?" he asked suddenly.



"A tall, showily dressed woman entered"

Barbara controlled herself with an effort.

"In school," she replied briefly. "He—Jimmy isn't to know, till—till afterward."

"Mebbe you c'n take him along," hazarded Mr. Bellows, "to — South America, say, or——"

"I shall leave him here," Barbara told him with stony calm. "I have arranged everything."

A stamping of feet on the porch brought a defiant light to the girl's eyes and a scarlet flush to her cheeks; Mr. Bellows surveyed her with open satisfaction.

"That's right!" he encouraged her. "Perk right up! You look wo'th the money now all right. I'll open the front door and let the folks pass right in. Ye don't need to do a thing but set right an' let me manage things. Biddin' 'll begin at ten-thirty, sharp!"

And he bustled away full of importance.

Barbara stood quite still in the spot where he had left her, her eyes fastened with a kind of fascinated terror upon the groups of persons coming toward the house. The day was bright and warm and the clumps of old-fashioned shrubs on either side of the driveway, lilac and bridalwreath and snowball, were in full bloom. On the other side of the fence long lines of apple trees, laden with odorous pink and white bloom, lifted their gnarled limbs to the blue sky. Barbara saw a woman pointing out the trees to the man at her side. She knew the woman, and fancied she might be speaking of the great yield of fruit to be expected that year from the once famous Preston orchards.

For two years past the girl had been toiling to bring the trees back to a thrifty condition; this spring for the first time they promised heavy returns for all her labors. She clenched her strong brown hands in a passion of unavailing protest against the cruel fate which flaunted the myriads of blossoms in her face to-day.

More people were coming than she had expected. Her face burned with shame at sight of the two shabby hired hacks among the groups of pedestrians. A woman in one of them thrust her head out of the window and asked some questions of the driver. He nodded his head and presently drew up in front of the house.

"Well, I declare!" she heard in a high-pitched feminine voice, "this seems like quite a nice place. I thought——"

The buzzing of tongues in the rooms across the narrow hall increased; the people were congregating there. She could hear the occasional sound of Mr. Bellows' creaking boots and his loud authoritative voice, as he answered questions and arranged the chairs, which two of the shabby men under his direction were bringing from various parts of the house.

There was something dreadfully suggestive of a funeral in the subdued hum of voices, the solemnly inquisitive glances leveled towards the house, and the active creaking steps of Mr. Bellows. Alone in the dim old parlor, peering through the shutters, alternately cold with apprehension and hot with shame, Barbara found herself threatened with hysterical laughter. "They will come in presently and look at me," she thought, and stiffened into instant rigidity at sound of the creaking knob.

"Yes, ma'am," she heard the old auctioneer saying, "you'll find the young woman right in here. She's ready t' be interviewed, an' I'll guarantee she's wo'th double the price anybody 'll bid for her. One at a time, if you please. An' five minutes only allowed."

The door opened, and a tall, showily-dressed woman entered. She stared at Barbara through a lorgnette.

"Are you the young woman who is to be sold at auction?" she asked in an unbelieving voice. "I am Mrs. Perkins, the housekeeper at Clifton Grange. I wrote you with reference to a boy of six. He is large for his age, and not easy to care for. But his mother, who is an invalid, won't hear to his being sent away from home. Yes; I received your references. But you don't look old enough to attempt the position I speak of. But I shall have to bid, I suppose, for we can't keep a nurse in the house. They simply will not stay through more than one of his fractious spells. And of course if we buy you, you'll be obliged to remain. Are you strong in your hands?"

"Yes, very," said Barbara, conscious of the increasing dryness of her lips and throat.

"You have rather a nice face," observed the woman dubiously. "And I do hope you're naturally lively and cheerful; you'll get along better with him if you are. If he takes a notion to you he'll be pretty good most of the Simple Scientific "Kinks"

By A. Russell Bond

AT the International Aviation Meet this year, when the Wright Brothers were testing out their aeroplane built for high climbing, they used a very crude, home-made instrument to find out how high the machine could climb per minute. The instrument was so simple that every one wondered why he himself hadn't thought of the same thing. It was merely a stick, with a tin disc sliding on it. The stick was held to the eye, and pointed at the aeroplane, and the disc was moved along the rod until it appeared to be just large enough to cover the aeroplane. Then the disc was pressed into the rod, making a mark. Knowing how much larger the aeroplane was than the disc, the operator knew how much higher the aeroplane was than the mark on the rod above the eye.

Now it is easy to see that any boy can use practically the same seheme for measuring heights and distanees. Take an ordinary yardstick and a piece of tin or cardboard with a hole in it that will just fit the yardstick. Get your chum to stand exactly 40 feet away, and set the cardboard at the four-inch mark on the yardstick. Then, sighting along the yardstick at him, with the end of the stick held as close to the eye as possible, clip the cardboard off with a pair of shears until it seems to be just as high as the boy you are aiming at. Now you can measure any distance you please. Suppose you wish to measure the width of a river. Send your chum to the other bank, and aim your instrument at him, moving the cardboard along the yardstick until it appears to just cover him. Then, if the cardboard is at the twelve-inch mark, you will know that the stream is 120 feet wide; if at the seventeen-inch mark, 170 feet wide, etc., because every inch on the yardstick will stand for ten feet. Of course, for a taller or shorter boy, a proportionately larger or smaller piece of cardboard will be required, and if you have a number of chums to sight your instrument upon, you had better cut a separate piece of cardboard for each, writing upon each card the name of the boy for whom it is to be used.

"Dan and Una again make their way to the Fairy Ring in Long-Slip Meadow"

Among the Christmas Books

EASILY the leader among this season's Christmas books is Mr. Kipling's Rewards and Fairies, illustrated by Arthur Rackham. The stories are a continuation of the Puck of Pook's Hill stories. Dan and Una on Midsummer morning, a year later, make their way to the Fairy Ring in Long-Slip Meadow and old Puck once more magics them

To see what they can see, and hear what they ean hear
Though it should have happened three thousand year.

The Boy's Book of Model Aeroplanes: How to Build and Fly Them, by Mr. F. A. Collins, and The Seientific American Boy at School, by Mr. Russell Bond, are the leading scientific books of the year in their class.

The Boy's Drake, the story of the "sea king" of the sixteenth century, and Robinson Crusoe, in beautiful new illustrated editions that should be in every boy's library.

In Line of Duty, by Captain Richmond P. Hobson; Rulers of the Surf, by J. M. Muller; Swift and Sure, by Herbert Strang, are three excellent sea stories.

Settlers and Scouts, by Mr. Herbert Strang, The Boy Ranchers of Puget Sound, one of Harold Bindless' new stories, and Fighting with Fremont, by Everett McNeil, are three best books by three best writers for boys.

Captain of the School Team, by J. P. Earl; Sherman Hale, the Harvard Half-Baek, by George H. Rand, and An Annapolis First Class Man, bubble with interest from start to finish.

And every CHRISTIAN HERALD boy will surely be interested in Healthful Sports for Boys, one of the now famous CHRISTIAN HERALD series of books being offered as a premium to CHRISTIAN HERALD boys and girls.

Stories Girls Will Like

Sidney: Her Senior Year, by Anna Chapin Ray; Betty's Silver Mine, by Helen Hunt Jackson; Sarah's Mother, by Mrs. L. T. Mead, and the Louisa Alcott Story Book, famous old favorites in beautiful Christmas editions. Betty Gaston, the Seventh Girl, by Marion Ames Taggert, whose writings remind us of Miss Alcott; A Little Princess of the Pines, by Mrs. Higgins; The Glenlock Girls Abroad, by Miss Grace M. Remick.

For Little Folks

If Santa asks you "Do you want a book?" there are beautiful new, fat editions of Grimm's and Anderson's folk and fairy tales; The Lilac Fairy Book, by Andrew Lang; In Monsterland, by the author of The Giants of the Wood; Where the Wind Blows, by Miss Katharine Pyle, a plump book of stories that begins this way:

"Hark! the wind is in the chimney; let us hear what it has to say."

The Little Gingerbread Man, with lots of frolic and fun in it; Uncle Remus and the Little Boy, a collection of some of the best of Uncle Remus's songs and stories for little folks. The Child's Life of Christ, in a beautiful new edition.

We have given the titles and authors' names of a very few of the Christmas books. If you want to know anything further about these or other books in which boys and girls are interested, Miss Porter, editor of The Cozy Corner, will gladly send you the information for which you write.

Heading for December—A Prize Winner

By HATTIE PATERSON, 13 years old

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS: I especially like the Cozy Corner this week, don't you? I like Mr. Russell Bond's Simple Science story and the Christmas books. The picture of little old Puck with Dan and Una in the fairy ring was painted by Mr. Arthur Rackham, one of the greatest living illustrators. I am especially proud of the two prize winning headings and of the little verses, by Cozy Corner boys and girls. But above all, perhaps, I love best the many letters that come pouring in to the Cozy Corner with every mail. I thank every one of you, my boys and girls, for your big generous welcome among you. You will all hear from me in time. but I am fairly swamped with letters, so you must wait your turn and do not forget The Special Prize Contest.

For Boys and Girls Over Twelve

The first prize is a beautiful aeroplane, tested and guaranteed. The girls' first prize is a beautiful gun metal watch, and there are twenty supplementary prizes besides, for descriptions in less than 300 words of something I have made myself, description to include photograph, drawing or diagram.

For best stories in less than 300 words—Subjects: Playing Alone, I Wish, Snow Fairy, there is a first-class Brownie Kodak, with finder and film ready to take pictures, and eleven supplementary prizes of best Christmas books.

For best drawings or photographs—Subjects: The Pet of the Family, Chums, A Good Game, there are twenty Christmas prizes of games, books, toys, and pictures.

For Boys and Girls Under Twelve

For best work of any kind, stories, verses, photographs, drawings, there are bisque dolls, lead soldiers and Christmas novelties.

All work in this SPECIAL CHRISTMAS PRIZE CONTEST must be in by Decemher 21. Put your name, age, and address clearly on all manuscripts, pictures, etc., and send to Miss Porter, 19 Bible House, New York City.

Let me hear constantly from you all, remember there is never a letter too many.

Our good-night verse for the week is:

The Lord hath established his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.

SANTA CLAUS IN HOLLAND

NOW children, listen to my tale,
Believe me, it is true,
When Santa Claus to Holland goes
He looks 'round for a shoe.

If Gretchen's words have gentle been Through all the long year past;
If Hans has been a thoughtful boy,
Then Santa Claus will cast

In each of these dear children's shoes
Knives, marbles, dolls, and toys,
For don't you see he knows right well
What pleases girls and boys.

But if their words have angry been,
With quarrels not a few,
Ah, then old Santa leaves a whip
Within each wooden shoe!

So little Hans and Gretchen try
To be so good and kind,
That they shall never in their shoes
A whip on Christmas find.

ime. But if he don't— Are you used o children?"

"I have a brother."

"How old?"

"Six years."

"Well, I declare! Quite a coinci-lence! Is your brother an ordinary hild?"

"He is perfectly normal, if that is vhat you mean," Barbara managed to ay. It was being harder than she hought.

"One thing more," the woman was aying. "You didn't answer one ques-ion I asked. How did you ever come o think of doing anything so strange is selling your services at auction? And why should you demand all the noney at once? If your references—our pastor's letter and others—hadn't been so satisfactory we shouldn't have hought of considerating you. But we lo want to secure some one who will tay, and of course you'll be obliged o; though I'm not allowed to bid above a certain sum. Now I shall expect a ruthful answer to——"

Mr. Bellows obtruded his puckered face into the room.

"Time's up, ma'am," he said author-tatively. "Other bidders waitin' their opportunity."

Barbara could not afterward recall all that passed during the intolerable period before the bidding began. She was vaguely aware of women, tall and short, curious, eager, clutching hand-bags, presumably containing large sums of money. There were men, too. The representative of the Boston wid-ower, the young mining engineer, more eager and determined than ever after his short interview with Barbara.

"I'll bid every cent I can on you," he assured the girl with boyish sincerity. 'You're just the one for us, and I know you'd enjoy the life out there. We wouldn't treat you like an ordinary servant; you'd be more like a friend, I can see that, and I'm sure Ethel—Mrs. Selfridge—" he blushed at his own de-ightful mendacity—"will like you very much. She'll want to see you at once, f I am the lucky winner."

It was all strange, dream-like, and for the most part intolerable. Bar-bara raised her heavy eyes once more at the sound of the hard-shut door. Stephen Jarvis stood looking at her in silence. She felt rather than saw that some great though subtle change had come over him.

"Why," he asked in a voice as changed as his looks, "have you done this thing?"

She did not answer, and he drew a step nearer.

"Tell me," he said under his breath, "will you give it up? if I—agree to all that you asked for—time to meet the payments?"

He hesitated as if choosing his words with care.

"You were right about the orchard," he went on; "there will be a good yield —more than enough." He stretched out his hands imploringly. "Spare me, Barbara," he entreated. "Don't put yourself and me to shame before them all!"

The door swung open a little way.

"Did you say the young woman was in here?" inquired a feminine voice, sharp with curiosity. Barbara caught a momentary glimpse of a militant looking turban glittering with jet beads. Jarvis shut the door, and stood against it, a tall sombre figure of authority.

"Let me put a stop to it all, Bar-bara," he urged. "Barbara! I can't let you do it!"

"It is—too late," she said, speaking slowly because of the dryness of her throat and mouth. "Don't you see? I must go on with it, and I—shall pay you—every cent!"

He drew a difficult breath that was almost a sob.

"You—will—pay—me," he repeated, a dreadful self-loathing struggling with the despair in his eyes.

Then he went away, quietly, as he had come.

Peg Morrison smote the rough brown backs of his horses with a prac-ticed slap of the lines.

"Y' remind me o' the sect in gen-'ral," he observed in a loud critical voice, as the off member of the team backed and fidgeted uneasily. "When y' want a female, woman er hoss, to go, that's th' pertickler time they elect t' stan' still, an' when y' want 'em to stan' still— Whoa, thar; can't ye?"

Mr. Morrison paused to wipe the moisture from his brow with an an-cient handkerchief of red and white, while he gazed lovingly at the wide expanse of glistening brown earth which had been deeply plowed, and more or less leveled into smoothness under the action of the harrow which the horses were dragging.

"Planted t' onions," he went on, still addressing his observations to the horses whose heads drooped sleepily toward the fresh smelling ground, "this 'ere ten acres 'll net, any way you figger it, four hundred an' fifty dol-lars t' the acre; an' that'll total— lemme see, somethin' like——"

Mr. Morrison's gaze being wholly in-trospective at this stage of the mental problem under consideration, he failed to notice the man who came swinging along the road at a smart rate of speed. At sight of the old man lean-ing meditatively against the fence, a spent dandelion stalk in his mouth, the pedestrian halted.

"Why, hello, Peg!" he called out in a clear and somewhat authoritative voice.

The stranger wore a rough suit of weather-stained tweeds and his felt hat set at a becoming angle on his curly head shaded a face bronzed by sun and wind almost to the color of the full brown beard curling away from his red mouth with a careless boldness repeated in the humorous blue eyes which roved over the shabby old figure by the fence.

He laughed outright at the puzzled look in Morrison's face.

Then he folded his arms on top of the fence.

"Well, how goes it, old man?" he in-quired. "Same lazy old horses—eh? Same job, same season of the year; same old clothes, I should say—even to the red and white bandana. Makes me feel as if I'd been dreaming. May-be I have; who knows?"

"Who be ye?" demanded Peg. "Seems 's 'o I'd seen ye somewhars; but I can't think whar."

"Don't be hasty, my friend." ad-vised the other, pulling his hat over his laughing eyes. "You've forgotten me, and so apparently has every one else. I saw Al Hewett at the station and he told me Miss Preston was un-married and still at home, and that Old Don Preston had gone to his re-ward a couple of years ago."

"I c'n see you used t' live 'round here," hazarded Peg, shaking his head, "but I can't seem t' rec'lect who ye be; unless—if I didn't know he was dead I might think you was the young feller 'at used t' teach school in th' village. Whitcomb, his name was. But he's been dead a matter o' three years."

"That being the case," said the stranger coolly, "perhaps you'll tell me about the auction up at the farm. I heard some women asking questions about it at the station."

"Auction?" repeated Peg. "The' ain't no auction at our place—not yet. But you sure do remind me o' thet young school teacher feller. He got gold crazy, an' went off——"

"Yes, I know; and got lost on a

"Neurasthenia is Starvation of the Nervous System"

THUS says one of the noted physicians of to-day.

Too often we allow ambition to sway judgment—employ all our forces with never a thought of their limitations.

True—we answer when hunger calls—feed our bodies. But when nervous force is exhausted we are heedless. Starved nerves need food just as do starved bodies. When your supply of nervous energy is depleted—you feel mentally worn out and even your muscles are tardy in obeying nerve commands—you need

Late King Edward's Physician

Dr. Ernest Ott, Marienbad: "I have been using Sanatogen for a number of years in my practice with excellent results. These results have been notably good in the case of elderly people when it was desirable to build up the strength, to stimulate the bodily functions, and to improve the circulation of the blood."

The Czar of Russia's Private Physician

Dr. Ferchmin: "My daughter, who was very nervous and anaemic, has been greatly benefited by the prolonged use of Sanatogen. Her appetite improved, her weight increased, and the color of her skin became healthier."

The Late Emperor Frederic's Private Physician

Professor Tobold, M. D.: "My experience points to the fact that patients suffering from nervous exhaustion after influenza, and who present the troublesome symptoms of neurasthenia, by using Sanatogen in a comparatively short time regain strength and vitality."

Emperor of Austria's Private Physician

Surgeon General Dr. Kerzl, of Vienna: "I have been using Sanatogen with splendid results and recommend it continually and everywhere, because I am thoroughly convinced that it is an excellent food tonic."

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TONIC

Sanatogen is a wonderful rebuilder, revitalizer—reinvigorator of starved, jaded nerves. It combines Albumen, milk's nutrient—and Sodium Glycero-phosphate—the great nerve-reconstructive—in the form of an easily assimilated, fine white powder, soluable in water, coffee, cocoa or any non-acid beverage. Sanatogen is recommended and prescribed by over 12,000 practicing physicians and is enthusiastically endorsed by prominent public people the world over, who have benefited by its use.

"OUR NERVES OF TOMORROW"—FREE

To know by what forces the nervous system is controlled—how it operates—what it needs to maintain its efficiency—is to hold the key to health. This interesting book by a prominent physician-author tells all this in simple, readable language. Send for your copy today.

Sanatogen is Sold in three sizes—$1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Do You Need Christmas Money

The Christmas season is almost here. There will be presents to give to loved ones and remembrances to friends, that will increase the expenses of the Home all around. Did you ever think of the convenience of an income that would enable you to pay some of your Christmas bills without disturbing to any great extent your regular savings? Wouldn't it be nice to say to yourself, "Now, here's Christmas again, and last year I got a little behind. This time I am going to do something special that will enable me to earn enough extra money to pay my Christmas expenses. But what shall I do? I know—I'll write to The Christian Herald for their agency plan."

We Can Help You

Write for our "agency plan." We will show you how you can earn money for Christmas. How much can you earn? Why, just as much as you want; it all depends upon you. We pay a liberal commission, and in addition we have a Salary Payment Plan that rewards you for your good work. Send us a postal card to-day. You'll be glad we suggested the idea to you. Now is the time to begin. Act quickly!

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

trail and froze to death," interrupted the stranger. "So I heard. Sad, wasn't it? Did they find the body?"

"Not," said Peg, his puzzled eyes still searching the stranger's face, "as I heard tell of."

"Then you think the coast is clear up at the farm? Is Barbara—Miss Preston—at home?"

"Miss Barb'ry was to home when I come away at six-thirty this mornin'. Say, are you——"

"I'll walk over and call on her," interrupted the young man with some impatience. "Perhaps Barbara will remember an old friend. Her eyes used to be bright enough."

Peg unhitched the harrow with fine deliberation.

"Hold on a minute," he requested, "an' I'll step with ye. It's gittin' 'long towards noon, anyhow."

He was furtively studying the younger man's face and figure as he let down the bars and drove his horses through.

"B'en doin' any school teachin' sence ye left these parts?" he drawled, as the two struck the road at a pace commensurate to the unhurried gait of the old horses.

"No," said the stranger. He plunged his hands deep in his pockets, the merriment suddenly gone from his face and eyes.

"Ye look consid'ble older'n ye did," observed Peg mildly, "an' the whiskers gives ye a different look; but come t' take notice, most anybody'd know ye, though ye must hev knocked 'round consid'able. Hev any luck minin'?"

Whitcomb laughed, throwing back his head as if the question afforded him a vast deal of amusement.

"Luck?" he echoed. "Certainly; a man's bound to strike luck of one sort or another."

"That's a fac'," agreed Peg sententiously, "an' you can't always sometimes tell one sort f'om the other. What passes fer the worst o' luck 'll frequent turn out to be fust rate. I knew a man once——"

He stopped short, his jaw dropping at sight of the numerous vehicles congregated near the house which they were approaching. "I swan!" he ejaculated, "It sure does look like—— But Miss Barb'ry never said nothin' t' me. She never tol' me——"

"I'm going in," said David Whitcomb scowling.

Several women congregated near the door stared at him with a resentful air as he made his way masterfully among them.

At one end of the long, low room, his back to the open windows, stood Thomas Bellows, a small, bare table in front of him, on which he rested the flat of his outspread hands to harangue the company ranged on either side, the women for the most part comfortably seated, the men standing in the rear, as if half ashamed to be present.

"Eight hundred, do I hear?" inquired the auctioneer in a tone of passionate protest. "It bein' understood there'll be a five years' lease on the prop'ty in question? Ladies an' gents, that ain't right! Eight hundred ain't a patch on what she's worth. I've told you what sort of goods you're biddin' on, an' you've had the opportunity to see fer yourselves. Eight hundred ten, do I hear? Who'll make it fifty? Eight hundred fifty, who'll make it nine hundred? Come! let me hear some good lively biddin' on the part of the lady in the green dress. This lady is lookin' fer an honest, permanent hired girl, she told me so b'fore the biddin' begun. She's had a terrible time with hired help; she's paid 'em high wages, an' they break her china dishes, steal her clo'es, an'——

"That's right! eight hundred sixty-five from the young man in the corner. That gentleman knows what's what; an' he's lookin' fer an A Number One helper t' take West t' help his wife o the cookin'. W'y, this is the opportu nity of a lifetime, an' if you let pass—eight hundred seventy dolla I'm offered, who'll make it nine hun dred? I'll tell ye straight, ladies, th perfec'ly healthy, honest, willin', agre able, faithful young woman ain't goi t' be knocked down t' any of ye at nir hundred dollars. Don't think it fer minute! She's goin' to git her pric an' I know what it is."

"What's going on here?" aske Whitcomb of a man in a fashionab light suit, with a diamond in his shi front. "What is the man selling?"

By way of answer the man held u his two hands, the fingers outstretche

"There you are, ten hundred dolla I'm offered; one thousand dollars Who'll make it eleven? A thousan dollars may sound like a pretty goo sum t' slap down all at once, ladies but do a little figurin', if you please You pay eighteen, twenty, twenty-fiv dollars a month for a raw, untraine foreigner; can't speak English, can cook, can't do nothin', an' once you ge her trained off she goes 's lively's flea. Five years of domestic peace i yer home! Five years of p'fect hap piness! Ain't it worth more'n measly thousand dollars? The gentle man in the corner says it is; he bid ten hundred fifty. Ten hundred fifty ten hundred sixty! Oh, come, let's ru 'er up faster! I can't stan' here a day foolin'. The gentleman in th corner again. Yes, sir, eleven hun dred! Who'll make it twelve?"

"Stop long enough to tell me wha you're selling, man," called the lates comer in a loud clear voice. "I didn get here in time to find out, and no on will tell me."

A general murmur of protest aros all over the room. A tall woman, wit a high peaked nose set midway in large expanse of purplish red fac arose.

"I'm through!" she announced acid ly. "Let me out of here."

"No, you ain't, ma'am. Kindly se down in that nice comf'table chee you've been occupyin' fer about te minutes longer. I'll answer this gen tleman quick an' t' the pint an' we' go on with the biddin'. I'm auctionir off five years o' faithful work an' ser vice; I'm auctionin' peace an' happi ness in the home; I'm auctionin' th educated brains an' han' an' feet of th smartest young lady in this 'ere Unite States of Ameriky! An' that's Mis Barbara Preston. Do you want t bid? Eleven hundred dollars I'm of fered; who'll make it twelve?"

"Its an outrage on civilization!" cried the man who had interrupted. " protest against the sale!"

"Put him out! Put him out!" shoute a dozen voices.

In the midst of the tumult some on signaled twelve hundred, and Thomas Bellows caught the figures. Pounding on the table with his mallet he com manded order.

"The sale will be continued, and I'm offered twelve hundred dollars; re member, gentlemen; remember, ladies your bids will be canceled if you do not live up to your part of the previous agreement. Spot cash before you leave the room, and a guarantee of honorable service and kind treatment. Gentlemen! Ladies! Your attention please! Twelve hundred dollars I'm offered! Twelve hundred, going! Twelve hundred dollars! Twelve hundred fifty? Yes, sir!

"Twelve hundred sixty! Thirteen hundred dollars I'm bid by the gentleman by the door.

"Come down front where we can all see you, sir. Thirteen hundred, going! Fourteen hundred! Now this is something like! Isn't there any lady present who'll make it fifteen!"

Remembering the Poor

EVERY mail brings to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD many letters expressing hearty sympathy with the work that is being done among the poor and the unemployed through the Bowery Mission. In a majority of cases, the writers send contributions for the Mission's Christmas work among the poor and for the support of the "Bread Line."

Mrs. J. E. C., Presto, S. D. ($2), writes: "I wish to add my little mite. Wish I could do more as my heart goes out to poor and suffering humanity everywhere." "Enclosed you will find $1," write Mrs. J. N. and Mrs. E. W., two good ladies of Mystic, Conn., "to help some one to have a joyful and happy Thanksgiving." "This is indeed a widow's mite," writes Mrs. S. E. T., of Norwich, Vt. ($1). "May those to whom much has been given deal generously with the poor." "I am an old man," writes N. W. T., Waterville, Me. ($2), "and have been an invalid for ten years. . . . The Bowery Mission is a noble Christian work. I wish I could do more for it." Dr. and Mrs. C. J. Lorzeaux, of Des-Moines, Ia. ($5), write: "Your appeal for the stranded unfortunates is surely full of pathos. We are glad of the opportunity to thus help some of our fellow-beings. . . . God bless you and your work." "My sister and myself want to help," writes Miss G. A., Emmetsburg, Md. ($3); "may you be richly blessed in the work."

"This is to show my gratitude to our heavenly Father in answering my prayers," writes H. T., Ellson, Minn. ($5). G. C. H., Mayfield, N. Y. ($2), writes: "I was in the Mission a short time ago and saw something of what it was doing, and am glad to help it a little." Mary E. D., Greensboro, N. C. ($5), writes: "Even this little mite may do some good, and I hope to send more before the year closes." "I pray for you and the Mission every day in my feeble way," writes A. H. D. ($2). "I have been interested in it for many years and shall be to the end of my life." E. S. W., Riverhead, N. Y. ($4), writes: "Use this in supplying the homeless with dinner." A. M., Batavia, N. Y. ($1), "I am an old woman of 86, a cripple and a shut-in and this, which was given to me for a birthday present I send to you to get something for the hungry to eat. My prayers go with it." "You will please use this to help some poor wandering ones at the Mission," writes Mrs. A. H. S., Cardington, O. ($1), "or in some poor home. I know the dear Master will bless you in your work of love." "My prayer," writes Mrs. J. K. D., Lancaster, Pa. ($1.50), "is that God may abundantly bless you with the many good things to satisfy these poor people and that it may be the means of saving many precious souls." "I believe you are doing a grand work at the Bowery Mission," writes G. H. W., Lincoln University, Pa. ($2), "and I count it a privilege to help. Would be glad if I could increase my offering a hundredfold." S. P., Allegheny City, Pa. ($2), writes: "We have been sending our mite for nearly twenty years to the Bowery Mission. This is little, but it comes out of a true heart. The Lord bless you in your work." "For years," writes Mary E. K., Indiana, Pa. ($1), "I have been deeply interested in this Mission and my gifts have been varying, according to circumstances. May God open the hearts of those who have abundance to relieve these homeless ones." "May God's blessing go with this gift," writes R. O. M., Watkins, N. Y. ($1). "This is from an invalid," writes Mrs. L. E. M., Lincoln, Neb. ($1), "and one who knows what it is to suffer." "I wish the gift could be much larger," writes G. L. H., Foreston, Minn. ($2.50); "the work is deserving of it, but we have only one-fourth of a crop this year, in this part of our State." Mr. C. A. M., Fargo, N. D., sends $25 with these characteristic words: "I want to help the old boys and the young boys of the Bowery Mission. I want to help give a Christmas dinner to a bunch of them, and I thank you for the opportunity. Remind me again some time, that I may not neglect your most deserving charity." C., Orosi, Cal. ($1), writes: "Enclosed find silver certificate—a mite for the Bowery Mission. With it I send a prayer that it may do some soul great good. I expect it is the last I shall contribute, as I am between 88 and 89, very feeble and liable to cross the river any day. The blessing of the Lord be on the friends of the Bowery Mission and upon all who labor for the salvation of the men."

Consideration for the Advertiser

THIS is the time of the year when the mail received by large business houses doubles and trebles in quantity, with the result that orders for goods are apt to be delayed. We have found it so in our own case and we know it is so with many of our advertisers. Hence, we would caution our readers not to get over-anxious if a reply is not received on the day following the receipt of the order. Of course, in ordering Christmas goods it would not do to wait too long; the goods might not be received until after the Holidays; but at least a little consideration should be allowed during this rush season.

The advertising columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contain only the advertisements of dependable concerns, all of which, as a matter of business, try to fill orders at the earliest possible moment; and it is surprising how few complaints we receive concerning delays. It is, of course, due to the character of these advertisers, who are as careful to conserve the interest of their customers as we could wish them to be.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement.

The Choice of a Christmas Gift

"Scribner's Magazine has been more read, more quoted, and more talked about within the past year than any other magazine published. Its position of leadership is established, its quality known, and its reputation for progressiveness, for filling its pages with the best, most interesting and entertaining literature and art of the time, is as widely known as its name."

In making up your list of gifts include one or more yearly subscription orders for Scribner's Magazine.

Is there anything else for $3.00 that would be more apt to please? Such a gift is for the whole year, a welcome monthly reminder of the giver.

Subscription orders should be placed as far ahead as possible. When forwarding same, ask for the very elaborate and artistic Certificate of Subscription. This document will be sent without charge to the recipient of your gift on Christmas Day, together with a copy of the Magazine.

Remit by check, draft or money order payable to order of Charles Scribner's Sons, 153-157 Fifth Avenue, New York.

RACE PREJUDICE IN THE FAR EAST

IN a recent address before the Quill Club of New York, Mr. Melville D. Stone, General Manager of the Associated Press, who has traveled extensively in the East, made an instructive address on Race Prejudice in the Orient. We are privileged to make the following extracts from his remarks:

"Whatever our ignorance of, or indifference to, the Orientals in the past, it is well to note that conditions, both for us and for them, have entirely changed within the last decade. There is a new United States and a new Asia. The Spanish War created the one; the Russo-Japanese War the other. When we acquired the Philippine Islands we assumed the government of eight millions of Orientals and touched elbows with all Asia. When Japan defeated Russia, the Oriental learned his power. He learned that a yellow man behind the gun was quite as effective as a white man. Then followed in travail the birth of the new Asia. There were actual revolutions in Turkey and Persia, a startling recrudescence of unrest in India and Ceylon, and, at this moment, China is in a state of revolutionary ferment.

"What is to be the outcome? What does all this mean for the future of the world? Let us view the problem from the political, the commercial and the moral aspects. How long will the 6,000 soldiers we have in the Philippines be able to keep our flag afloat among 8,000,000 of natives? How long will the 75,000 English soldiers in India be able to maintain British sovereignty over 300,000,000 of Asians? Believe me, these are not idle questions. Upon our ability to answer will depend the future of what we are pleased to call our Western civilization. It is not the Asian who needs educating, it is the European.

"A statesman of Japan said recently in a conversation I had with him: 'Your missionaries undoubtedly have done good for the morals of our people, but they have done far more for our health and strength as a nation. They come to us with doctors, and nurses, and hospitals and schools. Before Perry's arrival 2,000,000 infants were born every year in Japan, and for lack of proper sanitary measures they died. Now with the hospitals and sanitary and hygienic methods introduced by the missionaries, the 2,000,000 children are born, but they do not die.' This is true of every other Oriental country. Meanwhile in the countries of Europe the increase of population is slow, and in some countries, as in France, it is hardly increasing at all. In America race suicide is becoming alarmingly prevalent.

"We shall never meet the problems growing out of our relation with the Far East unless we absolutely and once for all put away race prejudice. I believe the European snob in Asia is distinctly the enemy of the civilized West. And his coadjutor in this country is a fitting criminal yoke-fellow. Let me give you some illustrations of what I mean—cases which came under my personal observation. From Bombay to Yokohama there is not a social club at any port or treaty point where a native, whatever his culture or refinement, will be admitted. At the Bengal Club at Calcutta last year a member in perfectly good standing innocently invited a Eurasian gentleman (that is, one who is half native and half European) to dine with him. It became known that the invitation had been extended, and a storm of opposition broke among the members. The matter was finally adjusted by setting aside the ladies' department of the club, and there the offending member and his unfortunate guest dined alone. The next day the member was called before the board of governors and notified that another like breach of the rules would result in his expulsion. The beating of native servants and workmen in India is a daily and hourly occurrence. It formerly was so at Hong Kong and Shanghai, but Mr. Sprague, the representative of the Standard Oil Company at Shanghai, told me that since the Russo-Japanese War, the natives would not stand it."

After discussing at some length the conditions in India Mr. Stone turned to Japan. He said: "I should be wholly lacking in fairness if I did not ask your attention to similar cases of race prejudice in which we are involved and which are equally dangerous—in other parts of Asia. Let me tell you a story as it was told me by a Harvard graduate who is now a Minister of the Japanese Crown. 'When Perry came here,' said he, 'and Townsend Harris (of blessed memory) followed him and made the first treaty with Japan,

Melville D. Stone

it was stipulated that we (the Japanese) should give them ground for their legation and their consulate compounds. We did so. Yokohama was then an unimportant place, a native fishing village. The British and the Russians and other European nations came in and we gave them like concessions. Well, as time went on the village grew into a city. Under the treaty of Townsend Harris and all the other treaties, the right of extra-territoriality was recognized. That is, whenever a case arose in which a foreigner was involved, it must be tried by the consul of the country to which the foreigner belonged. As time went on, Sir Harry Parks, the British Minister, asked for ground in Yokohama for a race-track. We cautiously suggested that horse-racing was said to be wicked by the European missionaries. But he insisted and we gave him the ground. Then we were asked for ground for a social club for the foreigners, and we gave them a plot on the sea-front, the finest piece of land in the city. Later, they wanted to play cricket and football, and finally golf. Well, we gave them ground for this. As the city grew, this cricket-field was so surrounded by buildings that it was practically in the centre of town. Understand, all of this ground was donated. Last year we suggested that we could use the cricket-field, and we offered to give in place of it a field in the suburbs. As railways had been built meanwhile, the new field would be even more accessible than the old one was when we gave it. The foreigners demurred and proposed that we buy the old field and with the purchase money they would secure a new one. Finally, we compromised by paying for their improvements and furnishing them a new field with like improvements free of cost. The question of taxation arose. Yokohama had grown to be a city of 300,000 inhabitants, with millions of dollars invested in buildings, owned by foreigners. We asked no taxes on the ground we had donated to them, but we did think it fair that they should pay taxes on their buildings. They said no, that everywhere in the West the buildings went with the ground. We submitted the question to the Americans, but they dodged the issue, saying they would do whatever the others did. Then under the law of extra-territoriality we were compelled to leave the decision to the British consul, and he decided against us. The case has now gone to The Hague Court. Finally, when I tell you that in the light of this history no native Japanese gentleman has ever been permitted to enter the club-house or the grandstand of the race-track, or to play upon the cricket-field, perhaps you will understand why there is feeling against foreigners in Yokohama.'

"We have spent enormous sums to establish schools in Japan for the education of the natives. Yet we now are seeking to deny them admission to this country and we are refusing to permit them to attend our schools.

"In the Philippines a ruffian American soldier, recruited from the purlieus of New York, shoves a native gentleman from the sidewalk of Manila with an oath, calling him a 'Nigger.' Yet that 'Nigger' is very likely a cultivated gentleman, educated in Paris.

"In India, in China and in Japan, we have been the guests who have enjoyed their hospitality, only to rise in the morning and say to our hosts, 'You must not sit at table with us.' Believe me, this condition cannot endure. Politically we are in grave danger. Commercially, with their industry and their frugality, they are fast outstripping us. They have ceased buying flour from the Minneapolis mills, because they are grinding Indian and Manchurian wheat with Chinese labor at Woosung. A line of ships is running from the Yellow River to Seattle, bringing 72,000 tons a year of pig iron manufactured at Hankow and delivered, freight and duty added, cheaper than we can produce it. In Cawnpore, India, with American machinery they are making shoes so cheaply that the manufacturers of Lynn can no longer compete with them. The cottons and silks which we one time sent to Asia are now made in Japan and China.

"Thus are we related to them politically and commercially. Socially they are all saying to us: 'Stop cheating us, stop swindling us, stop your treating us as your inferiors who are to be beaten and robbed.' Japan is crying out, 'Treat us fairly and we will go more than half way. Leave to us the question whether Japanese laborers shall go to America to annoy you, and we will stop them. But do not say that you will admit the lazzaroni of Hungary and Italy and Russia, simply because they are white, and shut us out because we are yellow.'

"You may close your doors which look toward Asia, while you open wide those which look toward Europe; you may refuse the Oriental admission to your schools, while you accord the privilege to any child of a European; you may pile import duties mountain high, and raise our standards of living to any pitch of extravagance; you may build warships without limit, and you may continue to treat the Asian as legitimate prey. But I am confident that it will not avail. As a soldier, the man of color has shown himself a right good fighting man; in commerce he has, by his industry, perseverance, ingenuity and frugality, given us pause; and before the eternal throne his temporal and his spiritual welfare are worth as much as yours or mine."

God's Great Gift*

TO understand the help to humanity which came with the advent of Jesus, we have only to look about us and see the great nations in which his name is most honored. Contrast with them the pagan and the Mohammedan world, and mark their lower civilization.

Scoffers often assail the so-called Christian nations for their wickedness. We are told that London and New York are quite as much in need of missionaries as are Madagascar and Timbuctoo.

There is more than a grain of truth in this accusation. That it is fully appreciated is shown by the large number of "city missionaries" and "settlement workers" in our larger towns.

But when we say that a land is Christian, we do not mean that every man and woman in it is a professing and consistent member of a Christian church.

We simply mean that a Christian land is one which has practically adopted Christian ideals.

Christ has left with us wonderful standards of character and of life. Up to the time of his advent, nothing so noble had been advanced as within human attainment.

Just what were the distinctive beauties of this new type of character and life?

"All true Christianity," says Dr. Josiah Strong, in his great book, The New Era, "is the religion of a person, centred in Christ, and drawing its life and power from him—that incomparable character—the most masterful in all history.

"It is difficult for us to appreciate now strange and how contrary to all preconceived ideas were many of the teachings of Christ to the men of his generation.

"Every Gentile child was regarded as 'unclean' as soon as born. All heathen were polluted and held in abhorrence.

"The teachings of the Gospels were as wide as the world. God so loved, not the Jews only, but the world, that he sent his Son. 'Whosoever,' 'all nations,' 'every one,' are frequently recurring words."

And this new and wonderful tolerance was accompanied by the command to love all humanity. Neither Jews nor Greeks respected man as such. They despised the common people. Slaves were deemed necessary to the existence of a State. They had no rights, but could be maimed or mutilated at the will of their masters.

Infants, whenever parents so willed, were exposed to death, or a worse fate, in the fields or forests. Parents could sell their offspring into slavery or kill them.

Human life was held most cheaply. For the most trifling offenses, a man was condemned to death.

Christ changed all this. He preached the sacredness of humanity, the dignity of man, and that a whole world would not compensate for the loss of a single soul.

He showed a loving respect for little children. He represented the Good Shepherd as leaving all to go and seek for the one sheep that was lost.

Christ has been called by Walker 'the discoverer of the individual."

Love, pity, meekness, spirituality, the grandeur of service as far exceeding the pomp of kings—all these Christ exalted in the face of a hard, proud generation which despised them.

Who can measure the blessed revolution that he wrought! Let us thank him anew on his birthday for the lofty deals which form one of his greatest gifts to mankind.

Christ Born in Us*

THAT was why he came—not that he should merely arrive in the world, setting a matchless example of manly virtue, and delivering sermons on a higher plane than any which the world had ever known; but that he should take his place in every heart and life.

As Nicodemus was bidden to undergo the new birth of water and the spirit, so each Christmas Day may Christ's spirit be freshly born within our souls.

Amid the turmoil of gift-making and social merriment which attend the Christmastide, few of us remember this mystic and beautiful meaning of the day. Let us steal aside for a while in the dawning of the sacred festival, and in solitude beg for the re-birth, in our choked and calloused souls, of the spirit of the Christ-child.

No one can have this spirit without longing to do his share in the saving of the world. Christ was first and foremost a Saviour. He saved not only from sin, but from its consequences.

More than ever before and among thousands who, while not naming the name of Christ, are still unconsciously actuated by his spirit and example, is this desire ruling our race. We long to save from sin and its ever resultant sorrow. On the Christmas Day, this desire becomes, as one might say, almost worldwide in its scope. It seems intolerable to all of us that at such a time any should be suffering whom we can possibly relieve.

"Humanity," said Sydney Smith, "is a modern invention,"—modern because Christian; and yet, as Henry George reminded us a few years ago, "In the richest city in the world, the mortuary reports contain a column for deaths by sheer starvation."

"It is nothing new that there is dire want in the world," says a modern philanthropist; "but there is far less wretchedness now than when Christ came. Then the 'milk of human kindness' had well nigh curdled into misanthropy in the proud Roman breast, while now there are multitudes of humane men and women who would gladly relieve want if knowing of it."

And we are going still further.

In the Proverbs we read: "If thou sayest, Behold, we knew it not; doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? And he that keepeth thy soul, doth he not know it? And shall he not render to every man according to his works?"

Our good Christians are remembering this. They are not waiting for want to come to their doors and plead for itself. The emissaries of Charity are scouring the byways to find the needy and to help them.

Many were surprised when the great Wilberforce was winning thousands to Christ by his eloquence, and was attaining to great fame.

"What is there about this man which gives him this power?" was asked, again and again; and those who knew him replied, "It is his loving heart, which is full of sympathy for all mankind."

Christ was in his heart, warming it to enthusiasm, nerving his will, inspiring his words, controlling his acts.

Let us pray on this sacred day the beautiful prayer of Newman: "Shine forth, O Lord, as when on thy nativity thine angels visited the shepherds. Change with thy mighty power this visible world into that diviner world which as yet we see not."

And let us sing with old Giles Fletcher:

> Awake, glad heart, get up and sing!
> It is the birthday of thy King.
> I would I had in my best part.
> Fit roomes for thee! Or that my heart
> Were as clean as > Thy manger was.

EAGER TO WORK

Health Regained By Right Food.

The average healthy man or woman is usually eager to be busy at some useful task or employment.

But let dyspepsia or indigestion get hold of one, and all endeavor becomes a burden.

"A year ago, after recovering from an operation," writes a Michigan lady, "my stomach and nerves began to give me much trouble.

"At times my appetite was voracious, but when indulged, indigestion followed. Other times I had no appetite whatever. The food I took did not nourish me and I grew weaker than ever.

"I lost interest in everything and wanted to be alone. I had always had good nerves, but now the merest trifle would upset me and bring on a violent headache. Walking across the room was an effort and prescribed exercise was out of the question.

"I had seen Grape-Nuts advertised, but did not believe what I read at the time. At last when it seemed as if I was literally starving, I began to eat Grape-Nuts.

"I had not been able to work for a year, but now after two months on Grape-Nuts I am eager to be at work again. My stomach gives me no trouble now, my nerves are steady as ever, and interest in life and ambition have come back with the return to health."

Gems From New Books

In the Kaiser's Capital*

THIS most interesting story of long and fruitful years in Berlin, gives, perhaps, a clearer idea of German home life than any American book of its kind that has ever been written. Dr. Dickie's wonderful tact and open and candid spirit, quite as much as his ability and his untiring zeal in the cause of Christ, have opened to him scores and hundreds of German hearts and homes, from the Kaiser's palace to the laborer's cot.

His book, therefore, contains stories of the intimate life of great Germans, such as few have been able to relate out of their own experience, and no one tells a story better than Dr. Dickie. Here we have a most picturesque description of Berlin itself, so complete that a stranger, after reading it, could almost find his way unaided about its main streets. He gives also an account of the difficulties and the compensating pleasures of housekeeping in Berlin, which in many features differs widely from that in America. The wonderful German army is described as it appears in its manœuvres and reviews, and even an advocate of universal peace is thrilled by Dr. Dickie's dashing picture of the brilliant troops which are the pride and joy of the German Emperor.

But the chief charm of the work lies in its delightful sketches of the great men whom Dr. Dickie has met intimately in Berlin. He has been thrown into personal relations with William II. on many occasions, and this book is dedicated to him by his express permission. One of his famous sermons is fully given here, and many new anecdotes are related of him. The veneration and love of the German people for the Empress are emphasized in Dr. Dickie's narrative. Her wonderful tact is illustrated by many instances in which it was displayed in the hospitals, on the streets and in her home. She surely fills her place as conscientiously and faithfully as her husband endeavors to fill his.

Here are charming new stories of Mark Twain and other American visitors to Berlin. Equally amusing and illuminative are the numerous anecdotes of illustrious Germans, such as Emil Frommel, the late Court Chaplain; Adolph Stoecker, the great preacher; Joachim, the violinist; Menzel, the historic painter; Harnack, the wonderful theologian; Fleiderer, Grimm, Mommsen, and many others.

Such is Dr. Dickie's marvelous power of depiction that one rises from his vivid pages feeling that one has really met and talked with the fascinating personages who throng there.

In his appendix, he tells with great simplicity the story of his truly Herculean labors in building the Berlin Church, in which he takes occasion to recognize most gratefully the help extended to him at that time by Dr. Klopsch and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

This book will make an admirable holiday or anniversary gift. It is brimful not only of humor and interest but of helpful information. It is of especial value to those intending to visit Germany, while in those who have been there it will revive many agreeable memories. We predict for it a wide popularity.

* In the Kaiser's Capital, by J. F. Dickie, D.D., Pastor of the American Church, Berlin, 1894-1908. New York. Dodd, Mead & Co. 315 pp. $2.00.

53,000 Bibles in Hotels in a Year

DURING the past year a great Gospel work has been carried on quietly but energetically by Mr. W. E. Henderson, the new Secretary of the Gideons. Never have so many Bibles been placed in hotels in so short a time. At their last meeting, the British Commercial Traveling Men's Christian Association rejoiced over the fact that they had placed over 500 Bibles in British hotels during the year. They were astounded to learn that during the past twelve months the Gideons of America had placed over 50,000 Bibles in American hotels.

Mr. Henderson has traveled from city to city, speaking in churches and halls, and many business men have become interested. He has placed or arranged to place Bibles in the guest rooms of hotels in thirteen leading American cities; 1,279 Bibles are alloted to the guest rooms of hotels in St. Paul, 1,000 in St. Joseph, 1,000 in Birmingham, Ala., 1,500 in Detroit, 1,000 in Duluth, 2,000 in Kansas City, 2,100 in Omaha, 1,000 in Atlanta, 2,500 in Minneapolis, 2,100 in Denver, 1,000 in Memphis, 1,500 in Toledo, and other leading commercial cities are also preparing to place Bibles in their hotels.

Mr. Henderson is trying to interest the Laymen's Evangelistic Council of Chicago, and the Christian business men of that city, in his plans to place 6,000 Bibles in Chicago hotels. The LaSalle and other leading hotels there have consented to the placing of Bibles in their guest rooms. The American Bible Society is furnishing a special edition of the Bible for this purpose at less than cost. In this way the Gideons are able to place a splendid large clear-type Bible in the guest room of a hotel for thirty-two cents. On the inside of the front cover of these Bibles is a printed slip telling where to find the most comforting and helpful passages of Scripture for different circumstances and conditions.

When Mr. Henderson was in Omaha, a leading manufacturer told him that one of his best salesmen had been exceedingly worldly. A short time ago he telephoned from his hotel that he was sick and would like to have some one call and see him. One of the traveling salesmen went to see him and on his return told the president of the company that he found the sick man lying on his bed reading a Bible and he asked him how this came about. He said, "Some months ago, I was at Fort Dodge, Ia., and discovered a Gideon Bible on my dresser. It was the first Bible I had noticed since I was a boy. I opened it and began to read and found a number of chapters that my mother used to read to me, and became deeply interested. At Cedar Rapids I found another Bible in my room, and at Waterloo I found another. I bought a Bible of my own, and I have been carrying it in my grip and reading it ever since."

In a church in Kansas City a lady testified that her two brothers had been converted through reading Gideon Bibles in the hotels. Partly as a result of her testimony, a freewill offering of $45 was made for the Gideon Bible fund. Not long ago Mr. Henderson met an actor on a train who said, "I believe the Gideons are doing a most practical and needed Christian work. Almost everywhere I go, especially in the West and Northwest, I find a Bible in my bedroom at the hotel and it makes the hotel seem like a home and the landlord like a brother."

Any one desiring to know more about this work can do so by addressing Mr. W. E. Henderson, Secretary The Gideons, 17 Quincy Street, Chicago, Ill.

From Keyboard to Manager

THEODORE N. VAIL, the newly elected president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, is a self-made man. He will be no ornamental figurehead in any sense, for he understands the ramifications of the business better probably than any other man. It was with the telegraph key that young Vail first opened the door to opportunity and entered upon the career which has brought him to the highest positions possible to attain in the business or professional arena. From the very beginning he determined to succeed, and he did not spare himself in his efforts. He comes of a family of workers, men who wanted to achieve something, to do something in the world that others had not done. His uncle, Alfred Vail, a mechanical engineer, was a co-laborer of S. F. B. Morse, of telegraph fame, and a taste for mechanics ran in the blood of Theodore Vail, but his parents did not intend him for a mechanical trade, nor did they ever think of turning him to the art which was to lead him to such conspicuous eminence.

In 1844 they moved to Carroll County, Ohio, and there Theodore Vail was born July 16, 1845. He was but a year old when the parents came back to Morristown, and there around the old Speedwell Iron Works the boyhood of the future telegraph president was passed. He attended the Morristown common school, then the Morristown Academy, and turned his attention to medicine, which he studied for some time. His mother was pleased with her boy's choice of a profession, but fate had not destined him to be a disciple of Esculapius. The call of the telegraph clicked in his ears and young Theodore eagerly responded. He spent several months in the iron works trying to master all that was then known of the undeveloped art. When he considered himself proficient enough he came to New York, where he succeeded in getting a position as operator.

This was a beginning, but the young man was anxious to forge ahead as rapidly as possible. His parents at this time moved to Iowa and Theodore accompanied them, thinking to improve his position. He obtained a place with the Union Pacific, and soon became a full-fledged and proficient operator. He gave such satisfaction that his work attracted the notice of General Grenville M. Dodge, chief engineer of the Union Pacific, who decided to assist the young man in his plans and ambitions. His promotion was quick, and soon he was made assistant ov the entire mail service of the road.

He discharged the responsible dut of this position so efficiently that ir few years he was elevated to the s perintendency of the whole system a sent to Washington. To his organ ing and his methods this road owes t remarkable prestige which it boasts the present time. While in Washi ton he became acquainted with Grah Bell, who was then experimenting w the telephone, and just as his un helped Morse to perfect the telegra he did much to assist Bell with the l ter's great invention. Vail resigr his superintendency of the Union P cific Road to develop the telephone, a in this direction as everywhere else was successful. His efforts were sponsible for the gigantic Americ Telephone and Telegraph Company.

After seeing his efforts bear abu dant fruit, he left active service on t company and devoted himself to ra road and electrical enterprises Europe and South America. When had brought his projects to a high gree of success he sold out to Eu pean and South American capitalis

On his return to the United Stat Mr. Vail was made president of t American Telephone and Telegra Company, a position which carr with it the presidency of every su sidiary company in the country.

The St. John, N. B., Revival

ON November 6, Rev. R. A. Torrey began a four weeks' mission in St. John, N. B., at the Queen's Rink, a large auditorium in a central part of the city. The mission is the first ever held in Canada by laymen, and much good is being accomplished.

The mayor and common council placed at the disposal of the laymen all the benches from the public parks and also loaned them the city's powerful heating apparatus on wheels, which was taken to the rink and connected with pipes and radiators sent there by private citizens. In this way the big building was seated and heated at little expense.

A local choir of 500 voices, under the leadership of William McEwan, with Miss Mary Anderson as pianist, proved an inspiring feature of the mission. The attendance has been the largest ever witnessed at religious services in St. John and on several occasions has been greater than the large hall could accommodate. The Children's Service, for which the public schools had an early closing, was one of especial interest. Rev. W. S. Jacoby and Miss Moody Parker assisted the others named. W. M. P. M. L.

Breeds of Bees

TO the average man a bee is a b just as a fly is a fly. As a matt of fact there are quite as many var ties of honey bee as there are breeds domestic cattle, and the skilled apiar selects and crosses them for the pu pose of producing the greatest and t best producers of good honey.

Like our breeds of cattle, the diff ent kinds of bees are named from t lands in which they most abound a from which they were imported ir this country. We have the Germa or black bees, the Italians, the Syria or "Holylanders," the Caucasians, t Cyprians, the Egyptians, and ma other varieties.

The blacks, until fifty years a were the only domestic bees in t country. They were brought over the first German settlers in Penns vania, long before the Revolutic Although combative, the black be are fairly good honey gatherers. Th are now being superseded by or cross with the imported Italian, which is more beautiful and a much gentl creature, in addition to being a s perior collector of nectar.

Suffragettes on the Warpath

ONCE more the militant suffragettes of Great Britain have gone upon the warpath and made the leaders of the House of Commons feel that they must run the gauntlet between Westminster and their places of residence.

The two things which led to the last outbreak were, curiously enough, the release, at the order of Winston Churchill, of a number of suffragettes who had created a disturbance, and a statement by Premier Asquith really favoring the cause these women are supposed to represent. Churchill's order took away the hope of the arrested women that they could go to jail and thus claim to be martyrs to their cause. The women who have been committed to jail for breaches of the peace are always made prominent figures at suffragette demonstrations after their release. Sometimes they are met at the jail gate by processions, presented with flowers and escorted to seats of honor on the top of tally-ho coaches.

The second and immediate cause was a declaration made in Parliament on November 22. The premier in the course of a speech said that if his party won at the approaching elections the government would give facilities for the consideration of a woman's franchise bill so framed as to admit of free amendment. There was a meeting of the suffragettes at the same hour at Caxton Hall. Miss Christobel Pankhurst was chairman and her mother was on the platform. Some one brought her the gist of the premier's speech and she called for immediate action.

"We will answer his challenge at once. By his procrastination and evasion the premier has declared war," she cried.

She rushed from the hall, followed by hundreds of women. They bore down on Whitehall and rushed the four surprised policemen off their feet. The policemen tried to hold the women back from Downing Street, where stands the premier's official residence. The women knocked off their helmets, kicked their legs while other punched at them with their banner staves. Pulling and drawing from one side to the other, the women battered the policemen out of the way. Suddenly fresh policemen arrived on the scene and drove the mob back. Women lying on the ground grasped the officers' legs and pulled them to the sidewalk. The policemen pulled the prostrate women out of harm's way when they could reach them.

The scene of the encounter after the women retired was covered with broken police helmets, torn hats and dresses, bits of ribbon, and handbags.

The women, no whit discouraged, broke into small bands and went in search of various cabinet members. They went to the homes of Sir Edward Grey, Winston Churchill and one or two others, and threw stones through the windows.

One party discovered Mr. Asquith, who, all unconscious of danger, was walking along a side street. They rushed at him, one struck him on the head with a bamboo rod, others struck at him with their bare fists. Several policemen rescued the premier and got him into a cab. As the cab started one woman drove her fist through the glass door in an effort to deliver one more blow.

A short time afterward another crowd of women saw Mr. Birrell, a member of the cabinet, strolling through St. James' Park. In a moment his hat was knocked off and he was struck in the face. They kicked his legs and tried to drag him down. Only the timely arrival of the police saved him from more serious injury. Mr. Birrell is an elderly man and not strong, and he has not yet recovered from the effects of the attack.

The police arrested nearly two hundred women during the day. Some were discharged, but a number were sent to jail for two months, the magistrate declaring that they had been too leniently dealt with in times past. The glass manufacturers so far are the only ones who have profited by the demonstrations.

Revolutionists Still in the Field

THOUGH Diaz has got an iron grip on the political situation in Mexico and is apparently not losing much sleep over the revolution started by Madero and his followers, yet the embers of the outbreak still flicker at intervals as if waiting a favorable opportunity to break out into flame. Madero has not been captured though efforts have been made repeatedly to locate him. He has expressed the determination to wage war to the bitter end and the Mexican regulars, though brave enough, do not evince a strong desire to meet him in some of his mountain fastnesses. He has made a number of raids on towns in northern Mexico recently, and the garrisons do not know but at any moment there will come a patter of bullets about their lodgings, and the fierce yell which always accompanies the onslaught of the Maderists. Unless he is captured the region in which the rebel leader makes his headquarters will be in a constant state of political turmoil and there will be just so much territory over which Diaz does not hold undisputed sway.

Diaz has been receiving delegations from the different States, pledging him their loyalty, and in response to an address of the chairman of a committee from Oaxaca, he said: "The present difficulties do not merit my giving my personal attention to the disturbance." He then stated that if the insurgents ever mustered five thousand men he would take the field at the head of the Mexican troops to crush the uprising. Diaz was inaugurated for the eighth time as President of Mexico on December 1.

The City of Mexico has apparently recovered from its excitement, and there seems little interest in what Madero and his bands may be doing so far from the plaza that he can never interrupt the band concerts and the endless promenade which seems to be the chief diversion of the socially inclined Mexican.

Among the Workers

—Evangelist Orin C. Baker and Mrs. Baker sailed on November 30 to spend three months abroad, visiting Egypt and the Holy Land. Mr. Baker is superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City, and the leader of a Bible class of over one hundred men at the West End Presbyterian Church.

—A Christmas Bazaar, arranged by the Waldensian needlewomen, will be held at the chapel of the Church of the Saint Esprit, 45 East Twenty-seventh Street, New York City, on December 15, 1910, from 3 P.M. to 10 P.M. The proceeds are to be used for the Waldensian Church work to be conducted in New York City. Saleswomen will dress as Waldensian peasants. There is no charge for admission.

—The Bethesda Leper Home at Surinam, D. W. I., needs bandage material (old linen, cotton, cheese cloth, old sheets, pillow slips, etc., no colored material). The managers hope the good people who have already helped through The Christian Herald will assist again by sending such material to this office. Mr. R. Dan Wolterbeek, No. 1-3 Ann Street, New York, will forward it to the Home as heretofore. Rolls should be not larger than two or three inches in diameter and bandages from two or three inches wide. All packages should be prepaid.

Foster Made $19,484.83 Last Year From His Million Egg Farm

Five years ago Joel M. Foster, a young city man, decided to go into the poultry business. He was looking for a suitable occupation, he was vigorous and energetic, and believed that there was a fortune to be made raising chickens. He had no experience. He bought and stocked a little farm near a big city, but for a time he had only failures. His poultry house burned with all its contents, and he had to begin anew. The next year rats destroyed half his flock, but he surmounted these and other difficulties, always thinking, planning and experimenting. To-day he is at the head of the largest EGG PRODUCING plant in the world, with 20,000 laying hens and will market this year between two and three million eggs.

Last year Mr. Foster made $19,484.83 from his Million Egg Farm. Most of it was from commercial eggs; $6000 was income from sales of "Day-Old Chix;" the rest from miscellaneous products of the great Rancocas Farm.

Read the Whole Amazing Story in "The Million Egg Farm"

We have induced Mr. Foster to tell his experience for the benefit of poultrymen everywhere. The beauty of his system is that the principles can be applied just as well to the farmer's flock or the suburban lot as to the still larger plant of the man who wants to go into egg raising as a profession. The book tells you how to start and be successful with a few or many hens. It explains the Rancocas Unit, into which his gigantic flock is divided. It gives estimates and advice for the beginner with a little flock. It tells how Foster began with a $300 investment and 100 hens, and how you can begin. It gives all the Rancocas formulas for mating, hatching and feeding—the result of his experience. It gives the egg production day by day—proof that his formulas are successful.

All Figures Are Certified

To satisfy ourselves that the figures were correct we employed the well-known firm of Lybrand, Ross Brothers and Montgomery, certified public accountant, to make an exhaustive two weeks' examination of the books and records of the Rancocas Farm. The result of their findings is given in the book. Nothing has been held back. The failures as well as the successes are set forth.

Gathering the Eggs in the Early Afternoon

We believe no other poultryman has ever thus laid open his business secrets and experience to the world.

What Farm Journal Is

Farm Journal is made for everyone in town or country who raises poultry, eggs, fruits, vegetables, milk, butter, honey, as well as horses, sheep, grain and cattle. It has the largest circulation of any farm paper in the world, over 750,000 copies. It is devoted to housekeeping, dressmaking, recipes, and bright, fresh reading for boys and girls. It is brief, crisp, condensed and PRACTICAL. No long-winded essays, "Cream, not Skimmilk" is its motto. It is now running a series of articles called "Back to the Soil," true stories of experiences of city people who have changed to country life. They are helpful and intensely interesting. Farm Journal never prints a medical or trashy advertisement, and its columns are all absolutely reliable guide in buying. Most of its subscribers pay from five to ten years ahead. It is a special favorite with women. Everyone who has a garden, yard, flower bed or even a kitchen ought to have this bright, cheery, useful home paper. Farm Journal takes pride in being "Unlike Any Other Paper."

Farm Journal a Paper for City Folk, Too

You do not have to be a dweller on farms to enjoy Farm Journal. If you have a little patch of real ground which you want to put to some better, more useful purpose than a grass plot, Farm Journal will give you the help you need, and if you feel the call to the country and would like to own a few hens and enjoy poultry raising, Farm Journal and the Million Egg book are indispensable. Farm Journal four years and the Million Egg book for $1.00 is the greatest subscription bargain of the year, but we don't want you to subscribe for Farm Journal solely to get the book, we want you to join the three-quarters of a million army for the Farm Journal itself; you will find it the wisest, most helpful, cheerful and entertaining of counselors and friends. A Book Worth Reading—Worth Owning!

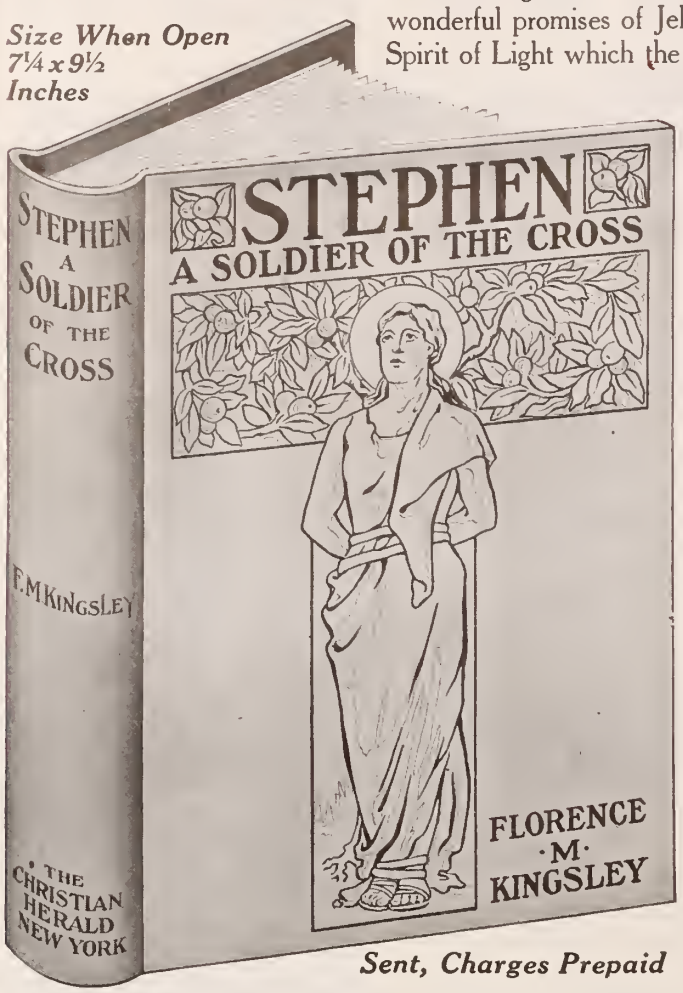
"AND Stephen, looking about on the seventy men before whom he stood, the heads and leaders of that forlorn remnant of the chosen people, desolate because of their rebellion against the God who had borne with them so long and patiently, was moved to bring again the wonderful promises of Jehovah to their minds. So plain did it all appear to him, filled as he was with that Spirit of Light which the Lord had vouchsafed according to his Word, and which he had also promised to pour out freely upon all men. A glorious hope was stirring in his breast as he looked from one to the other of the stern faces before him. Hatred indeed and stubborn self-satisfaction he saw written thereon, but what could stand before the all-powerful Spirit of truth? What if it should be granted him to mightily convince these men; to see, perchance, some such glorious exhibition of God's grace as had been manifested at Pentecost?"

Size When Open 7¼ x 9½ Inches



Sent, Charges Prepaid

Read Mrs. Kingsley's wonderful story. Stephen is little known. Only the last day of his mortal life stands out with any clearness in the writings of past ages. Mrs. Kingsley has taken Stephen's life and built from it a story that kindles a deep appreciation of this lovable and unselfish man.

Since Ben Hur, no story has so vividly portrayed the times of Christ. Mrs. Sangster, on page 468 of her Story Bible (a Christian Herald premium), says: "Stephen was so good and true that there were wicked men who hated him. They dragged him up to the council of priests and set up false witnesses, who said many things of Stephen which were made up by themselves. All who sat in the council, looking steadfastly on Stephen, saw his face shine like the face of an angel (7th chapter, Acts of the Apostles). Never were braver words spoken by any man on earth. He was the first of the noble army of martyrs, the first to bear witness to his faith unto death."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be sent for one year, our 1911 Baby Calendar, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch, together with the 369-page book, "Stephen, A Soldier of the Cross"—ALL FOUR FOR ONLY $1.85

For the Woman, the Man, the Boy and the Girl!

IN The Christian Herald Home Library of Eight Books you won't find a single line of fiction. But each book is full of practical suggestions and helps that can be made very useful in most homes—in your own home. For months and months we have questioned people of authority, talked with editors and writers, book publishers, housewives, and many others just as competent to advise, in order to learn all about the problems of the home. What the woman and the man, and the girl and the boy all wanted to know, and should know. These were the things we sought for. We wanted these books to serve, to be helpful and practical.

The Christian Herald Home Library is full of information. Every word, every line, every page of these Eight Books were selected with the needs of the entire family in mind. There is a book for each. In the boy's book he will find the rules of all the clean games boys should play; the girl will find how to improve her time both socially and in a business way; the woman will find ways and means of practising household economy, arranging entertainments for school and church; the man will find much of solid value to him. There is something for each, and much for all. They are clean, and may be read aloud in the most varied family group to the keen pleasure and benefit of all. Each book is complete in itself, and the whole family can be entertained at the same time.

How to Secure the Books

Each book is 4x6 inches in size, well bound in cloth, and clearly printed on good paper. They were written expressly for us, and the only way they can be obtained is through us. The first announcement of this new Library met with an enthusiastic response, predicting an unusual demand for these volumes. We therefore advise you to send us your order early to avoid any disappointment.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be sent for one year—52 issues—new or renewal, together with the eight Books in The Christian Herald Home Library, all charges prepaid; a copy of our 1911 Baby Calendar, and a Photogravure of Louis Klopsch—ALL FOR ONLY $2.50

If you do not want The Christian Herald Home Library complete, you may order single copies by simply adding 20c. for each volume desired to the subscription price of The Christian Herald. Thus one book and The Christian Herald for $1.70; two books and The Christian Herald, $1.90, and so on.

CHRISTIAN MARTYRS GIVEN TO THE LIONS

CHRISTIANITY is the greatest fact in history. The early Christians endured martyrdom rather than forsake Principle. The picture shown herewith, from Ridpath's History, depicts 87,000 people assembled in the Coliseum at Rome to witness the Christians given to the lions. In such a scene may be read the inevitable doom of the Empire that ruled the world. The blood of the Martyrs is the seed from which Christian civilization sprang. If you would know the history of mankind—every sacrifice for principle, every struggle for liberty, every conflict and every achievement, from the dawn of civilization down to the present time--then embrace this splendid opportunity to place in your home the world-famed publication, CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS have shown wonderful appreciation of our great offer. We have shipped this splendid history to delighted readers living in every State in the Union. Next to the Bible, this is in many respects the greatest work ever written. In the past 20 years over 200,000 sets have been sold at more than double our Special Price, and every purchaser is more than satisfied. More sets of Ridpath's History have been sold than any other set of books in the English language. Can you imagine a greater testimonial for any work? No other history in any way compares with it. The English-speaking world has endorsed Ridpath's as the only History of the World worth having.

RIDPATH in your home means you need never spend a lonely evening. You can associate with the world's heroes; you can cross the Rubicon with Cæsar, after which Rome was free no more. You can sit at the feet of Socrates, the loftiest genius of the ancient world. You can kneel at the shrine of Lincoln, "the greatest character of all time, the gentlest memory of our world." It is ennobling to commune with these children of destiny. To be associated with great men is to be great one's self, and you will add to your store of knowledge which is power, and to the richness of your life.

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendor; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written.

RIDPATH throws the mantle of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there—patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles, with three hundred and fifty Greek ships, smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth. and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym of savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there—gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another century—the most colossal world-figure of his time!

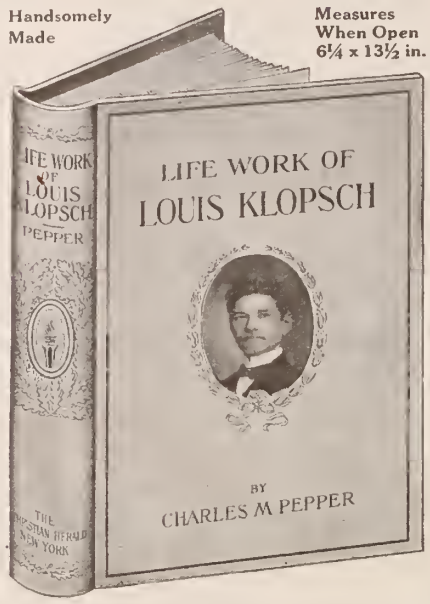
A Twentieth Century Knight of Mercy

Over 40 illustrations picturing many interesting scenes in this country and foreign lands, all contributing to make this great book one of interest and entertainment to all who read it. Enjoy it yourself.

Handsomely Made

Measures When Open 6¼ x 13½ in.



413 pages. Weighs 33 ounces. 6¼x9⅛ inches closed—13½ inches when open. Bound in dark green cloth. Titles stamped in gold. Portrait of Dr. Klopsch on cover page framed in laurel wreath of gold.

AT the amazing rate at which the Life Work of Louis Klopsch is now being put in circulation, it promises to take rank among the "best sellers" of the season. Every day witnesses a steady increase in the demand for it. The secret of its remarkable popularity is that the life-story it presents is one of universal human interest. It appeals both to the head and the heart. To those who read it, it is a moral and spiritual tonic, giving wider and finer views of life, and showing how the highest results may be realized from the humblest talents. Every man and woman has golden opportunities in life that must be seized ere they pass away. The Life Work of Louis Klopsch tells how you may grasp these precious opportunities and turn them to honorable advantage.

Mr. Pepper has called Dr. Klopsch a "Modern Knight of Mercy," and it is a happy and appropriate appellation. All through the narrative of his wonderful life, there runs a strain of knightly adventure, of peril and danger encountered and safely passed, of timely succor to the weak and distressed, of a royal generosity that recognized all men as brothers. It has been beautifully said that Louis Klopsch had "the light heart of a boy and the soul of a hero," and these extremes of his character are illustrated in Mr. Pepper's book, where he tells of Dr. Klopsch's great compassionate love for the poor children of the tenements, who clustered about him, showering him with endearments, and, by contrast, when he describes the sad, silent figure that walked through the India cholera camps, succoring the dying, and himself facing death at every step of the way.

Letters warmly praising the Life Work are pouring in upon us. It would be tedious to reproduce these, even if space permitted; but all express the highest satisfaction with this truly splendid volume. "An intensely interesting book," writes B. T. Gerry, N.Y., "and such good print." "Received the Life Work and was amazed at its size and finish," writes Miss E.M.B., Philadelphia; "it is beautifully gotten up, type large and clear and neatly bound. It will surely be an inspiration to all who receive it." Mrs. W. S. B., Ardsley, N.Y., writes: "He was a grand, good man!" "The book tells of many great and worthy deeds done through him. His memory will ever be held sacred in the hearts and homes of a loving nation—I might say, the whole world," writes Mrs. I. A. K., Rome, N.Y. "The Life Work of Dr. Klopsch I shall love and value very highly," writes J. A. S., Geneva, N. Y. "It will prove an inspiration during my earthly journey to the 'Better Land.'"

Add 50 cents to your CHRISTIAN HERALD subscription, new or renewal, and we will send the CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, our 1911 Calendar, a photogravure of Louis Klopsch and the "Life Work of Louis Klopsch," all for $2.00.

TUNNEL-BUILDER McADOO, SURROUNDED BY HIS STAFF OF ENGINEERS AND FOREMEN

A MAN WHO MADE DREAMS COME TRUE

THERE is one man in New York to-day who has been able to make the lives of over 200,000 people who toil in the great sky-scrapers more comfortable, a sufficiently noteworthy achievement, which ordinarily would make the one who had accomplished it feel that he could lean back in calm content and not be troubled with any more problems of serious import. As the man is William Gibbs McAdoo, the foremost master in the world to-day of transportation problems, you will not find him taking a rest from his labors. You will be more likely to find him at his desk at seven in the morning, and if you should happen by at seven in the evening you might see him in the same place, working on some scheme to increase the comfort of the suburbanite and also of that great proportion of the city dwellers who would like to leave the modern cave dwellings and twentieth century pueblos and live in Suburbia if Mr. McAdoo would fix it so they could get there.

Citizens of every growing municipality all over the country should study Mr. McAdoo's methods, and be well acquainted with what he has done and with what he has offered to do to extend the subway facilities of Manhattan and Brooklyn and other sections of Greater New York. Of course the problem of transportation in and out of New York differs widely from that to be met elsewhere, but many cities are suffering from congestion and clamoring for new ways to get from business centres to their homes. As the cities increase in size all will have to devise new ways of moving a large part of the population in a few hours each day. Subways have been started in several other cities, and there is a call for more. In connection with this Mr. McAdoo says: "The problem of New York will soon be that of Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco. The rapidly growing cities will be unable, within our time, to handle all of the traffic in the streets. It must go underground."

Two or three things have made Mr. McAdoo stand out in odd contrast to most great figures in the financial and industrial world. He is a dreamer, and the upper part of his face shows this in a marked degree. He has a pleasant dreamy expression about the eyes, but just a ways below is a strong fighting jaw significant of that other quality in his makeup which has made the dreams come true. In addition to this he has proved himself a discoverer. He first discovered the way to relieve the great congestion in New York and get people out to New Jersey, where there is room for several hundred New Yorks; he also made the discovery that the interests of the people and the interests of a great transportation corporation are one and the same. It sounds rather novel, but it has been demonstrated satisfactorily to any fair-minded man by the human dynamo who sits in an office on one corner of the ninth floor in the Hudson Terminal Building and radiates ideas and energy which inspire every one in his great working force, from the banker who is anxious to have Mr. McAdoo take a few millions off his hands, down to the man in overalls digging an extension to the Sixth Avenue Subway.

Mr. William G. McAdoo in His Private Office

The man who put the tunnels under the Hudson River has long ceased to be a figure of only local prominence. Every one who comes into New York from any part of the country except New England and Eastern New York, comes in through one of his "holes in the ground," and every one from the Eastern States going West by way of the metropolis, is sped on his way through one of these exits.

One of the odd things about the tunnel-builder is that although he is a master of engineering problems such as were regarded as of insurmountable difficulty until he did them, he is not an engineer but a lawyer. He was born in Georgia in 1862. His ancestors were Scotch and served in nearly all of the wars which this country had from colonial days to the present, and they were interested in national and State affairs and in education. Mr. McAdoo's father served in the Mexican War and in the Civil War on the Southern side. After its close the family moved to Tennessee, and young McAdoo went to college until the junior year was reached. Then he found it necessary to go to work, and he became a clerk of the circuit court. He kept on studying, however, and also absorbed a great deal of law. Absorbed is the correct word, for Mr. McAdoo literally absorbs information of some kind every moment, and always has some subject in hand. Even at this day he studies French from a phonograph while he shaves. He was admitted to the bar and practised law in Tennessee until he was twenty-nine, when he came to New York.

He opened an office in Manhattan and had his home in New Jersey. This was in 1892. Every morning he took part in the rush and crush to get across the ferries, and in the mêlée and free-for-all contest to get back at night. He saw that conditions were growing worse and would soon be intolerable with New York growing at the rate of a fair-sized city every year. New York at that time had no tunnels, no subways, and only one bridge—the old Brooklyn Bridge, which was already loaded far beyond the plans of its builders. More ferries would not be a great help; they were only a makeshift and could not be depended upon. Many a time when he

WHEN JESUS COMES AGAIN

An Appropriate Sermon for Christmas Day, by the Late Dwight L. Moody*

I WANT to show what Scripture says about the state of things that Christ is going to find when he comes back. We celebrate Christmas in honor of the first Advent; how will things be on this old earth when he comes again?

In the third chapter of the last letter Paul ever wrote, which was written to Timothy, we find what he says will happen in the last days: "But know this, that in the last days grievous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of self, lovers of money, boasters, heady, railers, disobedient to parents, unfaithful, unholy, without natural affection, rebellious, slanderers, without self-control, fierce, no lovers of good, traitors, headstrong, puffed up, lovers of pleasure rather than lovers of God." Mark these words: "Holding the form of godliness, but having denied the power thereof. From such also turn away. For of these are they that creep into houses and take captive silly women, laden with sins, with divers lusts, ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

Dwight L. Moody

Unfilial Children

Study this, and after looking around, compare such a situation with what we see every day. We see disobedience, we see lack of natural affection. A young man who has had devoted care, who has had the best of mothers, will fall in love with some frivolous, godless, Christless woman, who will in six weeks take him away from his own mother, and he will stamp the latter's tears and prayers and groans into the dust. He will get in with a worldly young man, a frivolous, light-headed young man, and will be taken right away from his parents. All done in a few months. Isn't this happening all the time? To me, one of the saddest things of the present day is that so many men are void of natural affection. If a young man in China should treat his father as some young men do in this country, they would kill him. They would say that such a monster wasn't fit to be permitted to live. Easy enough to talk about the "heathen Chinee," but we can learn something from them. A man may come into my house and steal my money, but the boy that comes home any night drunk, and who when the parents remonstrate, gives curses—great horrors! If my boy wants to murder me, I want him to do so at once. How many men to-day are killing their parents by inches! "Void of natural affection"! Am I not talking facts?

"Lovers of money"! Why, less than a hundred years ago, I suppose we had scarcely half a dozen millionaires; now a hundred millions don't satisfy some of them. If they get a hundred millions, they want two hundred, and if they get two hundred millions, they want four. And so they go on multiplying. "Lovers of money"! And that isn't the worst of it. They have a "form" of religion, a "form" of godliness, but deny the power.

The World's Condition

"Selfish"! Why does a man get drunk?—to please his wife? No! To please his own self. Why does a man gamble away every cent he has? To please his family? No! He does it for his own gratification. Why, my dear friends, there's little self-denial, and the fires of martyrdom have gone out, I will admit; but I will tell you what—there are other things that have come in, and men to-day are professing to serve God when they are gratifying themselves, and care very little about God or his cause. They have the "form." Every nation has a "form." Go into France, and they have a "form" of religion. Into Germany or England, they have a "form" of religion; and I will tell you that they've got a good deal of "form" in this country—dead, cold, lifeless formalism. "Having a form of godliness, but denying the power." That's where we are.

Are things getting better? Every theatre in Chicago is open twice on the Sabbath. I remember when they could not open once; there was a moral sentiment against it; but now they are all open on the Sabbath. Many a church is empty, and people laugh and sneer at the old Book. They call the man who believes in that old Book puritanic—let him go back to New England! They have a "form" of going to church on Sunday morning and the theatre Sunday afternoon, giving up the day to recreation and society, turning the rest of the day into a holiday—going off boating, skating, or to dinner parties. Professed Christian fathers and mothers are putting temptations before their sons and daughters, and the result is, their daughters are marrying young men, slaves to drink, and there comes home a drunken husband, and the result is a divorce and a smashup. But many people tell us the times are much better, and if you say they are not, you are reckoned a pessimist. I would rather go to the old Book, and see what it says. Paul tells the state of things that we are going to have.

Luke 17: 26—"And as it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded. But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all."

Now this is the teaching of the Son of God, bear in mind. "Even thus shall it be in the days that the Son of Man is revealed. In that day he which shall be upon the house-top, and his stuff in the house, let him not come down to take it away; and he that is in the field, let him likewise not return back. Remember Lot's wife! Whosoever shall seek to save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life shall preserve it." Then people turn around and say, "Hasn't the day of Christ proved a failure?" There are a great many men who have proved failures to lay hold of the day of Christ. Thank God, there are some who have laid hold and the kingdom of God has been set up within them. And if the world doesn't lay hold of Christ, it must perish. That's the teaching of Scripture.

The Signs of His Coming

Then another class say, "If you teach that, you discourage work." I think a man will work all the better when he sees there's destruction in the world. But you say, "Are there not more Christians in the world than ever?" Our citizenship is up yonder, not down here, and our business is to occupy till he comes. If I see a vessel going to pieces on the rocks, God tells me to rescue all I can, and that's my business; not to play cards and drink whisky, but haste to the rescue. Save all you can.

Turn to the 19th chapter, the 13th verse: "He called his ten servants and delivered unto them ten pounds, and said unto them, Occupy till I come." That's our business, too—occupy till he comes. Now, in Matthew 24: 48—"And if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow-servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken, the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

But men say to-day, "Where is the sign of his coming? Where is the sign? We don't believe that promise of his coming back." What's the trouble? The Church has got in with the world, eating and drinking and carousing, instead of testifying against the wickedness of the world. If I go into the world, then I must take the judgment that it gets. When judgment fell upon Sodom, Lot had to take his share. He lost everything. If a man becomes a worldly Christian, and makes his boast that he is a paying church-member and not a praying one, and seems to laugh at the idea, the time is coming when God will deal with him. Now see what Peter has to say in II. Peter 3: 3—"There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." That's the language to-day. "There's no danger of his coming." I'll tell you, hosts of people will call me a crank, even crazy, in talking about the Lord's coming back. Of course that's nothing to me. It is to teach what he taught. When the servant knows above his Master, he had better get out of the business. It is what God says, and not my theory or your theory; and if Paul says it is going to be dark when the Lord is to return, and if Peter teaches it, I will stand in their company—pretty good company! I'd rather be with them than with the modern teachers who are teaching against the Book.

First, the Son of God has come. You'll all admit that. Second, the Son of God has gone back. Third, the Holy Ghost has come. He promised he would send him. And, now, fourth, I think we have reason to believe that he himself will come back. Now there are four facts. Let us hold on to them. I cannot understand all the programme that's going to take place when he comes. Many things took place at his birth. Some one has said that a wife may not understand about the husband's ledger and his business, but she does desire to hear his footfall when he comes home at night. And I can keep watching and waiting and desiring the coming of my Lord, doing what he tells me to do. He says, "Little flock, fear not; don't be afraid." The little flock will hear his voice, and he is coming to take his own out of this world. He will know whom to bless. It is not the man who professes. He is weary of your sham professions. I was in a place some months ago, and a minister was very profuse towards me, saying: "I think a great deal of you, but my pastoral duties have been so great that I couldn't get around to your meetings." I didn't ask him to come, but I happened to hear that he was at the theatre twice in the next week. That's what I call a sham, and that's all there is about it.

As to the Millennium

We can't fool God! You can't deceive him. What God wants is truth in the heart. He wants a real man, not a sham. And when he comes, he will gather his own to himself. You take some pieces of steel and throw them into some sawdust, and take a great strong magnet and throw it over the sawdust, and every particle of steel will flow to the magnet. There wouldn't any sawdust flow. And when the great Magnet comes to this world every particle will fly up to be with the Lord. When he teaches this, let you and I teach it. I don't believe there is to be a millennium until he comes. Some think there's a millennium now. It is a queer kind of millennium. If this is the millennium, I pity the wife that has got a drunken husband who comes home and kicks her, bites her, knocks the children around so that some of them will go down to their graves cripples. Look at the drunkenness in these cities; look at the licentiousness; look at the accursed sin of adultery in these cities. And people tell us that Christ is reigning now!

Now, I'll tell you, man is going to have his day and then the Lord will have his. I tell you that the Lord is going to set up his kingdom and reign in his glory. The time is coming when the thoughts of men will only be the echo of God's voice on this earth. He will have a thousand years of his own and teach us then what the reign will be. Talk about my being a pessimist! I am far from that. I believe error is to be put down and righteousness is to prevail, and I expect to be back here. The nation is going to be born in a day. I have the idea that the Jews will come in in a day. I would rather have Paul's little finger than the whole hand of others. We are a poor lot; after having done all, we are "unprofitable servants."

Asleep and Don't Know It

Some one picked me up because I said we were a poor lot. Well, I'll tell you, from my standpoint we are a miserable lot, the whole crowd of us, and I wonder sometimes that the Lord doesn't send the angels. Talk about our sacrifices! What have we done? Shame on the Christianity of this century of ours. Do you suppose that sin could hold up its head and rejoice as it does in our cities—the wretchedness, the drunkenness and licentiousness coming out on the streets on any night—if the Church of God was on fire? No! The trouble is, we are asleep and don't know it.

I caused a man to get angry once and he hit me; went at me and knocked me down. It was on the street in Chicago, and the fellow was freezing to death; and just before a man freezes he is in a woful condition. I saw the fellow was freezing and I began to pound him, and when he got mad he went for me and I ran away and left him. And so with the church members—they wake up awfully mad. But they don't like to have me say so. They're cultured and wiser now than they were formerly, and a good deal better than the general run.

My dear friends, the devil does blind the world and sin does deceive us. Let us get back to the idea hat Christ is going to come, what is eclared in the Book is going to be one, and there isn't any power in hell hat can hinder him from doing it. Thank God, the time is rolling on and he outlook is bright. It may be dark efore day-dawn, but he is coming.

When Jesus Comes Again

I went to the Lord's table for years nd never saw the coming of the Lord n that. I was all the time looking ack to his death, because I didn't read he Scripture straight. "As oft as ye at this bread and drink this wine, ye how forth the Lord's death until I ome." It is a continuation; it reaches rom his death until his return. We re to use our talents until he comes. That's what we are down here for—not ard-playing, dancing and theatre-oing. The world is never going to be ifted up by dancing, theatre-going ministers. If the ministers don't do hat, my words won't hurt them; if hey do it, let them howl. Keep on ighting day and night until he comes; f we don't succeed to-day, we will keep t it to-morrow. He is coming back. We are to endure tribulation until he omes. We are to suffer, but the crown-ng time is coming. Thank God for he glory and the outlook! We are to go outside the camp bearing his re-proach and be patient until he comes. Let us not be impatient but patient. We are to wait for the crown of life. We don't win an earthly crown. Christ vill give us a crown of life and a crown of glory when he comes. A crown of glory that fadeth not away, when he comes. We don't get it until then. That is the crowning time.

But what a day will burst upon the earth! The time of our redemption draweth near. He may be coming in his chariot to earth, but we wait for our inheritance until he comes. We are going to have an inheritance worth something. What is your inheritance down here? A man only gets his house up and finishes it, and when it is "finished" he is gone. But by and by we shall have an inheritance and come into possession of it when He comes. We wait for the reunion with loved ones until he comes. He says that when Christ comes he is going to bring our loved ones with him. That sainted mother we lost years ago is coming back. She is coming with him. The children are coming back. Isn't there comfort in this doctrine? The devil has tried to make us believe this is not real. He will bring all the saints gathered for six thousand years. Paul is coming back; Moses the great lawgiver, Elijah, Enoch, will be back. I see some of you wiping your eyes. Well you might. Thank God for the promise of seeing our loved ones again. They are going to come, sure. He has promised it, to bring them with him. We, with our bodies, shall be caught up in the air, to be forever with him, never to be separated, "to go no more out forever." Then we are to wait for Satan to be bound until he comes. Get the devil bound! You laugh. I am stating facts. Put it down. He has promised to bind him. Put it down!

Temperance is going to prevail. They laugh at us now, and call us fanatics, hut we are on the winning side. Christ is coming back to bind the devil and to put him down, and righteousness will flow through all this earth. Get on the winning side! Get on the winning side, man! Leave the devil in his ranks. You will want to be with us then, sure. Suppose they do sneer at you. Haven't you courage to stand up for the right? If you think I am talking fiction, go to the old Book, and if that Book don't teach what I have been teaching, come and tell me. If I am right, you had better get on my platform as quick as you can. Christ is coming, and going to establish his throne on the earth. Three times in the closing up of this Book he says, "I come quickly." It will seem but a little while in eternity; it will seem like a second.

The Children's Pulpit

THE SILENT YEARS

By Rev. J. M. Farrar, D.D.*

"STUDY a tree until you see what every one else sees in it, and then study it until you see what no one else sees in it." This is what a great teacher said to one of his Juniors. Jesus is the Tree of Life and the Children's Pulpit wants you to study Jesus until you see what every one else sees in him and then study him until you see what no one else sees in him. Christmas is the best time to begin your study. The New Testament tells us about the life of Jesus as a little child. Then nothing more is told us about him until he is twelve years of age. Then nothing more is told until he is thirty years of age. All the other years are "silent years."

This twelfth year is probably the most important year. At this age children, like little birds, climb on to the rim of the nest and try to fly. It was when Jesus was twelve years of age that he went up with his parents to Jerusalem, but did not start back with them. They had a long hunt for him. But Joseph and Mary showed Jesus that he could do something good and great by remaining at home. Probably they told him that the first great thing for a Junior of twelve years of age was to obey his parents. Obedience is the key to all success. Jesus went home with his parents and did just what they told him. He remained at home until he was a man ready and prepared to do something really great.

BUT what about these silent years? Do we know anything about them? Our text tells us that during the silent years "he increased in wisdom." His brain grew and he was able to think better and to do things better. The second thing that he did during these silent years was to "increase in stature." He grew to a strong, healthful man. He grew in favor with God and man. It was also during the silent years that he learned a trade. He was not only spoken of in after years as the carpenter's son, but Mark tells us that people that heard him preach, said, "Is not this the carpenter?" You therefore see that we know many things about Christ during his silent years.

I am so glad Luke told us these facts about the child Jesus. Real Christmas helps for Juniors. We can not really know a great man until we know something about his childhood. When a boy, Giotto the painter sketched on rough stones pictures of his sheep. Nelson's boyish reply to his grandmother was, "What is fear?" Washington as a boy wanted to go to sea. His mother's tear was larger than the sea, and in the boat of obedience, launched on the tear, he sailed home again.

WHAT next? One great fact: The child life of Jesus was just like your life. At twelve he wanted to do some great and good work. Nearly every boy and girl when twelve want to be brave and great. The majority of Christians confessed Christ when they were twelve, or just a little older. Just think of Jesus as being tempted and tried just as you are. Growing just as you are growing. Open the door of your heart and let him in.

He will help you to make your life clean and sweet and to live happy days and happy weeks. He will do more than this. He will make your life so happy that when you are a man you can go back to your childhood and live over again those happy days. Dr. Van Dyke has written something very beautiful about going back to the child-life.

When to the garden of untroubled thought
I came of late, and saw the open door,
And wished again to enter, and explore
The sweet, wild ways with stainless bloom inwrought
And bowers of innocence with beauty fraught,
It seemed some purer voice must speak before
I dared to tread the garden, loved of yore,
That Eden lost unknown, and found unsought.

Then just within the gate I saw a child—
A strange child, yet to my heart most dear—
He held his hands to me, and softly smiled. . . .
"Come in," he said, "and play a while with me;
I am the little child you used to be."

YOU are to study the life of Christ until you see something no one else has seen. Possibly your father and mother have never noticed the fact that when Christ was twelve years of age he asked a great many questions. I am sure he has sympathy with boys and girls who are scolded for asking too many questions. Now, shall I tell you a story? When Alexander the Great was a boy the Persian ambassadors came to his father's court. We are told that the boy Alexander asked them a great many questions and that the ambassadors were interested in him because his questions were very wise ones.

We are told that all Alexander's questions were directed to the distance and size of their country and the nature of their great roads and how they had carried them up into the high countries of Asia. He asked about their king and about his power and about the power their people had. He wanted to know what their king did with his enemies when he had conquered them in war. When you are old enough to read Plutarch you will learn more about Alexander's questions. Some one has said, "The child is father to the man." Alexander the boy was showing what he would be when he became Alexander the Great.

He Saved a Blind Baby

HE was a common yellow dog, with red, watery, blinking eyes, and a scraggly tail, but he was born for something. He was sunning himself by the roadside. No human was in sight. Three big porkers in a nearby pen were making observations in their rather inarticulate language. The dog was at peace with himself, with his surroundings and with all the world.

There was a sudden whizzing sound, and a loud "honk, honk." The dog jumped and dodged. Then, as a big red automobile swept by, a queer, a very queer thing happened.

A man stood up in the machine. In his hand was a pasteboard shoebox, with bulging sides held in with winding cord. The man threw the box with all his might, and though the yellow dog dodged out of pure nervousness, the box wasn't aimed at him. It landed on a single board over the edge of the pigpen. The automobile did not stop. It disappeared in a cloud of dust down the road.

The yellow dog knew that board over the pigpen. The chickens roosted there. They were not on his calling list, but he had fun with them sometimes. He never had seen anything like the strange box on that board. The porkers had stopped grunting and were watching the box too. The board was loose. In a gusty wind the box was swaying as if about to fall into the pigpen. "Something is wrong here," said the yellow dog to himself, "and if I can't right it, maybe I can call those who can." And he barked and barked for almost an hour, capering around the pen and jumping at the box now and then just by way of emphasis, though it was too high for him.

At last, a man living in a house a hundred yards away grew exasperated over the continued barking. He came out to see what was the matter. The yellow dog saw him and barked louder if possible than ever. The man noted the box on the board over the pigpen. He was puzzled. He climbed up and took it down. He cut and unwound the cord from the bulging sides of the box, while the yellow dog capered around.

"Mercy! It's a baby!" the man cried out. And the little yellow dog, sobered, as it seemed, by the exclamation, just stood still and looked.

A baby it was. There was a cap on the little head, and cotton around the body. The man saw that the infant was alive. He loosened the capstrings. The baby opened its eyes and breathed freer. But there was no sight in those poor little vacant eyes, as he quickly discovered. It was a blind baby! This baby was turned over by the man to the International Sunshine Society, and Mrs. Alden, the founder, had it christened "Arthur." He was the first to be taken into the Arthur Home for Blind Babies opened by the society in Summit, N. J. The First Sunshine Home for Blind Babies at Eighty-fourth Street and Thirteenth Avenue, Dyker Heights, has twenty-five inmates. Several years ago, in a time of financial stringency, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD came to the aid of that home with a fund that totaled more than $1,700. Now the Arthur Home at Summit needs help. It has a property in Summit worth nearly $30,000. There is a mortgage on it of $4,700. This is due January 1. When it is paid the Home will be absolutely free from debt. A good friend of the work has come forward and said, "I will give $2,500 if by the first of the year you can raise $2,200." This is what the International Sunshine Society is trying to do. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers can help.

Contributions may be sent to the treasurer of the International Sunshine Society, 96 Fifth Avenue, New York, or to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In acknowledging such gifts the Sunshine Society will send with its hearty "Merry Christmas" a pretty gold and white enamel Sunshine badge, as a token that the gift has proved the giver a genuine Sunshiner.

Christian Science's Founder Dead

Mrs. Eddy Passes Away in Her Ninetieth Year at Her Home Near Boston

UNATTENDED by any physician, and surrounded by the "students" of her household, who were giving her the "treatment" she had prescribed for her followers, Mary Baker Glover Eddy, the founder of Christian Science, passed away in her palatial home on Chestnut Hill, Newton, a fashionable Boston suburb, at 11.45 P.M. on Saturday, December 3.

She had been ill only a few days. On the Thursday previous, she had driven out in her closed carriage, drawn by a pair of handsome black horses; but the outing was a short one. During the early part of the week she had caught cold, and the drive in the bleak November wind apparently aggravated her ailment. On returning to her home, she was put to bed. She rose on Friday morning, dressed as usual and went to her study, but she soon grew so weak that she was again compelled to rest. The familiar Christian Science "treatment" was resorted to. While she was alone in her apartment with Mrs. Laura E. Sargent, she asked for a pen and a pad of paper, and she wrote what proved to be her last message. "God is my life," were the words her weak fingers traced on the paper.

It was evident from various indications, that neither Mrs. Eddy nor those who were with her in her sickness had anticipated a fatal termination. It is said that they, and possibly she also, assumed that her serious condition was due to some "error" which had been committed, perhaps unconsciously, and which had allowed disease to creep in. The treatment she received was the familiar kind resorted to by Christian Scientists to remove "error." But the sands of the aged woman's life were fast running out. Notwithstanding momentary rallies, like the last flickerings of a candle, every passing hour emphasized more and more the feebleness of the hold she had on life. She was dying, yet the watchers, hoping against hope, believed otherwise.

Regarding Mrs. Eddy's physical condition on the last day of her life, there are several sources of information. One of her closest attendants in the house says she rose on Saturday apparently much refreshed. She moved about her rooms all day, and uttered no complaint, and at six P.M. ate heartily and chatted and laughed with Mrs. Sargent, Mr. Tomlinson and Mr. Frye. There was in her mind apparently no premonition of death. When she retired, she seemed better than at any time during the week. Members of her household, though not anticipating complications, remained near her bedside. From the time she retired, she spoke no word to any one. Death came in the silence and without warning. One of the watchers bent over her, supposing her to be asleep, and found her dead.

Chairman Alfred Farlow, of the Christian Science Publication Committee, described the treatment given to Mrs. Eddy in these words:

> An effort to possess a clear consciousness of Divine power and presence, with the understanding that when the consciousness of the individual is illumined by a realization of what God is, that realization overcomes the disease, as the light dispels darkness.

Those who were near when she passed away were Calvin A. Frye, a member of her household for many years, who had acted as her private secretary; Mrs. Laura E. Sargent, her housekeeper; Rev. Irving C. Tomlinson, assistant private secretary; Adam E. Dickey, another private secretary; Wm. A. Rathvon, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Rathvon.

It was noon Sunday before the outer world learned of her death. At that hour it was formally announced in the "Mother Church" in Boston by Judge Clifford P. Smith, the First Reader, to a great audience which thronged the marble building. There was no tinge of sadness, no suggestion of mourning, in the voice of the speaker, and his hearers received the news in silence. A few shed tears as they spoke together in whispers of their leader having "passed on."

Simultaneously with the church announcement, the news was given to the public. It was then learned that, in compliance with the State law, a regular physician, Dr. George L. West, had been called in to view the remains and to verify the causes of death. When the doctor, a young and alert practitioner, was shown into the death chamber, he at once recognized the woman who lay there so white and still as Mrs. Eddy. He had seen the Christian Science leader many times, having passed her driving on the roads around Chestnut Hill, while he was making his professional calls. Dr. West said afterward of his visit:

"Mrs. Eddy lay with her hands crossed over her breast, attired only in a night robe. The face was calm and peaceful and there were no indications of suffering. It was the typical face of an aged person in death. The body was very slight, weighing, I should judge, under one hundred pounds, and th face had not the appearance of a woman of nine years, though plainly that of a very old woman. death she resembled greatly the portraits that ha been made familiar through the public prints ar the characteristic nose and jaw were plainly di closed. The body gave every evidence that deat had occurred about twelve hours previous. Sl looked like a beautiful old lady. The marks extreme age were very plain, and her form wa small and slight. She must have been very feeble

Dr. West made the usual formal inquiries ar gave a certificate showing that death was the resu of "natural causes," to which he added the wor "probably pneumonia."

The founder of Christian Science left no form message to her followers. It is declared that the will be "no successor" in the leadership. "Christia Scientists universally regard Mrs. Eddy as th founder of a religion." Such is the explanatio given of the present condition of affairs in the sec yet it is not considered an improbability that the may yet be a struggle for the leadership, both in th secular and spiritual affairs of the church. There a vast property to be cared for and a great orga ization to be led. Mrs. Eddy's own estate is said t be a large one, between $1,000,000 and $2,000,00 and there may be a conflict of interests concernin it. These, however, are matters for development i the future.

Mrs. Eddy's body will rest in a costly mausoleu to be erected in a cemetery near her home at Ches nut Hill. It is intended that it shall be a shrine t which her followers from all parts of the world ma make pilgrimage.

The Story of Mrs. Eddy's Life

Mary A. Morse Baker was born in the village c Dow, N. H., July 16, 1821. The little farmhouse i which she first saw the light still stands on a eminence from which can be had a good view of th Merrimac Valley. Her parents had little of th world's wealth and had to depend solely on thei own exertions in tilling the small farm lying awa among the New England hills. Mark Baker, th father, inherited an unbending, inflexible will fro a Scotch ancestry. The mother, Abigail Barnar Ambrose, was the descendant of a strict Congrega tionalist family. She was a woman of a calm pious disposition, with neither sentiment nor ro mance in her make-up. She was intensely religiou in her own old-fashioned way.

The strong, dominant will which characterize Mary Baker Eddy at the zenith of her power, sh inherited from her father. There were six childre in the family, three boys and three girls. Mary wa the youngest of the girls. As a child she was of neurotic disposition. This intensified as she ap proached the maturity of girlhood. Indeed, s extreme at times were her outbursts that she woul go into convulsions and remain for hours in a stat of coma.

The education of Mary Baker was of the mos elementary kind, though it has been claimed that sh afterwards became master of Greek, Latin an Hebrew. At twenty-two, she married a youn bricklayer named George Washington Glover, wh

A NEW GIANT OF THE OCEAN

ABOUT once in a decade, a new fleet of ocean liners is launched, setting a new standard for size, luxury and safety at sea. The great ips which are thought to express the "last word" boat-building are suddenly found to be dwarfed their new sisters and relegated to second place. ways the new fleet, now under construction, sur- isses all the great ships that have gone before. arcely has the world become accustomed to using e Mauretania as a synonym for the ocean levia- an, than two greater ships, the Olympic and the itanic, surpass all of her mensions. Now in turn mes the greatest of all ean giants, the Europa the Hamburg-American ne, which is larger than y of her predecessors.

With increase in length. am and tonnage, comes corresponding develop- ent in the luxury of uipment. We can no nger call the great ocean ners floating hotels, since e new boats offer many ore attractive and novel atures than have yet en attempted by any ilder of hotels. They ave even more comforts an any palatial home.

The supremacy of the as to-day, in black and hite, stands thus:

Vessel	Length	Tonnage
auretania....	790 feet....	32,500
mpic.... ...	860 feet....	40,000
ropa	900 feet....	50,000

The mere recital of di- ensions, however large, ives little idea of the over- owering bulk of such a ip as the Europa. The new liner will have a isplacement of about 70,000 tons; in other words: e material to be used in this construction will eigh 140,000,000 pounds. It would, therefore, equire 1,400,000 men, or about the population of hiladelphia, each carrying 100 pounds, to handle is material. If this material were loaded upon e largest American freight cars, it would fill a ain forty-four miles in length (which, by the way, ould be long enough to extend all the way across the Panama Canal). The combined capacity of the three largest hotels in New York City is 3,235 persons, while the Europa carries 4,250 passengers. The Europa will have a beam of ninety-six feet, so that her deck will be as wide as Broadway at its widest point. She will have nine decks above the water-line, which is the height of the largest apartment houses, thus making her literally a skyscraper afloat.

With the laying of the keel of the Europa, the biggest ship in the world, now under construction, comes the news from abroad, that the gross tonnage of all the ships flying the Hamburg-American Line flag has passed the 1,000,000-ton mark, or to be correct, 1,022,452 tons. For years the Hamburg-American Line has held the tonnage record for ships sailing under one house-flag. Some idea of the enormous size of the Europa may be gathered from the order which has been given for 2,000,000 feet of Oregon fir to be used for the decks alone. For months this lumber has been drying near Portland, Ore., before being shipped to Germany. Special care is taken to provide only clear, vertical grain wood.

None of the Europa's staterooms will be cramped like those of earlier boats. There will be complete suites available; a choice of dining-rooms for those who do not care for the main dining salon; a Ritz-Carlton restaurant, a grill-room, and a tea-garden. Gardens which in winter may be converted to sun parlors will occupy the upper decks. Ladies' salons, finished in different decorative periods, will appeal to the tastes of different nationalities. All the salons will be connected by telephone with the private staterooms, so that those whose cabins are perhaps two or three city blocks apart, may talk with each other. The Europa's gymnasium, too, will be more spacious and better equipped than any now afloat. Besides the regular apparatus, there will be a running track, so that athletes may cross the ocean without interrupting training. The special "squash court" will connect with the gymnasium, and nearby will be a large swimming pool and completely equipped Turkish and Roman baths.

The Europa will be ventilated throughout by a new system. She has no clumsy ventilator rising above her decks—a familiar feature on other ocean liners—and her long, unbroken stretch of deck gives her a trim and ship-shape appearance. Air is forced to the lowermost decks by powerful air pumps, and thus every part of the huge ship is assured of an abundance of pure air of the proper temperature throughout all parts of the vessel.

The most powerful wireless telegraph apparatus ever carried to sea will be set up on the Europa. The unusual height of her mast will make it possible to transmit or receive messages over the entire width of the Atlantic Ocean, so that the giant liner will always be in direct communication with land.

ad been a companion of her eldest brother Samuel. lover took his bride to Wilmington, N. C., where e had obtained employment, but he was only six nonths there when he sickened and died of yellow ever. His wife was left destitute, but some friends aid her fare back to her father's home in Tilton, I. H. A few months later a baby was born—the only hild she ever had. This child was named after its ather, George Washington Glover. It was given o the care of a nurse, Mrs. Cheney, who took the oy to Minnesota, and his mother did not meet him gain until he was a married man with four chil- ren of his own. He is now about sixty-six years ld.

After Mary Glover came back from Wilmington, vhere she buried her first husband, she lived lternately with her father and sister in the village f Tilton until she married again. In 1853 she ecame the wife of a dentist named Patterson. She vas quite an invalid at this time, and she was ccustomed to go into trances in which she claimed hat she saw strange visions. She had given much ttention to mesmerism and clairvoyance and the nystical trend of her mind was beginning to show tself. Her second marriage was an unhappy one. Finally, she obtained a divorce on the uncontested harge of desertion.

The entrance of this remarkable woman into the imelight of publicity occurred while she was yet Mrs. Patterson, and is identified with the name of Phineas Parkhurst Quimby. Quimby had set up as healer, by the "power of mind over matter," in Portland, Me., and there Mrs. Patterson met him in 1862. He had effected such cures that the people egarded him as a wonder-worker. Mrs. Patterson elieved herself suffering from a weak spine and magined she was foredoomed to early death. She esolved to consult Quimby. At the first treatment, t is claimed, a complete cure was effected, and she ecame a disciple of this strange master. It has been said that she copied his manuscripts, spread broad the tenets of his creed, and wrote articles for the press about his extraordinary powers. She was enthusiastic over the new "science," and she told Quimby that her object in life would be to take it up and teach it to others. She studied keenly his methods of treatment, both "personal" and "absent." The healer died in 1866, and Mrs. Patterson was his sincerest mourner.

Her followers give this account of the divine inspiration: Injured by a fall on the ice, she was carried home in a dying condition and pronounced hopeless. Calling for her Bible, she asked to be left alone. The Holy Book opened on Matt. 9: 2, the healing of the palsied man. The truth which set him free she saw, the life divine which healed him restored her and she rose from her bed of pain healed and free.

It is claimed that on this occasion she was attended by a regular physician and cured in the usual way.

Before writing Science and Health Mrs. Patterson (who had resumed her first married name of Glover) had begun to put her religious theories and principles into practice. In 1870 in association with Richard Kennedy she began to teach pupils in the art of mental healing. It was not until 1875 that the first edition of Science and Health appeared. In March of that year Mrs. Glover purchased the house, 8 Broad Street, Lynn, a little two-story building which is still pointed out as "the cradle of Christian Science." There she continued to teach. She was still living here when she was married to Asa Gilbert Eddy on New Year's Day, 1877. Mrs. Eddy became involved in several litigations about this period, and as a result, her savings were swallowed up, her classes disrupted and she came to Boston. This was in 1882. She hired the house, 569 Columbus Avenue, and rallying all her forces, her mental and physical reserves, she determined to make a brave stand. Although sixty-two years old, she was a woman with whom time had dealt kindly. She had yet much physical beauty and a charm of manner which drew many to her side. She did not save herself or spare her energies. Early and late she kept at work. She taught, she lectured in hired halls and churches and barns; she founded the Massachusetts Metaphysical College; she went here, there and everywhere in the surrounding country, exhorting and pleading. Her earnestness of purpose, her intense devotion to her principles were such that she soon had a large following. Her husband, soon after coming to Boston, fell ill and died. Mrs. Eddy put aside her grief and worked the harder. The propaganda grew and the new cult continued to gain adherents. Its founder purchased a residence at No. 385 Commonwealth Avenue, in the heart of Boston's most exclusive residential section. She created a publishing society, and intrusted it with the business management of Christian Science, then she organized a Publication Committee which is probably the most effectively conducted press agency in the world. Her book has undergone several revisions. In 1888 she made Ebenezer Foster, a Vermont physician, her press agent and the official publisher of Christian Science literature. Later, she adopted him as her son. It was he who selected Concord as a place of residence for Mrs. Eddy. She tried it experimentally and, finding that she liked the place, she purchased a farm named Pleasant View, and built up a magnificent home.

Mrs. Eddy retired from active service in 1901 and since that time her only official connection has been as pastor emeritus of the mother church in Boston. In 1907 she turned over to three trustees all her estate, except her home, Pleasant View. The deed was executed by Mrs. Eddy after suit had been brought by three of her relatives for an accounting against those who had surrounded her and managed her affairs. The suit of the relatives was withdrawn in 1909, when Mrs. Eddy gave her son, George W. Glover, $250,000, and her adopted son, Ebenezer Foster Eddy, $45,000. The revenues from the royalties on her books and from Christian Science publications has been enormous and it is expected all will go to the advancement of the cult which she founded.

A Remarkable Woman

WITH the death of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, there closed a career which was in many respects one of the most remarkable in modern religious history. Her mind, in early life, seems to have been that of a mystic. She drank in knowledge and inspiration at many fountains. Mental healing, with its varied phenomena, occupied her attention for a long period before she ventured to formulate the elaborate system of belief she has left to her followers. Possibly she would have been classed by modern specialists as a neurotic visionary; but in this respect she would only have been like others who were distinguished in various lines of metaphysical inquiry. It was not until she was over sixty years of age that Mrs. Eddy's public career as the founder and promoter of Christian Science really began. Through her indefatigable efforts, it has at the present time several million adherents throughout the world.

Although, as formulated by Mrs. Eddy, Christian Science has a new aspect, there is much of its teaching that is very old. The doctrine that mortal mind is the seat of all the ills that flesh is heir to; that health and success are at the command of those who are "masters of their souls"; that matter is nonexistent; that what a man wills, he can do; that thought is regnant and we are as we think—all these are ancient. Parallels may be found in the works of many metaphysical and philosophical writers, from Aristotle down to Kant and Descartes.

It is perhaps hopeless to expect that, amid the conflict of many creeds, any two or more beliefs could be found wholly harmonious. God has given us in nature an infinite variety, and the same is true of the human mind. It has been justly said that no creed has a monopoly of the truth. Thus, even the opponents of Christian Science, and those who criticize it most severely, have been fain to admit that it contains much that makes powerful appeal to a very large class, both cultured and simple. In the main, the attitude of the orthodox churches toward the movement may be described as against it. If a movement be of God, it will survive all antagonisms and endure; if not of God, its existence will be brief and it must ultimately pass away, like other idealistic ephemera. If Mrs. Eddy's teachings have been acknowledged as a means of grace, comfort and consolation to her followers, the influence of those teachings will doubtless long survive their founder; while on the other hand, if the system be a mercenary one—a Christless system, as many have claimed—there is no power on earth that can perpetuate it indefinitely.

The President's Message

"BUSINESSLIKE" is perhaps the most appropriate term to apply to President's Taft's message, which was sent to Congress on December 6. It is a document of over 30,000 words. Summarized, it is a strong plea for economy in Federal expenditures and for a close scrutiny of all bills making appropriations for public buildings and river and harbor improvements. It shows that the policy of economy has resulted in a reduction of $53,000,000 in the appropriations for the current fiscal year. It tells how four hundred places in the Civil Service have been abolished without impairing its efficiency. It upholds the Payne Tariff as the best "revenue producer" the country has yet known. It promises closer trade relations with Canada; urges a thorough naval re-organization; announces the successful initiation of postal savings banks; tells of satisfactory progress on the Panama Canal, which will be completed January 1, 1915, within the estimated cost of $375,000,000. It discusses the Interstate Commerce law, and, in this connection, says:

> It seems to me that the existing legislation with reference to the regulation of corporations and the restraint of their business has reached a point where we can stop for a while, and witness the effect of the vigorous execution of the laws on the statute books, in restraining the abuses which certainly did exist, and which roused the public to demand reform. If the test develops a need for further legislation, well and good; but until then, let us execute what we have. Due to the reform movement of the present decade, there has undoubtedly been a great improvement in business methods and standards. The great body of business men of this country now have an earnest desire to obey the law and to square their conduct of business to its requirements and limitations.

The message favors a revival of the American merchant marine, and recommends the passage of a mail subsidy to aid in "the restoration of the American flag to its ancient place upon the seas." It urges the establishment of American banks and branches in foreign countries, as a means to financing American trade interests abroad. It favors continued efforts for the conservation and improvement of our agricultural lands, the building up of home industries and the strengthening of confidence of capital in domestic investments. It notes with satisfaction the progress made by the principle of international arbitration, and declares that the establishment of an international prize-court and arbitral court of justice will go a long way towards bringing about arbitration of questions which in the past would have led to war. It has also a word of hope concerning the limitation of armaments and the formation of an international force for the preservation of universal peace. The message discusses the business affairs of the nation in a simple, straightforward fashion, without any attempts at oratory or appeal to sentiment. These are admirable characteristics in a public document.

The Pastoral Call

IN earlier days, before our cities became so crowded and life so strenuous, and when the church family was on simpler lines than now, it was the pastor's custom to call upon his flock once a week at their homes. Those weekly visits, while on a social footing, were always helpful and uplifting. Unfortunately, the good old-fashioned pastoral call has fallen largely into disuse. In many localities where it is still kept up, it is simply impossible for the preacher to visit his entire congregation once each week.

In a great multitude of American homes, the substitute for the pastoral call is the welcome weekly visit of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It never misses a single week the year round, and it brings to all of its flock the Gospel message of life and light and love, with a thousand other things to cheer, comfort and entertain. It has a pleasant, sunshiny message for every member of the household, from the patriarch down to the children. Every home it enters becomes a "Home Beautiful," because the spirit of Christ is there sweetening the whole atmosphere, and investing even the humblest duties and tasks with a new meaning. In such homes, every one has an object in life, and the spirit of helpfulness finds scope for activities that bring happiness and contentment to all.

If THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is not already a regular weekly visitor in your home, subscribe for it now and you will find that it will go far toward making 1911 the happiest year of your life. If you are already a reader, make some other home happy by sending it a copy. Thus, for the cost of an extra subscription, you will assure that other home of fifty-two pastoral visits for which you will be remembered most gratefully.

Fighting Laws of Hygiene

WE who live within the boundaries of the United States, where education is widespread and where every suggestion for improved hygiene is usually welcomed, often fall into the error of thinking that the rest of the world, except portions designated as heathen lands, are also living in the twentieth century. Then suddenly some event shows that there are hundreds of thousands who still have a long road to travel before they will be able to look out for themselves, and perhaps be of some benefit to humanity in general. The present epidemic of cholera, which has been devastating certain provinces of Russia and has also broken out with great virulence in certain parts of Italy, has shown that portions of Europe are centuries behind the times in a knowledge of the simplest rules of hygiene.

In Russia, the officials and doctors, aware of the danger of the scourge spreading throughout the empire, established public dispensaries and emergency hospitals and worked heroically to stem the rising tide of disease. Were their efforts appreciated? Not at all. The peasants would not follow the simple hygienic rules for avoiding the disease; but, instead, plowed mystic circles around their villages and paraded with ikons and relics. They gath in squads, attacked the hospitals, took out the tients, who nearly all died as a result, and burned the buildings, "defeating," as they said conspiracy of the doctors." In Italy, the pe fought the doctors who tried to disinfect churches.

Such a condition of affairs must interest e American, for a large part of the present floo immigration has its sources in Russia and It and if some of the infected peasants get thro our ports we would have to fight the plague on own soil. So far the extremely rigid examina of all immigrants has kept the disease without gates. All of the medical examiners are work together under orders from the surgeon-genera Washington. Even if there should be an outbr of the disease in this country, it would probably quickly subdued, for public opinion would be bac every effort to restore healthful conditions.

Woman Mayors

OLDHAM, England, has just elected a wor mayor, the third English town to depart t from tradition. Her installation was held in large town hall, though a small room has previou served on such occasions. When she entered, vast throng present sprang to their feet and chee and clapped interminably. Mrs. Lees, the mayor, made a speech, and the hall "echoed w delighted laughter," for she is very keen and wi "She seemed," said one reporter, "like the mothe a great family before whom her children rise and call her blessed." She is described as "a t dignified woman, with a calm, beautiful, humor face, crowned with white hair." A score or m of small towns in Kansas have woman mayors, s eral of whom have been re-elected term after te

General Notes

—$127,016,158 is called for by the Naval Estimates for coming year, being within $1,000,000 of last year's total.

—A BRONZE STATUE of Baron Frederick von Steuben, ma general in the Continental Army, has been erected in Lafay Park, Washington, in front of the White House. The sculp is Albert Jaegers. The general is shown standing on an e nence, inspecting the army manoeuvers of 1778.

—ONE OF THE unbelievable things that are occasionally with in the daily papers is a report from Akron, O., that a prize-fight there on Thanksgiving night, the mayor of the t presided and an "evangelist" offered prayer before the b began. We should want affidavits before accepting such tale, and even then we should doubt it.

—OPPONENTS OF vaccination would do well to study an structive chart recently prepared in Europe, which shows effects of compulsory vaccination in Prussia and Holland. fore the law, the rate of smallpox mortality in these two co tries was ninety per cent. Since the law passed in 1874, it dropped to considerably less than ten per cent. Austria, wh there is no compulsory vaccination law, still shows a morta of from forty to eighty per cent. from smallpox.

TWENTY GOVERNORS OF STATES WHO MET IN CONFERENCE AT LOUISVILLE, KY.

The Governors' Conference

ON November 29, the annual Governors' Conference opened in the city of Frankfort, Ky., and continued its sessions in Louisville. The Governors of twenty-four States were in attendance. artisanship was forgotten in the discussions of estions for the good of the nation. The following rsons were in attendance at the Conference: overnor Sloan and wife of Arizona; Governor eeks and wife of Connecticut; Governor Brown, fe and daughter of Georgia; Governor Plaisted, fe and daughter of Maine; Governor Draper, wife d daughter of Massachusetts; Governor Noel and fe of Mississippi, Governor Fort and wife of New rsey, Governor Kitchin and wife of North Caroa, Governor Ansel and wife of South Carolina, overnor Pothier and wife of Rhode Island, Govnor Mann and wife of Virginia, Governor Vessey d wife of South Dakota, Governor O'Neal and fe of Alabama, Governor Shafroth and wife of olorado, Governor Marshall and wife of Indiana, overnor Harmon and wife of Ohio, Governor Hady and wife of Missouri, Governor Deneen and wife Illinois, Governor Norris and wife of Montana, overnor McGovern of Wisconsin, Governor-elect uce of Oklahoma, Governor-elect Woodrow Wiln of New Jersey and Governor Spry of Utah. overnor Judson P. Harmon of Ohio and Governor-ect Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey attracted pediar attention, as their names had so often been nsidered among the possible Presidential candiates on the Democratic ticket. Governor-elect oodrow Wilson delivered a very able address bere the Conference, which closed as follows: "For ir problem, looked at from another angle, is one of -ordination. I am not now referring to the imortant matter we are so much concerned with in gard to uniformity of laws; the laws of marriage d divorce, for example, the laws of commercial ansaction and those many other matters which vitally affect the morals or the convenience of our attered communities. I am thinking of the matr of forests and watersheds and mines, of the great sks of sanitation, of the treatment of epidemics, e care of the poor and the restraint of the vagrant, the safeguarding of labor and all that long list of tal interests with regard to which we can do so uch more if we act together and upon some comon plan." This was a memorable conference of ble and upright executives, with promise of good the nation at large. National righteousness in ublic administration and in individual integrity are joined by the prophet.

Is not this the fast I have chosen? To loose the bands of wickedss, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, d that ye break every yoke? (Isa. 58:6.)

hinese Queue-Cutting

Hong Kong was the scene of a remarkable queueutting demonstration the other day, when six ealthy Chinamen, whose ages aggregated 440 ears, in the most public way, on the platform of he Chinese Club, to the music of the Indian Military and playing selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's operas, had their queues cut off. A hundred others followed their example. In three days 11,000 in Hong Kong alone voluntarily discarded their queues. The agitator in the movement made effective reference to the case of an oiler who was killed two days before, when his queue became entangled in some machinery. No change in the national costume was made. The incident in Hong Kong started the queue-cutting fever in New York City, where the Chinese and American barber shops are filled with the Celestials who are waiting for their turn to have their queues cut off. Some of the Chinamen took their queues home and others left them in the baskets of the barbers. The human hair merchants of New York will eventually get most of them, and the women purchasers will have braids, switches, coronets, and sets of puffs, which they will never dream were worn on Celestial heads. The hand of Western civilization is cutting many a Chinaman's queue, and the Christ of that civilization will eventually win his heart, in answer to the prophecies and prayers and services of the Lord's children.

All the ends of the world shall remember and turn unto the Lord: and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. (Ps. 22:27.)

Stole Fifty Millions

The United States Government, through the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department, has been waging a relentless warfare on "get-rich-quick" concerns, in which arrests have been in seventy-eight cases and in which schemes have been exposed defrauding the people of the country out of at least one hundred million dollars. The most gigantic fraud was that which was unearthed the other day in the arrest and imprisonment of Burr Brothers, promoters and stockbrokers, with offices in the Flatiron Building, New York City, who it is charged swindled the people out of fifty million dollars. The ten thousand dollars of bail required for the wrongdoers was not furnished, and they had to go to the Tombs. This firm sold worthless stocks of every conceivable kind, of mines that had no ore, of railroads that were only on the map and scarcely there, of industrial institutions that had gone into the hands of receivers, etc. The government detectives spent a long time in carefully investigating the facts, and becoming assured that the government mail had been used for the wholesale swindling of the public, made the arrests. The Postmaster General said of the frauds of Burr Brothers and those of another concern, which was raided the same day: "A vast system of fraud, as far-reaching in its ramifications as the postal service itself, had been developed by unscrupulous men, who, through the grossest forms of misrepresentation, were stealing from the people millions of dollars annually. These fraudulent operations have not only swindled thousands of innocent investors, but have created a lack of confidence in legitimate business enterprises. It is therefore as important to the business community to have these frauds stopped as it is to the people whose losses are directly traceable to them." These men, with their handsomely furnished suites of offices, with their large corps of bookkeepers, clerks and stenographers, in the midst of their gigantic successful frauds were criminals and they are just as reprehensible as the crook on the sidewalk in front of their building, who takes his neighbor's watch or pocketbook. They have no more right to the favor of their fellow-men or the mercy of the law. The collapse of these schemes of fraud and the disgrace involved in them are in harmony with this prophecy:

The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them. (Prov. 21:7.)

Learn to Swim

Recent inquiries have revealed the fact that a large percentage of the young people of the country are unable to swim. Of the boys entering the University of Pennsylvania, forty-eight per cent. do not know how to swim, and thirty per cent. of the freshmen at the College of the City of New York are ignorant of this useful art. The average of the two institutions is forty-two per cent. It is more than likely that if the young men and women of the whole country were to be taken into consideration it would be found that over fifty per cent. of them are unable to swim. Prompt and efficient measures should be taken to teach the young how to support themselves in the water. Swimming schools might be instituted in many of the cities, but there ought to be in every community, under public supervision, opportunities for boys and girls to learn to swim without expense or danger to themselves. Thousands and tens of thousands of lives and an untold amount of sorrow would be saved. Parents provide for the support and education of their children and then neglect this positive duty to their children, to themselves and to the general public. This provision against the danger of drowning suggests the protection against all moral dangers which Christ provides in his presence and saving power. The cry of the disciples to the Saviour when the storm seemed sinking the little boat on the Sea of Galilee and drowning them is the one used by the soul in all kinds of spiritual peril:

Lord, save us, we perish. (Matt. 8:25.)

Iron from Ore-Dust

The Carnegie Steel Company of the United States Steel Corporation has been working for two years on a plan to utilize the ore-dust from furnaces and machinery. The other day it succeeded in its experiment in making the first briquette from the ore-dust. Millions of dollars' worth of ore-dust has been wasted which will now be converted into usable pig iron. Fifty-eight men are already employed in the first plant for making briquettes, and new plants will be established as the demands may require. The wastes of many branches of industry have been so utilized that their value has furnished a very good profit for the year's business. Our country has untold mineral resources and mills and inventions which turn out a fabulous product of iron and steel, reminding us of the Promised Land.

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack anything in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass. (Deut. 8:9.)

A LATE CHRISTMAS DINNER

By E. RYERSON YOUNG

"THOSE were the days we paid in kind," said the old steward.

"Which was not always a kindness," put in the cynical youth, "for perhaps the preacher needed other things worse than what you gave."

"Well, young man, perhaps that was so too, and, while we're on the penitent bench, I might add, sometimes we clean forgot the preacher and his family. Some men knew how to touch us up and remind us that they had human feelings and temporal needs. 'My throat's pretty dry this morning,' said one man, 'and the words sort of stick. They need greasing and I ain't had butter for two weeks.' The women folks took the hint and the next week some butter was sent in. Another preacher came awful late one Sunday and some of us took him to task for it. He just looked quietly at us and when we got through he said as meek as Moses, 'You may drive me all you like on no feed; but I ain't going to push my horse when he hasn't anything better than marsh hay to eat.' It was a clincher and the next week the stewards did some hustling both for man feed and horse feed.

"We were nigh spoiled by these preachers for the decent treatment of the independent sort. One such man came to us and he was a power for good. He was a big man every way in body and mind and he asked favors of no man no where in logging bee or in revival services. He had a family of seven husky boys, and on the whole they asked no favors either. If you caught one and downed him, the rest would soon even up the score, and the other boys found it best to leave the preacher's sons alone. Even the farmers found these lads equal to them.

"An old cranky skinflint called a couple of them into his potato field to pick potatoes. They were dandy pickers and worked hard all day. They might have taken a pointer on the old man's character from the dinner he gave them, for it was only buttermilk, sour bread and a little piece of hard pork. But they worked all afternoon until near night, when the old man stopped them.

"'It's near dark, boys,' he said in his sweet slippery way we all got to know, 'and your father will wonder where you are. You'd better run home.'

"'Where's our pay?' asked the boys.

"'Pay!' roared the old man. 'Pay for picking a few potatoes for a poor old man? Run home, boys, and be ashamed of yourselves.'

"'We've worked hard for you, Mr. Jones, and we've missed our school, and we must have pay for it. We expect at least one-fourth of the potatoes we picked,' said the older boy.

"'Go 'way, go 'way; you'd be robbing an old man. Go home, boys, or I'll call down the neighbors on your father.' And with this the old man drove the boys off his place.

"Bright and early the next day, five of the boys camped near the old man's potato field. The old man watched the road to call in some more pickers. He found some boys who were on their way to school, but while they promised the old man to pick potatoes for him, they never reached the field. They were quietly and quickly warned to leave that field of potatoes alone.

"Sharp frost came the next night and old Jones became anxious about his potatoes. He sent his wife into the potato field, but she was so crippled with rheumatism that she could not do much. Jones then scoured the countryside for boys to help him. He brought home two, but he did not keep them half a day. They simply disappeared, and the old man became frantic.

"After the potatoes had lain there a week, the preacher's oldest son, Jimmy, sauntered up and asked old Jones how he was getting along with his potatoes. The old man was grumpy. No man likes to see the man, nor the boy, no, nor the dog either, that he has abused. Jones wanted help in the worst way, for his potatoes might be all frost-bitten any night and he was ready to hire most any one.

"'Tell you what I'll do, Mr. Jones,' said Jimmy brightly. 'I'll lift the crop for you in two days, but I'll want every third bagful I dig.'

"It was in the old days of grubhoeing and there were still plenty of roots around in the new-cleared field.

"The old man's eyes twinkled. He didn't think the boy could get help enough to do as he had bargained, and even then the old man thought he could find some way out of paying.

"'Can you begin right now?' he asked.

"'As soon as you give me a hoe,' replied the boy.

"Jones hurried over to his shed and brought a hoe.

"'Mind you, they are to be all up before to-morrow night,' he said as he handed the lad the hoe.

"'All right, and every third bagful is mine,' replied Jimmy.

"The boy walked over to the field and whistled.

"From the other side of the fence there sprang up six boys with three hoes and three bags. The older boys swung the hoes and the little fellows were given bags with which to gather the potatoes.

"The old man came over and watched them sharply. When the bags were all full Jimmy asked the farmer where he wanted his potatoes placed. He showed him where he wished to pit the potatoes and to that place the boys carried two bags and dumped them in. Then they began hoeing again.

"'Here, bring up that other bag,' ordered the old man.

"'That's mine,' said Jimmy.

"'It's not, roared the old man.

"Instantly every hoe ceased work, and the boys rallied around their brother. Their flourishing hoes looked dangerous, and the old man realized that he was alone, face to face with seven sturdy boys whom he had roused to take their own part with force.

"'Every third bagful was to be mine,' said Jimmy quietly, 'and if you are not satisfied with the bargain, say so now and we'll take this bag and go home.'

"The old man fumed for a while, but at last he yielded.

"'Go on with your digging,' he said.

"'Tommy and Sam,' said Jimmy, turning to two of his brothers, 'take this bag home to mother so that we may have some potatoes for dinner.'

"The little chaps carried or rather dragged the bag to the fence and from the bush they pulled out their home-made wheelbarrow. They hurried the potatoes home, dumped them into the cellar and hurried back with the empty bag. The other bags were filled, but only just as fast as was the one for home, and when this one was filled it was sent away. And it was sent home ten times.

"Old Jones groaned every time he saw the bag heaved over the fence. But as he had the rest of his potatoes nicely pitted before the close of the second day, he ought to have been grateful, and he received no pity from his neighbors when he complained of the treatment he had received from the boys.

"However, the countryside came to believe that the father of such boys could take care of himself and the stewards did not push for his salary.

"When Christmas came around, and our home folks were gathering, the turkey was sizzling and sputtering on the fire, and the steam of the huge plum-pudding was filling the house, and everybody was happy, I took the notion to run over just before dinner to the parsonage to wish the preacher and his family a merry Christmas.

"I knocked at the door and heard hearty 'Come in.' I entered and fou the preacher and his family seated the table. They had apparently j said grace, and he was about to se out the dinner. There were the sev boys, fine sturdy lads with bright o faces. There was the mother as w as the father. But I hardly more th saw the boys and the table, and 'Merry Christmas' stuck in my thro When the preacher saw me he called out: 'Merry Christmas, brother.'

"'I came to say it to you,' I sta mered, with my eyes glued on the b and the table, 'but—but I guess y have fogotten that this is Christn day.'

"'Why?' said the preacher in hearty voice and with a smile.

"'Why!' I exclaimed, 'where's yo Christmas turkey? There's nothi here but potatoes!'

"'Yes, there is,' said the preach 'there's salt.'

"'Potatoes and salt ain't no Chri mas dinner for boys,' I sputtered out

"'It's all we've g said he, 'and we're migh thankful for that.'

"I looked at him, guess, in a blank stare a then was out of that hou in a jump.

"I ran over to Thon son's, our leading stewa and hauled him out i the yard.

"'What's the matt now?' said he.

"'Matter enough,' I plied. 'Here's our preach and his family sitti down to a dinner of not ing but potatoes and sa and this on Christmas da He thanks the Lord f that, but I'm thinking i neither the Lord, nor that he's been so faithfu working for, but it's the boys of his he's to tha for them very potatoes.'

"'Well, that's too ba said he.

"'Is that all you have say about it?' said I.

"'Well, what do y propose?' he asked.

"'I propose we p something else in the pa sonage to go with t boys' potatoes,' said I, f I was hot.

"'It's kind of late n for Christmas.'

"'It's never too late f hungry boys,' said I, long as it comes.'

"'Well, what can we do?' he aske

"'You've got a horse,' said I, 'a I've got a single sleigh. Let's hit up and go round and see what the pe ple have to say.'

"'All right,' said he, and witho stopping for a bite we drove off to s our people. They were very sorry th they had been so thoughtless of th good man and had taken his faithf services so much as a matter of cours No one ever dreamed the truth of t needs of the parsonage from his wor or actions and we stewards we soundly blamed for not finding out o minister's wants and seeing them su plied. But we got something else b sides scoldings, and after two days w drove up to the parsonage with o sleigh full of turkeys, geese, chicken hams, flour and some other good thing besides half the salary in good mone We apologized for our neglect an promised to do better in the futur

"But the eyes of the boys opened an it was good to see them. Their fathe was just a little too independent an that caused his family to be the chie sufferers. However, though I had m Christmas dinner two days late tha year, it was the most delightful one think I ever ate."

"We drove up to the parsonage with our sleigh full"

The Garden Under the Christmas Tree

By ELIZABETH L. GEBHARD

CHRISTMAS Day was drawing to its close with the sun setting like a great mass of red fire behind he green of the Christmas woods. The mountains and hills beyond sloped white and glistening in the last slanting sunbeams, toward the home of Christmas peace. Inside the house in he gloaming was gathered a company of old friends, a yearly gathering held ince the grown persons present were hildren, and came to see "the little nother" on Christmas afternoons long go.

The company had changed somewhat as the years went by. Gray air as well as honors crowned some of the temples. Others had crossed ceans and continents, coming from ands where Christmas was glorified n garlands of summer flowers, instead of holly and evergreens, or from where he story of the Christ had been reently told for the first time, and lisened to by the children of far-away eoples, as a tale not older and dearer ach year, but fresh and wonderful as he story must have seemed on the first Christmas Eve. Little children, newly rown into the honor of the Christmas fternoon visit, had come also. One emained the same, "the little mother" amed by the first Christmas children. Her sweet face was likened by some to he fine cut cameos of her own young days, by others to the rose petals for laintiness and beauty, and the sweet pirit which shone from her starry yes, reminding one of the indescribable delicacy and odor of rose leaves.

On this Christmas afternoon a college professor, a philanthropist, a eacher of many children, a young man resh from the art schools of Paris, a ollege student, and a young mother vith two little girls, together with the laughters of the house, represented a roup of those who had made the Christmas gathering for many years. As was most natural, the conversation lrew back the absent ones into the warmth of the friendly circle, and houghts of loving remembrance lanced to the great Pacific coast, and cross the wide ocean to the lands of he East, where one of the company of he past had gone to tell the Christmas tory.

The glowing sun had passed from ight, giving place to the cheer of the vening lamp and the glow of the Christmas fire, when the story-teller egan her tale.

"I came across a celebration of Christmas this year," she said, "which ad an atmosphere all its own, and which carried a heart aglow with the Christmas spirit straight back through he centuries to the hills of Bethlehem, he manger, and the shepherds' song.

"In the course of much research into he origin and words of the earliest Christmas hymns, I came across two lergymen from Pennsylvania living in ur own city. One was a High Churchman, whose forefathers had been mong the early Scotch and Irish immigrants of Pennsylvania. These were he first settlers in some sections—the entlemen farmers who took up all the vailable unwooded land, building omes and owning farms of large creage. My friend, the High Church lergyman, was familiar with all the ldest hymnology embraced in the serices of his church, his learning carying the seeker after the Christmas ymns of the past into the writings of he early church fathers, and a rich tore of the rhythmical inspirations of he Christmas-tide.

"My second visit was to the home of pastor of a Lutheran Church, whose orefathers had also been of Pennsylvania stock, but this time I met the Pennsylvania German. The German ettlers, he informed me, had followed he Irish and Scotch, and finding the leared land all occupied, had taken heir share of the new world's footold from the forest lands. They had elled trees and hewed timber, and at last had found themselves the possessors of better land than their neighbors, the gentleman farmers, and so prosperity had followed in the wake of hard work.

"The Lutheran clergyman had himself been making a study of old hymns, and we found much information in our varied research to exchange with each other. The church fathers who lived their lives almost within memory of the first Christmas, became familiar friends to both of us in these days prior to our own Christmas, though we spoke their names with the reverence due to those chosen to carry the first Christmas messages, the writers of the hymns sung in the streets of Bethlehem and Jerusalem in the first centuries after Christ.

"Our mutual interest in the old Christmas songs brought a certain sympathy into our intercourse, which extended into friendly relations with his wife and only child, a little girl of seven. On Christmas Eve I found myself once more at their hospitable door, the bearer of a gift to the little daughter of the house."

Up to this point in the account, the older persons present had been the most interested listeners, but now the two little guests became eager questioners. "Did she have a Christmas tree?" asked one. "Did she hang up her stocking?" questioned the other.

"She had a Christmas tree, and I am sure that she hung up her stocking," the story-teller answered; "but she had something more that I am quite sure no one of you has ever seen." The little girls waited for the story with seeking eyes, while their elders evinced a warm interest.

"'Have you a little time to spend with us on Christmas Eve?' asked the Lutheran clergyman as I entered. 'We have something we would like to show you,' and the eager eyes of the little daughter, and the added word of welcome from the sweet-faced wife, together with the Christmas tension in the air, made it an impossible invitation to resist.

"'We are making the garden under the Christmas tree,' Mr. Ruigh said. 'Last year we could not have it, for the snow came early and covered all the moss. Gretchen is the more anxious to have the garden under her tree this year.'"

"The little maid with clasped hands lifted a flute-like voice"

"I never heard of a garden under a Christmas tree," said one of the small guests.

"Was it made of moss?" asked the other, and their mother added, "I confess I am as curious as the children."

The story-teller's face took on a reminiscent smile as she continued. "I was curious, too, but saw in the attitude of the family that the making of this garden was a matter of importance, indeed of reverence. Gretchen took my hand and led me into an adjoining room, where her father and mother followed. There I found a beautiful Christmas tree in a corner of the room, elevated about a foot from the floor on a raised platform. This platform was quite large and covered with white. Above it the branches of the tree had been trimmed away for another two feet, leaving a wide unoccupied space under the tree. On the platform was spread a covering of moss, green and gray from the Christmas woods. I waited developments with much interest, while Gretchen could hardly stand still for excited anticipation.

"Mr. Ruigh had left the room with his wife, but in a few minutes they returned with their hands full of packages. The clergyman carried a wooden box a little over a foot long, and about a foot wide, and nine inches deep. It was open at one side, and setting it down he began to take paper packages out of the three compartments into which it was divided. Emptied, and placed on one side, it presented the appearance of a low room, partitioned off by small upright twigs into three apartments, the largest in the centre. The floor was covered with a thin layer of hay. Opening one of the packages, Gretchen's father produced a little grain crib containing a tiny baby doll.

"'You know,' he said, 'it is believed by many that the manger in which the Christ-child lay was after this fashion.'

"The little crib was placed quite at the back of the larger room. Next a doll wrapped in white, with a white covering also about her head, representing the Virgin Mother, was placed near the crib, but Gretchen, with a loving mother-hand, changed her position in such a way that she hung with tender solicitude over the sleeping child. There was still one more occupant to the room—Joseph in sandals, and with his robe girt about him as if from recent traveling.

"Occasionally the clergyman spoke. 'We wanted Gretchen to remember,' he said once as the work went on, but for the most part we were silent, intent on the reproduction of the scenes of the holy night.

"One by one the oxen and goats, the donkeys and cows, were unpacked and placed in the side stalls. 'What is the closet in the corner?' I asked.

"'That is where the light is placed,' answered Mrs. Ruigh, 'sometimes a candle and sometimes a little lamp,' and then I saw a small window in the closet which threw a ray of light over the Virgin and the Child, but over no other part of the place. When the manger was finished, Gretchen's father placed it on the moss under the Christmas tree, and I asked, seeing a knoll not far distant in the mossy expanse, if there was still more in the picture.

"'Oh, yes, the shepherds and the little lambs,' answered Gretchen with a sudden clasping of her hands. 'You know that they heard the angels' song.' Sheep as real as the animals in the manger were soon placed on the slope of the hill, while shepherds with their crooks stood near, some with caretaking eyes upon the sheep, while others held their faces uplifted as if in waiting for the song of songs.

"'Now the wise men,' said Gretchen, and with the reverent attitude of expectation which had marked the whole of this reproduction of Bible scenes, the clergyman placed beyond the hilltop where the shepherds were grouped, toward the east, at the intersection of several paths, three men of foreign aspect, turbaned and sandaled, wearing gowns of bright colors, and carrying gifts in their hands, on their way to the Christ-child.

"The light overhead had been hung to throw its soft rays over the manger where the Christ-child lay. Toward the star the shepherds looked, and toward it the wise men traveled.

"It was not until all was finished that Gretchen's father spoke again, while his child watched his lips as he told the story, old and sweet, and ever new, of the Christ-child born in a manger, the scenes of which were being reproduced in his home, that a little child might never forget the beauty and the glory of his coming.

How to Keep Christmas

Timely Suggestions by Representative Men and Women on the Observance of the Festival

IT has seemed to many of us as though we were gradually losing sight of the great underlying meaning of the Christmas festival. The wonderful day appears to be given up more and more to dissipations, some of them comparatively harmless, but others of a dubious character or worse.

With this thought in view, we have secured from several wise thinkers their views upon the subject. It seemed especially fitting that prominent educators should express themselves regarding the matter. Therefore we have asked for a word from Dr. Wm. L. Felter, the distinguished head of the Girls' High School of Brooklyn, in which, with its various annexes, about 4,000 girls are being trained for usefulness; and from Dr. Charles H. J. Douglas, of the great DeWitt Clinton High School for Boys in the Borough of Manhattan.

A more purely religious presentation of the case is given by Dr. Joseph Dunn Burrell, pastor of the Classon Avenue Church of Brooklyn; to which a word is added by Dr. Josiah Strong, the famous author of Our Country and The New Era, and president of the Society of Social Service. A good woman's mode of keeping Christmas is outlined by Miss Susan Hayes Ward, author of The Life of George H. Hepworth, History of the Broadway Tabernacle, and other works.

A Feast of the Spirit

Christmas is a feast of the spirit. Only those souls who in spirit keep the day can really enjoy it. This spirit is not one of boisterousness, of rollicking fun, of nonsensical buffoonery, but rather one of quiet contentment, of sincere gratitude, of genuine brotherly love. Christmas is pre-eminently the season of self-giving, in the belief that this will be the most acceptable offering to the God and Father of us all; since it is made in the spirit that moved him to bestow his matchless gift upon the world. The spirit of self-giving is the Christ spirit.

Christmas, then, stands for more than the making of presents or the giving of alms. It means more than a gorgeous tree, or bountiful repasts, or unusual gifts. It means self-service. It means sharing. Lowell sounds the right note in the Vision of Sir Launfal, a genuine Christmas poem, when he says:

> Not what we give but what we share;
> For the gift without the giver is bare.

The Christmas spirit is the chief thing, not the gift.

In the family, then, this spirit can be best exemplified. The gift need not be costly, but he who gives it should make sure that he is giving the gift and himself. If a special plea is needed at this time, let it be for simplicity, for sincerity, for spirituality. Let genuine joy abound. Let every note of discontent cease. Let happy spirits become contagious, so that every one, from the silver-crowned grandfather to the toddling child, shall enjoy aright this great Christmas feast.

A Day of Love and Recollections

How can we begin the day better than by remembering gratefully, as we wake from refreshing sleep, the work upon earth of Him who had not where to lay his head? Each member of the family shows his good will by entering into the feelings of the others, the boisterous mirth of Jack and Sue, the radiant cheer of father and mother, and the serene kindliness of grandpa and grandma. And there are tender recollections of loved ones that were present at other Christmas-tides, and now gone before.

Dinner is planned so that mother and Bridget, too, if Bridget is a member of our household, can be spared to attend church, the grateful duty of all on Christmas Day. The enjoyment of dinner depends more upon the frame of mind of the diners than upon the nature and quantity of the food. "Better a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." But whatever we have, we will take time to relish it, indulging meantime in a family visit.

The after-dinner lull affords opportunity for breaking up into groups for confidential conversation, for a walk on the street, along a favorite road or through the fields, or for sitting down with book or pictures or writing materials. At twilight, the skilled hand, wandering over ivory keys, bears us upward till, in the silence that follows, we return to earth refreshed and strengthened.

At the Christmas tea-table what sight more pleasant than lighted candles? What sound more welcome than children's voices? The talk is of experiences of the day and plans for the evening. The young folk will away, these to party and those to concert; while their elders, happy in having given of their best to make the day bright, are now glad to rest by their own fireside.

CHARLES H. J. DOUGLAS.

A Day of Sentiment

Christmas is a time of joy, and in that aspect it is symbolical. It typifies the great love of God for us and his desire for our happiness. Many people very likely are so interested in the symbol, that is, the presents, the turkey-dinner, the games and sports and laughter, that they lose sight of the thing symbolized. But more or less of the true meaning must trickle into the heart. It is well therefore for us to "have a good time" on Christmas. The symbol sooner or later succeeds.

Christmas is a day of love, and love is not at its best until it goes out into the world. Everybody, therefore, children as well as grown-ups, ought to make a call, however brief, some time during the day, on some one for whom the day is likely to be cheerless. Our own hearth will blaze the brighter because we have lighted a little fire on one that but for us would have been desolate. Christmas, above every other festival, ought to be unselfish.

JOSEPH DUNN BURRELL.

The Children's Day

All church and national holidays are, first of all, holy days, recalling some great event or person; and Christmas is the holiest of all. But it is also especially the Children's Day, and on Christmas children should be happy all day long.

Let morning open with mirth and the exchange of greetings and gifts, if a Christmas tree has not borne precious fruits the evening before. When family gifts are exchanged before breakfast is served, then a hush in the merry-making may well follow breakfast, and a service of worship either at church or at home, with the story of star-led shepherds, and grateful thanks for home, friends, and God unspeakable Gift.

Let dinner be early, for children and for servants' sake, and make su that some homeless guest has bee secured, and the wants of some nee ones have been relieved.

After dinner should come out-o door exercise; and an evening begi ning with good, old-fashioned gam played by all the household, though b one child be present (never mir noise), continued with stories ar family legends, and closing wit Christmas verse, is an evening we spent.

Ezra the Scribe knew how to kee holiday when, after he had worshipe given thanks and taught the peop God's law from morn till midday, h charged the thronging crowds: "G your way; eat the fat and drink th sweet, and send portions to them fo whom nothing is prepared, for th day is holy unto our Lord; . . neither be ye sorry; for the joy of th Lord is your strength."

A Day of Service

The best way to have a good Chris mas is to transmute the opportunitie of the preceding three hundred an sixty-four days into the gold an frankincense and myrrh of loving se vice—the offering most fit for th Christ-child. JOSIAH STRONG.

Yuletide

IN the depths of winter, when all th charms of nature are dead, with th short gloomy days and darkest c nights, there come hovering over u the need and comfort of each other' society. We feel the dependence upo each other for happiness and enjoy ment, good fellowship and the warm clasp of a friendly hand. We receiv our pleasures from the kindness an sympathy that exist in our hearts an souls for others. From the darknes without, we enter a home filled wit the glow and warmth of the evenin grate fire, and at once the heart i filled with joy and content to b greeted with the honest face of a hos pitable friend.

Christmas awakens the strongest most heartfelt associations and lift our spirits to that hallowed and ele vated feeling of enjoyment that Yule tide always brings. With the seaso of merriment now comes the feeling o regret over the gradual dying out o the old-time Christmas customs, th loving remembrances, so dear to old fashioned childhood. The ordinary child of to-day at four or five years i already disillusioned and may b heard to say: "They ain't no Sant Claus. It's your father," or "It' your mother."

Yes, there was a charm about th dear old Christmas of the past, witl the tenderness and love it brought t the mother's heart, as she went silently into the room to find the little stock ings hanging along the fire-place on after the other! There might be only a little lonesome one, or there might b six or more jolly little ones, some witl holes in the toes worn through the day by frolicsome little feet. Santa Claus the imaginary one of the past, has been almost crowded out of the child mind. A business Santa may be seer on every block during the Christmas tide—the pity of it! for Santa, like Pierrot, seems to the child unknowr and half human, half visionary; or earth, yet not entirely of the earth.

After all, it is the unknown we live for. Surely, happiness is reflective like the light of heaven, and every face bright with smiles, and glowing with innocent enjoyment, is a mirror reflecting to others that supreme happiness. There is always the sacred spell of love in every soul at Christmas-tide. It is the heart's prayer born of gladness that Christ was born to-day!

ALTARS CROWDED AT A REVIVAL

THAT "God moves in a mysterious way" has been exemplified in a revival now in progress in the Borough of Queens, Greater New York. A colored clergyman died intestate, at Corona, N. Y., and his books and effects were sold at auction. Among the books was a copy of Drummond's Natural Law in the Spiritual World," which was knocked down with others to Robert G. Lake, a prominent business man of the town. Looking over his purchase one day, Mr. Lake began to read Drummond carelessly at first, and then with riveted attention. In reading there came to him a spiritual awakening. He sought God's forgiveness of sin. Early in life he had consecrated himself to the ministry, but somehow he had drifted back into the world. Now that he had been saved, he resolved that he would bring his associates to know his Saviour, and he founded in the Union Church of Corona a "Men's League." For three years he held meetings and then began an active laymen's movement, having as its motto: "Saved to Save." Earnest laymen from eight churches joined Mr. Lake; special meetings were held and cottage prayer-meetings instituted in Elmhurst and Corona. For several months the laymen planned for a wider evangelistic movement. They secured the services of Evangelist Phillips of Macon, Ga. Godly women held earnest meetings; many cards were printed and distributed, telling of the Phillips and Butler meetings, and sent in abundance through the mails. Houses were visited and invitations were taken into saloons and gambling places. The churches were meanwhile filled nightly by throngs to hear the messages of the evangelist. At one Young People's meeting in Corona, over 100 rose to accept Christ. The following Sunday, at Elmhurst, over 200 took the same stand. Each night people came forward at the invitation.

Evangelist Phillips, who was once a business man himself, made a powerful appeal to business men. The meetings were notable also for their song services. With Walter Kantack at the organ or piano and Professor Frank Irwin (a blind musician) and Professor Butler and his wife in duets, the movement was substantially helped. Mrs. Butler held meetings for mothers, sisters, and daughters, and filled the Presbyterian church with women auditors, and a great spiritual harvest was reaped.

The laymen's organization, on account of the success of the recent revival, has become a permanent organization, with Robert G. Lake, of Corona, L. I., president; John F. Rodman, vice-president; A. L. Dunlop, treasurer; William Fineout, secretary, and Messrs. Talleur, Burroughs, Welch, Dunlop, Ansty, Mills, Mathews, Rodman, Sjoberg, Carlin and Kantack as active working officers. Pastors Clearwater Johnston, Laas, Jackson (of the African Church), E. A. Campbell and W. J. Peck have also been active in the movement. The laymen brought together the Reformed, Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Union Evangelical Churches of both Elmhurst and Corona into fraternal bonds and they are now planning for Union Men's Meetings to be held monthly. At the Men's Meeting on Sunday, November 27, over 200 men came around the altar and in the evening the altar could not accommodate the people accepting the invitation given out by Evangelist Phillips. He estimates that not less than six hundred in all have decided for Christ. Forty have joined a Converts' Class in the Union Church and all the other churches are expecting large accessions. Dances, card parties, concerts and social functions were abandoned during revival. W. J. P.

At a word from the mother, the little maid with clasped hands, and eyes which saw visions as only children can, lifted a flutelike voice in Luther's Christmas song, written for his own little children:

"Away in a manger, no crib for a bed,
The little child Jesus laid down his sweet head,
The stars in the bright sky looked down where he lay—
The little Lord Jesus asleep on the hay.

"The cattle are lowing, the baby awakes,
But little Lord Jesus, no crying he makes,
I love Thee, Lord Jesus! look down from the sky,
And stay by my cradle till morning is nigh.

"Be near me, Lord Jesus! I ask Thee to stay
Close by me for ever, and love me I pray.
Bless all the dear children in Thy tender care
And fit us for heaven to live with thee there.

"As the last notes died away, Mr. Ruigh took up the story again. 'It is the custom in the section of country which I call home, to reproduce the scenes of the holy night in these gardens under the Christmas trees. There is sometimes half a room devoted to this Christmas art. Paths are laid out, the road from Jerusalem to Bethlehem is reproduced in perfect likeness of hill and dale, stream and woods. Fountains play in private gardens, and the scenes of the holy night are so real that the mind is held, and the heart is swayed as if in spirit one stood by the manger bed, hearing the beautiful strains, from afar, of the angels' song, and turning, greeted the wise men bearing the homage of the nations of the East."

"Might it not be possible that Luther's children sang their song facing a similar Christmas garden, and that the custom traveled over the sea with the German folk of Pennsylvania?" asked the Professor.

"It seems possible that this was a beautiful custom of the Old World before it was transplanted to the New," answered the story-teller. "Not only for little Gretchen was the glad story made fresh and vivid this year, but for the guest within her father's gates. Never did the holy night stand out above all nights so gloriously before, as when Mrs. Ruigh played softly the strains of 'The Holy Night,' and the whole family sang:

"Silent night! Holiest night!
Darkness flies, and all is light.
Shepherds hear the angels sing
Alleluia! hail the King.
Jesus the Saviour is here!
Jesus the Saviour is here!

"Silent night! Holiest night!
Guiding star, O lend thy light!
See the eastern wise men bring
Gifts of homage to our King,
Jesus the Saviour is here!
Jesus the Saviour is here!

"Silent night! holiest night!
Wondrous star, O lend thy light!
With the angels let us sing
Alleluia! to our King,
Jesus the Saviour is here!
Jesus the Saviour is here!

"When the voices ceased the night had taken on again its first glory, and as I passed out under the stars, each shining orb spoke of the Star of Bethlehem which rested over the Child in the manager—the Saviour of the world."

There was a thoughful silence among the old friends about the Christmas fire when the story had ended. Then one of the little guests spoke:

"And are the garden and the Babe really in Gretchen's home and under her Christmas tree to-day?" and the "little mother" answered in reverent tones, "He is in all our homes to-day, and under all of our roof-trees, and we are all full with his blessing."

A MAN WHO MADE DREAMS COME TRUE

wanted to get home he had been sailed around in the fog, while the pilot was trying to make out whether the lights ahead were in Jersey City or Hoboken. At other times the ferries were blocked with floating ice, and there was more delay. Travelers had been so used to being late and miserable that they had given up any thought that there was a way out. Manhattan was filling up and homes must be found in the vicinity for the hundreds of thousands who would come there to work. Brooklyn and Westchester still remained, but they would soon be filled with homeseekers, while New Jersey lay near at hand with its wide extent of territory in great part unavailable. He thought first of more bridges, but the river seemed too wide for any single span that could be devised. The idea of going under the river occurred to Mr. McAdoo, but every one said the plan was impossible. In fact, it had been tried twice before, and some one said that there were eighteen hundred feet of tunnel jutting out in the water up near Hoboken that was flooded and had the bones of a few dozen workmen who had been in it when the river came through.

Mr. McAdoo decided that the tunnels could be built, and found that he was the only one who thought so, and he decided that he was the man to put the stupendous project through. As he had not a cent at the time to back up his idea, and was but little known, it was little wonder that all he had at first was plenty of discouraging refusals.

He urged that tunnels had been put under the Thames in England and under the Seine at Paris, but the Hudson River scheme was so much larger that the money men not gifted with McAdoo's prophetic vision could not see what it would mean for them, and preferred to let other kinds of water affect their stocks rather than that which separated New Jersey from New York.

McAdoo got possession of the old flooded tunnel head and had it pumped out. He found an engineer who would undertake the work of constructing a tunnel. The present number of tubes had not then been thought of. The engineer was Charles Jacobs, an Englishman, and a man after McAdoo's own heart. Together they worked out the plans and faced one new difficulty after another, for the solution of one engineering problem brought them to a point where larger ones had to be met at once. Mr. McAdoo raised the money for his plans in small amounts at first, and did not have a pleasant time in the process. He is not inclined to talk of this period. All that any interviewer has extracted from him on the subject is that it was a time of great discouragement. As the tunnels went further the money came easier and the plans larger. Now that they have been completed, and over 200,000 people are saving time and nerve force by their use, they can see that the price paid for it was sixty million dollars and it has proved successful.

Mr. McAdoo is a home-loving man. He is simple in his tastes. He never drinks and never smokes. He dislikes to be known as a man of one idea—"the tunnel man"—and much prefers to talk on other topics—books and history especially—and on his favorite characters, which happen to be Napoleon, Lincoln, Lee, and others who have made their mark in the world's work. In all he is a typical American, whose life is a lesson well worth studying by the clean boy with ambitions, but with little but courage and stick-to-itiveness to bring them to fruition.

Getting Ready for Christmas

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

ONE of the most charming occupations of the year is that of getting ready for Christmas. Weeks before the day itself the shops display their tempting wares, and at home the subject uppermost in the feminine mind has some relation to Santa Claus. However obstinately the literalist may object to the good old saint, he still rules and reigns in the hearts of the world. Old people and children alike come beneath his sway and the spirit of good will and gaiety which he represents is one perennially fresh and forever sweet, stimulating and hallowed.

Getting ready for Christmas implies a certain amount of mystery, and for most of us a little self-denial and a good deal of thoughtful planning. If we have long lists of friends and relatives to whom we send gifts and greetings in the Christmas-tide not only is there a tax on the pocketbook. The mental strain cannot be underrated. We are told that there are people of a frugal turn who lay aside their own Christmas gifts annually that they may send them to some one else later. This cannot be recommended as an absolutely safe method, and certainly there is a suspicion of meanness in such an artifice. Mary Wilkins, with inimitable skill, once wrote a Christmas story about a pink shawl. A dear little lady had longed for a pink shawl for years, but had never been able to afford the making of one for herself. Each Christmas she knit dainty stitches into a lovely shawl of exquisite pink and sent it to a friend. She tied it with rose-colored ribbon, folded it in tissue paper and despatched it to the dear one whom she had in mind. One Christmas an expressman or a messenger or a postman, or all together, left at her door no less than six pink shawls, and she recognized in every one her handiwork, although in no instance had the shawl been sent by the person to whom it had originally gone from her. Old-fashioned people used to regard a gift as sacred, and therefore not to be given away. Much of the real delight in our Christmas preparations would be tarnished if we felt there was anywhere lurking in them the commercial element, the suggestion of barter, of a quid pro quo.

The children have the right of way in the Christmas season. If the family circumstances forbid extra expenditure for the grown people, let it be remembered that childhood is a season flitting rapidly away, and that joy and disappointment are alike greater in their effect on the boys and girls than on their elders. This is not to recommend a too lavish outlay even for children under the spell of the brave Saint Nicholas. A boy will be happier in the long run with simple than with elaborate gifts. A little girl does not need a half dozen dolls; one at a time is enough. Home-made sweets are as much appreciated, and are usually as wholesome, as those which come from a confectioner. The getting ready for Christmas will be most successful if characterized by simplicity.

BUYING CHRISTMAS CARDS

Some have pretty pictures on them,
Some have pictures bright and gay,
We may choose among the finest
For the Christmas holiday.

You for mother, I for daddy,
Both of us for baby Sue,
Then if you'll buy me a present,
I'll exchange with one for you.

A Man's Steady Climb A book has lately been published bearing the significant title, From the Bottom Up. It is the life-story of Alexander Irvine, a man well known as a worker to-day among the poor, and an intelligent and active champion of the workingman. The story begins with the boy's childhood, and opens with a bit of description. "The world in which I found myself was a world of hungry people. My earliest sufferings were the suffering of hunger—physical hunger. It was not an unusual sight to see the children of our neighborhood scratching the offal in the dunghills and the gutterways for scraps of meat, vegetables, and refuse. Many times I have done it myself.

"My father was a shoemaker; but something had gone wrong with the making of shoes. Improvements in machinery are pushed out into the commercial world, and explanations follow. A new shoemaker had arrived—a machine—and my father had to content himself with the mending of the work that the machine produced. It took him about ten years to find out what had happened to him."

The little Irish boy came of stanch Protestant stock. There were twelve children in the family, and the only person who knew how to read was the mother. Very early the little fellow began to work and earn money, digging potatoes, selling newspapers, earning anything that he honestly could, in winter, cold and barefoot, and early inured to every possible hardship. He had a keen appetite for learning; the one longing of his childhood and youth was for an education.

Enlisting as a young man in the British army, he lost no opportunity for self-improvement, and although at twenty-one he could not read, it is more than interesting to find later in life that he has studied English literature to advantage, knows his Greek grammar, and is graduated from a renowned divinity school. Successively this fine, strong man has been familiar with all sorts and conditions of men, has traveled in many lands and touched many lives.

He has been chosen to investigate labor conditions in the mines and elsewhere, and has carried through his investigations without the suspicion that he was in any manner different from the men working at his side. As lay minister of the Church of the Ascension in New York he is doing a directly beneficial work among the masses of the great city. The book abounds in amusing incidents and is illuminated by a gentle humor from the first to the last page. For a gift to a young man, whether rich or poor, no current volume could be better chosen.

As an instance of the great and tragic changes which sometimes occur in individual lives there is a striking story, one of many, related in the course of this autobiography. As a mere boy, Alexander was detailed to be the guide in her rambles of a beautiful young lady who was visiting in the neighborhood of his early home. He worshiped her from afar as the loveliest and most perfect being he had ever seen. She returned to her home in Belfast, and when later in his adolescence her former guide was employed there, he selected the church she attended and gazed at her from time to time as she sat in her family pew. After a little while she disappeared, and it was not until twenty-five years had passed that he learned that she had then married. It transpired that the marriage was not happy. The beautiful young girl eventually became the victim of drink, and in her widowhood in America her people lost all trace of her. She was discovered at last by Mr. Irvine in one of the most degraded neighborhoods in New York. She had been evicted for rent, her poor furniture was on the sidewalk and she was sheltered in her distress by a friendly colored woman. Life seldom shows a stranger contrast than this. It is a flashlight thrown upon the terrible evil wrought by intemperance.

Women in Council As some interest is manifested in the matter of jig-saw puzzles it may be as well to say that they are usually to be purchased of any stationer or may be found in a department store. They may be home-made, provided a boy possesses a jig-saw. Select any picture you choose from an illustrated paper, paste it very smoothly on a piece of thin board. Cut it up in any way you choose. The fun is in fitting the different parts of the picture together, so that they make a complete whole.

A Convalescent Child One of our friends has had a little son restored to health after the usual long siege of typhoid fever. During the weary convalescence this laddie was greatly cheered by receiving day after day pretty picture cards by mail. Thoughtful friends sent them, and the anticipation brightened dull hours while the cards became the boy's treasures. The pastor of a church tells me that when any child in his congregation is ill, he writes him a letter, and if the illness is long he writes several letters. Perhaps we can hardly estimate how much such letters mean to the proud recipient of a minister's greeting.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

THE LITTLE CLAY CITY—A Christmas Story

By JEANNETTE PORTER

So some cock-sparrow in a farmer's yard
Hops at the head of a huge flock of turkeys.
—TOM THUMB.

NO little boy in the world has so brilliant, so wonderful a Christmas as the Little Czar of Russia. Royal relatives on many of the thrones of Europe, and loyal subjects throughout the world, bestow upon the boy heir to the Russian throne a great variety of gracious Christmas gifts, among which the toys, toys, toys, are miracles of loveliness and ingenuity.

In the Little Czar's nursery, dolls laugh and cry, and ride about in carriages and carts drawn by horses that prance and step politely. Puppet lords and ladies move in and out of automobiles and motor boats, and fly in aeroplanes strung on wires from the high vaulted ceilings. The flannel elephant wanders in the elephantest way among the legs of the tables and chairs. The rabbits jump, the tortoise creeps, and tiny marionettes act out many of the fairy tales.

There is a wooden house, for instance, as big as a cracker box, no bigger, on a green lawn with a picket fence and a gate with posts that are Christmas trees; where three tiny bears and a doll with yellow hair play the story of Goldilocks as smartly and as smoothly as anything you can fancy. How you would laugh and dance for joy to see the littlest bowl of porridge and the littlest chair tumble over when Goldilocks sits comfortably down to eat Little Small Wee Bear's breakfast! And when she escapes through the window and runs into the woods, there is Mammy Bear, if you please, smoothing the pillows on the tumbled beds, and Great Huge Bear grumbling and lumbering down the stairs to the front door to watch Goldilocks run away.

"Mercy on me! This nursery is enchanted!" I declared when I saw all this.

Warfare, Pageants, Coronations

BUT of all the toys that he loves best, none are half so precious to the Little Czar as his cities and his soldiers.

Warfare, Pageants, Coronations and Jubilees, where whole cities and regiments of soldiers take part, these are the games the dear Mother Czarina invariably finds him playing when she comes into the nursery at the end of the day for their cup of cambric tea together.

The story of the Little Czar's cities alone is as beautiful as a fairy legend.

There is the wonderful city of gold, for example, where a palace with shining windows that look out upon velvety lawns, stands in tiny majesty, and a market-place, a cathedral, and an arsenal full of soldiers are fitted up. Little streets of extremely little mansions reach north and south, and east and west, from the palace, which is the centre. Around it all a driveway runs, and when Vronski brings the key and winds it up (Vronski is the Little Czar's favorite playmate, and is very much to the royal boy what Peter Pan's shadow is to Peter Pan), soldiers with black busbies step out of sentry boxes on guard; the Czar's carriage, no bigger than a filbert, drives to the castle gate, the archbishop walks down the street, the bell-ringer tolls the bell, little people in carved ivory frocks and hats move here and there. But, you should see it at night! The whole little golden toy city lights up with myriads of electric lights, no bigger than the head of a common pin.

A City of Brass

THERE is a city of brass perched on a marble mountain, after the City of Brass that Abdul Sammid discovered in the Arabian Nights; stories that the Little Czar knows by heart as well as you know by your heart the House that Jack Built.

There are larger and stronger cities, cities built of little stone and wooden blocks, which the Little Czar builds and unbuilds. I have seen more than twenty of them at a time, spread about the nursery. But, among them all, the Little Clay City of Bethlehem, which would by the casual visitor be accounted the humblest, is really the most remarkable. There is nothing in the royal nursery to compare with it, except perhaps the frescoes of white peacocks and the famous paintings on the walls by greatest artists.

No one is able to explain the charm that the Little Clay City casts over those who really see it and fall under its spell.

BUILT of nothing but common clay, there it stands, perched upon the side of a low sandy bluff: two narrow rough-paved streets and some flat-roofed houses, with here and there a low squat tower; little clay citizens, no bigger than a baby's thumb; this one with a jug upon her head, that one carrying sheepskin bottles, the other one earthen jars, all apparently on their early morning way to the wells beyond the village. This is about all you see at a first glance.

But examine it closer. By a door step a child a little while ago left off his play; clearly it is the potter's child. A half finished image and some clay bowls set to dry tell the story. A beggar, asleep in the shade of an archway, a bee-hive on a little bench at the threshold of a work-shop closed for the night, the desert folk coming over the highway, the little marketplace not yet awake; these are some of the many little touches that might have been left out, but were not.

On blue hills in the distance little clay shepherds watch little clay sheep, and the angel that bade them, "Be not afraid, for behold I bring you tidings of great joy," leads them on. Before long they shall surely all reach the little group in the stable yonder, where the Christmas Mother, her hands clasped around the Holy Baby, her lovely eyes intent upon his, watches the first mysterious little Christ-smile steal into the world. Yet nothing moves in the Little Clay City.

You will understand the strange enchantment of the Little Clay City better, if I tell you the story as the Mother Czarina told it to me, the story of that Christmas Eve when it came bearing the label: "The Little Czar of Russia, from St. Nicholas."

The Night Before Christmas

IT was the night before Christmas: The snow spread over Petersburg so deep that it was appalling. For more than a week the Little Czar had not been out of his own suite; but such a playtime as he had had! Little red banners of Russia streamed from turrets and towers, cathedral spires and housetops; every city had capitulated, the entire domain was the Czar's own and the greatest moment of all had come. At the head of the entire Russian army, infantry, cavalry, artillery, volunteers, and the Royal Red Hussars in lead and paint, his sword thrust high above his head, the baby monarch, astraddle his royal stick charger, rode triumphant.

"Brava! brava! Long live the Czar!" "Brava! brava! the Czar, the Czar!" The brave little fellow distinctly heard his soldiers calling, though it was only Vronski, dear faithful Vronski.

In peeped the sun on its way to the West. Castle windows, and minarets, garden-lakes and spires turned to golden flame; tiny spears and guns and muskets, how they glittered! And at this moment the Mother Czarina looked in at the nursery door.

"Brava! Brava!" she cried, clapping her hands for joy, because she understands how brave it is to be a Czar.

"A CORONATION, Vronski! Bring out the garlands and the velvets! The signal flags! Put up the arches and the canopy! Be quick, Vronski! The eagles and the dragons, get them all! A coronation! A coronation!"

But the Mother Czarina's strong proud arms slipped around the excited little monarch. "To-morrow, not to-day, my little king. See, the sun is setting in the big red West. Little boys must have their tea and a good long sleep. To-morrow is Christmas, you know, and oh, so many toys are down in the Throne Room, waiting." (Her gentleness is like magic, always.)

"Is there a new city, mother?"

"Yes, such a beautiful new city!" She drew him into her lap by the big bright fire.

"But always you make war upon your cities, dear. The little cities fall and fall before your guns. See! Even the city of brass has a broken gate. Is there never a city that will not fall, my little king?"

"If a city would not fall I should order out more soldiers and my biggest cannon should be sent from Moscow."

The Mother Czarina only gathered him closer to her.

Nobody ever thinks of questioning his kingly ways, except the beautiful Queen Mother, who loves him first as her little son, and only afterwards, very loyally of course, as the Little Czar.

"Tell me about the new city, mother, please."

"It is a Christmas city, dear, sent from the Holy Land to you. The good Kris Kringle himself must have brought it and made it, because among all your cities there is none half so wonderful as this one. I do believe it is a magic city, dear."

"A magic city! O mother, how can I wait until to-morrow to play with it!"

But the good hot tea, with the big fire and mother's arms so strongly about him, rocking, rocking in the high-backed chair that was the throne of all his dreams, soon set little visions to dancing, and off he went to sleep.

Mother Czarina rocked him for a long while, then in that gentle, mysterious way that mothers have when they remember a surprise for you and go away to fetch it, she tucked the tired little conqueror snug and warm into the big white bed, beckoned to Vronski, and together they stole out of the nursery.

Early Christmas Morning

IN the light of the night-lamp, dimmed by the early dawn, Vronski, spell-bound, stood at the bedside of his little master.

"Oh, little master, come! Come and see—the angels!" he pleaded. "The shepherds are leaving their sheep to follow them! Look, little master! Here is the Inn where there was no room! There is a picture of it in the book the Archbishop gave to thee. The Baby is right in here! See! See!"

The light of the shrine-lamp that ever hangs among the little nursery folk of Russia shone directly down upon the two little playmates and the little group in the stable. The Mother Czarina, who had slept in the nursery that night, wakened and refused to allow the nurse to disturb the children.

"Sh! Vronski, it is the Christ," she heard the Little Czar say. "See the horses and the cows and the light that shines! Say the story to me, Vronski! Say all of it, the way mother tells it out of the book."

"Yes, little master. And we fixed it here alone, the beautiful Czarina and I to help her. I remember the story every word. I learned it from the Archbishop to say at the Crêche in the Basilica. Ah, little master," Vronski went on when the story was ended, "you shall be the Czar and their little Majesties of Italy and Spain shall be kings and queens. The baby princess in Holland shall be Queen of the Netherlands. The beautiful Czarina told me so this very night. But the Christmas Baby is King of the world. The Archbishop told us this, too, and——"

But this was all too much for the sweet Queen Mother. She folded the little boys into their beds, just as any other joyous loving mother would do, and bade them wait for their playthings until Christmas morning.

The story of the Little Clay City quickly spread throughout the palace, already thronged with guests for the Christmas festivities. Later in the day, when the Czar, the Mother Czarina and the five little Princesses came calling "Merry Christmas, Merry Christmas," and all the royal household crowded into the nursery, they found the Little Czar on his favorite stick horse, and Vronski on a dapper hobby, urging a puppet pageant, more splendid than could be got together anywhere in the world, to the Little Clay City of Bethlehem, heralding the Christmas Baby as King.

J. F. M., McKees Rocks, Pa. What were the names of the three wise men that went to seek the child Jesus?

The legendary names which have come down to us are Melchior, Balthasar and Caspar.

G. A. L., St. Elmo, Tenn. What is the size of the largest vein of silver ever found in the United States, and where was it located? What is the average size of veins of silver? What is the value of silver bullion?

The largest veins of silver in the United States have been found in Leadville and Gunnison County, Colorado; Silver City, Idaho, and near Butte, Mont. At Leadville, some masses have been taken out weighing several hundred pounds. Peru and Mexico are rich in silver. The largest ore ever exhumed was taken from a mine in Peru, and weighed 800 pounds. No average weight can be given for a silver vein. It is generally found with other ores, notably lead and copper. The coining value of an ounce of pure silver is $1.2929, and the coining value of an ounce of standard silver is $1.1636.

A. H. F., Darlow, Kans. What countries are free republics, partial monarchies, and absolute monarchies?

The United States, France, Portugal, Mexico, the countries of South and Central America, and the governments of the West Indies, except colonial possessions, are republics. Afghanistan, Tunis, Zanzibar, Bokhara, Abyssinia, Khiva, Montenegro, Siam and a few other small principalities are absolute monarchies. There are forty-two limited and constitutional monarchies including Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Russia, Turkey, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Italy, Spain, China, Persia, and Japan.

W. E. Y., Morton, Minn. 1. How many railroads are there in Alaska? 2. How long are they?

1. There are nine different systems of railroads in Alaska. One runs from Skagway to White Horse Rapids, whence boats in summer run to Dawson and the lower Yukon. Several short lines connect Nome with neighboring mines. A road is under construction between Valdez and the Tanana region. 2. There are only 370 miles of railway in the territory.

R. H., Buttonwoods, R. I. Do the secret service men of whom so much is written in the papers have anything else to do beside safeguarding the President and other public officials?

The secret service men belong to the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department at Washington. Their principal duty is to discover makers of counterfeit money and every kind of fraud on the Treasury Department. Some members of the division are detailed to look after the safety of the President.

W. H. N., Wickford, R. I. Please explain Matt. 27: 5; also Acts 1: 16-18.

The sarcastic reply which Judas received from the elders and priests instead of the sympathy he expected, deepened his remorse for his crime. It is supposed that he flung the pieces of silver after the priests into the sanctuary, where only they might enter, and then rushed out and hanged himself.

C. E. C., Block Island, R. I. What cases of dispute have been brought before The Hague Court for arbitration, and how far has this tribunal been successful in settling international difficulties?

There have been two Hague Conferences, those of 1899 and 1907, at which many international problems were discussed, such as warfare on land, on sea, in the air; armament, arbitration, rights and duties of nations, etc. In 1903, there sprang up a movement to encourage recourse to The Hague Court through treaties of arbitration led by England and France. The movement spread throughout Europe and America. Forty-four such treaties were signed by more than twenty European and South American nations. Most of these refer to The Hague Court all disputes not affecting vital interests or national honor arising between the contracting parties within five years. The treaties between Denmark and Holland and Denmark and Italy refer all cases to The Hague Court. The next Conference will be held in 1914. Certainly, The Hague Conferences have done much towards universal peace, and it is hoped that soon the armies of the nations will become an international police force to preserve the peace of the world.

H. F. R., Negaunee, Mich. Can you give me the meaning of Hosea 7: 5 and Hab. 2: 15?

Hosea 7: 5, "The day of the king" means his inauguration day, or his birthday, probably the latter. "Made themselves sick," they drank not merely glasses, but bottles; "he stretched out his hand with scorners"—the gesture of revelers in holding out the cup and in drinking to one another's health. Scoffers were the king's boon companions. Hab. 2: 15: The Chaldean king with his insatiable desires (a kind of intoxication) allured neighboring States into the same mad thirst for war to obtain booty, and then at last exposed them to loss and shame—an appropriate image in Babylon, which at last fell during a drunken revel; "that thou mayst look on their nakedness," that is, with unhallowed delight, like Ham of old in the case of Noah.

K. A. A., Kirk, Neb. 1. Please give a synopsis of the results of the "Pittsburg Survey," and other investigations instituted by Mrs. Russell Sage. 2. Is it true that the men in the steel works of Pittsburg work twelve hours a day seven days in the week, and are given less consideration than they should receive?

1. The works so far published by the Russell Sage Foundation are: The Standard of Living Among Workingmen's Families in New York City, Medical Inspection of Schools, Laggards in Our Schools, Housing Reform, A Model Tenement House Law, Among School Gardens, Workingmen's Insurance in Europe, The Campaign Against Tuberculosis, Report on the Desirability of Establishing an Employment Bureau in the City of New York, Correction and Prevention, and six volumes on labor in Pittsburg. 2. Since the publication of these volumes, it is said that great improvement has been made in the conditions in the steel works, which were previously very bad.

C. E., Newport News, Va. How many national banks are there in this country, and how much capital do they have altogether?

The report of the Comptroller of the Currency for last year (1909) gives 6,788 banks with a total capital of $919,143,825.

E. H., Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y. What is an aqueous rock? The two words seem quite contradictory.

It does not mean that the rock has any water in its composition. It is a term used in geology to designate rocks which have been formed beneath the surface of the water by deposits of shells, plant and animal remains and precipitates of various chemicals.

C. M., Centralia, Ill. Please explain Matt. 12: 39, 40.

These spokesmen of their generation addressed him in the prevailing spirit of unbelief. Jesus answered by pointing them to the case of Jonah. "In the heart of the earth" simply meant the grave. The period was expressed in round numbers, according to the Jewish way of speaking, which was to regard any part of a day, however small, included within a period of days, as a full day.

L. S. C., Topeka, Kan. In what year are we living, according to the Jewish calendar as the Jews use it to-day, and where did the present year commence, according to that calendar?

This is the year 5670-71, according to the Jewish calendar. The year began at sunset on October 3.

Some time ago a press dispatch from Pittsburg, Pa., appeared in the daily newspapers to the effect that a new colony of settlers in Tantallon, Sask, Canada, favored the emigration of eligible young women to that section, as many of the farmers and young business men there were in favor of marrying and making the place a permanent home. This dispatch, in substance, was referred to in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and also in other weeklies. We have since made investigation, writing to the authorities, and we are now informed that the statements in the dispatch in question were wholly unauthorized. The author of the statements, who procured their circulation in the newspapers, has been arrested and will be placed on trial in a Canadian court.

R. W. L., Allisonia, Va. What is the trouble between the Vatican and the Spanish Government?

The Vatican claims that the Spanish government has no right to make church matters subject to temporal authority. The government claims that religious orders have established themselves in the country on being driven from France, and that these are unrecognized orders and their presence is unlawful and contrary to the best interests of the country. The government does not wish to have the orders increased in numbers. It also objects to church interference in political affairs. The government has threatened to break off the concordat whereby the Roman Church has privileges not given to other faiths. It has been proposed that Protestants and other non-Catholic religions be allowed to exhibit the symbols of their faith or a sign stating to what faith the edifice is dedicated, on the face of their buildings. This was strongly opposed by the Roman Church. The trouble is still far from being settled.

M. O., New Haven, Conn. I am a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whose subscription expires in January. Can I take advantage of your premium offers now? I wish to use some of the books as Christmas presents.

Certainly you can. Send in your renewal of subscription early this week with your order for premium books or magazines, and you will receive your premiums in time for Christmas. Don't delay, however, as the time is short. Your subscription will be advanced one year from present date of expiry. Thus you lose nothing by sending in ahead and you get the same timely choice of premiums as our December subscribers.

M. L. C., Marion, Ill. How is the great musician Innes' name pronounced?

"In-nes," with the accent slightly on the first syllable.

Miscellaneous

S. W. W., Fort Scott, Kan. 1. A vulgar habit, though not so reprehensible as some others. 2. Quite unnecessary, and nowhere tolerated among well-bred people.

J. D. H., Bartow, Fla. 1. Under the law and by nature, all are sinners, but though the law made nothing perfect, yet Christ makes us perfect in his perfection. To those who are in Christ sin is not imputed, all their sins being covered by his righteousness—clothed as with a garment. See I. Kings 8: 46; I. John 1: 8 and also 3: 9; Gal. 3: 22; Rom. 3: 10 and other passages. 2. Nothing is revealed beyond what is contained in the Scriptures and speculation is useless.

P. J. There are many things in nature which baffle even the ablest scientists. Scientific theories are constantly changing and advancing. You cannot interpret spiritual things through purely natural channels. The human mind has its distinct limitations, and when we try to supplement it by conjecture and speculation, the result cannot be of real value. With regard to your question as to different Biblical interpretations we would say that in all cases we must be governed (1) by the oldest available texts and (2) by the obvious meaning or purpose. A very slight error in translation may completely transform the meaning of a passage. Mark 16: 16 says simply, "He that disbelieveth shall be condemned."

Three Royal Christmas Cards

IT has long been the custom of the monarchs of Europe to exchange greetings on cards which display the highest art of the painter and designer. These cards are also enclosed with gifts sent to friends and faithful retainers. The King of England prefers the very artistic and majestic conception by Howard Daire of a visit of Henry VIII to Cardinal Wolsey. Charles II, whose career was filled with battles, hair-breadth escapes, and other adventures enough to fill a volume, is selected by the Kaiser as the chief figure on his favorite Christmas card. The picture shows him at the dramatic moment of his return to England after the death of Cromwell. The Queen of Italy has chosen most wisely of all, in the judgment of most of us. She likes best the artistic Madonna of H. M. Bennett. These beautiful cards are the highest style of artistic and engraving work of Raphael Tuck & Sons.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

Synopsis of Previous Chapters

Little Jimmy Preston, aged six, gets a letter at the post office for his sister Barbara. On the way home it is lost. Barbara Preston has been trying to keep the farm, the last of her father's estate, for Jimmy, but it is mortgaged to Honorable Stephen Jarvis, who is comparatively young. He threatens to foreclose. Peg Morrison, the old farm hand, is as greatly concerned over the loss of the letter as is Barbara. She goes to Mr. Jarvis to ask for more time on the mortgage. He tells her that he is disposed to do it, and also that he is tired of his present housekeeper and would like her to fill the place. She leaves without a word. The old housekeeper at once becomes her enemy. Stephen Jarvis comes to see Barbara. He asks her to marry him and he will give her the place. She refuses. She thinks of her old lover who went away and whose fate she did not know. Jarvis drives up and insists she ride with him. He rebukes her for not asking his aid to obtain a school position he heard that she had applied for, and she tells him that she asked his aid once and was refused. He says that he had offered her another place. He renews his proposals and says her brother could live with them. He tells her that he has never loved any one else in his life. He leaves her at her own gate, where little Jimmy meets her and says Peg has found the letter. All she can make out is the post-mark. The handwriting is that of David Whitcomb, her old lover, whom she thought dead. Barbara writes to the address, Tombstone, Ariz. Jarvis meets her once more and walks with her, as she will not enter the carriage; and he tells her that he cannot give her up. He grasps her arm, but with the declaration that she is "free," she wrenches away. She makes a desperate resolution. Going to Mr. Bellows, the auctioneer, she tells him that she wishes to sell her skill and intelligence "to the highest bidder." She says a mortage on the place covers everything, and that she must sell her work for a term of years for $1,200. Against his will, he consents to auction her off. Jarvis is astonished when he finds Barbara is to sell her services. A small crowd gathers at the Preston farm on the day appointed, Mr. Bellows wishes to know if Barbara wants to "back out." She refuses to change her mind. Jarvis comes to protest. Whitcomb returns while the auction is in progress. $1,400 is bid.

XI—Continued

THE woman in the green dress rose in her place. "This is preposterous!" she cried. "No servant is worth—"

"Be quiet, madame," commanded the auctioneer. "I'm runnin' this sale. Fourteen hundred dollars! Is there any lady or gent in the room who'll raise it? Fourteen hundred fifty! Fifteen hundred!"

"Sixteen hundred!"

The young man in the travel-stained tweeds shook his fist in the face of the small seedy man, who drawled out his bids in a hoarse, scarcely audible voice.

"Sixteen hundred I'm offered by the gentleman who has just arrived. Sixteen hundred, going!"

"Two thousand!" piped the little man in the creased checked suit.

"Twenty-one hundred!" shouted the latest comer, his eyes blazing.

"Twenty-three hundred!" said the engineer in a dogged monotone.

"Twenty-five hundred!" wheezed the man in checks, squinting through his glasses at the paper on which he was setting down the bids with painstaking neatness.

"Twenty-five hundred dollars I'm offered!" shrilled the auctioneer. "Do you raise it?" He turned to Whitcomb.

"Twenty-six hundred!" cried the engineer excitedly.

"Three thousand!" the hoarse voice of the shabby little stranger interposed.

"Three thousand one hundred!" snapped Whitcomb.

"Three thousand one hundred! Who'll make it four thousand?" The old auctioneer's voice trembled. He leaned far out over the table, brandishing his mallet wildly.

The man in the checked suit nodded.

"Four thousand dollars I'm bid; who'll raise it to five?"

The young fellow who had tacitly acknowledged himself to be David Whitcomb groaned aloud.

"I can't do it!" he said.

There was a general stir and turning of heads as Peg Morrison forced his way through the excited crowd.

"Hold on thar!" he cried in a loud, tremulous voice. "I've been up an' got my money an' counted it. I'll bid on Miss Barb'ry myself. She ain't a-goin' t' leave this 'ere farm t' go with nobody, ef I kin help it! I bid fifty-eight dollars an' sixty-five cents on Miss Barb'ry, an' its all I've got in the world!"

"Four thousand dollars I'm bid!" cried Mr. Bellows, his professional tones easily dominating the babel of voices. "Four thousand dollars, going! Four thousand dollars, going! Four thousand dollars, gone! And sold to this 'ere gentleman. Your name, please!"

The small man in the checked clothes

"'I find you changed,' she said; 'greatly changed'" cleared his throat weakly and blinked, as he strapped the leathern memorandum book.

"My name's Smith," he said in an apologetic whisper.

"Well, Mr. Smith, you c'n settle right here and now, an' I'll give you a signed receipt."

"Hold on!" blustered Whitcomb, his face flushed to a wrathful crimson. "Who is this fellow, and what does he mean to do with—Barbara?" The last word was a groan of rage and disappointment.

"Excuse me, sir; I've got a bad cold an' can't talk. I'll explain to Mr. Bellows here in private. Yes, sir; I've got the money all right."

XII

"I congratulate ye, ma'am, on the success o' your idee," Thomas Bellows said when an hour later he handed to Barbara the roll of bills from which he complacently peeled off his own tidy commission. "This 'ere 'll pay off the lien on your prop'ty, I take it, an' leave you a pretty good nest egg besides."

"Who," said Barbara, her face pale and troubled, "bought me?"

"W'y, as t' that," confessed the auctioneer, "I can't tell you exactly. I was asked to hand you this 'ere letter. It contains further perticklers, I persoom."

He produced a thick square envelope bearing her name and address in typewritten characters.

"You was to stay right here on call, I was asked t' inform you. No, ma'am; it wa'n't any o' them folks that wrote t' you beforehand. A man, name of Smith; said he was the agent of the party as bid you in. You're to stay right here till called for."

Barbara had opened the envelope and was scanning the few lines of typewriting in the middle of the large square sheet.

"Miss Barbara Preston," she read, "will hold herself in readiness to enter upon the term of her services, previously understood to be five years. It is impossible, at the present instant, for the writer to state when the call will come; but the term of service will comprise the conduct of a home, and the care and guardianship of a little child."

There was also enclosed a stamped and addressed envelope, containing a paper drawn up in legal form, binding one Barbara Preston, spinster, for and in consideration of the sum of four thousand dollars (herein acknowledged), to a term of continuous service, beginning on the eighteenth day of May, 19—, and terminating on the same day of the month in the year 19—. The document was duly witnessed and bore, in lieu of signature, the imprint of a seal, with a device of crossed battle axes and the single word Invictus.

"You're t' sign right here," said Mr. Bellows, indicating with his blunt forefinger the space below the seal. "Me an' Peg Morrison 'll witness the signature. I told him to wait outside, in case th' was papers to sign. I'll see to forwardin' it for you. Le' me see that there envelope; likely it'll shed a little light on th' identity o' the party."

But the envelope merely bore the number of a post-office box in a distant city.

Mr. Bellows scratched his head and squinted his eyes into puzzled slits as he surveyed this unsatisfactory bit of evidence from every possible point of view.

"Wall, I don't know," he burst out at length, "'es I'd trust that proposition teetotally, if it wasn't fer the references. The man as bid ye in satisfied me the party he was representin' was O.K. es t' character an' intentions."

He glanced shrewdly at the girl; but Barbara asked no questions. She was beginning to realize that while the shackles which had bound her to Jarvis were about to be loosed, this unknown master of her future had forged a new and perhaps heavier fetter. But her composed features betrayed nothing while she wrote her name clearly—Barbara Allen Preston—below the red seal, with its short but significant motto.

Thomas Bellows went away after a little, taking with him the contract, duly signed, sealed and ready to deliver, and Barbara, left quite alone in the disordered home, quietly locked the money away in a drawer of her desk.

She turned to find Peg Morrison staring at her with eyes full of grief and consternation.

"Miss Barb'ry," he began, "why in creation didn't ye tell me what you was goin' t' do? Sellin' yourself—sellin' your own flesh and blood, like you was an Aferc'n slave! What d' you s'pose your folks 'd said t' what took place in this 'ere house t'day, huh? I'll bet your grandmother Preston 'd think you'd gone crazy. Where be you goin'? What you goin' t' do with th' Cap'n? Whar do I come in in this 'ere deal? Them's questions 'at I want answered right now. I've a notion," he added darkly, "that you be kind o' cracked. 'N' I don't wonder at it much."

Barbara was putting the furniture in place, straightening the rugs, and otherwise restoring to its wonted order the scene of the recent auction. Her cheeks and lips were bright with color; her eyes sparkled as she faced the old man.

"You are entirely mistaken, Peg," she said impatiently. "Just listen, will you? If I had waited a few days longer we should have been sold out under the hammer, farmhouse, furniture, stock. Now we shan't be. Do you understand? This very day I'm

IS LIFE WORTH LIVING?

Is life worth living? "It depends on the liver."

This is an old answer to an old question—an answer with a two-fold meaning.

The little organ that secretes bile is blamed for many ills and many crimes. Everything looks blue to the bilious person who has overtaxed his liver with indigestible foods. It is easy to charge everything to the liver.

Of course the trouble is not with the liver, but with the man who owns the liver. The person with bounding health and vital vigor does not ask the question, "Is life worth living?" Life is full of beauty and pleasure for the person who eats simple, nourishing foods and lives in accord with the laws of Nature. He enjoys every moment of work or play, because every function of the body is performed as Nature intended.

Life is sustained by the food we eat and the air we breathe. These two elements, food and air, properly selected and appropriated, build the perfect human body. Now it ought to be plain that the complete food for nourishing the perfect human body must contain all the elements needed for making bone, brain, muscle and fat. One does not need to be a dietetic expert to understand that a food which contains one of these elements in excess of what the body needs is not a perfect food.

A perfect food is one which supplies to the human body the elements needed for the making of bone, tissue, and brain in the same proportions as we find them in the perfectly developed human body. Has Nature provided such a food? Yes. Whole Wheat is such a food. It has been man's "staff of life" for 4,000 years. It contains all the elements found in the human body, and we find that these elements are in almost exactly the same proportion as in the human body. It contains more nutriment than corn, oats, or barley, and when properly prepared, is more easily digested.

The experience of many hundreds of thousands of persons, combined with the testimony of physicians and dietetic experts, proves that in Shredded Whole Wheat we have a food that contains all the nutritive elements of the whole wheat prepared in their most digestible form. Shredded Wheat is, therefore, a perfect food. In making Shredded Wheat the wheat is cleaned and then steam-cooked for thirty-five minutes. It then passes into shredding machines, which draw the kernels of cooked whole wheat out into fine, filmy, porous shreds. These shreds are then formed into Biscuits and Triscuits and baked.

The Biscuit is deliciously nourishing for breakfast with hot milk and a little cream. Being ready cooked and ready-to-serve it also forms very wholesome combinations with stewed or preserved fruits. It contains more real nutriment than meat or eggs, is more easily digested and costs much less.

going to settle with the Honorable Stephen Jarvis," her red lips curled a little over the words, "and I'll pay Abe Hewett, too, and all the others. Oh! I'm glad I did it—glad! Jimmy will have the farm, and there'll be plenty left to fix the fences, and buy the fertilizers we need and mend the broken roof and maybe paint the house. Don't you see, Peg, what a splendid thing it will be?"

"But where are you goin', Miss Barb'ry?" The old man's voice held the sound of tears. "An' who's goin' to take care o' the Cap'n?"

Barbara compressed her lips sternly.

"I don't know where I shall go," she said, "but wherever I am I can write to—to Jimmy; and, Peg, I want you to stay, just as you have; only I shall pay you good wages. I shall pay you all that I owe you, too, and——"

"Will I hev charge o' the Cap'n?" inquired the old man anxiously. "Five years is a long time, Miss Barb'ry; he'll be—lemme see—w'y, the Cap'n 'll be 'leven years old time you're at liberty."

Barbara drew her fine dark brows together.

"I've engaged Martha Cottle to come here and keep house and take care of Jimmy," she said. "She's coming this afternoon."

Mr. Morrison's jaw dropped.

"Marthy Cottle!" he ejaculated. "W'y, that female—she don't know no more 'bout little boys 'an—'an a Holstein steer. She's an old maid school-marm, cut an' dried."

"She can help Jimmy with his lessons," Barbara said doggedly. "She's good and honest, and she'll do her best to——"

"My!" murmured the old man, shaking his head. "She'll do her best, mebbe, but—wall; I'll do what I kin fer the Cap'n t'—keep him f'm gettin' too awful lonesome an' discouraged. Marthy Cottle! Huh! We'll hev t' make out the best we kin after you're gone. Does — the Cap'n know — hev you tol' him you're a-goin' leave him?"

"No," said Barbara in a harsh voice, "I haven't, and I don't intend to, either. I—I'll leave word. I—couldn't, Peg."

Her young voice broke in an irrepressible sob.

"Don't you feel bad, Miss Barb'ry," the old man essayed to comfort her. "You meant it fer the best, I know you did, Miss Barb'ry. An' mebbe it'll turn out all right. I wouldn't cross no bridges till I got to 'em, ef I was you. I s'pose," he went on, his shrewd eyes on her face, 'at you seen young Dave Whitcomb this mornin'—him 'at used to teach school in th' village?"

Barbara's face whitened.

"You don't mean——" she faltered.

"Dave was here t' the auction," pursued Mr. Morrison. "I heard him put in two or three big bids on ye. He was ready to pass out his entire pile t' —save ye f'om bein' took away; I'll say that much fer Dave."

He turned, with his hand on the door.

"I didn't hev nothin' when it come t' biddin'," he groaned. "I might a' saved m' breath t' cool m' porridge. But I'd a' give the best fi' years off'n m' life t' 'a kep' ye right here at home, whar ye b'long. I swan I would, Miss Barb'ry."

"I know you would, Peg," Barbara said gently. Her eyes, the beautiful clear eyes of her father in his first unspoiled youth, were misty with tears, but she smiled bravely. "Five years isn't long," she reminded him. "It'll soon be over. And you can raise five crops of those wonderful onions while I'm gone."

Stephen Jarvis was at home and alone in his library that afternoon when Barbara asked to see him. It might even have been inferred that he expected her, but if he did, he made no sign. His manner was cool and calm, quite in keeping with the business of the hour, as he took pains to explain to her a number of details connected with the accumulated interest upon interest, delinquent tax accounts and other matters pertaining to the estate which Barbara, in her poverty, had been forced to ignore.

"I can pay it all," she said to him, the fruit of her triumph sweet upon her lips. "That is why I am here—to pay—everything I owe."

He looked at her quietly.

"You are doubtless to be congratulated upon the success of your scheme," he said. "I hear you realized quite a handsome sum on the sale of," he hesitated for the fraction of a minute, "your future."

"It will be only five years," Barbara said defiantly. "I shall be glad to work hard for Jimmy."

"When," he asked, "do you expect to leave town?"

"To-day, to-morrow—I cannot tell. I am ready to go now."

"To be gone five years," he said thoughtfully. "Very well; we will finish this business at once. Let me advise you to attend to your taxes promptly hereafter, and if——"

"Thank you," interrupted Barbara haughtily. "I shall be able, I am sure, to meet all obligations in the future. The farm may be worthless, worn out; but it will pay for itself."

He did not appear to have heard her last words. He was busily arranging various papers. And presently he handed her the canceled bond and mortgage and the receipted tax bills, all neatly arranged. In return she counted out to him with fingers which trembled in spite of herself the crisp bills for which she had sold her youth.

"There!" she said rather breathlessly. "Is that all?"

"All," he repeated quietly. "And it is all quite right. Thank you."

She looked at him uncertainly. His head was bent; his eyes fixed upon the pile of rustling bank notes which she had just pushed toward him.

A sudden unreasoning sense of dismay fell upon the girl, shadowing the triumph in her face. She made swift retreat toward the door, casting a half frightened backward look at the sombre figure behind the desk.

He did not lift his eyes from their unseeing contemplation of the money, even when the jarring sound of the hard shut door told him she was gone.

Left quite alone Stephen Jarvis slowly folded the notes, sealed them securely in a stout envelope and locked them in his safe.

XIII

Young Whitcomb sat quite at his ease in Donald Preston's big armchair, one leg flung carelessly over the other, his handsome head thrown back, its riotous curls shining in the lamplight. His blue eyes full of laughter were set upon Barbara.

"So you thought I was dead; did you?" he asked in a bantering tone; "but it didn't appear to bother you much. You're looking handsomer than ever, Barbara. I had an idea I'd find you—changed."

He waited for some sort of reply; but Barbara was trying hard to reconcile the ruddy, smiling man, who sat so unconcernedly in her dead father's place, with the pallid, serious, large-eyed phantom of her dreams. She had been looking at him in puzzled silence, and now her glance disengaged itself from his with an effort.

"I'll wager," he said, "that you have been thinking of me with a crown upon my forehead, a harp within my hand, the way we used to sing in Sunday school when we were kids. Now own up! And you're disappointed to find that I'm such a commonplace, live looking chap—eh, Barbara?"

"I find you—changed," she confessed in a low voice, "greatly changed."

Dragon's Teeth

I LOOKED from my chamber window
On the green house roof beneath,
And I saw on its lower edges
A row of dragon's teeth.
Some large, some small, some midway,
They shone in the setting sun,
That had fashioned their shining beauty
Through the day that was nearly done.

Not sown like those of Cadmus;
I feared no hostile band;
But placed just where I could see them
By the Father's loving hand.
For I needed a thought to comfort,
And the glistening cylinders cold
Taught a lesson of strength and protection,
When the gray should transform the gold.

So I turned from the icy splendor
With a feeling of perfect trust;
For He who could fashion such wonders
Would temper the wind's fierce gust;
And I need not fear for the morrow,
Since His arms are underneath,
Nor dread the stings of sorrow
That come from care's dragon teeth.

offers you a year's subscription to the Christian Herald and a year's subscription to The Outlook, 52 issues each, 104 magazines in all, for only $3.00. That's at a rate of less than three cents each, just about as much as you pay for each copy of the Christian Herald.

¶ Theodore Roosevelt is an editor of The Outlook, and all of his editorials and articles on Current Topics will appear in that magazine, and nowhere else.

¶ There are many persons who do not agree with Roosevelt in some things---possibly in many things; it is the privilege of every American to have his own opinions. And then there are multitudes of Americans who regard Mr. Roosevelt as "our foremost living citizen"---others differ. It is for the edification of those who so regard him, as well as for those who don't, that we have made this special arrangement.

¶ The Christian Herald always has been and always will be strong and independent in its editorial utterances and endorsement of public men and women, as well as in other things. We want, however, to give Christian Herald readers of both classes, those who agree with Mr. Roosevelt and those who do not, an opportunity to know just what this strenuous American is doing, for no matter how you look at him he is a big news-maker, and his terse way of doing and saying things commands respect. Every American should keep posted on national events, and no one can do this unless he knows just exactly what is happening in the vicinity of Theodore Roosevelt.

Following Bad Advice*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

YOUNG King Rehoboam wanted to be advised, at least he thought he did.

"He took counsel with the old men," who were probably the friends of his father, King Solomon. It was at the time of his accession to the throne. Great and prosperous had been the reign of King Solomon. All of his cups and plates were of gold. None were of silver. It was nothing accounted of in the days of King Solomon. Indeed, he made silver in Jerusalem as stones. (I. Kings 10: 21-27). All of this magnificence brought heavy taxation upon the people, for somebody had to pay for the luxurious customs of the king. And when Rehoboam was made king, the people appealed to him to have their taxes lightened. And so he asked advice of the old men. They did not say, "Make the taxes of the people less." Neither did they advise the continuation of the heavy taxes, but they did say: "Be a servant unto this people, answer them and speak good words to them, and they will be thy servants forever." In brief, the old men advised the young king to be a friend of the people. But the advice did not please King Rehoboam. He had visions of kingly glory and magnificence equal to, if not surpassing, that possessed by his father, and so he rejected the advice of the old men.

What the Young Advised

"And took counsel with the young men," those of his own age, and with whom he had grown up. They would therefore be all the more likely to reflect his own feelings. They were in the mood of greatly increasing the taxes of the people, and they made very odious and discourteous comparisons. They advised King Rehoboam to say to the people: "My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions." This probably referred to the manner of securing public labor on public works, where men worked under the lash for King Solomon, but the young men would have King Rehoboam use lashes with bits of sharp cornered metal fastened in that would tear the flesh. "Tell them that you will add to their yoke (their burdens) and that you will be more than three times as hard upon them as your father has been; as much harder as the little finger is larger than the loin."

All of this pleased the young King Rehoboam. It quite fitted in with his ideas. So he gave the command that after three days the people should come before him, and hear what he had to say to them. They were marshaled by the great labor leader Jeroboam, the master workman. And to the expectant throng, the king delivered his cruel message. We are not told whether or not the people were struck dumb, or whether a great wail went up from them, but a breach was made that day. There was a revolt, and the kingdom was divided: ten tribes left Rehoboam, and made Jeroboam their king. Two tribes only remained loyal to King Rehoboam, and they were never joined again. Not only did Israel forsake their king, but they also forsook their God, as we shall learn in the lessons that are to follow.

How different it all would have been if the young man Rehoboam had followed the advice of the old men! A good fairy called her assistant and showed her a golden box. "Take this box," she said, "and lock it carefully in the safe. It contains good advice." "My mistress," replied the assistant, "why should we lock up good advice? No one will ever take it."

Let us compare the young King Rehoboam, who was probably twenty-one years of age when he came to the throne, with his father King Solomon who as a boy seventeen years of age succeeded to the throne of his father King David. We know the story well: how the Lord appeared in a vision to Solomon as he was sleeping, and said to him: "Ask what I shall give thee." How wonderful was the reply of the youth: "Give thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and evil; for who is able to judge this thy great people?" And we are told that the young king's reply pleased the Lord, that he had asked for wisdom instead of long life, or riches, and that he had not sought power over his enemies. Place these two pictures side by side. Solomon, the God-loving, teachable young man, with Rehoboam, the self-willed young man who sought wisdom of his fellow-men instead of God.

"Lord, I pray thee, open his eyes that he may see." We feel like making this prayer for all young men who are like Rehoboam, even worse, for they do not even take counsel with old people, and they promptly reject the advice given by parents or grandparents if it is offered to them. This prayer was just made by the prophet Elisha for his young manservant when the Syrian host had come to the town of Dothan, where Elisha and his servant were, to capture them. The young man was not blind, but he did not see with the eye of faith. And when the Lord did open his eyes, he saw that the host of heaven which had been sent for protection far outnumbered the attacking force (II. Kings 6: 8-17). The result of that prayer was more wonderful than any oculist ever achieved.

There was one young man who would not open his eyes, although he was bidden by the Lord Jesus himself what to do. "Go, sell that which thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, follow me." And the young man, though rich in money and lands, went away from Jesus sorrowful and blind; the eyes of his soul were blind. Rehoboam was just such a young man—rich, very rich in titles and lands which he had inherited from his father, King Solomon; but the cause of the poor and the oppressed did not appeal to him. We are not told whether or not the rich young ruler who came to Jesus was able to hold on to his possessions; but we are told that Rehoboam lost the greater part of his kingdom. We read in I. Chron. 21: 5—"All they of Israel were a thousand thousand and a hundred thousand men that drew sword" (one million, one hundred thousand warriors). These were all lost to Rehoboam, because he did not ask wisdom of God, and refused the wise advice of the old men. He lost beside these the great multitude of men who did not bear arms and the great company of women and children, probably between three and four millions of people. He lost also lands and treasure, a tract of 9,000 square miles, while he remained king over about three thousand square miles. His greatest misfortune was the number of enemies he made. As King Solomon was greater than King David, so we might have expected that King Rehoboam would be greater than King Solomon. But how he dwindled in a single day to a ruler over a small extent of territory!

"Lord, open the eyes of young men to see the cowardice of following the crowd in sinning." And also we pray: "Open the eyes of young men to see the nobility of Christian courage."

A WORD OF WARNING

WE had but just concluded our former article, entitled "Speculation," when the newspapers brought to hand a sad confirmation of all we had set forth as to the credulity of so many people and the utter dishonesty of all the "get-rich-quick" concerns that have so long and so persistently made the country's thrifty toilers their prey.

There is, in the exposé recently made by our post office authorities at Washington, a warning of so much value to every small investor that we shall offer no excuse for making it the subject of this paper.

The Facts in the Case

No department of the government comes into closer or more constant touch with the people than the post office, and valuable though its services are to all, there is no class of men who use them to such advantage as the "get-rich-quick" schemers. The Postmaster General is quoted as saying that within a few years more than $100,000,000 has been taken fraudulently from the people through the machinery of the post office, and the spread of the rural free delivery system. This is an enormous amount, but the authorities declare that it is far below the actual sum and possibly represents less than one-half of the total amount lost—lost through the rascality of the few and the blind credulity of the many.

The whole nation would rise in indignant protest if our postal authorities attempted to emulate those of Russia, by reading the private correspondence of our citizens. The schemers know this, and take advantage of it. From county tax lists, business directories, and other sources, they collect the names of prospective victims. This done, the rest is easy.

It is a curious fact that most of us are inclined to accept without question the truth of statements read in print, which we would quickly refute if given to us verbally. The schemers know this, and so they prepare their reading matter so as to make it particularly attractive and convincing, and send it out through the mails.

Another curious fact, which the schemers thoroughly understand and use to their own advantage, is that most people are inclined to make investments in ventures of which they have heard much, but of which they know absolutely nothing. There is a terrible fascination about a promising but as yet undeveloped gold mine, and there is a lure about a recently discovered oil field that cannot be resisted. We have heard of the vast fortunes made in these "get-rich-quick" enterprises, and so we count our few dollars and dream and dream, till one day a prospectus arrives from a hitherto unknown source, and then we think, and think very seriously, and count over our available cash again.

How the Schemers Work

If we do not become so deeply interested at once as to write for further particulars, "the promoters" soon follow the first communication with a second. This second paper contains the analyses of assayists, the reports of mining engineers, and the opinions of great financial experts as to the present value and future prospects of the great enterprise, in the profits of which you are given the special privilege of participating. The second letter, known as "a hurrier" to the thieves' trade, is apt to conclude with the statement that the stock, offered at one-tenth of its face value, is now climbing up to par; that the subscription books will close at the end of the month, and that if you do not avail yourself of this opportunity for a sudden fortune, it will never come again. If this proposition should not tempt you, a third and last will be pretty sure to follow, and this will be an appeal to your vanity as well as to your pocket.

The third communication assures you that the promotors, all of whom are "Hons." or "Generals," have investigated your character, and are so delighted with the result that they are willing to give you a bonus of stock in the concern, if you will agree to act as their local agent and representative. That is, having failed to fleece you, they want to use you in order to fleece your neighbors. Can't you see through the whole wretched business? Of course you can; but alas! and yet alas! too many people equally honest, but not equally shrewd, do not see through it.

While this is being written two members of a firm of promoters are in the Tombs awaiting the action of the federal grand jury, which is inquiring into their methods. These men knew all about the ultimate failure of other schemes similar to their own, but that did not deter them. The people soon forget; they are fascinated by the words "gold" and "oil."

These men and their associates, it is believed, have taken in from the sale of stocks in gold and oil properties, which had no existence, about $50,000,000 in the past four years. When the federal authorities took possession of the swindlers' office, $20,000 was received through the morning's mail, and half that sum came in the afternoon, and it may not have been a very busy day at that.

The Dupes

The men who sent their money through the mails had no thought of being parties to a fraud. They were honest country storekeepers, and thrifty farmers and wage-earners. But the person who fails to properly guard his own property offers temptation to the thief and so, in a way, is culpable.

As soon as the post office authorities had exposed these thieves, the news spread and their pale-faced, heart-broken dupes began to crowd the federal offices. This is from a leading morning paper, describing the occurrence: "The doors were hardly open before the victims began to crowd in and to tell how they had been duped. Most of those who came to ask if there was any chance of getting their money back, were elderly women, and a number were widows who had put their husbands' life insurance money into these mining or oil stocks.

"There were a few men, however, and among them a bricklayer who said he had invested $2,000, his life savings, in some of the stock offered at fifteen cents a share, and in another company at forty cents a share. After having read the prospectuses, he went to the offices of the company, and met a very pleasant talker. The result was that he drew his money from the savings bank and gave it to the promoters and the only thing he received in return was literature."

Among the victims was a woman from Philadelphia, who had been induced to invest her all, $4,000, that she had saved and was keeping for the declining years that were near at hand. Another old woman, whose husband and children were dead, put in her last cent, $3,750, under the promise that she would soon be in receipt of that sum annually. "Oh, God of the widow and the orphan!" wailed the poor creature when she learned how she had been duped. "How could men who had mothers find it in their hearts to rob a poor old woman!"

There is a lesson in all this. We learn through the calamities of others as well as through our own. Then let us ask ourselves if it has not a moral, and if we should not be warned by example, and so saved from the disaster that has overtaken people as honest in intent as ourselves?

WONDERED WHY
Found the Answer Was "Coffee."

Many pale, sickly persons wonder for years why they have to suffer so, and eventually discover that the drug—caffeine—in coffee is the main cause of the trouble.

"I was always very fond of coffee and drank it every day. I never had much flesh and often wondered why I was always so pale, thin and weak.

"About five years ago my health completely broke down and I was confined to my bed. My stomach was in such condition that I could hardly take sufficient nourishment to sustain life.

"During this time I was drinking coffee, didn't thing I could do without it.

"After awhile I came to the conclusion that coffee was hurting me, and decided to give it up and try Postum. I didn't like the taste of it at first but when it was made right—boiled until dark and rich—I soon became very fond of it.

"In one week I began to feel better. I could eat more and sleep better. My sick headaches were less frequent, and within five months I looked and felt like a new being, headache spells entirely gone.

"My health continued to improve and today I am well and strong, weigh 148 pounds. I attribute my present health to the life-giving qualities of Postum."

LIVING WITH CHRIST*

A LADY recently listened to a new preacher and remarked, "I liked m very much, and the thing I liked st about him was that he said so uch about reading the Bible. Now-ays we hear very little about reading e Bible."

Perhaps this is true. Perhaps min-ers and writers do not say as much they ought upon this great subject. And yet if we would live with Christ, e must study his precepts. If we ould catch his spirit, we must live in e atmosphere which he created by his ords.

We long to see those whom we love st. We seek every opportunity to with them. More than that, we nnot understand them unless we are ten in their company, sharing their oughts, their hopes, their sorrows.

Thus if we love Christ, we shall love s words. We may not gaze upon his ce nor clasp his hand, as we clasp a nd of flesh; but by daily studying s blessed Word, we may in spirit ap-oach his presence.

Nothing fits us for prayer like the udy of the Bible. It seems to usher into the Holy of Holies, if read in ie right spirit; and, once there, we in pour out our souls to him who is ir best friend, as we could never do well without that sacred prepara-on.

Therefore, as we enter upon this onderful new year, let us resolve that e will read our Bibles more faithfully nd pray more fervently than ever be-re. Thus may we ever live with our ord.

In that precious little booklet, Mak-g Beautiful Years (doubtless owned nd cherished by many who read these nes), you remember that we are bid-en to make the most of the passing ay; and to look not for high things nt be content to do well the humble udgery which falls to the lot of most us. The author says:

"To live well in one's place in the orld, doing prosaic work diligently, welling in love and unselfishness with l men, is to live grandly. One who ghts well the battle with his own lusts nd tempers, in the midst of the count-ss temptations and provocations of very-day life, is a Christian hero.

"Each year is a volume of 365 white ages. Our work is to put some lovely icture on each page, which shall not ame us when our book is opened on ie Last Day."

We must want to live with Christ. e must hunger and thirst for his resence.

Dr. Gunsaulus tells this story of braham Lincoln.

In the dark days of the Civil War, his little boy became involved in a fight with one of his playmates. He came in with a bleeding face and many pains, and walked straight into the cabinet chamber, saying passionately, "I want my father."

Secretary Chase was there. Suppose he had said, "I know where the greatest financier is that the world has produced." Still the boy would have repeated, "I want my father."

Another in the cabinet might have said: "Boy, I can get you the commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States." And the boy would only have repeated his agonized cry, "Oh, but I want my father."

Another might have said, "I will bring you the greatest lawyer in America." Would he have satisfied the heart-broken boy? No, he would have only reiterated more sharply than ever, "I want my father."

Let us open our hearts to him and beg him to come in and dwell there forever.

Giant and Dwarf Bees

IN some of the East Indian Islands, and on the mainland of Hindustan, are to be found the smallest race of honey bees in the world. These dwarf honey collectors are known to entomologists as apis florea. Their honey combs are no larger than a child's hand, and the cells are about the size of a small pin-head. This honey is excellent, as is the wax. The little creatures build the combs on the branch of a low tree, and as they have not to provide for winter, they work all the year through, raising broods like themselves.

In the same land there is a race of giant bees, apis dorsata, as large as a field cricket. These monsters of the bee world build honey-combs that are from six to seven feet in length, four or more in width, and which weigh from three to four hundred pounds each.

The honey of the giant bee of India is quite as fine as that of our own best hives. We understand that our Agricultural Department will try to import these great bees. It is thought they might succeed in the milder climate of our Gulf States.

Improves with Every Issue

I was grieved over Dr. Klopsch's death and was afraid THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might deteriorate; but instead, each copy seems to be an improvement on the preceding one. I have been a subscriber to your paper for many years, and I expect to have THE HERALD as a weekly visitor in my home as long as I am able. MRS. T. D.

Advertisers in "The Family"

WE have received a letter from one of our subscribers who sends us his check and asks us to forward it to one of our advertisers "if we believe this advertiser to be honest." Our subscriber states that while he elieves in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, he does not believe in all of our advertisers.

We are sorry to hear this, for it is evident that our friend has not grasped he spirit of the Advertising Talks which have appeared in THE CHRISTIAN ERALD during the last year. The aim of those talks has been, in the first place, o show that we admit to our advertising columns only those advertisers who an be relied upon, and, in the next place, to beget as confidential relations etween our subscribers and our advertisers as possible.

It must not be forgotten that our advertisers are no less members of THE HRISTIAN HERALD Family than are our subscribers. They are as much conerned for the general welfare of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family as any of our ubscribers could be. Such an attitude on their part would be only logical. Not ne of them but expects, we hope, to enjoy his present relations with our subcribers for a long time to come. The advertiser who looks merely to the profit f the moment cannot long survive. He must look to the future, to long-ontinued intercourse with his customers. Common business sense tells him that e could not afford to treat those customers in any way that might cause a essation of their continued friendship and respect.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE HRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, ho must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the dvertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date f the appearance of the advertisement.

GALLOWAY SAVES YOU $50 to $300

SAVE from $50 to $300 by buying your gasoline engine of 2 to 22-horse-power from a real engine factory. Save dealer, jobber and catalogue house profit. No such offer as I make on the class of engine I sell has ever been made before in all Gasoline Engine history. Here is the secret and reason: I turn them out all alike by the thousands in my enormous modern factory, equipped with automatic machinery. I sell them direct to you for less money than some factories can make them at actual shop cost.

All you pay me for is actual raw material, labor and one small profit (and I buy my material in enormous quantities).

Anybody can afford and might just as well have a high grade engine when he can get in on a wholesale deal of this kind. I'm doing something that never was done before. Think of it! A price to you that is lower than dealers and jobbers can buy similar engines for, in carload lots, for spot cash.

An engine that is made so good in the factory that I will send it out anywhere in the U. S. without an expert to any inexperienced users, on 30 days' free trial, to test against any engine made of similar horse-power that sells for twice as much, and let him be the judge. Sell your poorest horse and buy a

Untrodden Ways*

PROBABLY few of us appreciate the amount of zest in life which its mystery imparts. There is a certain pleasurable excitement in simply "turning the next leaf."

True, it may open to us a page of bitter sorrow; but on the other hand, it may hold new and unsuspected joys.

"This is all very well," said one to whom late years had brought much of pain, "but within my soul there is only terror as I contemplate the year to come. Some new grief is before me, I know. How can I bear it?"

Shame, shame on such an one! Carey's great command to missionaries applies equally to each of us as individuals: "Expect great things of God."

Our "Way-Maker" goes before us, as the ark led the hosts dry-shod over Jordan. He will not try us above what we are able to bear, and he will lead us in the paths best for our souls.

It is true that we learn chiefly through experience, and that, in one sense, we must be constantly remembering, constantly comparing the circumstances of to-day with those of yesterday, in order to act with wisdom.

Yet, in another sense, we must, as the apostle reminds us, forget the things which are behind, if we would use our powers to the best advantage in pressing forward to the goal.

In one of the daily readings from Isaiah this view is emphasized:

"Remember not the former things, neither consider the things of old."

That sweet and human poet, "Susan Coolidge," voices the same thought most hopefully when she reminds us that

Every day is a fresh beginning,
Every morn is the earth made new.
. . . . . .
Only the new days are our own,
To-day is ours and to-day alone.
Here are the skies all burnished brightly,
Here is the spent earth all reborn.
Here are the tired limbs, springing lightly
To face the sun and share with the morn,
In the chrism of dew and the cool of dawn.

Fear and worry are the two greatest foes of the Spirit, next to sin itself. Let us banish them out of this new year. Doing the best we can every day, let us look forward bravely to each to-morrow. Having "done all," let us "stand" in the courage and faith of our Lord.

To many of us it sometimes seems hard to tell whether we are walking in the right way. How can we know whether we are truly led by Christ?

This is what the highly consecrated and spiritual Bushnell said on this subject:

"Does it seem impossible that you can ever find your way into a path prepared for you by God and be led along in it by his mighty counsel? Let me tell you a secret. It requires a very close, well-kept life to do this; a life in which the soul can have confidence always toward God; a life which allows the Spirit always to abide and reign. There must be a complete renunciation of self-will."

Henry B. Wright, in his very helpful book, The Will of God, says that there is "a four-fold touchstone," by which we may learn whether or not we are walking in Christ's way. We must have his Purity (Matt. 5: 27-32); his Honesty (John 8: 44-46; Luke 16: 11); his Unselfishness (Luke 14: 33); and his Love (John 15: 12).

Many minor matters are left optional with us, but these four qualities we must surely have if we would walk in Christ's way. Let us strive with all our might to possess them in this new year.

HERE is a library that fills a long-felt need in the home. It is helpful to each and every member of the family. It unites all of the features of an encyclopedia, so far as they cover the really vital questions that arise in most homes. No library that we know of ever attempted to approach the home life from so many different angles as does this library. We have gone to considerable expense to discover the vital questions that concern most homes, and once having found them we employed the best writers to dig deep into the books of knowledge for the best answers and suggestions that would convey help, happiness and inspiration to the home circle. Our Home Library is the result. And you will find every page in every book alive with bright and new ideas, all practical, all tried, that you can use with profit and pleasure in your home life.

"Business Hints for Men and Women." Do you know how to Make a Will, Endorse a Note, Draw up a Bill of Sale, Make an Investment, Understand a Deed, etc., etc.? This book will tell you.

"Entertainments for Home, Church and School." Do you know how to entertain company, amuse young folks, provide holiday pastimes? Could you get up some form of amusement for a church or school social? This book will show you how.

"Helpful Talks With Girls." Every girl would like to know how to make extra money. This book will tell you hundreds of ways to do it at home, in business, in town, or on the farm.

"Practical Suggestions for Mother and Housewife." Did you secure a copy of that Government Cook Book? No? Well, you will find it in this book, as well as a thousand other hints that will make your home life brighter and better.

"The Handy Man's Manual" is filled with practical information—from how to get free Government land to the latest kink in automobiles—from how to build a house to the differences in standard time.

"Healthful Sports for Boys." The growing boy will read this book from cover to cover. It contains the rules for every game that every boy should know—from marbles to baseball—kite-flying to skating.

"Marvels of Modern Science." In these days of Aeroplanes, Wireless Telegraphy, Radium, Seeing by Wire, etc., it behooves you to keep up to date. This book will bring you up to the minute on all these achievements which people are talking about.

"How to Speak and Write Correctly." Even if you did receive a good education, you may have fallen into the habit of saying "I seen it" or "I done it." If you read the simple hints in this book you need not go wrong.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD 195 BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK

A Story of Breathless Interest

Stephen, A Soldier of the Cross

By FLORENCE MORSE KINGSLEY

A Good Book for Every Good Home. You can Secure a Copy of this Book by Merely Adding 35 Cents to your Christian Herald Subscription.

MRS. KINGSLEY tells why she wrote Stephen: "There are those who have asked me to write this book. There may be others who shall question me because I have written it. 'Assuredly,' these will cry out, 'it is justly forbidden to ascribe words and deeds of one's own devising to them which have been set forever apart in the pages of the Book of books. The pen of inspiration has written of Stephen all that God wills us to know of him, therefore let us be content.'

"It is true that the story of Stephen is little known; scarcely for a single day does the light shine clearly upon him, and that day the last of his mortal life. A tale is told of ancient alchemists, how that they possessed the power of resurrecting from the ashes of a perished flower a dim ghost of the flower itself. In like manner, may not one gather the fragrant dust of this vanished life from out the writings and legends of past ages, and from it build anew some faint image of its forgotten beauty?

"Surely in these days, when the imagination hurries to and fro on the earth, delving amid all that is low and evil and noisome for some new panacea wherewith to deaden, if only for a moment, the feverish pain in the hearts of men, it were a good thing to lift up the eyes of the soul to the contemplation of those days when the memory of the living Jesus was yet fresh in the hearts of His followers; when His voice still echoed in their ears; when the glory of the cloud which had received Him out of their sight lingered with transfiguing splendor on all the commonplace happenings of their daily lives; when the words, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end,' meant a living presence all comforting, all powerful.

"We are wont to look longingly back through the dark mists of the ages and sigh, 'Oh that I had known Him as they knew Him! But in these hard, gray days there is no glory that shines, no voice that speaks, no ecstatic vision of the Son of Man standing at the right hand of power.'

"Yet had we lived in those days the life which many of us live to-day, going to church and to prayer because such attendance is a Christian duty; giving of our abundance to the poor because our neighbors will marvel if we withhold; and for the rest, living as those before the flood, and since also—eating and drinking, and making such poor merriment as we are able in a life which was given us for another purpose—had we lived thus in those far-off days, would the Pentecostal flames have descended upon us? Could the crucified One have said unto us, 'Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end?' Would we not rather have cried out in terror and fled away from the light of those sad eyes into darkness, even as did Peter after that he had denied with curses?"

"Vanity Fair" Art Calendar 1911 FREE

"VANITY FAIR" is the title of the Armour Calendar for 1911. With pencil, crayon and brush, Penrhyn Stanlaws, C. Allan Gilbert, James Montgomery Flagg and Henry Hutt have delineated our American Girl at that most interesting moment when enraptured with her new Hat, her new Dress, her new Jewels and box of freshly cut flowers. She is both charmed and charming. These four illustrations have an exquisitely designed cover in colors by Walter Ufer, using the peacock and rosebush to embody the idea contained in the calendar.

No calendar from the highest priced art shops can excel it in artistic merit and attractiveness—it is admitted to be the acme of the printer's art, and this we offer free to you.

How to Get It.

Send in three wrappers from Armour's Transparosa, Sylvan Toilet or Supertar Soap, with 4 cents to cover postage, or 25 cents in stamps, and we will send the calendar by return mail.

Art Proofs for Framing

We have reproduced a limited number of these drawings on extra size paper, with all printing left off. These are ideal for framing. We will send the one you select, prepaid, for 25 cents, or the set, with a calendar, for $1.00.

We Make This Offer So You May Become Better Acquainted With the

Armour Toilet Articles

For as the pictured beauties of the Calendar are enraptured with their new possessions, so will you be enraptured with the purity and delicacy of the Armour toilet articles when you have tried them.

All that the most exacting woman could demand for shampoo, bath and dressing table is found in these master-productions of the famous Armour laboratories. They set a new standard of perfection.

Sylvan Toilet Soap is an absolutely pure product of the Armour laboratories. Its cleansing, softening effect upon the skin is marvelous. It may be had in any one of six delicate perfumes: heliotrope, rose, sandalwood, carnation, violet, lilac.

Transparosa is a clear, amber transparent soap, perfumed with an especially delicate attar of rose. It is carefully seasoned and lathers plentifully in the hardest water.

All dealers carry
Armour Toilet Articles

Supertar represents the absolute perfection of a shampoo soap. It is made from triple-distilled extract of Southern Pine Tar, and affords a plentiful, pure white lather. It is in the highest degree beneficial to the scalp, leaving the hair soft, fluffy and lustrous.

Questions and Answers

In forwarding MSS. to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, enclose stamped envelopes for return, if unavailable.

R. V. M., Brownville, Neb. 1. Can a saloonkeeper be a Christian while engaged in that business? 2. Can a Christian support by his ballot a party he knows will license the saloon, if elected to office?

1. As soon as he becomes a Christian he will promptly get out of the liquor business, which ruins both soul and body. No man can serve two masters whose interests are diametrically opposed. 2. We believe a man should vote as he prays. Here is a question, however, of choosing the least of two evils. It may happen that a vote "for conscience's sake" will elect nobody, and many, knowing this, will vote for the better of the other candidates. If all votes were truly "conscience votes" the saloon would soon disappear.

M. E. W., Roselle, N. J. Please tell me the author of the poem beginning and where it can be found.

"At the close of the day when the hamlet is still,"

It is by James Beattie (born in Scotland, 1735, died 1803), and is called "The Hermit." It may be found in any volume of his works, and in many anthologies—for one, Dana's Household Book of Poetry.

O. B., Cohoes, N. Y. What is the distinction between a fruit and a vegetable?

"Vegetable" in its widest sense, includes all the productions of the vegetable kingdom, thus taking in the so-called fruits. As the term is generally used, however, it means plants cultivated for the table. A "fruit" is technically defined as the matured ovary of a plant and all that it contains or is connected with. It is often used to mean whatever the earth produces.

C. T., Vineland, N. J. Please explain John 14: 3, wherein Christ says "And if I go," etc. Did Christ have any doubt about going?

None whatever. The "if" is not to be taken as expressing doubt and was not so intended. It is as though he had said: "I go to prepare a place for you, and though I go, I will come again." The whole tenor of verses 2, 3 and 4 show the clear purpose and meaning of the Master's words.

S. S., Richfield Springs, N. Y. What are the highest altitudes in the States of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Vermont, Connecticut and Rhode Island?

Massachusetts, Mount Greylock, 3,505; New Hampshire, Mount Washington, 6,290; New York, Mount Marcy in the Adirondacks, 6,290; Vermont, Mount Mansfield, 4,406; Connecticut, Bear Mountain, 2,355; Rhode Island, Durfee Hill, 805.

C. E. P., Brooklyn, N. Y. The case of the conductor of a street railway car making a fortune, or becoming independent, should encourage young men to save. We have had many examples before us in the lives of men who have become prominent. Among them Governor Johnson of Minnesota; Governor N. P. Banks of Massachusetts, who was a bobbin boy in a mill; Senator A. P. Gorman, who was a messenger boy (page) at thirteen; Andrew Carnegie, Thomas A. Edison, Edward Oleson, who was a telegraph messenger boy, and whose parents can hardly write their own names, and many more whom we could mention. I cannot, however, quite agree with what you have previously published regarding child labor, endorsing the sentiments of the so-called Child Labor Association, for if they had their way, most of these boys would have been put in charitable institutions, instead of having gone to work at thirteen years of age. I left school myself when I was fourteen, and I thank God that I was permitted to do something at an early age to help support the family.

The notable cases mentioned by our correspondent only serve to show that there are exceptions to the general rule, universally recognized, that education is of the greatest advantage to youth, and that only those with unusual native ability and force of character can rise in the world without it. To-day, an ignorant, uneducated boy or girl stands a poor chance in the battle of life. A single generation has completely transformed conditions in this respect.

V. S. McN., Pasadena, Tex. How does it come that the 19th chapter of II. Kings and the 37th chapter of Isaiah are exactly alike, word for word?

There was a regular series of state annals, both for the kingdoms of Judah and Israel, and these were drawn upon from time to time by later historians, as well as by other writers and poets. In addition to these national annals there were extant, at the time the two books of Kings were compiled, separate works of the various prophets which bore the same relation to the annals as the historical parts of Isaiah and Jeremiah bear to those portions of the annals preserved in the books of Kings. In some instances they were mere duplicates; in others they were fuller and more copious accounts of certain events. "Thus," as one commentator remarks, "the acts of Uzziah, written by Isaiah, were probably identical with the history of his reign in the national chronicles, and part of the history of Hezekiah we know was identical in the Chronicles and in Isaiah." For an example where the prophetic account gives greater fulness see II. Kings 20, and compare with Isaiah 38. The latter alone gives Hezekiah's writing.

Professor Garner and "Susie" at the Bronx Zoo

NO scientist has been more tireless in his chosen field than Professor Garner, who has been studying the habits of monkeys and apes for many years. He has returned recently from Africa, bringing a monkey called "Susie." The animal shows remarkable intelligence, and the Professor hopes to learn through her more of the sounds and signs by which these creatures communicate.

B M., Chicago, Ill. What is the estimated numerical strength of Christian Science and how many churches are there belonging to that faith?

At present there are 668 Christian Science churches in the United States, having 85,096 communicants. In addition, there are upwards of 500 Christian Science reading-rooms and libraries scattered through the country. If foreign countries are included, the cult has almost 1,000 churches and a membership estimated at about 2,000,000.

G. L. G., Hulls Cove, Me. 1. Did Adam lose his soul when he disobeyed God? Did he repent? 2. Can you tell anything about the "Pillar of Fire" sect, and what they claim as their belief?

1. On account of his disobedience, Adam was alienated from God; but the Scripture gives evidence that he repented of his sin. 2. We know nothing of the sect you mention.

Reader, Milwaukee, Wis. What classes of workers are included in the United States Steel Corporation's pension scheme?

First. Employees who have served 20 years or more and who if men are now 70 years old and if women 60; second, employees who have served 20 years (men 60, women 50); third, employees who have served 20 years and have become incapacitated in service. Pensions run from $12 a month to $1,200 a year.

M. A. S., Lockport, N. Y. How is it when you have prayed earnestly for anything, and the answer seems to come, yet it proves not to be the answer after all, but rather brings you trouble, and at times it seems as if it would spoil your life?

We are but children, even the wisest of us. Our Father knows better than we what is for our good. He will withhold "no good thing" from those who love him; but if we in our unwisdom ask for that which he knows would be to our hurt, his goodness will withhold it and give us something far better in answer to our petition. What we may consider evil may be only discipline. Trust him and keep on praying, with confidence that he knows best and will do more than we can even ask.

M. K., Sutherlin, Va. 1. Which is correct, "I would rather go than stay," or "I had rather go," etc.? 2. Is there any special name for the skull and crossbones representing poison?

1. "I would rather go" is the more modern form. 2. The "death's head" is the term applied to the skull and crossbones. We cannot answer your other question.

L. H., Roanoke, Va. How many people are regularly employed by our government?

According to the report of 1909, the government had on the first of July, 370,065 employees. In Washington it had 28,947 employees in the various departments.

A Boer subscriber in South Africa writes: "Kindly allow an amendment in the answer to R. R. McP.'s question in OUR MAIL-BAG: 'What is the translation of the word Boer, applied to people of South Africa?' (September 14, page 820.) The similarity between the words boer and boor (a peasant), has given rise to a misconception which we have ceased to resent in the English, but would be glad to see corrected in Dutch-loving America. The word boer means simply a farmer; but here in South Africa the term has been applied, during centuries, to land owners, many of them the most noble and highly cultured men in the land. The highest officials, among others the Dutch governors, Johan Van Riebeeck (1657), and Simon Van der Stal and his son, whose estates are shown to this date, as well as many high-born French Huguenots, were Boeren, or Boers. And, to come down to our own times, men like the Hon. J. X. Merriman and General Louis Botha are Boeren. Therefore, to the wonderment of many in other lands who respect us, we glory in the term."

A Bee Lover

JOHN MUIR, the veteran geologist of our West Coast, who loves nature quite as much as he does life, and whom every one loves because of this love of his, thus writes of the bees that gather nectar in the blossom-covered foothills of the Sierra Nevada:

"Humming-moths and hummingbirds seldom set foot upon a flower, but poise on the wing in front of it, and reach forward as if they were sucking through straws. But bees, though dainty as they, hug their favorite flowers with profound cordiality, and push their blunt, polleny faces against them, like babies on their mother's bosom. And fondly, too, with eternal love, does Mother Nature clasp her small bee babies, and suckle them, multitudes at once, on her warm Shasta breast."

CARNEGIE'S GREAT GIFT TO PEACE

SHORT but trimly built, with a well-knit upright figure, in which there is just the faintest suggestion of a stoop; a face that is ever smiling and kindly in spite of its lines of unmistakable firmness; a pair of merry twinkling eyes; a mouth which, half concealed by its neatly-trimmed, snowy mustache, seems about to laugh, and a beard that is white enough yet not quite long enough to be patriarchal—such is Andrew Carnegie, the hard-headed, big-hearted old ironmaster, whose great gifts to education and a variety of other worthy causes have just been crowned by the gift of $11,500,000 to be devoted to the creation of a fund for the advancement of the World's Peace. Although Mr. Carnegie has already given away $168,000,000 of his colossal fortune, including $53,000,000 for libraries, $20,000,000 to colleges, and several other benefactions each in excess of $10,000,000, there is probably no gift of them all that will win him so much esteem and hearty approval, both here and in other lands, as his splendid offering to the cause of world peace.

For many months, Mr. Carnegie has been debating with himself the matter of using a considerable part of his great wealth for the propagation of peace doctrines. He has long been an ardent advocate of international arbitration, and readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD already know of his generous gift of $1,750,000 for the erection of the Peace Temple at The Hague, Holland, as a place of assembly for the peace and arbitration courts. In recent years, he has been a foremost figure at all the notable peace gatherings on both sides of the Atlantic. He has been the lavish host of many distinguished peace propagandists, and his spacious mansion on Fifth Avenue, New York, has been visited by many of the advocates of arbitration. After much deliberation, he decided upon a plan of action which was carried out on Wednesday, December 14, when he formally transferred to a corporation of his own creation, bonds valued at $11,500,000 to establish the Carnegie Peace Fund, for the purpose of hastening the abolition of war and promoting the happiness and progress of the human race.

This notable event took place in Washington, D. C., in the rooms of the Carnegie Research Foundation. To twenty-seven trustees, whom he had chosen, the old ironmaster read the deed of gift passing over to their hands property which brings an assured income of over $1,000,000. These trustees are: United States Senator Elihu Root, New York; Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, Columbia University; Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, Carnegie Foundation; Joseph H. Choate, New York; Albert H. Smiley, Lake Mohonk; Dr. Charles W. Eliot, Massachusetts; James Brown Scott, State Department; John W. Forster, formerly Secretary of State; Andrew J. Montague, Virginia; William M. Howard, Georgia; Judge Thomas Burke, Washington; James L. Slayden, Texas; Andrew D. White, Robert S. Brookings, Missouri; Samuel Mather, Ohio; J. G. Schmidlapp, Ohio; Arthur William Foster, California; R. A. Franks, New Jersey; Charlemagne Tower, Oscar Straus, Austen G. Fox, New York; John L. Cadwalader, New York; John Sharp Williams, Mississippi; C. L. Taylor, Pennsylvania; George W. Perkins, New York; Robert S. Woodward, Washington, and Cleveland H. Dodge, New York.

From a recent photograph

Mr. Andrew Carnegie

In the trust deed, it is explained that the revenue of the Fund "is to be administered by you to hasten the abolition of international war, the foulest blot upon our civilization. The nation is criminal which refuses arbitration and drives its adversary to a tribunal which knows nothing of righteous judgment." It favors President Taft's plan of including even so-called questions of national honor among those to be referred to Courts of Arbitration. Mr. Carnegie, in the trust deed, has this to say concerning the questions of "national honor" which are not now submitted to arbitration:

"Honor is the most dishonored word in our language. No man ever touched another man's honor; no nation ever dishonored another nation; all honor's wounds are self-inflicted."

The deed urges the trustees to press the work of harmonizing the Western republics. It makes the point that no nation or government should sit as judge in its own cause. It urges effort to secure the passage of a treaty agreeing to settle all disputes between America and Great Britain by arbitration, and adds: "If the English-speaking race adopts such a treaty we shall not have to wait long for other nations to join."

The concluding paragraph in the trust deed is as follows:

"When civilized nations enter into such treaties as named or war is discarded as disgraceful to civilized men, as personal war (dueling) and man selling and buying (slavery) have been discarded within the wide-bound areas of our English-speaking race, the trustees will please then consider what is the next most degrading remaining evil or evils whose banishment—or what new elevating element or elements, if introduced or fostered, or both combined—would most advance the progress, elevation and happiness of man, and so on from century to century without end my trustees of each age shall determine how they can best aid man in the upward march to higher and higher stages of developments unceasingly, for now we know that as a law of his being man was created with the desire and capacity for improvement, to which, perchance, there may be no limit short of perfection even here in this life upon earth. Let my trustees, therefore, ask themselves from time to time, from age to age, how they can best help man in his glorious ascent onward and upward, and to this end devote this fund."

A Tale That Is Told

A New Year's Sermon

By Rev. David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.*

WHAT is Life? I went to the dictionary for a definition and it said: "Life is the period of existence between birth and death." I went to the scientists—those who call themselves "biologists" and should therefore certainly know—and Herbert Spencer, their illustrious spokesman, gave this translucent answer: "Life is a definite combination of heterogeneous changes, simultaneous and successive, in correspondence with external co-existence and sequences." Then I questioned the poets. Shakespeare likened it to a drama:

> Out, out, brief candle!
> Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player
> That struts and frets his hour upon the stage
> And then is heard no more.

Sir Walter Raleigh, from his cell in London Tower, suggested the similitude of a journey:

> Give me my scallop-shell of quiet,
> My staff of faith to lean upon.
> My scrip of joy—immortal diet!—
> My bottle of salvation,
> My gown of glory, hope's true gauge,
> And thus I take my pilgrimage.

But quaint George Herbert said it was like a ramble through the fields on a summer's day:

> I made a posie while the day ran by;
> Here will I smell my remnant out and tie
> My life within this band.
> But time did beckon to the flowers; and they,
> By noon, most cunningly did steal away
> And wither in my hand.

I then took my query to the pagan dreamers. Pindar said, "Life is the shadow of a dream." Lucian likened it to a storm at sea, where "men like bubbles rise," reflect the glory of the heavens for a brief moment and then vanish forever. Pliny's metaphor was of a larger sort: "It is a river," he said, "taking its rise at a fountain among the hills, gathering volume as it pursues its foaming, downward way, anon flowing calmly through the green valleys, and losing itself at last in the bosom of a boundless sea."

Then I opened the Book of books; and I heard God saying, "Thy days are swifter than a post; they are as the eagle that hasteth to the prey" (Job 9: 25, 26). They are as a shadow (Job 8: 9); they pass away as the foam upon the water (Hosea 10: 7). As a flower of the field, so thou flourishest; for the wind passeth over thee and thou art gone (Ps. 103: 15, 16). Thou art like the grass which groweth up: in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth (Ps. 90: 5, 6); or as the grass upon the housetops which withereth before it even groweth up (Ps. 129: 6). Thy years are as an handbreadth (Ps. 39: 5). Thy coming and going are as the removal of a shepherd's tent (Isa. 38: 12). Thy life is soon over, as a tale that is told.

This World Not Our Home

The story-teller is an interesting figure in the Oriental life of the olden time. He served not merely as a purveyor of news, in the absence of books and newspapers, but also as the narrator of legends and traditions. You will still meet with him in the desert encampments. At night the Bedouins gather in a circle, their swarthy faces glistening in the torchlight, their forms bent forward and eyes attent upon the story-teller, whose gestures, calm or violent, are adjusted to his theme. His voice is tranquil as he leads his hearers to the wars; monotonous along the weary march; rising to enthusiasm at the approach of the enemy; reaching a shrill frenzy amid the clash of arms; sinking again to monotone along the homeward trudge; closing with a song beneath a lady's window. The tale is told; the listeners have dispersed; the lights are out; the solemn silence of the desert is over all.

Such is life. To-day, to-morrow and the day after, and then finis. Why not? Would you have it interminable as a Chinese drama? Here is the ordinance: "The days of our years are threescore years and ten, and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labor and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away." Our happiness depends in large measure on our cheerful acceptance of that decree. A recent writer defines life as "a continual struggle with death, with the certainty of being conquered at last." That is an unworthy view. There are considerations which make it clear to thoughtful people that our proper attitude is not one of stoical indifference or stolid surrender, but rather a calm and grateful acquiescence in the limitation of our present life.

First: The world was never intended to be the abode of immortal man. The house is too little and the tenant too great. A man is made in God's likeness; his nature is overarched by infinity; his life is a bundle of incalculable potencies. The world is only twenty-five thousand miles in circumference; and the meanest man who walks upon its surface can belt it with his thought in the twinkling of an eye. It is inconceivable that God should have made such a creature and quickened him with a spark of his own being, to the end that he might walk on terra firma with leaden feet, eat, drink, laugh, die, and be shut up finally in a leasehold of six feet of greensward.

When Old Age Comes

No; man is not for this world; and this world is not for him. The disparity is too great between the habitat and the inhabitant. When Darius offered Alexander all the country lying west of the Euphrates in exchange for his daughter's hand, his favorite Parmenio said: "If I were thou, I would accept it." To which Alexander replied: "So would I, were I Parmenio." If the narrow view which prevails in some quarters were correct—that man is the remote descendant of a mollusk, that he is merely a hundred and fifty pounds of bone and sinew with nothing but phosphorus in his brain-cells—that he is "a stomach with its appurtenances" and nothing more—the world would, indeed, be quite large enough for him; but for immortal beings it is simply "an inn where travelers bait, then post away."

The second reason for acquiescence in the limitation of life is that its machinery wears out. In the Book of Ecclesiastes there is a striking picture of the decay of the physical powers. In old age, Koheleth says, "the keepers of the house do tremble and the strong men bow themselves"; that is, the limbs are palsied and bowed with infirmity. "Those that look out of the windows be darkened"; poor old eyes! "The doors shall be shut in the streets when the sound of the grinding is low"; the shrunken lips are pursed. "He shall rise up at the voice of the bird"; no need of chanticleer; the twitter of a sparrow awakes him. "And all the daughters of music are brought low"; or as Shakespeare puts it, "His big, manly voice, turning again toward childish treble, pipes and whistles in his sound." "He is afraid of that which is high"; a long steep road is Via Dolorosa to him. "Fears are in the way; the almond tree blossoms"; his head is crowned with silver. "The grasshopper is a burden, desire fails": It is time to go!

The mental faculties also yield to advancing years. I remember an aged figure that used to shuffle in slippers along the Yale campus. Time was when the voice of that man rang like a clarion and the multitude was swayed by his eloquence as by magic. Alas, he had become a lean and slippered pantaloon, babbling and maundering as he tottered on his way. This is ever the dread of those who feel the burden of increasing years. They would not linger until memory fails and the wits go wool-gathering. Far better is it to go hence, pausing at the borderline of earth and heaven only to drink at the fountain of perpetual youth, and then to live forever!

A Better World Awaits Us

But—and this is sorrow's crown of sorrows—the heart also wears out. At life's outset it puts forth tendrils, clasping a friend here and another there, which as years advance are sundered one by one. "I feel like one who treads alone some banquet hall deserted." In the art gallery at the Columbian Exposition was a picture by Josef Israel, representing an old man sitting with his face bowed between his wrinkled hands. On the bed near by lay his wife—dead. The light of his eyes gone out! The title of the picture was "Alone." Who would care to linger under such circumstances? The home empty, the hearthstone cold, the heart desolate. Aye, surely, it is time to go.

The third reason for acquiescence in the divine decree as to the transitoriness of life, is that a place is prepared for us in a better world. "In my Father's house," said Jesus, "are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you; I go to prepare a place for you." The world whither we are bound will be so adjusted to our nature as to afford ample room for the exercise of its divine energies. Our life there will be free from the hamperings of time and space. "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be."

Life a Preparatory School

Our days here are school days. This world is just the right place for preparation for a better one. Its pains and disappointments, its sorrows and adversities have in them the possibilities of character. The real life is beyond. In Heidelberg I saw once a group of students coming down the street in merry mood, one of whom was quite gray with age. I was told that he was of noble blood and independent fortune, and that he had been more than forty years in the curriculum of the university with no ambition, seemingly, to be graduated. So is the man who has no outlook beyond this handbreadth of time.

Death is "Commencement." It is the gateway into a larger and more real world of affairs. It is promotion to higher tasks and nobler responsibilities. It was a sad day for the Class of Sixty-seven when, at the close of our college course at New Haven, we gathered on the campus for our mutual farewell. Our friendships had been cemented by four years of loving comradeship, and the tears we shed that day were tears of genuine grief. Yet, had the opportunity been given to remain in the university, there was not one among us who would not have answered, "No! Our preparation is finished; the world beckons; our hearts are beating fast with hope and high purpose and aspiration; we must go!"

The First Duty of the New Year

The solemn thought that we emphasize at the threshold of the New Year is this: Let us make the utmost of our opportunities of preparation for the larger life. Two things are necessary: one is to get rid of sin; and this can only be done by a frank acceptance of Christ who died to redeem us. Until we have attended to that matter, all good resolutions are futile. When Sir Thomas More was a prisoner in the Tower of London a friend suggested that his unkempt beard should be shorn. His answer was, "There is a controversy between the king and myself as to my head; and until that be settled, I will take no trouble with it." The soul's welfare is the prime consideration; pending its reconciliation with an offended God, all other matters are of minor consequence. An acceptance of Christ is the final determination of destiny; it should therefore be attended to at once.

Having thus gotten rid of sin, the total remainder of preparation is to get used to service. By our apprenticeship here in the kingdom of Christ we should be fitting ourselves for the larger duties and responsibilities that await us. A college boy who squanders his study hours is naturally affrighted by the thought of the examinations incident to graduation. Let us be scrupulous in the discharge of every duty, knowing well the eternal issues that flow from faithfulness here and now. "Do ye nexte thynge." Follow close in the footsteps of Him of whom it is written, "He went about doing good."

A pastor tells of a crippled parishioner confined to her room but zealous of good works, who thus expressed the purpose of her life:

> I must be doing something for the weary and the sad,
> I must be giving forth the love that makes my heart so glad;
> For God so fills my spirit with a joy that passeth show,
> I fain would do his bidding in the only way I know.
> So to suffering and to sorrow I shall always give my heart,
> And pray to God that every day I may some good impart,
> Some little act of kindness, some simple word of cheer,
> To make some drooping heart rejoice or stay some falling tear.
> And when I've crossed the river and passed its waters o'er,
> And feel that some will miss me upon the other shore,
> My grateful spirit ever shall bless the Lord divine,
> Who crowns the humblest efforts of a human love like mine.

The year is before us. It is Terra Incognita, an unknown country of duties and dangers. One of the customary admonitions at the border is, "This year we may die." It is far more pertinent to say, "This year we must live." For living is more solemn than dying. It means responsibility, day by day, hour by hour. Patience is heroism; faithfulness is success; steadfastness is ultimate triumph. These are the virtues that shine brightest in the divine inventory.

On Riverside Drive, just under the shadow of the Grant Monument, is a solitary gravestone inscribed, "To an Amiable Child." It was over a century ago that this child lived sweetly, unselfishly, amiably for a little while and then returned to God. But who shall estimate the value of that little life? Or who shall say that in the final reckoning the modest gravestone may not overshadow the monument of the great commander? For it is not success but faithfulness that tells, after all.

I wish you a happy New Year; a year of God's peace in the consciousness of duty done; a year of simple faith in the divine goodness and of clear outlook toward the heavenly hills; a year of sweet communion with Jesus and close following in his steps; a year like that pleasant walk to Emmaus of which the disciples said. "Did not our hearts burn within us while he talked with us by the way?"

An Exhibition For Riders and Fliers

ONE of the interesting features of the Eleventh Automobile Show, which begins in the Grand Central Palace in New York, on New Year's Eve, is that a large section will be set aside for the new auto of the air—the flying machine—so that both those who ride and those who fly can see what the inventors have been doing in the last twelve months. Twenty-five foreign and American aeroplanes will be shown in addition to seventy-five models. The automobile exhibition shows what great strides have been made in horseless vehicle construction. Fifty thousand dollars have been spent to decorate the exhibtion hall.

How It Won Its Way Into a Home

I trust the names I sent you will all make life-long subscribers to your beautiful paper that thrills with inspiration. When I subscribed first, one member of our family said, "What made you subscribe for such a paper?" but I noticed that after the first issue he was the first to get the paper, and it was read from cover to cover before I had taken it six months, so I see how it threads its way through in our family and know it does so everywhere. I hope the circulation will expand until it's in every home.

The Children's Pulpit

Heaven in Nineteen Hundred and Eleven

By Rev. J. M. FARRAR, D.D.*

SUNDAY, January first, 1911. Three ones, like memory hooks. What shall we hang on them? Three facts, one for each hook. Sunday is the first day of the New Year, the first day of the new month and the first day of the new week. How glad we are that the New Year has such a good beginning! A good beginning should have a good ending. Can you see to the end of the year? If you look that far you will see three more facts for the hooks. First fact: The year 1911 is bounded on the East by Sunday and on the West by Sunday. Second fact: Five months, nearly half the months of the year, have each five Sundays. We can almost call it a rest year. Third fact: The last Sunday of 1911 gives its blessing upon the first week of 1912. Three ones, but what shall we do with the figure nine? It tells us that the new year is fine and that our lives should be like a rhyme and on time.

THINK of a motto for the New Year. Think out loud, and I shall write it large. A little louder, please. Fine! I shall write it loud. Motto: "Nineteen hundred and eleven—A full year in heaven." That will be fine and we shall all start on time. You cannot come with us? Is it possible that you do not want to be with us in heaven in 1911? Come and whisper to me your reason for saying "No." "If I must die it will make me cry." But why die? We are not talking about crying, sighing or dying; we are talking about living. But my teacher says, "When we die we go to heaven." That is true, but we cannot go to heaven when we die unless we have been living in heaven before we die.

When I was at Princeton Theological Seminary a great and good man, Charles Hodge, taught us how to live in heaven. A student asked Dr. Hodge, "Where is heaven?" His answer was, "Heaven is where Christ is." If you will read the story of Christ in the home of Martha and Mary you will know what is meant by heaven on earth. Lazarus died, that is, he went through the door of death from his earth-heaven into a larger heaven. Martha and Mary were lonesome without their brother. Christ just opened the door of death and brought him back.

IF you are with Christ during this new year you will be in heaven. Living with Christ on earth and doing what he wants us to do is living in heaven. But you say Christ died and was buried. That is true, but you must also remember that when he found that the world was so lonesome without him he came back. The angels were sorry for us and came down and rolled away the stone from his tomb. Christ came right out into the garden and began talking and living with his friends. He is here and is with us all the time except when we run away from him.

You cannot get into heaven now, but heaven can get into you. Heaven is within us, in our hearts. You may not live in a beautiful place and you may not have a handsome face, but you can have heaven in your heart. Walter Scott, in Ivanhoe, tells us about a beautiful home. The road to this house was an alley, and you had to pass through a stable. But when you passed the second door you came into a palace, everything the art of the East could make and the wealth of the prince could purchase. Like this home you may not look fine from the outside, but you can have in your heart all the beauty and happiness of heaven.

Those who want to be happy in 1911 can have heaven; those who just want earth and earthly things cannot enjoy heaven in 1911.

TELL you a story? There is an old legend of a swan and a crane. A beautiful swan alighted by the banks of the water in which the crane was wading about, seeking snails. The crane viewed the swan in stupid wonder, and then inquired, "Where do you come from?"

"I came from heaven," replied the swan.

"And where is heaven?"

"Heaven!" said the swan. "Heaven! Have you never heard of heaven?" And then the beautiful bird went on to describe the grandeur of the eternal city. She told of streets of gold, and the gates and walls made of precious stones; of the river of life, pure as crystal, upon whose banks is the tree whose leaves shall be for the healing of the nations. In eloquent terms the swan sought to describe the other world, but without arousing the slightest interest.

Finally the crane asked, "Are there any snails there?"

"Snails!" repeated the swan, "No! of course not."

"Then," said the crane, as it continued its search along the slimy banks of the pools. "You can have your heaven. I want snails!"

"Snails! You can have pails full of them," answered the swan. "But you cannot get into heaven in nineteen eleven if you do not enjoy the things that are in heaven."

It lies around us like a cloud,
A world we do not see;
Yet the sweet closing of an eye
May bring us there to be.

Its gentle breezes fan our cheek;
Amid our worldly cares
Its gentle voices whisper love,
And mingle with our prayers.

* Pastor First Reformed Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. TEXT: Matt. 6:33.

The King's Fool

LONG ago, there lived and reigned a mighty King, who had a court Jester who made him merry at times, when his heart was heavy with cares of state. The Jester's pranks and antics pleased the court and mightily amused the nobles.

But the King knew that the Jester, whose simple mind was to him as clear as water, was a fool. While others about his court grew rich and powerful, the Jester let fortune go by unheeded, and his laugh and song and merry quip were ever ready, though his purse was empty, and but for the King's largess, he would often have gone hungry while others feasted. Yet there were many outside the court who knew that the Jester's coat of motley covered a kind heart and a generous.

On a festival day the King, willing to make sport for his nobles, handed the Jester a staff, with a head of gold on which was the royal seal.

"This for thy folly, Jester," said he, "and when thou meetest one who is a greater fool than thyself, give him the staff."

The Jester bowed low, until his cap and bells touched the floor; and as he withdrew, carrying the staff, the nobles laughed aloud.

There came a day, in the midst of his great undertakings, when the King fell sick. His physicians saw that the hand of death was on him, yet they feared to tell him. But the King divined the cause of their silence, and at last the oldest among them summoned the courage to say that his lord's sickness was mortal, and that he would soon make an end of life.

When they had gone, there came the King's wives and sons and daughters to the sick chamber, but he could not be comforted. He tossed on his couch, and bemoaned his fate. And as he lamented, the Jester came and stood, silent and white, beside his master, his face full of grief.

"Oh fool," said the dying monarch. "Thou seest me sick unto death. I am about to take a long journey hence."

"Yes, master," said the other, "and whither?"

"That I know not," replied the King.

"When wilt thou return?"

"Never. It is a journey from which there is no returning."

"But, doubtless, thou hast made preparation for this great journey?" persisted the Jester.

The King answered with a groan. "No," he said faintly, "I have made none."

Amazement sat on the Jester's face. He seemed about to speak, but seeing the King turn his face from him, he left the chamber in silence.

In a few moments he returned. In his hand he held the King's royal gift.

"Ah, master! master!" he said in broken tones and weeping. "Right gladly would I give my poor life to save thine own. But it is not so decreed. Yet take this staff; it belongs to thee and not to me; for thou, who art going on a great journey whither thou knowest not, and from which thou comest not back, and for which thou hast made no preparation, must be even greater in folly than I, who am so poor in wisdom."

And he placed the staff in the King's hands, and those who entered afterward to find him cold and still, saw that he grasped it as though it were indeed a royal sceptre.

Valued Above Price

The Red Letter Bible came as a surprise, sent by some unknown friend. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is no stranger in my home. It has been a weekly visitor for more than fifteen years. I think it would be impossible to keep house without it—at least I shall never try. One can't estimate the value of so good a paper. It is far above price. I spend many happy hours reading its pages, which always afford encouragement to me. MRS. C. H.

MRS. RUSSELL SAGE'S MODEL CITY

THE management of the Sage Foundation Homes Company, which is a side issue of the Sage Foundation, has planned to erect a model town on Long Island at a short distance from the metropolis. Plans and specifications have been drawn, and it is expected that the enterprise will be ready by next fall.

The site chosen for the model colony is at Forest Hills, a beautiful and healthy suburb on the new line of the Long Island Railroad, nine miles from the Pennsylvania Station in the very heart of Manhattan. A tract of 142 acres has been purchased and artistically laid out in lots and sections by Frederick Law Olmsted, the well-known landscape artist. The architectural development will be in charge of Grosvenor Atterbury, who is famous for beautiful and unique designs. Every detail has been worked out to combine a maximum of utility and beauty with a minimum of cost.

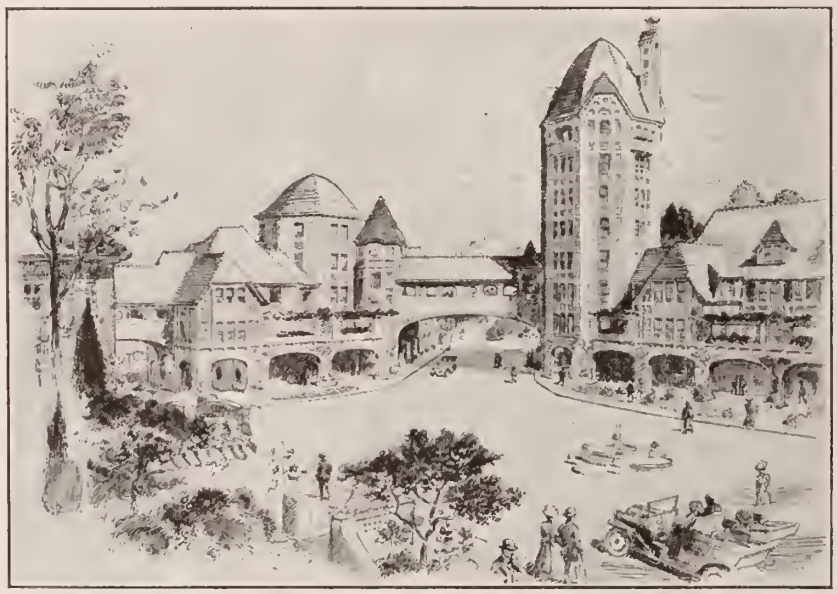
Though Mrs. Russell Sage has expended hundreds of thousands of dollars, since her husband's death, for philanthropic purposes and the general betterment of the working people, the new enterprise will not be charitable in any way, nor is it intended for the poor or laboring classes. Nor will it be managed on a charitable basis. Whoever wishes to become either tenant or purchaser, will pay a fair price. It will be run solely as a business investment and conducted in all details on the strictest business principles. It is intended for people of moderate salaries or incomes, those whose means can enable them to pay $25 per month and upwards toward the possession of their own homes.

Some may wonder why the laboring man has been ignored in this housing proposition of the Sage management. He has not been forgotton; his interests will be looked after later on, but elsewhere and farther out on the island. Though the houses of the first construction at Forest Hills will be contiguous or "block" houses and on plots smaller than those in the city, none will fall below $2,000 and the majority will cost from $8,000 to $12,000.

In the initial operation, for which plans are in readiness, there will be ten different groups of buildings, involving an expenditure in land improvement and building construction of a million and a quarter dollars. The different types of buildings in the groups will cover as wide a range as will be permitted by the economic conditions. Adjoining the railroad station and forming Station Square, the buildings will be three and four stories, containing offices. stores and restaurants. The upper rooms will be made into non-housekeeping apartments for both men and women. From Station Square as a centre out towards Forest Park, which bounds the property on the southeast, the houses are planned to correspond to the varying values of the lots, the larger single-family dwellings containing ten or twelve rooms and the smaller four or five. While they will vary greatly in size, arrangement, cost and architectural treatment, an attempt will be made to make them alike in their domestic and liveable character.

Mrs. Russell Sage
From a recent photograph

Forest Hills Gardens is the appropriate name by which the place will be designated; it is indicative of the scheme which has been followed in laying out the grounds and the plans which will be observed in erecting the buildings. Each of the latter will stand in a garden of its own and will resemble the rural villa of the English type. In fact, the model of the English village will be followed throughout, the purpose of the design being to give as much as possible the appearance of quietude and seclusion. There will be nothing of the stereotyped or conventional, so wearisome to the eye in city blocks. Two principal streets, each eighty feet wide, will be carried direct through the property on lines 1,260 feet apart, while on the side next Forest Park will be a boulevard 125 feet wide. One of the principal streets will pass under the four railroad tracks at the Station Square. The side streets will be laid out with a view to quietness and freedom from noise. Moreover, these side streets will be narrow, so as to give greater space for gardens in front of the cottages. The buildings themselves will be of brick and cement. There will be a general harmony and color scheme. The ordinary apartment houses will be different from anything the average salaried man is accustomed to in the city, both in external and internal arrangements. Every living room will have a window opening out on the blue of the sky; there will be no air-shafts, closes, or "shut-ins" to shut out the sunlight.



The Heart of the Projected "Model City," at Forest Hills

Owing to the proximity of Forest Park—the largest in the borough of Queens—it will not be necessary to set apart a public recreation place, but a sufficiency of playgrounds and amusement centres will be provided. A plot has been reserved for a public school site, a playground and school gardens. There will be enclosed "block" playgrounds, occupying the interior portion of some of the street blocks and intended for the exclusive use of those in the immediate neighborhood.

No initial outlay will be spared on roads, water supply, sewers and other improvements. The whole enterprise may be characterized as an educational experiment in housing. About 8,000 people will be given an opportunity of helping to demonstrate its success or failure. Should it turn out successfully, it will set a good precedent to others who are interested in the problem of relieving city congestion by building up the suburbs.

CARNEGIE'S GREAT GIFT TO PEACE

and Margaret Carnegie, wife and daughter of the donor, are appended to the deed of trust as witnesses.

Mr. Carnegie's gifts now reach the stupendous total of one hundred and seventy-nine million, five hundred thousand dollars. Mr. Rockefeller stands next in the amount of his public gifts, he having bestowed on various worthy causes at least one hundred and fifty millions. As both men are still in good health and seem as interested as ever in public philanthropy, it is probable that they will part with much more before they consider their life work done.

Books and education are both of great interest to the famous ironmaster, and his gifts to libraries and schools of various kinds far exceed those given to other worthy objects, generous as these have been. Carnegie libraries are now scattered all over the country in cities and towns, and as adjuncts to schools and colleges. The latest estimate of the amount which he has given for libraries is fifty-three million dollars. It is hard to keep the list of Carnegie libraries up to date, for the building of new ones is announced every week or so. There are about thirty of these libraries in Greater New York alone.

He gave sixteen millions to found and endow the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg. The greater part of his fortune was made in Pittsburg. It is the chief seat of the steel industry, and Mr. Carnegie has shown in various ways his affection for the Smoky City. He began his career there over forty years ago in a small forging shop which made axles from scrap iron. He has also given the city a magnificent library. He also established a technical school, giving it two millions. The Carnegie Institution at Washington has received twelve millions from him so far. It was founded in 1902. It encourages "investigation, research and discovery," and supplies the laboratories, apparatus and books to investigators who may wish to work there.

The Scotch universities received a fund which makes education practically free to deserving students in the "Land o' Cakes." His native town of Dunfermline has been endowed to the extent of five millions, one of his gifts being a magnificent park. He has also given some libraries in Great Britain. To The Hague he gave the magnificent Peace Palace, costing $1,750,000. Other miscellaneous gifts to Europe amount to two millions and a half. He gave $750,000 to the Bureau of American Republics. The endowment for the Hero Fund was five millions, while fifteen millions went to the Educational Foundation. The small colleges have received twenty millions, while twenty more have been given to miscellaneous objects in this country. The Allied Engineering Societies received a million and a half, and the building known as the Engineers' Club in New York City is a monument to his generosity.

CURRENT COMMENT ON PASSING EVENTS

—NEW YORK CITY has raised $500,000 of the $2,000,000 endowment asked for by President Taft for the American Red Cross Society.

—CHICAGO FIRMS this year divide $1,250,000 in Christmas gifts among their employees. The Western metropolis has firm confidence in the business outlook.

—CANADA CONTEMPLATES spending $100,000,000 on the Georgian Bay Canal, $25,000,000 on the deepening of the Welland Canal, and $75,000,000 on improving the St. Lawrence Canals between Kingston and Montreal.

—THE MEXICAN revolution, which was at first regarded as a mere "tempest in a teapot," seems to have considerable staying qualities. Federal forces and rebels have fought at several places in the State of Chihuahua, and although in every encounter the revolutionists have been worsted, according to the government reports, they have quickly reappeared for a further encounter.

—A CHICAGO PARTY of tourists in the Holy Land, under the leadership of Rev. W. R. Miller, has just had a stirring and rather dangerous experience. Seven of the party, while ascending the Euphrates in a launch, were robbed by Bedouins. No personal violence was attempted. The raiders took all the travelers' checks (which will be useless to them) and such small sums of money as they could confiscate.

—THE INTERBOROUGH Company of New York City has made an offer to the Public Service Commission to construct and operate a subway system which shall provide for the three boroughs, the estimated cost of new construction to be about $128,000,000, the company agreeing to furnish $75,000,000 of this, provided the city becomes responsible for the remaining $53,000,000.

—FREDERICK W. LEHMANN, of St. Louis, has been appointed solicitor-general of the United States to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Lloyd W. Bowers. Mr. Lehmann has been practising law in St. Louis for the past twenty years, and is recognized as an able man who will bring both judgment and dignity to his new office. He was born in Prussia in 1853, but came to this country at an early age. He graduated from Tabor College, Ia., and was admitted to the bar in 1873.

THE WAR ON THE BLACK HAND

IT seems as if at last the authorities of our cities are making a determined effort to suppress the almost daily outrages perpetrated by the secret Italian organization, the "Black Hand." In New York there has hardly been a week when there has not been a bomb exploded in the hallway of some store or tenement whose owners have refused to pay blackmail. Kidnappings have been of almost regular occurrence, the children of well-to-do Italians being stolen while at play or while on the way from school, and held for ransom. Sometimes the parents, being unable to pay the sums demanded for the return of the child, or else urged to try and discover the identity of the kidnappers, have never seen their children again, and they were undoubtedly made away with.

Recently the police of New York, after following up a number of baffling clues to discover the whereabouts of one boy who had been stolen, made a raid which led to his rescue and also to that of another little boy and a little girl who had been stolen from their parents some time before. Arrests were made on the evidence seeured, and it is thought that the police have in custody the members of a "Black Hand" band which has terrorized a certain part of the Italian colony for some time, and which undoubtedly has connections with the "Blaek Hand" of other cities if not with Italy, where the loosely formed yet dangerous eriminal organization doubtless has its headquarters.

Mrs. Frank Petello and Mamie

In proportion to the crimes they have committed, the members of the so-called "Blaek Hand" bands have suffered very little punishment. This is not the fault of the authorities, but of the Italians, who have been the greatest sufferers. They have been afraid to turn over to the police what evidence they have had, for fear that they would be killed or some of the members of their families be spirited away. Witnesses have been intimidated by secret signs even in the court-room while they stood at the witness stand, and while the spectators could see no reason they have suddenly lost their voices and their memories at the same time, and with ashen lips stammered that they knew nothing about the case in hand whatsoever. Police of all cities agree that there is no case so baffling, which seems to become so obscure, as that which involves any member of the "Black Hand." Often the injured parties object to having the police take part in the quest anyway, and seem to prefer to settle it with knife or pistol when the opportunity eomes.

Most of the criminals who have been run to earth have been tracked by Italian policemen on the New York force and by Italian detectives, who make a specialty of ferreting out crime among their own countrymen. They have shown great ingenuity and courage, and in some eases have given up their lives, as did gallant Lieutenant Petrosino, who went to Sicily to get evidence against certain criminals in New York, and was assassinated at Palermo.

The recent important raid was made to diseover little Giuseppe Longo. He was stolen from before his house in Brooklyn on November 19. His father received several letters demanding $15,000 for his son's return, and at last one came which said if the money were not paid forthwith the boy's head would be sent him by express. On the same day that Giuseppe disappeared Michael Rizzo and Carlo Gagliotto were stolen in Brooklyn. Carlo was returned, however, in some mysterious manner, and he was found in his own hall by his parents. As he was but three he could tell nothing of where he had been taken.

At last word came to Detective Micelli through some devious channel of the underworld that he might find Giuseppe in a house in East Sixty-third Street, Manhattan, if he acted quickly. It is one of the worst districts of the foreign quarter. Not so long ago the body of a little boy who had been stolen was found in a chimney. Feuds oceur there frequently with pistol shots and knife thrusts to settle them. For the most part, the people who live in the ramshackle tenements respect Ameriean institutions and laws only so long as they are looking into the muzzle of a policeman's revolver.

The police planned carefully for the raid. Thirteen detectives were taken from the Italian Bureau, while several came over from Brooklyn, bringing Giuseppe's nine-year-old brother to identify him.

The deteetives were all dressed as laborers, and throwing off their alert carriage with their good clothes they slouched along as if perfectly at home in the quarter. They scattered about the various roofs near the suspeeted house and in the backyards until only three were left. These entered the house and knoeked on every door until an answer came from one. They held up the older Longo boy to the transom. "That's him," he cried in delight, and the next instant the door went in off its hinges and the room was covered by detective's shooting irons. Only the little Giuseppe was there. They took him out and in the street he pointed out a man who had brought him food, and he was taken. The detectives in the yard got a man and his wife who were trying to escape from the building. Three others were taken after a brief struggle in the dark hallway and disarmed. Other suspects were gathered in until nine were taken to jail. Two were women.

Michael Rizzo, who had been missing, suddenly made his appearance weeping on the streets of Harlem, and it is supposed that he was turned loose by some member of the Sixty-third Street gang who had become badly frightened by the capture of his confederates. Later they took Rizzo to his grandfather's store in Brooklyn and had him show the way he was taken. He went all right until he reached Sixty-third Street. Finally he reached the house next to the one where the Longo boy had been kept prisoner. All of the occupants had gone, tearing up what they could not take. The same day, though it may be but a coincidence, a little girl, Mamie Petello, who had disappeared from Red Bank, N. J., was mysteriously returned. It may be that the success of the police in capturing one gang has intimidated the rest. It is current report, however, among the police that a good part of the kidnapping all over the country was directed from Sixty-third Street. A book was found which is thought to be the record of the criminal society.

A NATIONAL SUFFRAGE CLUB NOW

THE Women's Political Union has just opened new National Club rooms at 46 East Twenty-ninth Street, New York City. It has heretofore been called the "Equality League of Self-Supporting Women." Now it includes all classes of women, and men also. This club is intended to advance the woman suffrage movement, especially on its political side. It gets acquainted with legislatures, looks into the records of political candidates, and makes it a point to have suffragists nominated, as far as possible.

When both candidates for any New York office are in favor of the suffrage, the Women's Political Union has nothing to do. This is one of the peculiarities of the situation. When one candidate is against suffrage, the club's work is to defeat him. They have found that their efforts eount for more in defeating the bad candidate than in helping to elect the good one.

During recent political eampaigns in New York State, this society had three very interesting experiences, one in Buffalo, one in Ontario and one in Brooklyn, in all of which they showed that they possessed far more power than the politicians suspected.

This society desires that all women should acquaint themselves with the conditions of their several districts—the streets, courts, factories, schools, stores, saloons, and vicious resorts of each one, so that their representatives may know all the facts about them. It takes especial pains to instruct women, by lectures and in classes, upon the best methods of conducting campaigns, and of organizing and addressing open-air meetings—in short, upon the mechanics of the suffrage movement.

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch

Mrs. Gertrude Andrews conducts a class in public speaking every Tuesday evening at the Society's headquarters, beginning January 13. Few women speakers can be heard more than a few feet away from their respective platforms. Once a week they give a reception to some distinguished guest. Their next one is to be given to Miss Draper, the new woman member of the New York Board of Education. Open-air meetings will be held twice a week throughout the winter, when the weather permits.

All of the New York Suffrage Societies unite in giving a grand exhibition of tableaux on Tuesday evening, January 17. This organization will present two tableaux, illustrating the old and the new methods of feminine industry. The first shows an antique domestic interior with looms, spinning-wheels and other industrial implements. The second will display a factory with the girls and women crowding into it. At a recent meeting pledges were circulated, printed in the suffrage colors, purple, white and green, and ealled "The Will and Won't Pledges." They bind the signers to give no money nor services to any other "cause," until the women of New York State have been enfranchised.

Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch is president of the Woman's Political Union. She believes that the welfare of the country depends upon the giving of the vote to women, and especially that the laws affecting the 600,000 working girls and women of New York State will never be properly made and regulated until they themselves have a voice in the matter.

The World's Peace Hope

IN providing the foundation of a permanent fund for the promotion of world peace, Mr. Carnegie has eclipsed all his previous benevolences, in high purpose if not in amount. He has already done more to stimulate the peace movement in this country than any other one man of this generation. His trust deed, conveying this latest gift, is a comprehensive plea for arbitration. All logical minds must agree that the nation or government which refuses arbitration, when the means have been provided for the proper adjudication by a competent tribunal of all disputes with other nations, is bloodthirsty and criminal. Short of sudden invasion, or some high-handed menace by a belligerent, there is no conceivable situation which would justify war, or prevent an appeal to an arbitration court. Mr. Carnegie takes the ground that a government should stand precisely in the same relation to the principles of international law as does the individual to national or State law. He goes further and asserts that "'honor' is the most dishonored word in our language," and is too often made a pretext for the violation of all law.

Although the day when wars shall cease may still be a long way off, the indications of the world's trend toward peace are unmistakable. The Carnegie Peace Foundation is a "sign of the times." It points clearly to the initial step which American peace-lovers have so long desired should be taken by this nation. It would almost seem that the whole world is waiting for us to do this—to speak the word that shall set the peace flags fluttering in all the capitals of civilization. If we do take the initiative, it will not be long before other nations join us in the movement, which will lessen the burdens of their people and conduce to general prosperity and happiness. Only when the leading governments are mutually pledged to arbitration and peace preservation, will it be practical to reduce armaments.

Our old world makes progress slowly in all of its great reforms; but it is nevertheless going in the right direction. To those who look forward with Christian faith and confidence to the prophetic fulfilment of the world's peace hope, the skies are bright with promise. Every great evil conquered, every vile system abolished, is a milestone which the race must pass in its progress upward and onward to a perfect civilization.

The Most Despicable Crime

IT was not so many years ago that the crime of kidnapping was of very infrequent occurrence, and the news that a child had been stolen from its parents sent a thrill of horror and indignation over the entire country. Papers everywhere recorded the details so far as they were known, and every eye was on the lookout for the child, every man's hand against the kidnapper. About thirty years ago the case of Charlie Ross was on every one's lips and the interest in his fate was kept alive for years. Then there were several kidnappings scattered through a series of years.

With the flood of immigration from Calabria and Sicily, came the "Black Hand." People had hardly become acquainted with the sinister name of these Italian bands, bound together for murder and plunder, before there were reports of children being kidnapped at different places where there were Italian colonies. New York and vicinity has been a favorite scene of these inhuman crimes. So frequently is the crime committed that it attracts but little attention from those not immediately concerned. There is none more despicable. The parents suffer agony worse than death, and if the child is not discovered, they suffer on, believing that their little one is somewhere in the hands of brutal men and women. To know that he were dead would be a relief. The fear and suffering of the stolen child beggars description. The means used to draw money from the frenzied relatives have been fiendish in their ingenuity. The threat that the child would be mutilated and returned is one of the most ordinary of these. Sometimes these threats have been made good. It is said by the New York police that the recent case where two children were returned after one had been rescued is the first time on record where they have been recovered without a ransom in Greater New York.

The police are making a determined effort to break up these bands of child-stealers, and it is to be hoped that the magistrates will punish to the full extent of the law any one proved to have the slightest connection with such a crime. We can hardly think of a short term of years in jail as adequate punishment for outrages of this kind. They should be put behind stone walls for the rest of their natural lives.

Concerning Immigration

HAS the time arrived when immigration should be restricted? This is the significant question that is raised in the report of the Immigration Commission, which was sent to Congress a few days ago. It has given three years of exhaustive consideration to every phase of the question, and its report, which makes forty printed volumes, covers the whole history of immigration. In setting forth its conclusions the Commission takes the ground that the subject should not be viewed from the sentimental standpoint, but purely as an economic problem. Industrial and other conditions in Europe are improved and can no longer be urged as a cause for emigration, which is declared to be "not now an absolute economic necessity." Restriction by our government is discussed with various proposals made in that connection, including the reading and writing test, exclusion of single, unskilled laborers, limiting the arrivals at any one port, also with respect to the exclusion of immigrants from China, Japan, Korea and British East India. An important suggestion is for government co-operation with the States and various societies in a better distribution of immigrants among agricultural sections. We are not yet aware whether the report deals with the results of the vast immigration as an addition to the population of our congested cities, where the foreign element is rapidly superseding the American worker in the lower industrial ranks and thus indirectly adding to the great army of the unemployed. The report shows how immigration has lowered the wages of labor everywhere and made life harder for the native worker skilled and unskilled.

What Congress will do with the report is matter of pure conjecture. Its conclusions are sound, and its suggestion that as aliens are now coming not to escape tyranny, but simply to make more money, they do not need our sympathy, is very much to the point. We may confidently expect the political bosses to oppose any restriction of immigration, as the naturalized vote is one of their best assets.

The Passing Years

WHAT a fortunate thing it is that we measure time by days, weeks and months! Three hundred and sixty-five days, fifty-two weeks, twelve months, they go spinning by ever more swiftly when childhood is left behind, and almost imperceptibly a year has gone and another has come. The years are growing constantly fuller of interest in this amazing twentieth century. There are many still living who remember vividly the difficulties of travel to and fro in the winter, the length of ocean voyages and the time one had to wait for news if a loved one living several States distant, was ill. Journeys then took an entire day, which now would be very comfortably covered by an express train in the course of a morning. When it cost six cents to send an ordinary letter; when children were taught how to fold their letters so that a space might be left for the address, envelopes being still unknown; when wax tapers, tallow candles or sperm oil furnished our means of lighting the home; when the telegraph and the telephone were mere dreams in the brain of an inventor; when motor cars were unthinkable and the mention of a flying machine stirred practical folk to derision, one cannot but fancy that life was full of inconveniences. We are very fortunate in being dwellers on the earth in a period brim full of agreeable excitement and vibrating with ardent energy. Yet, as human nature remains much the same throughout successive generations, there is a strong probability that the essentials that make for happiness are little altered in the present and compare quite favorably, on the whole, with those which obtain in the past. Years come and years go, wedding bells ring and the sweet, old story of love, faith and hope is told over and over from sea to sea. Children are born and in their tiny hands they hold a treasure that cannot be computed on a commercial balance sheet.

The essentials are the same in every age, contentment, honor, integrity, a good name, the love of home and a home to be glad in—what more can we ask? To every reader the best wish that can be written to-day is that in nineteen eleven there may begin for her or for him a happy New Year.

Two Kinds of Art

ARE our cities retrograding in religious sentiment and in their appreciation of the proprieties? Some years ago, New York was shocked at the proposition to produce the "Passion Play," and in obedience to general protest, it was abandoned. Salomé, that frightful idealization of the degenerate mind of Wilde, was also stamped as an offense against metropolitan decency. That the bars have been lowered since then is evidenced from the fact that a play has been produced in New York, in which the Saviour is shown in conversation with a French actress, who one day plays the part of a modern wanton, the next that of a Biblical character. To complete the travesty, the pretense is made that the piece is specially suitable to the Christmas season, for religious propaganda! We hear occasionally of an effort to purify the stage, and there are no doubt managers who would be glad to help any real reform; but conscienceless mercenaries spoil their well-meant efforts. There is an art that is divine and an art that is diabolic, and the skill of the sensationalist frequently succeeds in confusing the public in its choice between the two. The mercenary manager makes his harvest quickly before the people's eyes are opened, and laughs at them afterward.

The Season's Greetings

WE acknowledge with pleasure the many thousands of kind and agreeable messages that have come to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD from members of our Family Circle, far and near, during the last two weeks. Their letters are fragrant with the true spirit of the season of love and good will. Many of the writers have been with us for fifteen or twenty years, while others have come into the Circle more recently. To all we send fraternal greeting, with earnest prayer that the coming year may be to them and to their immediate households, rich in blessing, and filled with the joy and satisfaction of Christian service, gladly and lovingly rendered.

Maintains Its High Standard

I am very glad indeed that the paper keeps up the reputation which it won under Dr. Klopsch, and that you are running it on the same lines. Trusting you may have a most successful year,

Upland, Calif. F. L. BLACK.

Great King of Small Country

THE first family reception since Nicholas became King of Montenegro was held in the royal palace recently and a picture of the King and Queen, their sons and daughters, with their husbands and wives and a few intimate guests, was taken, which is presented to the readers on this page. The family of the late King of Denmark furnished more than its share of rulers for Europe. The children of King Nicholas and Queen Milona of Montenegro are able and influential. One of the daughters is Helena, the popular Queen of Italy, who had charge of the Mothers' and Babies' Fund supplied by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the relief of the sufferers at Messina. It does not take a great geographical territory to make a great ruler. Nicholas governs the youngest and one of the smallest kingdoms of Europe, and yet in his real manhood he stands among the tallest of modern sovereigns. Amidst the clash of arms, the jealousy of kings and the greed of governments, Montenegro has remained an independent nation for four or five hundred years. The people are simple, honest, industrious, virtuous and patriotic. For half a thousand years they have never been conquered by any enemy. Nicholas during his reign of the principality had the ability and courage to fight and defeat Turkey, by his victories doubling the geographical extent of his territory. Under his administration graft in any department of the government, high or low, is a thing unknown. Under his ideal rulership of this splendid people there is no such thing as poverty nor caste. The King himself treats the humblest subject of his realm with the same consideration and affection that he does the most wealthy or distinguished. He has a great habit of shaking hands with the plain people, especially the farmers, which sends a thrill of joy and inspiration through them. He is so singularly just in his character that Mohammedans come from over the borders to get his decisions in legal contests in preference to leaving them to the verdicts of their own courts. He is counted quite a talented poet and is the author of several of the finest patriotic poems, which are set to music and sung by his nation. He is a faithful Christian ruler and loves God and his fellow-men. Jethro's suggestion to Moses as to the qualities in the men he should select for rulership seems to have been followed by the elevation of Nicholas to the leadership of his nation.

Moreover thou shalt provide out of all the people able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness; and place such over them, to be rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens. (Ex. 18 : 21.)

Gave Baby to Mother

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Warren, of Staten Island, New York City, being childless, adopted the newly born infant of Mrs. Campbell, a neighbor, by arrangement, and proclaimed it as their own child. The Warrens bestowed upon the babe their love and tenderest care, and everything went well until October 28, when Mrs. Campbell came around and demanded her child. The Warrens refused, stating that she had given the child to them for life. Mrs. Campbell took the child in her arms and went away with it. Warren entered suit in the Supreme Court on a writ of habeas corpus to secure possession of the nine-months-old baby. Mrs. Campbell did not deny her agreement that the Warrens should have the child, but she told the judge that she had changed her mind and thought she had a legal right to the possession of her own child. Justice Davis after some deliberation decided that the mother should keep the child, and made an order dismissing the writ of Mr. Warren. Many such stories are found in novels of ancient and modern times. The deceit with the innocence and beauty of babyhood and the royalty of womanhood is unbecoming and wicked. This incident reminds us of the contest which two women had in the court before Solomon over the possession of a child. Each claimed the live child and insisted that the other was the mother of the dead one, and when Solomon proposed to divide the child with a sword and give a half to each, the real mother objected and said, "Let the other woman have the child rather than kill it." Justice Davis followed the judgment of Solomon, who said:

Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof. (I. Kings 3 : 27.)

Mount Olivet Reveals Church

A letter from a CHRISTIAN HERALD correspondent in Jerusalem, Dr. N. K. Jamal, conveys the fact of an interesting discovery where an entire church has been unearthed on the summit of the Mount of Olives. The building, which dates from 320 A.D., appears to have been destroyed by fire at one time and then partly rebuilt. The remains contain some remarkable baptismal fonts made in beautiful mosaics, and a stone bearing the name "Theodorus" in Greek. Scholars believe that this is one of the early churches St. Helena erected on the place made sacred by Christ's presence and prayers and glorious as the place of his ascension. Of this remarkable discovery Dr. Jamal says: "Under the auspices of the Greek Catholic Order of 'White Fathers,' so-called, excavations are being carried on in the grounds of the institution known as the Carmelite Convent of the Pater Noster. . . . The excavators were not long in coming upon the ruined walls of a church about six feet below the surface. This church measures some 150 feet in length and about sixty feet in its average width at the nave, its width across the transepts, however, being something like eighty feet. . . . In the middle of the floor of the south transept is a depression about four feet square, the bottom of which stands some two and a half feet below the common level of the transept's floor, with a gently rising rim around the opening. This must have served as an immersion pool or trough for baptism, and is on the whole also wonderfully preserved, and for that matter so is the plastering on the sides of the wall enclosing this transept, which also shows traces of some elegant painting. . . . There were found two or three tombs containing human bones, and on one tombstone was inscribed in Greek the name 'Theodorus.' . . . The church's history covers two separate periods, namely: The first period after its original construction by Queen Helena, mother of Constantine, some time during the fourth century of our era —for there is no doubt left in the minds of the White Fathers that this is one of the first three Christian churches ever built in the Holy Land by Queen Helena, the other two being the Church of the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem and the Church of the Nativity in Bethlehem. . . . The church bears the name of 'Eleona' in reference perhaps to Queen Helena, its founder, or the 'Church of the Lord's Prayer' because it stands, as tradition has it, over the spot where our Lord taught his disciples how to pray. It is the intention of the White Fathers to erect an elaborate edifice for worship over the exact site of this ruined church as soon as funds can be procured." And thus the spade calls our attention to the generations and doings of the past and to the beautiful story of the Saviour's life on the earth.

And when they had sung a hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives. (Matt. 26 : 30.)

$800 Fox Skin

Charles Huntington, a farmer living near Temple, Me., caught a silver gray fox in a trap the other day for the skin of which he was offered $600. Feeling that perhaps it was worth more, he hesitated, and finally sold the pelt for $800. With the money he paid off the mortgage on his home, and had enough left over to purchase some delicacies for his sick wife. Some men under similar circumstances would have foolishly spent and wasted their money in a short time or would have thrown it away in reckless speculation or unwise investment; but this man's thought was of home and of his invalid wife. It is this fondness for home and family life which is at the basis of the most and best industries of our country and has had so much to do with its happiness and thrift. Reference is made to the loyal head of the family in these words:

For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment. (Gen. 18 : 19.)

Beavers Threaten Farm

John Stephens owns a farm on Forbes Creek near Boonville, N. Y., whose destruction is threatened by a colony of beavers. They have constructed a dam which has flooded his farm lands. He cannot protect himself, because the law prevents his molesting the animals. They have built a house about ten feet square, have cut trees eight inches through down with their teeth, trimmed the branches and carried them some distance. The branches they used in making the dam and the house. It is likely these beavers came down Black River from the Adirondacks. Under the State law no person may molest wild beaver, the houses in which they live, or the dams which they build; and the farmer, whose farm is flooded, seems to have no protection against them. It is to be hoped that in some way or other a way of relief will be found for him. The beavers did not know any better than to do as they did; they were only following the instinct of industry and home-building; but there are many people who without even these excuses will flood their neighbors' farms, or even confiscate them by stealth or fraud. The world is full of modern Jezebels and Ahabs who are willing even to kill Naboth that they may take his vineyard next to the palace grounds for a garden of herbs.

And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it. (I. Kings 21 : 16.)

Dollars from White Paper

Mr. Lewis Leskowitz, a leather merchant of New York, complained to the police that he had been swindled out of $1,000 in this manner: A friend of his took him to the Waldorf Astoria Hotel to see a machine which a stranger had there, which he claimed would turn white paper into dollar bills by means of a crank. He said the machine had been stolen from the government and was one with which the government manufactured its dollar bills. This man, his friend and the stranger went from the hotel to Madison Square Park, where Leskowitz handed out the $1,000 and took the machine. When he got it home he found that it turned out only white pieces of paper and not the beautiful "long green" that he expected. It is to be hoped that the scoundrel who perpetrated the fraud will be found and punished, but it is hardly enough to hope that men will cease from being swindled by the infinite variety of devices offering something for nothing. There is very little difference in the moral quality of the one who gives or takes a gold brick.

When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him. (Ps. 50 : 18.)

KANSAS CHORUS OF 600 CHILDREN

IT was away out on the Western prairies in a small Kansas town. I had just engaged a room in a private home for a week, and was resting. It was a dainty, spotless room, and the windows were open, letting in the early spring wind laden with the perfume of prairie flowers and wild plum blossoms.

Some one was at the piano downstairs, and the music was delightful. Not once did it tumble into rag-time; not once did a jumpy, edged voice sing out an invitation for "Molly to Be Mine," nor inquire about Kelley. There was a sonata from Beethoven, some passages from Bach's Christmas Oratorio, and then the player lightly danced into Haydn's Gypsy Rondo.

"There must be a music teacher boarding here," I thought. But at that moment the music ceased and a childish voice called to the kitchen:

"Mamma, did I play that pretty good?"

I was so astonished I went downstairs, and found a twelve-year-old girl at the piano. I introduced myself very formally, for I felt a vast respect for such a talented young person. And in her frank child way she told me her name was Hilda, and that she attended the public school, and was in the ninth grade, and liked cats and chocolates.

"You play remarkably well," I said sincerely.

She was pleased, but tried not to show it. She had light hair, very fair skin, and big blue eyes.

"Lots of them play better than I do—and sing, too." And then in a moment she inquired, "Are you going to stay all the week?"

"Yes," I answered, "I came to attend the musical festival."

"You must be sure to go Saturday afternoon," she said, "We children give the concert that day—only the band helps us. There are about six hundred of us in the chorus."

It was then I fully realized that this was Lindsborg, the land of the Swede and the home of music.

Nearly fifty years ago a band of Swedish emigrants settled in the Smoky Valley, Kansas. They prospered, built a town and a college. They loved music next to their love for God, and they soon organized a choral society that has grown into a great oratorio society.

And how they do love music! They sing in their homes and in the fields and teach the children to sing and to play.

The next morning I met a small "Gust" on the street, and when I inquired of him a direction, he took off his hat and stood with the sun on his flaxen head. He had a violin under his arm and told me he was going to practise with three other boys and girls a violin quartette for the Children's Saturday Concert.

"And what are you going to play?" I asked.

"We will play three selections," he said in his clear but slow English. "Minuet from E Major Symphonie by Mozart, Wiegenlied from Schubert, and the finale from Mozart's Quartette No. 43." It fairly took my breath, and I went on smiling. Everywhere I saw children going or coming, with music in their hands or instruments under their arms, all keenly interested in the coming concert. It is the great event of the year to these Swedish children, just as the Grand Messiah Concert, rendered with a chorus of nine hundred voices, is the event of the year for their elders—and for thousands of visitors. Every boy and girl in town who can sing at all—and that scarcely leaves enough for a game of three-cornered cat—is in the chorus. And a few of the most talented ones render piano, violin, or vocal solos.

The "Children's Chorus" at Lindesborg, Kansas

Director Earl Rosenberg, who trains the great Bethany Oratorio Society with its chorus of hundreds of voices to sing the Messiah, Stabat Mater, Creation, Parsifal, Tannhauser and like music, also trains the children for their concert. And their concert is worth waiting for.

And what a scene greets the audience! Near the edge of the stage sit the seven or eight boys and girls who are to render solos and quartettes. Around them in a semi-circle is the band of seventy pieces. And back of them rising tier above tier is the chorus of six hundred children, wearing in advance their Easter clothes, their faces lighted with eagerness and pleasure. Their light hair and fair faces and blue eyes tell you they are mostly Swedes. In the midst of them rises the great pipe organ, and at it sits Hagbard Brase, who has played for many, many concerts.

The director raises his baton; the chorus stands; deep and solemn the organ notes peal, and then six hundred voices break forth in, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name." Following this are the violin, piano and vocal solos. The band next gives several selections.

Again rises the chorus—and it is that which most delights the audience. They sing for ten, fifteen minutes, giving passages from some opera, like Martha for instance. And how they do sing! Six hundred children's voices that have been diligently trained for weeks! There is a thrill about it no other music can give.

Once more the band plays. And once more the chorus rises. They sing three or four numbers this time. One, a song of praise like "Praise Ye the Father"; a patriotic song, "The Star-Spangled Banner"—and even now I hear their voices ring. Then solemnly and reverently and fervently they close with "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

And as you pass out upon the campus those sweet, clear childish voices, singing praises to Him who died but liveth again, still ring in your heart.

WILLIAM H. HAMBY.

THE SEASON'S FIRST BIG SNOWSTORM

THE first old-fashioned winter snowstorm of the present season occurred on December 6. It swept across the country from the Mississippi Valley on the wings of a 38-mile-an-hour gale, and struck New York with such violence that the people thought a full-grown blizzard had arrived. The flakes came down thick and fast from early in the afternoon until midnight, when the storm rested for a few hours to resume business with renewed vigor during the day. The snow continued to fall for thirty-six hours, covering the city streets with a white mantle five inches deep and causing the usual traffic congestion, inconvenience, accidents and suffering which mark the advent of a New York storm.

The Street Cleaning Department attacked the problem of removal with vigor; a small army of men and horses were put on the miles of white blocked streets and thoroughfares, but the work was slow. The main efforts were confined to the principal streets and avenues of traffic and during the first few days these were put in passable condition; but in the outlying districts, especially in Brooklyn and the Bronx, the difficulty of removal proved too great to surmount and scores of streets in both these boroughs are still in places mantled beneath "the beautiful." Neither in Brooklyn nor the Bronx could sufficient teams and carts be mustered to remove the snow. In addition to the regular employees of the department, the snow contractors had about 5,000 men at work and put into use some 2,000 carts.

Down at the Stock Exchange, the brokers on the curb were as busy bargaining, buying and selling, as if a July sun were melting the asphalt. "Bears" and "bulls" were shearing "lambs" with as keen a delight as in the "good old summer time." A boatload of immigrants, chiefly from Southern Europe, pulled in from Ellis Island in the thick of the storm. The women wore shawls and mantillas wrapped round their heads, the men were bundled in rough homespun overcoats, with great woolen scarfs around their necks. It was certainly a wonderful transformation from the sunny skies of Calabria and the vineyards of Piedmont, to fall right into the jaws of a New York blizzard; but they did not seem to mind it.

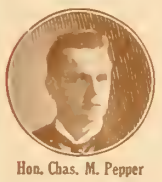
Christian Herald for 1911

DURING the coming year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will present to its nearly two million readers a greater list of attractions than ever before. Its contributors include many of the best known names in literature. Its stories, poems and general articles are from authors whose fame, already established, is a guarantee of the quality of their output. Its sermons are gems of Gospel eloquence from the leading preachers of all denominations. Explorers, scientists and missionaries in many foreign lands will add to its other attractions, and its large staff of artists and photographers will give the charm of perpetual variety to every issue. Its editorials will deal fearlessly and without prejudice with all the foremost questions of the day. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be a complete and reliable weekly record of what is going on in the great, wide world. Some of our contributors are noted briefly below:

Rev. Charles M. Sheldon

Pastor Charles M. Sheldon, the famous author of In His Steps, and one of our most appreciated contributors, will write for us during the coming year a number of uplifting Gospel sermons on practical Christianity in every-day life.



Hon. Chas. M. Pepper

Hon. Charles M. Pepper will continue his valuable series of articles dealing with varied topics of statesmanship and travel. Mr. Pepper is a member of the Pan-American Commission, and was lately appointed by our State Department as one of the American negotiaries of the new Reciprocity Treaty with Canada. He is a fascinating writer and the author of several successful books, his latest being the Life Work of Louis Klopsch.

Pastor Charles Wagner

Dr. Wilfred Grenfell

Pastor Charles Wagner, the famous author of The Simple Life, who has been called "one of the sweetest and most Christlike souls of a century," will contribute several articles of timely interest on the religious movement in France.

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster

Wilfred Grenfell, the distinguished explorer, will write of a Doctor's Adventures in the Frozen North. Dr. Grenfell's stories and sketches deal with life in the Arctic, and the pathos and romance of the "Lone White Land."

Bishop Quayle

Margaret E. Sangster, greatly beloved of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, will contribute a series of specially delightful sketches that will interest old and young, wives, mothers, maidens and children.

Mrs. Florence M. Kingsley

Bishop William A. Quayle, one of the most eloquent of living Methodist divines, will contribute several sermons on timely religious topics during the year. Bishop Quayle's sermons have a special charm, wit and originality of their own.

Dr. R. A. Torrey

Florence Morse Kingsley, the brilliant author of Titus and Stephen, and a great favorite with CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, will be one of our most entertaining contributors.

Do You Know that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is read by nearly two million people every week of the year?

that it is a great national home newspaper which will keep you up to date on matters of interest?

that it does not confine itself to religious topics alone, but describes every event of national interest, whether it happens at home or abroad?

that it is illustrated on nearly every page with graphic pictures of men, women, places, and events of interest?

that in addition to news matter, it publishes magazine features of interest to every one in the family—special articles on live topics, short stories, serial stories, a "Boys and Girls" dept., etc.?

that it offers one and a half times the quantity of reading matter offered by the popular magazines?

that its large corps of correspondents live in every country on earth?

that its readers constitute a great influential family to which it will benefit you to belong?

Prof. R. A. Torrey, the long-time associate and successor of Moody, the great evangelist, will preach through our pages a number of powerful evangelistic sermons during 1911.

Dr. David J. Burrell, the famous pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church of New York, will contribute a number of strong, eloquent Gospel sermons. Dr. Burrell touches every phase of Christian experience.

Rev. J. M. Farrar, known throughout the nation as the founder and conductor of The Children's Pulpit, will continue his delightful ministrations to the young people.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, the international evangelist, will tell of his coming European tour with Mr. Charles M. Alexander during 1911. It will be a memorable record.

Miss Janet Porter is the Aunt Janet, who is the friend of boys and girls everywhere. The boys' and girls' clubs inaugurated by her are to be found all over the world, and her department has met with tremendous success.

Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, one of the ablest defenders of the Old Book, has been engaged to prepare a series of articles on The Bible in Everyday Life, which will command the widest attention of all readers.

Pastor Charles F. Aked, of New York City, will be one of our leading sermonic contributors during the year 1911. His language has been called "the sturdiest Saxon of any preacher in America," and he is as sound as he is fearless and able.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, who occupies Beecher's pulpit in Plymouth Church, will also contribute a number of notable Gospel sermons during 1911.

Rev. Hugh Black, one of the soundest and most eloquent of metropolitan preachers, will also be a valued contributor to our sermonic pages. There is probably no abler theologian. His sermons are gems.

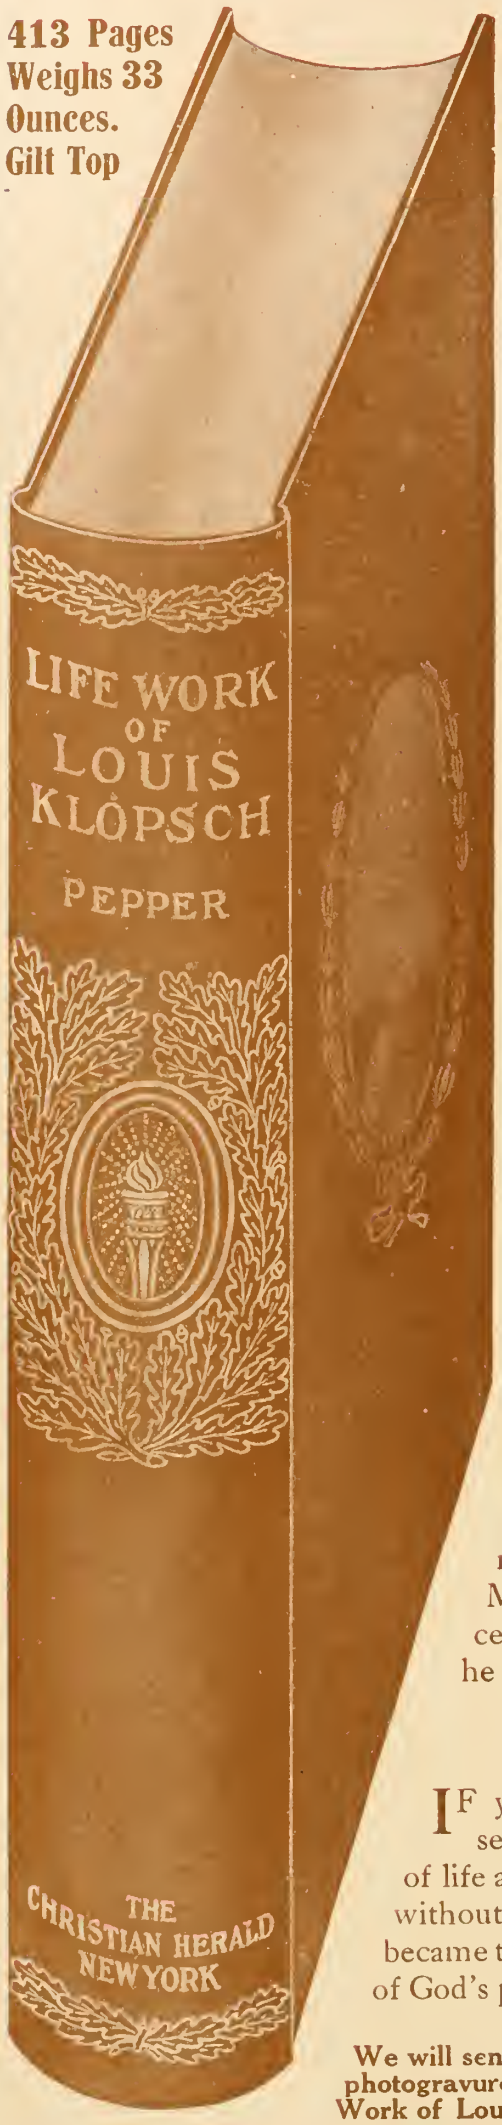
THE STORY of A STIRRING LIFE



"Read no history, nothing but biography, for that is life without theory."—CONTARINI FLEMING.

THE spontaneous welcome by The Christian Herald readers of the Life Work of Louis Klopsch, is the best evidence of the popular appreciation of this wonderful volume. We regard it as the most desirable Premium Book we have ever issued—one that will give the greatest and most enduring satisfaction to all who read it. It's much more than simply helpful and inspiring; it will give you a new view of life and will show you how you may realize, both in material and spiritual things, results you may never have dreamed of.

The Key to a Successful Life

WHAT would not you give to one who should show you how you might make the very best of your own life; how, instead of your good qualities lying fallow and undeveloped, they might be so energized and utilized that you would soon be classed among those wonderful men and women who can "make things come to pass"? This is precisely what you will find in the Life Work of Louis Klopsch. And it is all so clear and simple that "he that runs may read" and apply it in his own case. The matter of sex makes no difference.

The Jewel that Brought Victory

IN olden times, the alchemists sought for the mythical "philosopher's stone," with which they hoped to transmute base metal into pure gold. Of course, they were invariably disappointed, for no such miraculous stone ever existed. But Louis Klopsch found something far better and infinitely more precious which he utilized in the transformation and conduct of his own life. It brought him sunshine, friends, fortune, success, happiness; like a master-key, it opened all doors wide to welcome him, and it blessed all with whom he came in contact.

Pleases Others: It Will Please You

WE are constantly receiving by every mail letters from delighted subscribers who have received the Life Work of Louis Klopsch as a premium, and who express their satisfaction with the book: "It is the story of many great and worthy deeds," writes Mrs. J. A. K., of Rome, N.Y., "by one whose memory will be held sacred in the hearts and homes of a loving nation." "The Life Work of Louis Klopsch is a beautiful book and will be read with deep interest by myself and family," writes Mrs. L. J. H. F., Concord, N. H. "I thank you very much for it." Another reader, J. A. S., Geneva, N.Y., writes: "The book will prove an inspiration during my earthly journey to the better land." "To those who remember the good he has done, the Life Work is intensely interesting," writes H. M. S., Grafton, N. Y.; "it will be greatly appreciated in my family." "Dr. Klopsch certainly was a wonderful man," writes M. P., Utica, N.Y., "and the amount of good he did no one can compute."

An Appropriate Gift Book

IF you have a friend to whom you wish to give the most acceptable kind of a present, send that friend this grand book. Every copy of it will open up to the reader new vistas of life and its hidden meaning. It is so fascinating in every chapter that no one will lay it aside without reading it to the last line. It tells the whole life story of the poor immigrant boy who became the helper of millions of human beings, and who was the trusted almoner of multitudes of God's people. His secret of success can be yours if you will—and it's one well worth having.

We will send you THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year—fifty-two issues—our 1911 Calendar, and a photogravure of Louis Klopsch, together with a copy of this sumptuous book, the "Life Work of Louis Klopsch" (413 pages, gilt top), charges prepaid—ALL FOUR FOR ONLY $2.00

PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR MOTHER AND HOUSEWIFE
HELPFUL TALKS WITH GIRLS
ENTERTAINMENTS FOR HOME, CHURCH AND SCHOOL
HOW TO SPEAK AND WRITE CORRECTLY

EIGHT BOOKS

Their Value to the Family

The Christian Herald Home Library comprises eight books, bound uniformly, well printed on nice paper, making a very neat and attractive set of books. Each book is 4x6 inches in size. Any one of the books can be conveniently carried in the pocket or handbag.

The purpose of the Christian Herald Home Library is utility. We have put in these eight books a wealth of information and help and advice of value to each and every member of the Family Circle. You will find them full of suggestions and ideas that can be made useful in the daily life of almost any person who wants to know more and to be more. A single idea taken from one of the books may enable the housewife to manage her home more economically, it may help her to brighten her life socially, as there are new kinds of entertainments for home, school and church, and many other things that she can make use of. A suggestion to the man may be the means of a better investment for his money—a new kind of insurance policy, a better understanding of legal matters, etc. The boy will find pointers on new and old games—clean sports that develop mind and body; the girl can learn how to make money, how to improve her time, and many other beneficial ideas. And it's all boiled down, free from superfluous descriptions and introductions, but right to the point, and all presented in a way that enables you to get what you want just as quickly as possible.

Only one suggestion taken from these books—only one idea that you would never have thought of—may be alone worth to you many times the cost of the books. And they are all full of information; every word, every page and every chapter are fairly well crowded with hints and suggestions that you can use, all arranged in an attractive and convenient way. We know that you will be satisfied with this set of books because the contents are so general and practical that they will be useful in the home for years.

The set of eight books will be sent prepaid, together with a year's subscription to the Christian Herald, our 1911 Calendar and a photogravure of Louis Klopsch, all for only $2.50.

You may buy one volume of the Library, if one is all you care for, or as many as you want, by simply adding 20 cents for each volume to the subscription price of the Christian Herald.

The Coal-Miner at Home

By THEODORE ROOSEVELT

Copyright by Moffett Studio

MR. ROOSEVELT'S story of his visit to the anthracite fields of Pennsylvania will appear in the January Magazine Number of The Outlook The author states that this is not a "sociological study" nor a treatise on industrial conditions. His purpose in making the investigation was "to see the miners and their wives and families in their homes as they did their daily tasks," and to find out for himself about their life.

Nationalism and Progress

MR. ROOSEVELT will write for early publication in The Outlook a group of editorials under the general title Nationalism and Progress. In these articles he will take up the movement for clean politics, honest business, and popular rule, which he defined in his Osawatomie speech and later amplified in his Outlook editorials and public addresses. Theodore Roosevelt's Editorials and Articles on Current Topics will appear in the Outlook and nowhere else. The Christian Herald has made a special arrangement with that magazine whereby we are enabled to make you this offer: Christian Herald, one year, 52 issues; Outlook, one year, 52 Issues, all for only $3.00—less than three cents each. The Christian Herald costs you alone about that much, so why not take advantage of this opportunity to increase the quantity of your magazines without being required to raise the cost per single copy. You will enjoy the Outlook, which is unquestionably one of the best edited and illustrated periodicals in existence. Here is our offer stated again:

CHRISTIAN HERALD one year 52 Issues
OUTLOOK one year 52 Issues—Including Twelve Illustrated Double Numbers
} ALL FOR ONLY $3

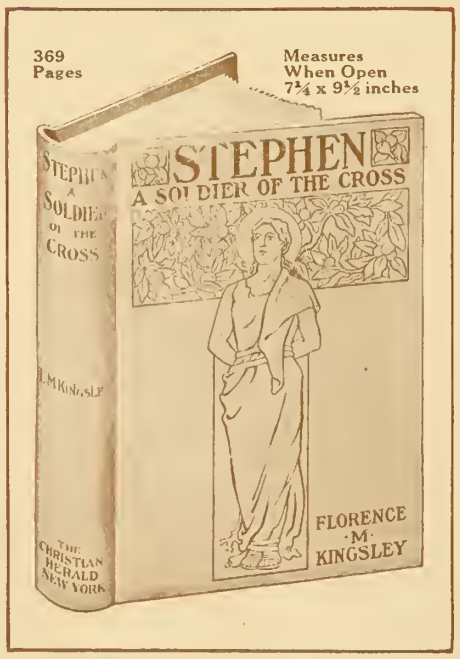
Of course you will disagree with Roosevelt in some things—possibly in many things: for it is the privilege of every American to have his own opinion on everything that relates to the national welfare or national politics. The Christian Herald is and always has been thoroughly independent, reflecting all shades of opinion. There are multitudes of good Americans who regard Theodore Roosevelt as "our foremost living citizen," though others may differ, and it is for the edification of those who so regard him, as well as for those who don't, that we have made this special arrangement. Christian Herald readers of both classes, his friends and his opponents, are thus offered an opportunity to know what Roosevelt is doing and saying, for no matter how you may look at him his terse, direct way of doing and saying things commands attention.

STEPHEN, A BIBLE HERO! By Mrs. Kingsley

WE don't think we have transgressed in referring to Stephen as "A Bible Hero," for all those who are familiar with the life of Stephen as told in the Book of Books will surely agree with us that he was one of the Lord's greatest men. Stephen's career is little known, but Mrs. Kingsley has taken this man's devotion and love as the foundation for a beautiful story which she has written in her own fascinating style. It is a story that does one good for the reading. We are introduced to some of our favorite Bible characters in a way that is delightful. As the light is thrown on Stephen, and we read again of his deeds of kindness and self-sacrifice, we marvel at the glowing imagination of the writer, but we never for a moment cease to respect her for her tenacity of purpose in never straying from the real facts of Stephen's life.

A Book That You Should Read



TO accelerate interest in Stephen, and to make the story attractive and inviting to all, Mrs. Kingsley has peopled it with nearly all of the Bible characters who were prominent in the days of Stephen. Beginning with the adventures of two homeless and friendless children, a blind girl and a bright, sweet-tempered boy, who are seeking for Jesus to restore the light to the little girl's eyes, we travel to Jerusalem, where we meet with Stephen, who opens the girl's eyes to the first burst of sunshine she has ever seen. The adventures of these children, and the troubles of Stephen and the loving apostles, all united in one grand cause, that of propagating the mercies of God, are bright chapters in this wonderful story. The story of the regeneration of Saul of Tarsus is accurately described. Mrs. Kingsley's wonderful knowledge of the Bible and her powers of description are better shown in this book perhaps than in any of her other stories. It is a book that you should have in your home, for every member of the family circle to read. It is a good book from a mechanical standpoint. The binding is in cloth of a medium-colored gray, the cover is illuminated in colors, and there is a beautiful frontispiece depicting one of the Bible scenes. There are 369 pages, the type is large and clear, with plenty of space between the lines, so that it can be read easily by all kinds of eyes.

HOW TO GET IT WITH YOUR SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 437 Bible House, NEW YORK

AN AMATEUR IN CHARITY

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

IT was New Year's Eve and bitterly cold. The Old Year was going out on the wings of a wild northwester. By morning the gale would probably have spent itself and left comparative peace in a world white with snow. There might be stars in the sky to welcome the dawn of the New Year, latest child of Time. As the Old Year departed not a star was to be seen. The street and roads were already encumbered with drifts, and thick flakes whirled through the air. It was a night to stay indoors, if one could, and to wrap to the eyes in one's warmest clothing, if forced to encounter the weather.

In the Meredith home everything was bright and cheery. The lamp on the centre table in the living-room burned with a steady light. A fire leaped and sparkled on the hearth more for cheer than for other efficieney, the house being thoroughly heated by steam. There were easy chairs, books on the shelves, a litter of magazines and newspapers and pictures on the walls. Everything betokened comfort and luxury. Annie Meredith, sitting beside the lamp absorbed in an interesting story, but on the alert for a caller whom she expected, gave the last touch of roseate beauty to a scene-setting of surpassing charm. Her caller came presently, divested himself of ulster, cap and overshoes in the hall, and presented himself, a tall, athletic figure, none the worse for a tussle with the storm, ready to watch the Old Year out and the New Year in with Annie. He was Dr. Sterling, to whom she was engaged, and he had in his pocket the solitaire which he had brought to put on her finger this evening. Her mother came flitting in, a plump little matron in her early fifties. The three were chatting eagerly around the fire when the door again opened and a big policeman in full uniform stood before them. The trio looked around in the greatest surprise. The policeman did not speak, but a smile crept around his mouth, contradicting the grimness of his lips. At the same instant recognition flashed into the eyes of the ladies, and Dr. Sterling shouted in a great laugh of mingled amazement and amusement.

"What's up now, John?" inquired the doctor. "What's the meaning of this masquerade, and where did you borrow the clothes?"

"I'm an officer on duty to-night, if you please," replied John Meredith, a trifle embarrassed by his mother's arms, clasped around him as she stood on tip-toe. He kissed her and seated her tenderly in her own arm-chair. Then he explained. "A friend of mine, Patrick McMahon, has a wife at the crisis of pneumonia to-night. With the permission of his captain I have taken his place until to-morrow morning. His clothes fit me, as you see, and I am going to walk his beat, do his work, and, in fact, be a roundsman until seven o'clock to-morrow, when I shall be relieved."

"You do look a bit like McMahon," ejaculated the doctor, "but did any one ever hear of so mad a freak?"

"Mad or not, I'm in for it," said John Meredith. "There was nobody to take Patrick's place, and so I volunteered. What's the use of having been on the foot-ball team at Yale, to say nothing of having boxed for fun with brawny athletes, if a fellow at a pinch cannot help another fellow in extremity? Well, I'm off. Wish me luck, you three. I say, don't mention this to anybody now or ever. It would be likely to get some of the force into trouble." With this John Meredith vanished into the night and the snow. He had been an enthusiastic Settlement worker ever since he had been graduated from the university, and it was his delight to know and love people of all sorts and conditions. It was not too much to say of John Meredith that he was the friend of every man in town. It was like him to have persuaded a captain of police to let him take Pat McMahon's place for a night. He was an amateur in charity. By which is meant one who loved as well as practised the divine quality.

Tramping his beat, up and down from street to street, John Meredith at first found nothing exciting. Presently, however, he was aware of what a policeman in reality, instead of one in masquerade, would have selected at once as suspicious characters. Stealing along, keeping close to the houses, and now and then darting into an area and remaining as if in conference, he observed a ragged man and a shambling, loose-jointed boy. He kept his eye upon them, not feeling certain whether they might be thieves intent on house-breaking, or vagrants, who on this bleak night were frozen, hungry and homeless. He decided to have a chat with them, and coming upon them silently in the snow, he suddenly flashed upon them a tiny electric light which he had slipped into his pocket before leaving home. The man stood his ground without resentment, while the boy tried to run away. John did not think it necessary to speak in the gruff tones usual to midnight guardians of the peace. He simply said, "You two appear to have had no supper, if I can judge by the way the kid looks, and you don't seem quite to know where to go, so come along with me."

"As she saw him, she stopped and called"

"Don't take us to the station house, Mr. Policeman," said the boy. "Dad and I haven't any home, we haven't any work or any money. We thought there might be an unlocked door and a garbage pail in some area. That's what we've been looking for. We want a crust and a bone. We're starved."

"Come along with me," said John. "I'll see that you have hot coffee and something to eat and a good bed to sleep in."

"You're a new kind of policeman," ejaculated the man.

"I'm a man and a brother, that's all," said John, piloting his charges straight to the University Settlement, where a lot of his classmates and chums were making a night of it. They were watching the Old Year out and the New Year in, just as Annie Meredith and Dr. Sterling were, just as Christian people were doing in many an open church. Not precisely as homeless and hungry people were, stealing along cold sidewalks and sleeping in cellars and under bridges and wherever the tempest overlooked a little corner in the dark.

None of the boys paid any special attention to John. He drew aside a man on whom he could depend, told him to look well to the comfort of these poor waifs, and giving him a peculiar handgrip which made the other stare for an instant, he said, "Try to detain them here till somewhere around ten o'clock to-morrow morning. I want the lad to have a happy New Year for once."

John returned to his beat, stamping his feet as he walked to keep them warm, getting a new idea of the hardships that are commonplaces to the police, finding the night, on the whole, less monotonous than he had expected and humming to himself from time to time a bar or two of the "Old Gray Bonnet." When he tired of this he varied it with "By the Light of the Silvery Moon," and other popular catches. He paused at the open door of a saloon and by his presence intimidated a group of men the worse for Barney Flynn's poisoned alcohol. There might have been a fight, if his stern "None of that. Go home peaceably, if you know what's good for you," had not, so to speak, nipped it in the bud. Barney put up his shutters, grumbling, and the men who had been drinking at his counter took their devious and stumbling way to homes where patient wives dreaded their coming. What heaps of misery must be laid at the door of the omnipresent saloon! What joy unspeakable would come to women and children, if its power could be shaken and its course of blasting disaster somehow arrested! So thought John Meredith, pondering on ways and means, as he continued to tramp on his beat.

The New Year with its ringing of bells, fanfare of whistles and general jubilation was fully inaugurated when the make-believe policeman, sturdily pacing to and fro along streets which he knew by daylight, had his attention caught by the sudden flare of a light on the second floor of a three-story brick house, followed directly by the lighting of the gas in the lower hall. The door opened and a woman with whom he was well acquainted, the wife of an intimate friend, stepped out and ran hurriedly down the steps. She had put on a long cloak and had a quilted hood upon her head. As she saw him, she stopped and called "Officer, won't you please come here?" in a voice of mingled supplication and relief. "Oh, Mr. McMahon, I'm so glad it's you," she said. "My husband is away, the maids had leave to stay out all night and the baby has been taken ill. We have no telephone. I never wanted one till now, and I must have the doctor. Would you mind calling him for me? Dr. Sterling—his office is just around the corner."

"Be aisy, Mrs. Hurlbut," answered the policeman. "I know Dr. Sterling and I'll have him around in a jiffy. Let me see you back in your own house. It's cold the night is, to be sure."

Mrs. Hurlbut disappeared within her door, and John hastily rushed for Dr. Sterling. The physician had not been long at home, and was sitting in his library thinking over the bliss of the evening and remembering the look in Annie's eyes when he slipped the betrothal ring on her finger. He opened the door at the sound of the night bell, and there was no delay in his swift answer of Mrs. Hurlbut's summons. John had no time to parley with him, nor did they exchange a word of banter after the first salutation.

Meanwhile, the tide had turned for the better in the home of Policeman McMahon. His wife passed the crisis, and when morning came her husband thanked God that Mary was to stay with him and the children. As he wrung John Meredith's hand and tried to thank him the tears dimmed his eyes and his tongue faltered. "Never mind, old chap," said John. "I don't want thanks. I've started the New Year as I wanted to, doing a good turn for one of my friends."

After breakfast and a bath at home, Mr. Meredith, arrayed in his usual habiliments, called at the Settlement, looked up his protégés of the previous night, and by skilful questioning and a little personal trouble, managed to start father and son on a new year of hope and endeavor.

"One never knows what John will do next," observed his little mother, shaking her head as she thought of his last piece of eccentricity.

"Yes, mother," Annie replied, "but John's surprises are revelations of the kindest heart in the world. He's an amateur in charity. That's what our John is."

The 1910 Census at a Glance

THE number of people now living under the protection of the American flag exceeds the hundred-million mark. According to the official figures of the Census Bureau the grand total population of the United States and its dependencies, including Alaska, the Panama Canal Zone, Hawaii, the Philippines, Samoa and Guam, amounts to 101,100,000 souls.

Within its borders on the North American Continent, exclusive of Alaska, the United States has a population of 91,972,266. The aggregate increase for the past ten years is 15,977,691, or 21 per cent. over the 1900 figures. The census just concluded is the thirteenth decennial enumeration, the first having been taken in 1790. In that year the figures were 3,929,214, or a total population not much in excess of the number of people in the State of Texas at the present time. The country has grown just twenty-five times larger than it was then, out-distancing in its rapid growth any other country in ancient or modern times.

While the increase is great as a whole, it has fallen in percentage however below other decades. In the previous one, between 1890 and 1900, the increase was 22.7 per cent. The greatest percentage of increase was between 1800 and 1810, when it reached as high as 36.4. In the present census, there has been a wider disparity among the different States than at any other time. The range is from a decrease of 7.3 per cent. in Iowa to an increase of 120 per cent. in Washington. The States showing the lowest rates of increase, falling below 10 per cent., are five in the great central section of the country, namely: Iowa, Missouri, Kentucky, Indiana and Tennessee; the three northern New England States, and Maryland and Delaware. The States showing the next higher rates of increase, between 10 and 20 per cent., lie adjacent to those showing the lowest rate, and include in the Middle West, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska and Kansas, and a large belt of Southern States, namely, Virginia, the two Carolinas, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

The large manufacturing States, such as Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York and Pennsylvania, have increased from 20 to 30 per cent., as have also Arkansas and Texas. The States which have gone beyond this percentage are, with the exception of New Jersey and Florida, located in the West. South Dakota, Colorado and Utah had rates of increase between 30 and 50 per cent., while North Dakota, Wyoming, Oregon, Nevada, California, New Mexico and Arizona increased from 50 to 100 per cent. Oklahoma, Idaho and Washington more than doubled their population.

Immigration during the decade amounted to about 9,000,000, but as these figures are reduced greatly by returns, deaths and other causes, the census officials do not place the net gains from this source at more than 6,000,000 and possibly less. This leaves an increase in round numbers of more than 10,000,000 among the native-born.

The Widow of Nain

ERE He had entered the city,
Issued thence a burial train,
Bearing the son of a widow—
Desolate widow of Nain!
Desolate widow of Nain!

Wholly heart-broken, that mother
Fill'd all her being with pain!
Who can afford consolation
To the poor widow of Nain?
To the poor widow of Nain?

Silent and sad all the people,
But they cannot lessen the strain,
Wresting the heart of the mother—
The bereft mother of Nain!
The bereft mother of Nain!

Little dream they that the Ruler—
Ruler of earth and the main—
Standeth among them with power—
Power to release or restrain!
Power to release or restrain!

"Weep not!" to the mourner He sayeth;
Nor toucheth that dead form in vain!
The young man, obedient, arises—
Restored to the widow of Nain!
Restored to the widow of Nain!

Oh! for the mothers less favored,
Who still for their lost ones complain!
Would that some others could fare like
The fortunate widow of Nain!
The fortunate widow of Nain!

Help Somebody

DO a kindness for your neighbor
Every time you can;
Give a greeting to the stranger,
He's your fellow-man;
Break your box of alabaster;
Thus your kindness show:
Scatter seed of fellow-feeling
Everywhere you go.

If perchance you meet a brother
Fallen in disgrace;
He was once some mother's darling,
Held in fond embrace;
Tell the wayward one of Jesus—
How He loved him so;
Tell it out with joy and gladness
Everywhere you go.

If you meet a fallen sister,
Take her by the hand;
Point her to the home up yonder,
Blessed Beulah land!
Do by her as Jesus taught you,
While on earth below;
Raise the fallen, cheer the fainting
Everywhere you go.

Help the heathen in his blindness,
Teach him you're his friend;
Throw the lifeline of salvation,
Hold the other end!
Draw him out of superstition,
Land him safe and sure
On the Rock of Ages shield him,
Evermore secure.

The 1910 Census at a Glance

The enormous increase of New York is more than amazing, it is phenomenal and unprecedented in history. The city increased, within its limits 1,329,000. The adjoining towns on the north doubled, and the maze of suburbs on the Jersey shore made vast gains. The true New York, including all these suburbs which are its overflow, gained about 1,800,000 in the decade, and the figures place the population of the entire metropolitan district at about 7,000,000. It is now obvious to every one that within a short time New York will be the largest city in the world.

Old-Time Philanthropist

REV. J. F. DICKIE, pastor of the American Church in Berlin, when in Augsburg, Germany, a few weeks ago, found a little city in the heart of the city, that was shut in all by itself with two gates, and is called the "Fuggerei." It is so called because the one hundred and six houses within it were all built with money left by Fugger, the wealthy sixteenth century banker, who has been called the J. P. Morgan of that country. When he died, he directed that these houses should be built and then given to poor aged families for four marks and twelve pfennings rental a year, that is, exactly one American dollar. They have four rooms and kitchen, with a little front garden and a little garden behind. The people living there must keep their own four streets clean and every morning each one of them must say the Creed. Each evening they must say the Lord's Prayer, and at noonday they must say a prayer in remembrance of Fugger. That was a splendid use of the money he left behind and has done good to many generations. Some of our rich Americans might well follow so practical an example.

A Remarkable Watch

THERE is in the possession of the Czar a very remarkable watch. It was made by a Polish mechanic named Jules Curron. The Czar had heard some wonderful tales about the inventive ability of this man, and, wishing personally to test his skill, he sent him a parcel containing a few copper nails, some wood chippings, a piece of broken glass, an old cracked china cup, some wire and a few cribbage-board pegs. Accompanying this was a command to make them into a timepiece. Within a remarkably short time, the Czar received them back in the shape of a watch. The case was made of china, and the works of the other odds and ends. So pleased and astonished was the Czar that he sent for the man, and conferred several distinctions upon him.

Thanks and Good Wishes

Please accept my sincere thanks for the fine picture of Dr. Klopsch, which you sent me, also for the 1911 calendar. May your good works materialize abundantly is the wish of

Synopsis of Previous Chapters

Little Jimmy Preston, aged six, gets a letter at the post office for his sister Barbara. On the way home it is lost. Barbara Preston has been trying to keep the farm, the last of her father's estate, for Jimmy, but it is mortgaged to Honorable Stephen Jarvis, who is comparatively young. He threatens to foreclose. Peg Morrison, the old farm hand, is as greatly concerned over the loss of the letter as is Barbara. She goes to Mr. Jarvis to ask for more time on the mortgage. He tells her that he is disposed to do it, and also that he is tired of his present housekeeper and would like her to fill the place. She leaves without a word. The old housekeeper at once becomes her enemy. Stephen Jarvis comes to see Barbara. He asks her to marry him and he will give her the place. She refuses. She thinks of her old lover who went away and whose fate she did not know. Jarvis drives up and insists she ride with him. He rebukes her for not asking his aid to obtain a school position he heard that she had applied for, and she tells him that she asked his aid once and was refused. He says that he had offered her another place. He renews his proposals and says her brother could live with them. He tells her that he has never loved any one else in his life. He leaves her at her own gate, where little Jimmy meets her and says Peg has found the letter. All she can make out is the post-mark. The handwriting is that of David Whitcomb, her old lover, whom she thought dead. Barbara writes to the address, Tombstone, Ariz. Jarvis meets her once more and walks with her, as she will not enter the carriage; and he tells her that he cannot give her up. He grasps her arm, but with the declaration that she is "free," she wrenches away. She makes a desperate resolution. Going to Mr. Bellows, the auctioneer, she tells him that she wishes to sell her skill and intelligence "to the highest bidder." She says a mortage on the place covers everything, and that she must sell her work for a term of years for $1,200. Against his will, he consents to auction her off. Jarvis is astonished when he finds Barbara is to sell her services. A small crowd gathers at the Preston farm on the day appointed, Mr. Bellows wishes to know if Barbara wants to "back out." She refuses to change her mind. Jarvis comes to protest. Whitcomb returns while the auction is in progress. $1,400 is bid. A man giving the name of Smith secures her services for $4,000. Whitcomb in anger demands who the bidder is, but cannot find out. Bellows says Barbara is to stay at the farm until called for but will not tell the name of the buyer for whom Smith acted. She hires Martha Cottle to come and keep house while she is away. She pays Jarvis his money. Whitcomb comes to see her. She finds him changed.

XIII—Continued

DAVID WHITCOMB laughed triumphantly at Barbara's answer.

"Yes; I flatter myself that the pedagogue has been pretty well knocked out of me in the last five years. What a solemn, sentimental ass I must have been in those days. It was a lucky thing for me that you sent me about my business. Still—Barbara, I'd give a gold nugget to know just what you thought when they told you I'd passed in my checks. Did you picture poor David lying cold and pale under some frozen cairn along the Yukon trail? That's the way they dispose of unlucky prospectors up north; just dig a hole in the snow and drop 'em in; then pile stones on top to keep off the wolves. Ugh! I can hear 'em howl, if I stop to think, now. Did you drop a tear on that imaginary grave of mine up in the Arctic? did you, Barbara?"

Her eyes evaded his smiling blue gaze.

"Why should you ask?" she hesitated. "It was a great surprise—a great shock."

"You refer, of course, to the news of my death," he said. "But you survived the shock, as you call it, and—you are far more beautiful than I remembered you.'

He leaned forward and rested his head in his clasped hands, his eyes searching her face with smiling boldness.

"There are not many men," he went on, "who come back from the grave the way I did to find—everything so unchanged."

He sprang from his chair and paced the floor excitedly.

"If I'd only come yesterday!" he cried. "I had saved enough—I could have prevented that absurd fiasco."

He stopped in front of her.

"Why didn't you answer my letter, Barbara?"

"I couldn't read it," she murmured, a sudden vivid color fluttering in her cheeks. "Jimmy lost it on the way home from the office, and it lay out in the rain a week. I knew, though, that you were not—dead."

"And that I had not forgotten you," he urged. "You must have wondered, though, why I had not written before. But I couldn't. I vowed when I went away that I would get money—somehow. That I would get enough to save you out of the slavery you were in then. I meant to hire a caretaker for your father, a nurse for the boy. Three times I won, only to lose. Then I made a little pile—not enough; but still I thought—I hoped—— Do you want me to tell you what I hoped, Barbara?"

"David Whitcomb sat in the dining-room of the Barford Eagle"

"No," she said faintly, "I can't listen.

"Why?" he urged. "Do you—love some one else?"

She looked at him imploringly.

"You were here, and you know——"

"Yes," he said sharply. "I know what happened. You must have been out of your mind with anxiety, Barbara, to have thought of such a thing. Why did you do it?"

"I wanted to save the farm—for Jimmy."

He shrugged his shoulders with a muttered exclamation.

"You got the money?"

"Yes."

"And so you're sold into slavery for five years?"

She made no reply.

"Now, see here, Barbara, I won't stand for anything of the sort. It's an outrage. I haven't enough—quite—to pay the other fellow out; but I'll arrange it with him—or her. Is it a man or a woman slave-holder, Barbara?"

She hesitated.

"You've paid off your mortgage. How much was it?"

She told him, and he set down the figures rapidly.

"Who held your mortgage?" he wanted to know.

"Stephen Jarvis," she said, with a singular reluctance at which she wondered, even while she perceived it.

"Miserly old crab; I remember him," said David Whitcomb.

His face brightened suddenly.

"Hurrah!" he cried. "I have it! With what you've got left and my little pile we've more than enough to buy you back. Don't you see? Marry me, dear, and we'll call the sale off, pay back the money, and——"

He stopped short at sight of her unresponsive face.

"I've signed a contract," she objected.

"What if you have?" he urged. "The contract can be quashed. You'll give me the right to get you out of it, Barbara?"

She hesitated, her eyes averted from his anxious face.

"Do you mean that you don't—that you can't? Barbara, do you prefer slavery—to me?"

"I—don't know," she said, "—not yet."

"You don't know?" he echoed. "Why, this is more preposterous than the other. Of course you'll have to know."

"It is quite true," she said quietly. "I only know that I must be ready to leave home at a minute's notice."

He bent over her with sudden passion.

"Marry me, Barbara," he begged in a low, shaken voice. "If you only will, I'll manage it somehow."

"I—can't," she murmured. "I am in honor bound. Don't you see? I've accepted the money, and paid a part of it for debts."

He threw himself down in his chair and pulled it toward hers impatiently.

"Let me think," he said quickly.

"I mean," she said slowly, "that I cannot—promise anything until——"

"But don't you see, dear, that it would be better, safer that way? As your husband—even as your promised husband—I could—— What a preposterous situation! You must give me the right to get you out of it."

She shook her head.

"I did it voluntarily," she said, "and I must fulfil my agreement."

His face reddened with quick anger.

"Then you will go peacefully away with this person—man or woman—and stay five years, when the matter might easily be arranged by paying back the money, and by proving a prior claim. My claim is prior, Barbara. I loved you five years ago. I love you now. Give me the right to break this absurd bond. Won't you, Barbara?"

His lips, his eyes, pleaded with his eloquent voice. He dropped to his knees beside her chair; his arm stole about her waist.

She put out her hand to push him from her.

"No; please. I cannot promise anything—yield anything, until I have arranged the matter. If I succeed——"

He waited for her to go on.

"I must have time to think," she murmured. "I—am not sure of myself."

He went away, bidding her a brief goodnight, his eyes hurt and angry.

Barbara watched his straight, lithe figure, as he strode away from the little circle of her lamplight into the dripping gloom of the spring night. So had she sent him away from her long ago into the rain and the darkness. Then as now she was in honor bound to a lonely task.

She turned to find her newly engaged housekeeper standing behind her in the semi-obscurity of the passage. Martha Cottle was a tall, angular woman with a pallid, uncertain complexion, a long thin nose and an air of perpetual inquiry.

"Was that the party you expect to work for?" she demanded. "I thought," she added with a slightly offended air, "that you'd call in and introduce me. I was waiting in the dining room."

Barbara wondered if the spinster's large, flat ears had caught any of the conversation, carried on unguardedly on the other side of the door.

She shook her head. "That wasn't the person," she said. "Perhaps tomorrow," she hesitated. "Of course it will be soon."

Miss Cottle pushed authoritatively into the room where Barbara had been sitting.

"I haven't had a real good opportunity to talk things over with you," she said. "If you're expecting to be called away sudden perhaps this will be as good a time as any. I want to tell you what I think about that child."

Barbara drew a deep breath.

"Well?" she murmured interrogatively.

"I see you've spoiled him pretty completely," pursued Miss Cottle. "But I'll soon get him in hand."

She compressed her thin lips.

"He got into a regular tantrum tonight because I took a book of his to look at. 'Vallable Inf'mation,' he calls it. Nearly every word in it is spelled wrong. I wonder at you for permitting anything of the sort. I took the book away from him. Here it is."

Barbara looked at the woman in a sudden panic of apprehension.

"Oh," she protested, "you ought not to have done that. The book was a birthday present. It is one of Jimmy's dearest treasures."

"I believe you said you wanted I should look after James' education,"

A Happy New Year

Our Boys & Girls

THE COZY CORNER

A Happy New Year

A Happy New Year

HAPPY New Year! Happy New Year! to you all, my boys and girls.

My own Happy New Year I have found in the many hearty letters that you have written, telling me how glad you are about the Cozy Corner. We shall indeed have a Happy New Year together, and we are going to have a whole long happy year of good things, as you shall see.

Best stories, articles, verses, and pictures, puzzles, charades, and prize contests, are among your New Year's gifties; and, almost better than all, we are going to publish from time to time right here in the Cozy Corner, a full page of your own best work. There will be one next week, so look out for it. You shall see then what really interesting things the younger readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are doing.

Remember this, you sturdy-hearted boys and girls, with your good American minds and hearts: The great story-writers, editors, artists, poets, inventors, leaders—all the big men and women of to-morrow—are the boys and girls of to-day. You may be one of them; who can tell? It is mighty fine to be just an American boy or girl, with a good American life full of opportunity spreading out ahead of you. Most of us grown-ups would give a whole lot to be in your place. Make the most of your opportunities; none of them is unimportant. Be sure to enter all of our prize contests this year, and send me the best work you can do.

All original work that is up to a fair standard will receive very best prizes, and when it is good enough to publish in the Cozy Corner for other boys and girls to see, I will pay you for it at regular rates.

Wake up, boys and girls. This is a big opportunity. Make up your mind, on New Year's Day, to enter every Cozy Corner prize contest and win. Win a place on the Honor Roll, win prizes, win special prizes and earn money this year in the Cozy Corner, and I can promise you that on New Year's Day, 1912, you will be glad you made up your mind to win and won out.

I hope each and every one of you enjoyed receiving the beautiful Cozy Corner Christmas gift as much as the editors of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD enjoyed sending it to you.

And right here I want to thank you all for the many loving holiday greetings that have come crowding into my big leather mail-bag, and made it plump and bubble over, like a Santa Claus' pack. I shall thank each one separately before long. Meanwhile, do write to the Cozy Corner. To-day, if you have not already written or entered a prize contest. I very especially want to know you, and be your friend.

The Little Czar of Russia

A Royal Christmas Gift

THE Little Czar of Russia recently sent to Pu Yi, the baby sovereign of China, a toy railroad that is perfect in every detail. Little engines carry beautifully fitted express, accommodation and freight trains, over three-quarters of a mile of toy track. Miniature stations, block signals, switches, everything that goes to make up a complete modern railway, are included in the Little Czar's Christmas gift that now occupies a large part of the gardens of the Royal Residence in Pekin.

The toy cost the Russian Government $25,000. In return for what is one of the most beautiful playthings that have ever been made, the baby Pu Yi sent to the "Boy Czar" a trained dwarfed elephant and a collection of curious Chinese playthings, among which queer little manikins, no bigger than the ordinary tin soldier, dance queer dances, and act out Chinese Fairy Tales. Miniature jeweled ivory men-o'-war sail about on a little glass sea, that by some ingenious arrangement reflects shore-lines and clouds, sky and trees, for all the world like a really truly harbor. This splendid gift was carried to Russia by a Prince of the Royal House of China, who was accompanied by a gorgeous retinue, bearing the compliments of the baby on the Dragon Throne, to the little heir of all the Russias.

Pu Yi, China's Baby Sovereign

Our Good-Night Verse Is:

And yet, when I said my prayers to-day,
A whisper within me seemed to say,
"You are more than the Earth, though you are such a dot;
You can love and think, and the Earth can not."

Lovingly and Faithfully,
The Aunt in the Cozy Corner,

Two Little Christmas Dolls

By Alice E. Allen

A DOLLY DIALOGUE

New Doll (gaily—
I'm the little new doll,
I came to-day, you know,
Old Doll (sorrowfully)—
I'm the little old doll,—
I came a year ago.
My eyes are dull and faded,
My hair no more is braided,—
I'm just the little old doll
Who came a year ago.

Yes, I'm the little old doll,
You should have seen me when—
New Doll (interrupting gaily)—
But I'm the little new doll
Of Nineteen Hundred Ten,
My gown is of the newest,
My slippers are the bluest,— (dancing about)
Oh, I'm the little new doll
Of Nineteen Hundred Ten.

Yes, I'm the little new doll
By every one caress'd,—
Old Doll (happily)—
I'm just the little old doll.
You never would have guess'd—
So worn, so torn—behold me—
Mother just now told me
She loves me still the best!

Snowflakes

A Prize Winner. This little poem won the French Bisque Doll.

DOLLY, there are nice white feathers
Coming from the clouds, just see!
There's a fairy story 'bout 'em
That nobody knows but me.

All the fairies' little children
Up among the clouds can play;
They get into lots of mischief
When their mamas go away.

Sometimes, when their parents leave them,
And they're sure they're out of sight,
They keep flying, flying, flying,
Till they see a cloud of white.

Now a hundred busy children,
Fairy children, dolly dear,
Could tear up more in half an hour
Than I could in most a year.

But I'm glad they're sometimes naughty,
For this feather stuff, you know,
Falls from clouds they've torn to pieces,
And we always call it snow.

PEARL DRAIN, 10 years.

TO THE HIGHEST BIDDER

intoned the spinster. "If I am to stay here, I shall do it con-sci-en-tious-ly."

She pronounced the last word with due regard to every syllable, it being a favorite adverb modifying every possible activity.

Barbara was turning over the pages of the book, several of which were quite covered with Jimmy's scrawling characters in red ink.

"A Vallable Information bout geting mad," she read. "Don't get mad Ezy. It don't Do enny Good, an sum the tim it gets a fello in Trubble. Peg says this is portant."

Barbara smiled as she shut the covers gently together.

"I shall give this book to Jimmy," she said quietly, "and please, Miss Cottle, don't take it away from him again. Jimmy is such a little boy, and I—he has always been loved. I hope you——"

"I don't believe in sozzling over a child," interrupted the woman severely. "I'll see that the boy gets plenty of good bread and butter, and that he goes to school and Sabbath services regularly. By the time you get back I guess you'll see quite a change in him. When do you expect to start—to-morrow?"

Miss Cottle's tones expressed a growing impatience.

"I supposed you'd get off this afternoon. I see your trunk is packed and all. There's no use of hanging back and procrastinating when there's work to do. That's one thing I shall teach James."

She compressed her lips severely, as if anxious to begin.

"I am ready to go," Barbara told her, with lips which trembled in spite of herself. "I hope you won't be too severe with Jimmy—at first; he isn't used to it."

"Yes," agreed Miss Cottle, with an acid smile, "its easy enough to see that you've spoiled the child completely. But I'll soon straighten him out. My method with children has never been known to fail. Their wills wants breaking the first thing; after that they'll mind, I can tell you."

"I don't want Jimmy's will broken," protested Barbara, "please don't try to do that."

Miss Cottle tossed her head majestically.

"I shall use my own judgment," she said firmly, "and I don't expect no interference."

Barbara fled upstairs, the little red book in her hand, to find Jimmy in his white nightgown standing at the top of the stairs. She caught the child up in her strong young arms, cuddling his cold little body against her breast.

"I wanted you," grieved the child, half strangling her with his eager kisses. "Why do you have that woman, Barbara? I don't like her. She took my Vallable Inf'mation book, 'n' —I scwatched her, 'n' she slapped me. Send her away, Barbara; we don't want her; do we?"

The girl wrapped a blanket warmly about the child and sat down with him in a chair by the window. The iron of her new chain bade fair to eat into her very soul as she soothed and rocked into forgetfulness of his troubles the beloved little cause of all her perplexities. Why, after all, had she done this thing? Was there not a heavier debt than could be paid in money? And was she not bankrupt still in love and peace?

In that hour of darkness all the terrifying consequences of her attempt to break away from Jarvis crowded upon her mind. Unless the person who had paid four thousand dollars for five years of her life could be induced to release her, she must indeed pay heavily for Jimmy's inheritance. Her baffled thoughts hovered about the unknown personality of this arbiter of her future.

"To-morrow," she thought aloud, "I shall know."

XIV

To await the slow unfoldment of events, cultivating the while the cardinal virtues of tranquillity and faith, is the task set before each human being; but there are times when the lesson becomes poignantly difficult. As one who awaits the coming of a delayed train endures the unfruitful minutes with scant patience, so Barbara lingered on the verge of her unknown experience; and by turns dreading and longing for the summons which would put an end to the painful suspense, she found the days speeding by, gathering themselves into weeks, and the weeks in their turn rolling themselves up into months.

"I guess you've said to me about all there is to be said on the subject of this house and the care of that child," Miss Cottle observed in tones of exasperation. "I'd never have come when I did if I hadn't supposed you were going right off. I didn't bargain to be your hired girl."

And David Whitcomb, who had taken up his quarters in the village inn with the avowed intention of "having it out" with the owner and arbiter of Barbara's future, expressed himself with still greater frankness on the subject.

"Has it occurred to you," he asked Barbara, "that perhaps you'll not be sent for at all?"

The two were sitting in the long, sweet twilight of a June evening, on the narrow old-fashioned porch. The giant locusts in front of the house were in full bloom and the clouds of fragrance from their pendant white clusters mingled with the odorous breath of the honeysuckles. There was a whirr of hummingbird moths among the vines, and a song sparrow intent upon feeding her young ones while the daylight lasted darted in and out with anxious glances of her bright eyes.

"Hush!" warned Barbara wincing, "don't let Jimmy hear you speak of my going."

"Pooh!" said David, "the little beggar knows all about it. Did you suppose he didn't?"

Barbara looked at him indignantly: "Did you tell him?"

"No; but I dare say the Cottle person has. Besides, the auction is town talk. Everybody is wondering, and some are saying—— Do you want me to tell you what old Hewett asked me to-night?"

Barbara's face burning with shamed crimson was turned away from his.

"No," she said frigidly, "I don't want to hear it."

David passed his fingers through his thick curling hair with an impatient gesture.

"I am sorry I spoke of it, Barbara," he said seriously, "but the fact is, whether you know it or not, you've been placed in a very unpleasant position."

He waited for her to speak; but she was obstinately silent, her eyes fixed on Jimmy, who was helping Peg load a wheelbarrow with the dried grass left in the wake of the lawnmower.

"You are," pursued David, "or think you are—unable to move hand or foot for five years. Meanwhile you are waiting, waiting for a summons which may never come. Barbara, is there any one you know who would be likely to—who might wish to help you, and who has taken this singular way to do it?"

She flashed a look of startled inquiry at him.

"The idea of the auction was your own—though how you came by it, I can't understand—and it succeeded perfectly, as far as the price paid in money was concerned; but you're likely to pay it out in something worth

Fashions Change in Watch Cases

You usually know an old or out-of-date watch by its case—not always because the case shows wear but because it is out of style. As a rule, the better the case the better the design and the longer it stays in style.

It is the worst possible economy to buy a cheap or a trashy watch case. It is not fair to a good movement to put it in a poorly made case. Then, too, the case represents a substantial part of your watch investment—and if you want your money's worth you must know who made the case as well as the movement.

The trade marks illustrated on this page are your safeguard. They are standard with the fine jewelry trade, and have been for 50 years. They mean absolute integrity in bullion value, in assay, in construction of a watch case. Be sure to find them. Every good jeweler in this country knows the marks and carries the cases. They are made for ladies' and men's watches—plain, engine-turned, engraved or enameled. All sizes, all patterns.

"SAVE-THE-HORSE" SPAVIN CURE.
REG. TRADE MARK

E. C. MESSIER, Civil Engineer, Real Estate and Insurance, 1008 Elm St.
MANCHESTER, N. H., Oct. 22, 1910.

Troy Chemical Co., Binghamton, N. Y. I saw your advertisement and sent $5 for a bottle of "Save-The-Horse" to cure a bone spavin. At the time he was not worth $1 before he had the spavin I was offered $600. Four veterinarians told me that he was incurable, so I felt blue, as you might believe. Since two weeks after treating him with "Save-The-Horse" he has not taken a lame step and I have driven him every day, and even thirty miles the same day. "Save-The-Horse" has done more than four doctors in a year. Now it seems exaggerated, but any one in doubt can call at the neighbors to prove what I say, and furthermore, the horse can give them a ride, and probably one of the best in their lifetime. I cannot say enough to praise your remedy. I will not be without it. Truly yours, E. C. MESSIER

$5.00 a bottle, with legal written guarantee or contract. Send for copy, booklet and letters from business men and trainers on every kind of case. Permanently cures Spavin, Thoroughpin, Ringbone (except low), Curb, Splint, Capped Hock, Windpuff, Shoe Boil, Injured Tendons and all Lameness. No scar or loss of hair. Horse works as usual. Dealers or Express Paid.

GALLOWAY SAVES YOU $50 to $300

SAVE from $50 to $300 by buying your gasoline engine of 2 to 22-horse-power from a real engine factory. Save dealer, jobber and catalogue house profit. No such offer as I make on the class of engine I sell has ever been made before in all Gasoline Engine history. Here is the secret and reason: I turn them out all alike by the thousands in my enormous modern factory, equipped with automatic machinery. I sell them direct to you for less money than some factories can make them at actual shop cost.

All you pay me for is actual raw material, labor and one small profit (and I buy my material in enormous quantities).

Anybody can afford and might just as well have a high grade engine when he can get in on a wholesale deal of this kind. I'm doing something that never was done before. Think of it! A price to you that is lower than dealers and jobbers can buy similar engines for, in carload lots, for spot cash.

An engine that is made so good in the factory that I will send it out anywhere in the U. S. without an expert to any inexperienced users, on 30 days' free trial, to test against any engine made of similar horse-power that sells for twice as much, and let him be the judge. Sell your poorest horse and buy a more than money. You've grown thin and pale, Barbara; you're being worn out with this terrible suspense. Now I think it's time we tracked your purchaser to earth; or else—look at me, Barbara! Why not marry me, and defy the fellow, whoever he is?"

"It wouldn't be honorable," she objected. "I've accepted the money."

"See here," he said strongly, "I'm going to find out who the person is, either with or without your permission. You'd like to know, I suppose?"

She hesitated, evading his eyes.

"I think I'd rather wait," she said reluctantly. "Besides, you couldn't find out."

He watched her steadily for a minute, while she set half a dozen hasty stitches in the long ruffle.

"It's too dark to sew," he objected, "and I can't talk to you when your eyes are glued to that piece of cloth."

"Well?" she said interrogatively.

"It isn't anything new, Barbara," he said. "Just the same old request. When will you marry me, dear?"

"I've told you, David, over and over. I can't make any promises till—till—"

He frowned and shrugged his shoulders impatiently.

"I know," he interrupted quickly. "But why object on the score of that absurd contract? Why, Barbara, I'll go with you and work for nothing. Two slaves will be better than one. I'm a husky chap, capable of trundling the lawnmower, shaking down the furnace, shoveling snow, or any little job of the sort. Don't you think your widower should appreciate my free services?"

Barbara refused to smile.

"Why," she asked, "should you suppose it is a man?"

"A sad mixture of pronouns," he objected. "'It' might, as you suggest, as well be a widow or an old maid. But why 'its' waste of money and valuable service? That is what I shall set myself to find out. But we'll be married first, and then I'll be in a position to defy him, her or it, as the case may be."

"There is no use," she murmured, "of your talking that way. I consider myself bound; and I cannot——"

His face softened as he looked at her.

"Poor little girl," he murmured, "it's pretty rough sledding for you, and has been all along. But I'd like to ask you one thing. Has any other man asked you to marry him since I went away?"

Her eyes fled into the distance.

"Will you tell me who it was?"

"Why," she stammered at last, "should you ask?"

"Is it a case of 'how happy could I be with either, were the other fair charmer away?'"

He checked himself with an effort.

"Then you won't tell me?" he said sulkily.

"It—was nothing," she stammered. "I didn't——"

"You didn't accept him," he finished for her. "That's evident. Well, we'll call it square if you'll say to me, 'David, I love you, and I'll marry you as soon as we can straighten out this'—what shall we call it?—'this previous engagement.' Will you say that, Barbara? Will you?"

"I haven't told you yet—what you asked."

"Never mind that. Come, don't put me off again!"

She looked at him, her eyes clouded with doubt and pain.

"You don't trust me, Barbara. I see that," he said bitterly.

"You—must make me—trust you," she murmured, after a difficult silence. "I don't know why—I can't say—yes. But—I can't—yet."

"I know," he said roughly. "You're half in love with the other man!"

He sprang to his feet, upsetting his chair.

"No—no!" she denied breathlessly. "It isn't that. I refused him because—" Her voice trailed off in a whisper—"I remembered you, David."

He caught her in his arms with a triumphant laugh.

"You can't escape me now, after that admission," he told her. "You shall marry me, sweetheart."

"We must not speak of it, David," she warned him, "nor—take too much for granted, till after we have found out about the contract."

"Oh, never mind the contract!" cried David exuberantly.

Jimmy's rollicking laugh floated across the lawn. Peg Morrison had stacked the last wheelbarrow with the sweet lawn grass, topped it with the little boy and was trundling his load toward the house.

"Now't I've got you aboard, Cap'n," Barbara heard him saying, "it's all I c'n make out. You're turrible big an' hefty."

"You won't ask me to leave him, David," murmured Barbara. "I could not do that; unless"— she added with quick remembrance—"I am forced to."

"Little beggar!" quoth David good-humoredly; "he's always been a dangerous rival of mine. But I'll take him for a side partner this time."

He turned and crushed her roughly in his arms.

"I've waited long enough," he said. "Now let everybody and everything get out of my way. I'm going to marry you within the month," and stopped the words of protest on her lips with his kisses.

That same evening Martha Cottle wandered forth under the soft light of evening. The labors of the day were concluded, and Miss Cottle felt herself attuned to the soft influences of the hour. So when she chanced to come upon Peleg Morrison reposing himself in a battered wooden chair tipped against the barn door, she addressed him in terms of surprising amity.

"It's a real pleasant evening," observed Miss Cottle, with an agreeable smile.

"Yes, ma'am, it sure is," replied Peg, in kind.

"I suppose you and I'll soon be left in charge here," continued Miss Cottle, sighing.

"Hes—Miss Barb'ry heard f'om——"

"No; not that I know of. And I call it strange—very str-range. Don't you, Mr. Morrison?"

"'Tis kind o' queer; that's so," he agreed.

"And to cap the climax," she said, "the girl's gone and engaged herself to be married."

"Who? Not Miss Barb'ry?"

Miss Cottle nodded confirmation.

"To that young Whitcomb fellow," she concluded acidly.

"Did she—did Miss Barb'ry tell you? Mebbe she wouldn't care to hev me know."

"She didn't choose to make a confidant of me," the spinster said, tossing her head. "I chanced to be passing through the hall, and I—overheard 'em—spooning."

Mr. Morrison coughed deprecatingly.

"It's a vallable idee," he said slowly, "not t' hear what you ain't meant t' hear. Young Whitcomb—huh? Wall! Wall!"

David Whitcomb sat in the dining-room of the Barford Eagle. It was fifteen minutes of eleven by the loud ticking clock, with a calendar attachment, proclaiming a new day, which hung against the wall in full view of the breakfaster, yet he appeared quite unabashed by the lateness of the hour as he attacked the platter of fried ham and eggs which the pink-cheeked waitress set before him.

Our Relationship With God*

"THE very essence of the spiritual life," says President King, "is a personal relation with God. No more than any other personal relation can this be wisely made a mere matter of rules. Its laws are those of a spontaneously developing life, not of external rules laid on from without."

The conditions of the spiritual life are, then, the same as those of a constantly deepening personal relation with any being of a high and noble order; only capable of an infinitely greater intimacy and a corresponding uplift, as our Lord is so inexpressibly superior to any human creature.

Complete honesty, perfect modesty are necessary in order to enter fully into this beautiful spiritual relation. The "great values," as President King calls them, can be realized from it only by taking this attitude of genuine openness and humility.

Attention, time and thought alone secure to us the opportunities for entering into this blessed relation—we must stay persistently in the presence of the beloved One. Study of the Word; prayer without ceasing; "active, hearty, loyal co-operation with the divine will"; these only permit us to enter into the true relationship which the soul should maintain with its Creator and Saviour.

Others may counsel us; others may pray for us; but the attainment of this wonderful relationship must be won by our own efforts:

No one can acquire for another—not one;
No one can grow for another—not one;
The song is to the singer, and comes back most to him;
The teaching is to the teacher, and comes back most to him.

"If we follow the story of Christ's gracious life," says Dr. David J. Burrell, "we shall see him healing the sick, comforting the sorrowing and ministering to all the needs of the children of men; but if we follow far enough, we shall find ourselves at the foot of Calvary; and there comes the crucial test of our devotion to him. Shall we go back, or shall we follow him up the steep path to the Cross?

"There are multitudes who praise Christ for his goodness until they come to Golgotha, and there they halt, turning their faces from him."

But through the shadows as well as the sunshine let us follow him.

When Salome asked that her sons should sit, the one on the right hand and the other on the left of Christ, when he should come into his kingdom, he asked of them, "Can ye drink of the cup that I drink of and be baptized with my baptism?"

They answered, "We can," and they lived to prove their sincerity.

Ten years later, under the orders of Agrippa, James was led out beyond the walls of the city and beheaded.

John lived on, but he saw the fires kindled by the infamous Nero; he saw Titus reduce to subjection the Holy City with frightful atrocities; he saw his fellow disciples one by one drop away, nearly all of them in blood and torture; but he was the beloved of the Highest. Through all of a long life, strength was given him to endure his sorrows and he was spared the horrors of martyrdom.

Thus may we walk with Him and in him, each of us singing in the poet's sweet words:

So I go on, not knowing;
I could not, if I might;
I'd rather walk in the dark with God
Than go alone in the light.
I'd rather walk with him by faith
Than walk alone by sight.

Blessed—to Bless*

IT sometimes seems as though it were a pity that we did not have to pay a high price in money for our religion. That it is free to all seems, in one view, to cheapen it.

If it cost a great deal of money, those who revel in expensive luxuries would probably be keen to get it. Then, having proved the greatness of its blessing, they would urge others to procure it. They would say, "Go without everything—deny yourself food, shelter, and all but the plainest clothing, if only thereby you can procure this priceless pearl. You will be more than repaid for all your sacrifices. It will guide you through life. It will comfort you in all your distresses. When you walk through the valley of the shadow, you will fear no evil."

But because the poorest can have this heavenly jewel, the world too often scorns it and passes it by.

One of the chief ways in which we can inspire our companions with a desire to become Christians, is by showing ever a serene and cheerful countenance.

In our Saviour we have received the chief of blessings. He has said, "Let not your hearts be troubled," and, "Peace I leave with you." We must show by our bearing that we have a deep and abiding joy in our hearts. We must not wear faces full of worry and unrest. Let the world see that Christ is a stay, a shield, a strong tower, our song in the night, and a real help in time of trouble.

Perhaps the most remarkable instance of a zeal among those who have been blessed, to bless others, is that of the missionaries, Carey and Thomas.

They were comparatively uneducated, and yet they were enabled by what has been considered almost the direct inspiration of God, to lay, deep and secure, the foundations of all the later literary achievements in East Indian mission work.

Determined to bring to a saving knowledge of the Gospel the degraded and wretched millions of India; and finding their efforts to preach baffled, they turned their attention to the translation of the Scriptures into the various Indian dialects.

Robert Southey, in the Quarterly Review in 1807, wrote:

"These 'low-born and low-bred mechanics', as the anti-missionaries call them, have translated the whole Bible into Bengali and printed it. They are printing the New Testament in the Sanskrit, Orissa and six or seven other languages. Only fourteen years have elapsed since they set foot in India, and in that time these missionaries have acquired this gift of tongues. In fourteen years these 'low-born, low-bred mechanics' have done more to spread the knowledge of the Scriptures among the heathen, than has been accomplished or even attempted by all the world beside."

If such zeal resided in the souls of our American Christians of to-day, a zeal which made Carey and Thomas cling to their work amid crushing discouragements, even as Jacob clung to the angel at Peniel, we could convert our whole nation before this new century should be half spent.

The First Wrong Step*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

TO-DAY'S lesson tells us of the first wrong step of the world-famous "Lost Tribes." The ten tribes that revolted against King Rehoboam and formed another kingdom under Jeroboam, were later carried into captivity because of their Sabbath-breaking and idolatry. The other two tribes were brought back from captivity, but not the ten tribes. For centuries, the world has been ransacked in vain to find their descendants. Some have held that the American Indians are the lost tribes. Others have claimed this distinction for the Japanese. But no satisfactory proofs have been given in either case or any other. "The Ten Lost Tribes" will probably be "lost" to the end of time.

Our lesson to-day describes the first step which brought about their lost condition. That first fatal step was breaking away from the true worship of the living God. King David and King Solomon had been co-workers with God in the building of the temple at Jerusalem. King David collected the greater part of the treasures of silver, gold, brass and marble for its construction, and committed to his son, King Solomon, the plans for the building. When it was completed, the Lord God descended and filled it with his glory. The great temple was as the heart of the nation. Around it and within it the most sacred rites were performed. Against all of this the ten tribes turned their backs. They turned away from their God, and took up the worship of calves made of gold by Jeroboam.

There has been a good deal of discussion about where Jeroboam got his pattern. Possibly he modeled it after the historic calf set up by Aaron, or perhaps he got the idea from the same source. Some have suggested that he made cherubs, like those on the ark of the covenant in the temple. If that is so, it was to make the people feel that after all they were worshiping God, though they did not go up to the temple to do it. Jeroboam's real reason for making the calves was that he feared he could not hold the people in their allegiance to him if they still continued going up to Jerusalem to worship in the temple. He did not tell this to the people, but instead, being a shrewd politician, he tried to have it appear that he had done it for their accommodation: "It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem." He set up two images, one at each end of the kingdom, about one hundred and fifty miles apart, at Bethel and Dan.

Disobeyed a Commandment

All who worshiped the calves disobeyed God's command, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." Jeroboam was himself the high priest of lawbreakers, not alone because he made the images, but because he stood at the altar of the calf and officiated in the offering of sacrifice. It was a mere pretense that he did it unto God. While he was in the act of sacrificing, God punished him for it by paralyzing his arm, and by the power of God the altar was broken, and the ashes scattered about. God sent a special messenger to him in the person of an aged prophet to rebuke him for his impious action.

"Lost" in this World

On that day the kingdom of Israel began its course as "the lost tribes." They show to us that men may be lost even while they live in the world. The descendants of the ten tribes are surely living somewhere. Their course also shows how the course of the "lost" begins.

But let us understand this word "lost." A man rushed into his home one day exclaiming: "I have lost everything," for he had become bankrupt. "You have not lost me," replied his sweet wife. "I am not lost," replied his son. And his little tot of a girl lisped, "I'm not loth." A man may lose all of his money and still have his best treasures left, but let him lose character, and he has indeed lost all. The man who goes wrong will sooner or later have lost health; lost the noblest thoughts; lost the most manly feelings; lost the best hopes and aspirations of the soul; lost the purest joys of a Christian home; lost the grand fellowship of good men; lost true patriotism and human brotherhood; lost God and heaven. Note that Jesus spoke of the lost whom he came to save as those already thus "lost" in this world: "The Son of man is come to seek and save that which is lost." The lost sheep and the lost coin and the lost son of Luke 15 are not lost souls in hell, but lost men and women in this world.

Hell begins here in lost character, and consequent lost peace. Long before death, in many cases, character becomes manifestly fixed. God says, "Joined to his idols, let him alone." The "unpardonable sin" is fixedness of evil character.

There is a time, we know not when,
A point we know not where,
That marks the destiny of men
For sorrow or despair.

But let it always be remembered that no one can have committed the unpardonable sin who desires pardon. No one is hopelessly lost who desires to be found.

The Fatal First Step

"It is the first step that costs." And that first step toward the place of the "lost" in this world and the other is often a very small step. "Sow an act, and you reap a tendency; sow a tendency, and you reap a habit; sow a habit, and you reap a destiny."

Let us think of many kinds of "lost tribes" in this world that we have seen, and to which some of us might wander, and see just what were the first steps that led men there. In the dreary tramp army of the unemployed, driven from town to town in wretched beggary, there is many a man who had a good position and lost it by some small wrong that led on to greater ones, and finally to discharge. He stole a few postage stamps of his employer; and then a few pens and a pencil; and then kept some change by lying about the price of what he bought; and then came the broken till and the forged check, and the first imprisonment—only a few days, but opportunities for employment had been "lost." And without wages clothes were soon ragged, and the tramp life came in regular sequence.

With many a boy who has lost his standing in school and later his place in the shop and his good name in the community, the first wrong step was the secret cigarette which he took, thinking it proved him manly when it only proved him a monkey, an ape; for he did it only to imitate some one else, not because there was any use or sense in it. From the cigarette to lost nerve, lost health, lost virtue, lost position were easy and gradual steps.

One of the most dangerous first steps is Sabbath-breaking. Many a man on the gallows has confessed his first step toward that disgraceful goal was Sabbath desecration. When he had broken one commandment it seemed as if he might as well be damned for breaking all as for one. Cardinal Gibbons once said to the writer: "The Sabbath commandment is one the breaking of which leads to the breaking of all the others, as the keeping of it leads to the keeping

THE WAY OUT

From Weakness to Power by Food Route.

Getting the right start for the day's work often means the difference between doing things in wholesome comfort, or dragging along half dead all day.

There's more in the use of proper food than many people ever dream of—more's the pity.

"Three years ago I began working in a general store," writes a man, "and between frequent deliveries and more frequent customers, I was kept on my feet from morning till night.

"Indigestion had troubled me for some time, and in fact my slight breakfast was taken more from habit than appetite. At first this insufficient dict was not noticed much, but at work it made me weak and hungry long before noon.

"Yet a breakfast of rolls, fried foods and coffee meant headaches, nausea and kindred discomforts. Either way I was losing weight and strength, when one day a friend suggested that I try a 'Grape-Nuts breakfast.'

"So I began with some stewed fruit, Grape-Nuts and cream, a soft boiled egg, toast and cup of Postum. By noon I was hungry but with a healthy, normal appetite. The weak, languid feeling was not there.

"My head was clearer, nerves steadier than for months. Today my stomach is strong, my appetite normal, my bodily power splendid and head always clear."

of all the others." All that God has given us in his own autograph is the Decalogue, and one-third of that is the Sabbath law — written twenty-eight times as long as the command against stealing. Is it not because the taking of soulless things—minerals, vegetables and animals—is less serious than the attacks upon rights of health and life, rights of conscience and rights of God which are involved in Sabbath breaking? No wonder the breaking of this longest, middle commandment, severing the Decalogue in its centre, leads to the breaking of all other laws. When the Sabbath is lost out of a man's life, his noblest humane inheritance is lost.

How One Lie Calls for More

Another sin which is very often the first step to a lost life, and seldom remains a step by itself, is lying.

It is the first small step in sin against which we most need to set a watch. Henry M. Stanley says that the most formidable foes he and his men encountered in Africa, were not the giant blacks, fierce though they were, but the diminutive Wambutti dwarfs. These little men, with their bows and poisoned arrows, could hide behind a bunch of leaves, and shoot their arrows all unseen. Men and women everywhere need to be on their guard against the tyranny of the dwarfs—the little insignificant habits that endanger the peace and comfort of home. These are their real and dangerous foes.

Experts who investigated the cause of an accident to the famous suspension bridge over the East River at Brooklyn, N. Y., reported that the breaks in the suspension rods were gradual, progressive and sequential. Neglect was writ large over this great product of engineering. Officials behaved as if the elements themselves would cease to act in order that they might plunder. Oxidation had gone on steadily where iron and steel had been left unpainted; and with the coming of the elevated railroad cars a weight was imposed upon the structure which hastened the revelation of structural impairment. There are certain analogies between the human soul and this bridge which make it worth while to draw them. Uncared for, uninspected, overburdened, one by one, gradually and sequentially, the soul powers break down unless unremittingly guarded from the action of the elements of the natural world.

Saving the Lost

But those who are "lost" and yet living may be saved. The Son of man came to seek and to save that which is lost. How many a man so lost that neither he nor his friends have a hope left has been saved by Him who seeks and saves the lost! Jerry McAuley's well-known story is a history that has repeated itself scores of times in his and other city missions. The story of "Bowery Dan," recently published by the American Tract Society, is worth telling not alone for the sake of the lost, but to show Christian men and women how to help God find them.

The New Chief Justice

PRESIDENT TAFT has set at rest the rumors connecting various prominent lawyers with the coveted position of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, by appointing Associate Justice Edward D. White to the position. The New Chief Justice was paid the compliment of instant confirmation by the Senate. Justice White is a native of Louisiana. Joseph R. Lamar, of Augusta, Ga., will succeed Judge White as Associate Justice. Judge Willis Van Devanter was appointed Associate Justice in place of Judge Moody of Massachusetts, who recently resigned. Judge White and Judge Lamar are Democrats. Mr. Van Devanter is a Republican.

Chief Justice White

Chief Justice White was born in the parish of Lafourche, Louisiana, in 1845. His father had been governor of Tennessee. He was admitted to the bar in 1868. He was for a time State Senator in Louisiana, and later Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of his State.

Later, in 1888, he was elected a member of the United States Senate. He was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Cleveland. He was a noted sugar planter of Louisiana as well as a lawyer. He spoke feelingly of his gratitude to President Taft for his appointment and to the Senate for his quick confirmation. He said his sole desire was to serve the country, and with the aid of Divine Providence he would fulfil his duties to the best of his ability.

The Subscriber and the Advertiser

IT IS remarkable how few complaints are received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on account of its advertisers. When you take into consideration the fact that many thousands of letters must pass between our subscribers and our advertisers each week, it would seem that many causes for dissatisfaction might arise. Of course they do arise occasionally, due in almost every instance to misunderstandings, which, however, are very quickly adjusted. This confidence between the subscriber and the advertiser is growing.

When we first printed our Guarantee we received a number of letters from our subscribers concerning advertisers, but this number has grown steadily smaller and smaller, until now it would seem as though all of our subscribers had come to know and believe in all of our advertisers. This is as it should be. Our subscribers know on the one hand that we would not willingly print an advertisement which we knew to be fraudulent, and advertisers know, on the other hand, that only those with reputable propositions need apply.

Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE BELL SYSTEM AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

The Neighbor-Maker

SAVAGES built rude bridges so that they might communicate with their neighbors. These have been replaced by triumphs of modern engineering.

Primitive methods of transmitting speech have been succeeded by Bell telephone service, which enables twenty-five million people to bridge the distances that separate them, and speak to each other as readily as if they stood face to face.

Such a service, efficiently meeting the demands of a busy nation, is only possible with expert operation, proper maintenance of equipment, and centralized management.

The Bell System provides constantly, day and night, millions of bridges to carry the communications of this country.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE

In Your Own Home

In order to make our home study courses known in your locality we will give you—absolutely free—48 or 96 lessons for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Banjo, Mandolin, or Cornet. In return we ask that you recommend our Institute to your friends after you learn to play.

It matters not whether you are a beginner or an advanced pupil, the lessons will be made suitable to your need. It is not necessary that you know one note from another. The lessons are so simple and easy that any person or little child who can read English can learn them.

You will receive one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Thousands have learned by mail and you can do the same.

You and your friends should take advantage of this wonderful offer without delay. Write postal card at once. It will mean much to you to get our Free booklet, which gives full information. Our lessons are marvels of simplicity. Photographs and drawings make everything plain.

Don't say you cannot learn music, but send for our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent by return mail free. Write to-day.
